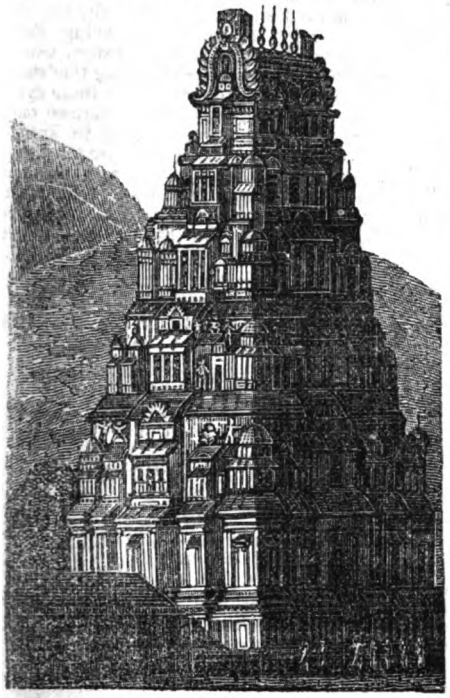
On another occasion, I was staying at a friend's house in the country. On going to bed, I placed my set of teeth, as usual with me, on the table of my dressing room. I had not long been asleep, when I was awakened by a noise, which, I soon found, was made by the favorite spaniel of the lady of the house; but what had brought him to my dressing-room I could not guess. I rose, however, and, just as I was, took the lamp, and went to turn him out; when, lo, and behold! there was little Fidele with my set of teeth in his mouth, gnawing away merrily at them under the table. It was a set, the frame of which was made of the tusk of the hippopotamus, and he had taken it, I suppose, for a bone; follow him I must, for how could I carry on the war without my teeth, and a house full of ladies? Not being well acquainted, however, with the geography of the back-staircases, I stumbled, threw down the lamp, and brought out all the servants and the master of the house, to see what was the matter. There was I in my night gear and red kerchief bound round my head, and brandishing an umbrella, which I had snatched up in my hurry to make the beast refund my grinders; vexed as I was, I could not help joining in the laugh, which my picturesque figure occasioned. The affair, however, was no joke to me, and this I was obliged to explain to the assembled night caps, who, as soon as they were informed of the case, instantly gave chase, in full cry, for the recovery of my teeth. The spaniel dodged us some time; but being hard pressed, stood at last at bay, at the door of his mistress's bed-chamber, still holding his bone, as he thought it, between his teeth; being a pet dog, no one dared to touch him, for fear of offending my lady, into whose fair hands alone, and after much coaxing, he consented to give up his prize.

Of course the affair was no secret at the breakfast table next morning, and the grave congratulations were not few which I received at the success of the chance of the night before. I will mention one more of my misfortunes in this way, and that of somewhat less vexatious character, or, at least, in which the expense of the ludicrous did not fall wholly on me,—one of the city companions, (I don't exactly know which,) bearing at the least their share of it, and thus it fell out. One Lord Mayor's day, I was coaxed by two young nieces into taking them to see the procession, "the Show," as it is called; and accordingly procured a seat at the rich silversmith's first floor window, in Cheapside; well, when the show made its appearance, I, with one on each side of me, and all our necks stretched out of the window, was playing the part of showman, and explaining, as well as I could make it out, the "order of the course," when, at a very exciting part of the pageant—the men in armour I think—down fell my unfortunate teeth perpendicularly into the street; they did not reach the ground, however, on this occasion; for it so happened that one of Birch's men was passing just at that moment, with a large jar of mock turtle on his head, ordered for some city company, to form a part, and a favourite one I understand, of a grand dinner they gave on this occasion. My little nieces laughed like mad things, and I too; indeed, the affair was not very serious, so far as I was concerned; for this set of teeth had done hard duty, and were getting rather too old and discoloured to be worn much longer; and so much the worse, I am obliged to confess, for the glass-cutters' company, (or whichsoever it was, who had this windfall added to their annual banquet.) I am, perhaps, rather scrupulous on some points, and thought it right, on this occasion, to send a servant after the man to bring him and the soup back again; but Birch's man was self-willed, or perhaps, much hurried on a Lord Mayor's day; for on he went his way in spite of my message, and the destiny of the worshipful company was fulfilled. I was really concerned at the part of this adventure: for I am fond of mock-turtle myself. It was some alleviation, however, to think, that, as the specific gravity of my dents postiches was much greater than that of the turtle soup;—for I saw it plainly sinking between the pieces of floating fat, and forced-meat balls—unless they should eat very gluttonously, and reach the bottom of the tureen, the addition which I had made to the soup would not be apparent; and, on the other hand, if they should eat their way to the bottom, and perceive something suspicious lying there, it would not be until the pleasure of eating (the main point in a city feast I take it) had been actually "had and received;" and no one would then think of refunding, at least on a point of delicacy; and besides, the uninitiated in artificial teeth had never, perhaps, seen such a production of art before, and might easily mistake it for a part of the calf's head, which the cook, much hurried on a Lord Mayor's day, had baled out of the copper by mistake.

Lose no opportunity of doing a good action.
Learn to live as you would wish to die.

Digitized by Google

A HINDOO TEMPLE.



The temple represented by the engraving, is at Tritchengur; and is built in the centre of an extensive area, and surrounded by a colonnade. Occasionally between the pillars, fakeers, pilgrims and other temporary residents, (for vagrancy is one of the great nuisances of this country,) have thrown up partitions, and thus formed tolerably comfortable habitations.

The gateway of this temple is a remarkably fine specimen of pyramidal architecture, in which Hindostan is so rich. The entrance to the main building is through the centre of the base, forming a large and lofty passage with a flat roof. Above this are five distinct stories; so that I should think the building must exceed the height of a hundred feet.

The exterior of this structure is very splendidly ornamented, but bears the marks of a much more modern date than the temple on the hill. It is covered with the richest tracery, projecting in the boldest relief from the foundation to the summit, which is surmounted by five styles or cullices, supposed to have some cryptic reference to one of the principal Hindoo deities, too sacred for the profane understandings of the vulgar. The temple, which is several yards within the gateway, to which it is far inferior both in external grandeur and variety of decoration, is a flat-roofed building, supported upon an immense number of elegant columns, which, though they all bear precisely the same character, are nevertheless every one differently embellished, showing at once the amazing fertility of invention of the persons who erected these stupendous edifices, their taste, their manual skill, and a perfect knowledge of architecture.

The noblest monuments of ancient Greece and Rome, must yield in splendour to the wonderful structures of this most extraordinary country. There is certainly nothing in the whole world that exceeds them for magnificence of design, and grandeur of effect. The mighty dome and gallery of St. Peter's, sinks into comparative insignificance before some of these incomparable monuments of remotely ancient, and comparatively modern art to be found in Hindostan.

History, indeed, has left us some faint records of the amazing efforts of human ingenuity, exhibited in the vast cities of Ninevah and Babylon. These mighty capitals, of still more mighty empires, have passed away, together with every memorial of them; but there still exist monuments as noble, which challenge the absolute wonder of the traveller, among the remains of Hindoo architecture.

Written for the Casket.

LAND OF MY BIRTH.*

BY L. W. TRASK.

Land of my birth! what pleasing visions roll,
In hurried course across my raptured soul—
To see thy scenes in glorious order rise,
'Till earth commingles with the distant skies!
And scenes so fair, that magic well might feign
That here she held her own delightful reign,
To chaunt her songs in every woodland bower,—
To mark her impress on the blooming flower—
To guide our rivers in their wandering course—
To lead our streamlets from their narrow source—
And draw fresh praises from admiring eyes,
By vales that fall, or gentle hills that rise.
But magic bows before that potent hand,
That formed our earth and bles't our happy land,—
Blest with profusion every vale and shore,
That we might love our native land the more.
Though Europe's sons may boast their mountains high,
With snow-clad tops that tower 'mid the sky.
Though Asia's gales with costly spices blend,
And to the smell a grateful fragrance lend—
I love the clime where nature marks no strife,
And every zephyr cheers the stream of life!
Thou favored land! clime of the great and brave!
We boast not these, for bounteous heaven gave
A gift more pure,—a right more dear to thee—
The gift,—the glorious gift, of LIBERTY!
Daughters of HEAVEN! fair LIBERTY, descends
And welcomes all, and all she calls her friends,
With pitying hand the captive's chain destroys,
And heals his wounds, and turns his griefs to joys.
Her presence speeds like sol's warm vernal ray,
Pure science flowers, and brightens into day.
And genius lingers in her happy train—
Shouts rend the hills and praises fill the plain!

Land of the great! much sooner be my grave
The desert sand—or awful ocean-wave;
Than thy fair clime to Tyrant's hands should bend,
Or freedom's reign should here forever end!

---

* This was composed when the author was on a journey, and it contains some of the sentiments with which the scenes through which he passed inspired him.

Digitized by Google

ON REARING OAK PLANTS IN HYACINTH GLASSES.

The following experiment on the germination and growth of plants, may be new to many of the readers of the "Casket."

Let a common hyacinth glass, or other glass if more convenient, be filled about a half or a third part full of water; and a piece of card be prepared as a cover for the opening of the glass, so as to fit close and exclude the air. Fasten a strong thread, or a piece of brass wire, round an acorn; not iron wire, for it will rust, and corrode the acorn, and frustrate the experiment. Suspend the thread or brass wire from the card, or from a small transverse bar of wood or metal beneath it, so that the acorn may be sustained at a short distance above the surface of the water, but near enough for the steam which will be generated by the glass being kept in a warm room, to be communicated to the acorn, from which it will descend in a large drop.

In a few days the germ will be found to burst the shell of the acorn, and in about a fortnight afterwards the radicle, or little root, will protrude itself through the cleft, and take a downward direction into the water, where it will be continually extended and enlarged, by degrees throwing out external fibres, until, after a few days more, the other member of the germ will be seen to rise upwards till it comes near the card that covers the vessel, through which a hole must be cut to allow of its free passage. This forms the stem of the tree, which will shortly be seen to throw out two leafits at its extremity, and shortly again others; till in the course of a few weeks from the commencement of the experiment, the tree will have grown to the height of several inches, and be ornamented at its top with leaves of two or three inches long, and wide in proportion, besides smaller ones breaking out at its sides, the root meanwhile having continued growing to a length exceeding that of the stem. In six instances of this experiment commenced in November last, the hyacinth glasses having been kept during the cold weather for the most part on the mantle-piece of an inhabited parlour, of the usual temperature of such apartments, the stems have grown to different heights, being respectively about five inches, which is the lowest, and so on to about nine inches, with intermediate heights, at the date of this letter, March 4th; the acorn itself having in the meantime become shrivelled, and lost much of its substance and weight.

The above sketch represents one of the examples described. The growth of a similar plant will, I am sure, afford an interesting object of observation to any of your readers who are fond of natural history, and may be disposed to try the experiment; and if, when they have satisfied their curiosity by the phenomenon, they desire to turn it to further account, they may do so, by removing their nursling from the glass to the garden, where they may have the pleasure of seeing the stem, at least, continue to improve under their eyes, the progress of the root being of course only known by its effects in continuing to supply moisture, and thereby giving increase and vigour to the stem. I have in my possession a couple of small oak plants, now growing in the earth, which were raised two or three years ago in glasses after the manner above described. March 4th, 1833.

Written for the Casket.

On a Young Lady's Admission to the Holy Communion.

Bright'ning round her youth's blue morning,
Hastens on without a cloud;
Hopes upon her soul are dawning,
Hopes too dear to breathe aloud.

Life is in its loveliest season,
Memory's flowers are half unblown;
Yet the sober smiles of reason
Have among her visions shone.

She has with the gay world mingled,
Felt its choicest pleasures pall,
Seen not one she would have singled,
Sighed not to renounce them all.

In her mind reflections crowded,
In her breast emotions thrill'd—
Earth's deceitful pomp was shrouded,
Nobler aims her spirit filled.

It has looked beyond existence,
Bounded by a few fleet years,
Discovered in the awful distance,
What the name of death endears.

Scenes that mortal never painted,
Scenes of bliss too pure for sound,
Where the trial'd, and the sainted,
Have an endless Sabbath found.

It has bowed in sweet dejection
At the altar's humblest place,
Early—ere the world's infection
Left it one polluted trace.

Felt a thrill of deeper rapture
In that shadowed hour of prayer,
Than when fashion's splendours wrap'd her,
Idol of the proudest there.

Should her youth's delicious morning
Darken with affliction's frown,
Calmly can she meet the warning,
Think each rising sorrow down.

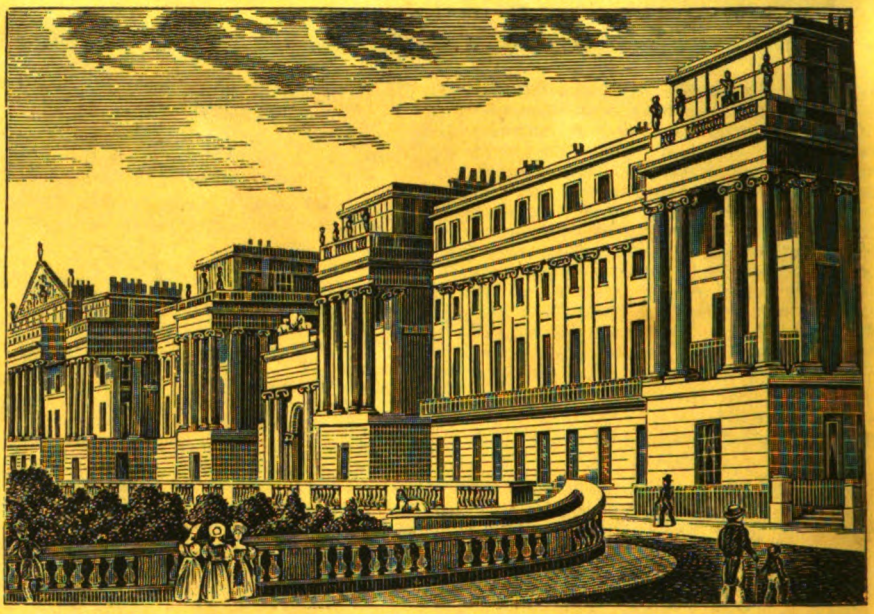
Should her hopes with wavering lustre,
Fade like summer sunset's hue;
He, she loves the best, disgust her
Faith, in friendship tremble too.

All the flowers of feeling perish,
All that seems so true, depart;
One assurance can she cherish,
Dear to a deserted heart.

Past the grave's mysterious border,
Truer blessings yet may be,
Richer glories to reward her,
If she's faithful, GOD, to THEE.

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google



Cumberland Terrace, Regent's Park, London.

Allentown, Pennsylvania.

Digitized by Google

CUMBERLAND TERRACE.

The opposite engraving represents one of those rows of splendid mansions, with which wealth and modern taste have, within a few years past, adorned the west end of London, to an enormous extent. Within the last twenty years, the city of London has increased more rapidly in size and magnificence, than at any era before known; and no part of the environs of that great metropolis, has received so large a portion of favour as Regent's Park. This celebrated place, situated on the north-west suburb, was formerly called Mary-le-bone park, and contains 543 acres. It was disposed of by Cromwell, as part of the crown lands, for £13,215, including 124 head of deer, and large quantities of timber.

It is a part of the ancient manor of Mary-le-bone, still more anciently called Tybourn, from its situation near a small bourn or rivulet formerly called Ayebrook; and the church built there, was called St. Mary at the bourn, and became corrupted to its present appellation of St. Mary-le-bone, or Mary-bone.

This immense parish, which is larger, more opulent, more populous, and possessed of more public and private buildings of good taste and real beauty, than many metropolises of Europe, is eight miles and a quarter in circumference, and computed to contain about 2,500 acres of land.

The manor house, which during the time it was vested in the crown, was occasionally used as a temporary royal residence, particularly by Queen Elizabeth, who appears by many accounts to have used her various palaces in rapid succession, was pulled down in the year 1791. It is related, that in 1600 the manor was abundantly stocked with game, when the ambassadors from the Emperor of Russia, and other Muscovites, rode through the city of London to Mary-bone park, and there hunted at their pleasure.

A recent Italian traveller in England, alludes to the houses of London in the following Trollopic style of description.

"If the sky is dark, not less gloomy is the whole first appearance of London, to him who enters it by the Dover road. The smoky colour of the houses, gives it the appearance of city that has been burnt. If to this be added the silence which prevails in the midst of a population of, perhaps, one million four hundred thousand persons, all in motion (so that one seems to be in a theatre of Chinese shades,) and the wearisome uniformity of the houses, almost all built in the same style, like a city of the beavers, it will be easy to imagine, that on first entering this darksome hive, the smile of pleased surprise soon gives way to a gloomy wonder. This was the old English style of building, which still prevails in the country. But, since the English have substituted the blue pill for suicide, or, still better, a journey to Paris—and, instead of Young's Night Thoughts, read the romances of Walter Scott, they have cheered up their houses with a coat of white, and have recently rebuilt the western part of the capital (west end) in a gayer and more varied style of architecture.

"The houses are small and fragile. The first night I spent in a lodging-house, I seemed to myself still on board the vessel; the walls were equally slender, and in great part of wood, the chambers small, and the staircase like a companion ladder; the walls are generally so thin, that they allow the passage of sounds without interruptions. The lodgers would hear one another talking, but that they are accustomed to speak in an under tone. I could hear the murmur of the conversation of my neighbour overhead,—my zenith, as that of the other neighbour beneath my feet, like the opposite point nadir; and I distinguished, at intervals, the words—"Very fine weather,—indeed—very fine—comfort—comfortable—great comfort," words which occur as often in their conversation, as commas in a book. In a word, the houses are ventriloquous. As I said before, they are all uniform. In a three story house, there are three bedrooms, one over the other, and three parlours in the same situation, so that the population is, as it were, warehoused in layers like merchandise—like the cheese in the storehouses at Lodi and Codogno. The English have not chosen without design this (I will venture to call it) naval architecture. The advantages they derive from living in houses of small size and little durability, are these: in general, a house is only built for 99 years; if it outlive this term, it belongs to the proprietor of the ground on which it is built. It seldom happens, therefore, that they attain to any great longevity; on the contrary, they sometimes tumble to pieces before the natural period of their existence. The English, who are better arithmeticians than architects, have discovered, that, by building in this slippery manner, they consume less capital, and that consequently the annual interest and the annual loss of principal, are proportionately less. There is another advantage: by this method, posterity is not hampered or tyrannized over. Every generation can choose and build its own houses, according to its own caprices, and its own necessities; and, although in a great measure composed of wood, all the houses are, as it were, incombustible, by means of the insurance companies, which guarantee the value of the house, the furniture, and every thing else. A fire is no misfortune, but merely a temporary inconvenience to the inmates; a something to look at for the passengers, and an entertaining paragraph for the newspapers. To an Englishman, his house is his Gibraltar; he must not only be invictable, but absolute, without dispute or fuss. He prefers living in a shell, like an oyster, to living in a palace with all the annoyance of a hen-roost.

ALLENTOWN, Pa.

Allentown—situated on the west bank of the river Lehigh, near the junction of the little Lehigh and Jordan, is one of the oldest settlements on that river; and in the different wars of America, was the scene of many a brave and bloody deed. It was here that Col. James Bird displayed such heroism in the early wars with the aborigines. It was here during the revolutionary war, that the bells which "chime so merrily" on Christ church in Philadelphia, were concealed by the Americans; and it was here, at a still later period of our national existence, that the insurrection in which the notorious John Fries bore so conspicuous a part, was fomented, and happily for us all, smothered in its birth.

Digitized by Google

Inhabited by a few wealthy and enterprizing Germans, and cut off for many years from the different post routes by the influence of the neighbouring towns, it remained inactive a long time. Its great elevation too, rendering it difficult to procure the necessary supply of water, had the effect of retarding its progress in the march of improvement, and remained, as at first, "unnoticed and unknown," until the year 1811, when by the division of Northampton county, Pennsylvania, was incorporated and called Northampton Borough, (a name which by the way, has occasioned innumerable mistakes, and might be altered with advantage.) Since that period it has improved rapidly, and bids fair to eclipse its neighbours in trade and wealth, as it has already done in point of beauty.

The town contains about 2200 inhabitants. One English and two German churches; two Libraries; an Academy and Boarding School, together with three smaller Seminaries; a Court-house, decidedly the handsomest in the state; a Jail, for which there is little or no use; twelve or fourteen houses of entertainment, some of which in point of size and convenience, are inferior to none in the interior of the country, and instead of the long low weather board huts of the first settlers, there are seen some splendid three storied buildings with granite fronts, containing stores vieing with those of the metropolis.

The Manch Chunk Company's canal has opened the trade to Philadelphia and New York, and produce to the amount of $200,000 per annum is sent from Allentown to those cities. Elevated above the surrounding country, Allentown has been remarkably healthy, and it is a fact worthy of notice, that during the prevalence of the yellow fever of 1793 and '99, and the cholera in 1832 and '33, there was not a single case of either in that place, that in any way resembled those diseases. A company incorporated in 1828, have erected a splendid Water Works about half a mile from the town, by means of which a stream of cool spring water is forced up to the height of 160 feet, and distributed in cast iron pipes through the streets. As a country residence, a more delightful spot cannot be imagined. The natural curiosities are numerous, and well worth seeing. The springs of Messrs. Martin, Smith and Worman, are justly admired by all who have seen them, while a walk to the Big Rock on the Lehigh mountain, amply repays the adventurer by the extent and novelty of the scenes which are there spread out before him on every side. A thousand feet below are seen well cultivated farms, stretching away as far as the eye can reach, except on the north, where the vision is bounded by the Blue Mountain, after forcing its way through which, the river may be traced meandering through a country beautifully varied, until it washes the base of the hill on which the town stands, and then uniting with the Little Lehigh, Trout Creek and Jordan, rushes along the foot of the Lehigh mountain, and is lost in the distance.

The inhabitants are mild, hospitable and orderly, the situation healthy and highly romantic, and within a convenient distance from Philadelphia, to which city there are two daily line of stages. The whole number of arrivals and departures of stages amount to 76 weekly. There are four well conducted weekly papers printed in Allentown. In short, whether we consider it as a place of business, or a pleasant retreat from the noise and bustle of the crowded cities, it is alike remarkable, and we confidently assert that none ever visited it without assenting to the correctness of these remarks, or left it without casting a "longing wish behind."

From the Saturday Evening Post.

FAREWELL TO HOME.

——"My native land, good-night."—BYRON.

Farewell my home!—the scenes I love
Are fading from my view,
And every hill, and every grove
Seem echoing back adieu.
But yet, where'er my lot shall be
My heart shall send a sigh to thee.

Farewell my home!—a burning tear
Has from its pearly fountain strayed,
To tell what most my soul held dear,
And quell the storm which grief had made.
Blest be that tear! for as it fell,
It seemed to say to me, farewell.

Farewell my home!—that tear shall be
A parting token of regret,—
The fount may dry that flowed for thee,
Yet never will my heart forget.
For all my paradise on earth
Is that sweet land which gave me birth.

Farewell my home!—friends of my youth,
For you shall heave my heart's last sigh—
The pangs of absence hope shall soothe,
And fancy paint my native sky.
No more within thy bowers to dwell—
My own—my father's home—farewell! T. H.

MAN EVER RESTLESS.

BY HERBERT.

When God at first made man,
Having a fount of blessings standing by
Let us, said he, pour on him all we can;
Let the world's riches that dispersed lie
Contract into a span.

So strength first made a way;
Then beauty flowed, then wisdom, honor, pleasure,
When almost all was out, God made a stay:
Perceiving that alone of all his treasure,
Rest, in the bottom lay.

For if I should, said he,
Bestow this jewel, also, on my creature,
He would adore my gifts instead of me:
And rest in nature, not the God of nature:—
So both should loser be.

Yet let him keep the rest,
But keep them with ripening restlessness:
Let him be rich and weary, that at least,
If goodness lead him not, yet weariness
May toss him to my heart.

Digitized by Google

From the Lady's Book.

THE ALBUM—A SKETCH.

BY MISS LESLIE.

'Tis not in mortals to command success.—Addison.

"UNGALLANT!—UNMILITARY!" exclaimed the beautiful Orinda Melbourne to her yet unprofessed lover, Lieutenant Sunderland, as in the decline of a summer afternoon, they sat near an open window in the northwest corner of Mr. Cozzens's house at West Point, where as yet there was no hotel—"And do you steadily persist in refusing to write in my album? Really, you deserve to be dismissed the service for unofficerlike conduct."

"I have forsworn, albums," replied Sunderland, "and for, at least, a dozen reasons. In the first place, the gods have not made me poetical."

"Ah!" interrupted Miss Melbourne, "you remind me of the well-known story of the mayor of a French provincial town, who informed the king that the worthy burgesses had fifteen reasons for not doing themselves the honour of firing a salute on his majesty's arrival: the first reason being, that they had no cannon."

"A case in point," remarked Sunderland.

"Well," resumed Orinda, "I do not expect you to surpass the glories of Byron and Moore."

"Nothing is more contemptible than mediocre poetry," observed Sunderland; "the magazines and souvenirs have surfeited the world with it."

"I do not require you to be even mediocre," persisted the young lady. "Give me something ludicrously bad, and I shall prize it almost as highly as if it were seriously good. I need not remind you of the hacknied remarks, that extremes meet, and that there is but one step from the sublime to the ridiculous. Look at this Ode to West Point, written in my album by a very obliging cadet, a room-mate of my brother's. It is a perfect gem. How I admire these lines,

"The steam-boat up the river shoots While Willis on his bugle toots."

"Wo to the man," said Sunderland, "who subjects his poetical reputation to the ordeal of a lady's album, where all, whether gifted or ungifted, are expected to do their best."

"You are mistaken," replied Orinda; "that expectation has long since gone by. We have found, by experience, that, either from negligence or perverseness, gentlemen are very apt to write their worst in our albums."

"I do not wonder at it," said Sunderland. "However, I must retrieve my character as a knight of chivalry. Appoint me any other task, and I will pledge myself to perform your bidding. Let your request take any shape but that, and my firm nerves shall never tremble."

"But why this inveterate horror of albums?" asked Orinda. "Have you had any experince in them?"

"I have to my sorrow," replied Sunderland. "With me, I am convinced," "the course of albums never will run smooth." For instance, I once, by means of an album, lost the lady of my love, (I presume not to say the love of my lady)."

Orinda looked up and looked down, and "a change came o'er the spirit of her face:" which change was not unnoticed by her yet undeclared admirer, whose acquaintance with Miss Melbourne commenced on a former visit she had made to West Point to see her brother, who was one of the cadets of the Military Academy.

Orinda Melbourne was now in her twenty-first year, at her own disposal, (having lost both her parents,) and mistress of considerable property, a great part of which had been left to her by an aunt. She resided in the city of New York, with Mr. and Mrs. Ledbury, two old and intimate friends of her family, and they had accompanied her to West Point. She was universally considered a very charming girl, and by none more so than by Lieutenant Sunderland. But hearing that Miss Melbourne had declined the addresses of several very unexceptionable gentlemen, our hero was trying to delay an explicit avowal of his sentiments, till he should discover some reason to hope that the disclosure would be favourably received.

Like most other men on similar occasions, he gave a favourable interpretation to the emotion involuntarily evinced by the young lady on hearing him allude to his former flame.

There was a pause of a few moments, till Orinda rallied, and said with affected carelessness—"You may as well tell me the whole story, as we seem to have nothing better to talk of."

"Well, then," proceeded Sunderland, "during one of my visits to the city, I met with a very pretty young lady from Brooklyn. Her name is of course unmentionable, but I soon found myself, for the first time in my life, a little in love"—

"I suspect it was not merely a little," remarked Orinda, with a penetrating glance—"It is said that, in love, the first fit is always the strongest."

"No no," exclaimed Sunderland; "I deny the truth of that opinion. It is a popular fallacy—I know it is"—fixing his eyes on Orinda.

At that minute the young officer would have given a year's pay to be certain whether the glow that heightened Miss Melbourne's complexion was a bona fide blush, or only the reflection of the declining sunbeams as they streamed from under a dark cloud that was hovering over the western hill. However, after a few moments' consideration, he again interpreted favourably.

"Proceed, Mr. Sunderland," said Orinda in rather a tremulous voice; "tell me all the particulars."

"Of the album I will," replied he. "Well then—this young lady was one of the belles of Brooklyn, and certainly very handsome."

"Of what colour were her eyes and hair?" inquired Orinda.

"Light—both very light."

Orinda, who was a brunette, caught herself on the point of saying that she had rarely seen much expression in the countenance of a blonde; but she checked the remark, and Sunderland proceeded.

"The lady in question had a splendidly bound album, which she produced and talked about on all occasions, and seemed to regard with so much pride and admiration, that if a lover could possibly have been jealous of a book, I was, at times, very near becoming so. It was half filled with amatory verses by juvenile rhymesters, and with tasteless insipid drawings in water colours, by boarding-school misses: which drawings my dulcinea persisted in calling paintings. She also persisted in urging me to write "a piece of poetry" in her album, and I persevered in declaring my utter inability: as my few attempts at versification had hitherto proved entire failures. At last, I reluctantly consented, recollecting to have heard of sudden fits of inspiration, and of miraculous gifts of poetical genius with which even milkmaids and cobblers have been unexpectedly visited. So taking the album with me, I retired to the solitude of my apartment at the City Hotel, concluding with Macbeth that when a thing is to be well done, 'tis well to do it quickly. Here I manfully made my preparations "to saddle Pegasus and ride up Parnassus"—but in vain. With me the winged steed of Apollo was as obstinate as a Spanish mule on the Sierra Morena. Not an inch would he stir. There was not even the slighest flutter in his pinions; and the mountain of the muses, looked to me as inaccessible as—as what shall I say"—

Digitized by Google

"I will help you to a simile," replied Orinda; "as inaccessible as the sublime and stupendous precipice to which you West Pointers have given the elegant and appropriate title of Butter Hill."

"Exactly," responded Sunderland. "Parnassus looked like Butter Hill. Well then—to be brief (as every man says when he suspects himself to be tedious,) I sat up till one o'clock, vainly endeavouring to manufacture something that might stand for poetry. But I had no rhymes for my ideas, and no ideas for my rhymes. I found it impossible to make both go together. I at last determined to write my verses in prose till I had arranged the sense, and afterwards to put them into measure and rhyme. I tried every sort of measure from six feet to ten, and I essayed consecutive rhymes and alternate rhymes, but all was in vain. I found that I must either sacrifice the sense to the sound, or the sound to the sense. At length, I thought of the Bouts Rimes of the French. So I wrote down, near the right hand edge of my paper, a whole column of familiar rhymes, such as mine, thine, tears, fears, light, bright, &c. And now I congratulated myself on having accomplished one half of my task, supposing that I should find it comparatively easy to do the filling up. But all was to no purpose. I could effect nothing that I thought even tolerable, and I was too proud to write badly and be laughed at. However, I must acknowledge that could I have been certain that my "piece of poetry, would be seen only by the fair damsel herself, I might easily have screwed my courage to the sticking place; for greatly as I was smitten with the beauty of my little nymph, I had a secret misgiving that she had never sacrificed to Minerva."

Our hero paused a moment to admire the radiance of the smile that now lighted up the countenance of Orinda.

"In short," continued he, "I sat up till night's candles were burnt out" both literally and metaphorically, and I then retired in despair to my pillow, from whence I did not rise till ten o'clock in the morning."

"That evening, I carried back the album to my fair one, but she still refused to let me off, and insisted that I should take it with me to West Point, to which place I was to return next day. I did so, hoping to catch some inspiration from the mountain air, and the mountain scenery. I ought to have recollected that few of the poets on record, either lived among mountains, or wrote while visiting them. The sons of song are too often fated to set up their household gods, and strike their lyres in dark narrow streets, and dismal alleys."

As soon as the steam-boat had cleared the city, I took out my pocket-book and pencil, and prepared for the onset. I now regarded the ever-beautiful scenery of the magnificent Hudson with a new interest. I thought the Palisades would do something for me; but my imagination remained as sterile and as impenetrable as their eternal rocks. The broad expanse of the Tappan Sea lay like a resplendant mirror around me, but it reflected no image that I could transfer to my tablets. We came into the Highlands, but the old Thunder Barrack rumbled nothing in my fancy's ear, Anthony's Nose looked coldly down upon me, and the Sugar Loaf suggested no idea of sweetness. We proceeded along, but Buttermilk Falls reminded me not of the fountain of Helicon, and Bull Hill and Breakneck Hill seemed too rugged ever to be smoothed into verse."

"That afternoon I went up to Fort Putnam, for the hundred and twentieth time in my life. I walked round the dismantled ramparts, I looked into their damp and gloomy cells. I thought, (as is the duty of every one that visits these martial ruins) on the 'pride, pomp, and circumstance of glorious war.' But they inspired nothing that I could turn to account in my lady's album; nothing that could serve to introduce the compliment always expected in the last stanza. And, in truth, this compliment was the chief stumblingblock after all. 'But for these vile compliments, I might myself have been an album-poet."

"Is it then so difficult to compliment a lady?" inquired Orinda.

"Not in plain prose," replied Sunderland; "and when the lady is a little imbecile, nothing in the world is more easy. But even in prose, to compliment a sensible woman as she deserves, and without danger of offending her modesty, requires both tact and talent."

"Which I suppose is the reason," said Orinda, "that sensible women obtain so few compliments from your sex, and fools so many."

"True," replied Sunderland. "But such compliments as we wish to offer to elegant and intellectual females, are as orient pearls compared to French beads."

Orinda cast down her beautiful eyes under the expressive glance of her admirer. She felt that she was now receiving a pearl.

"But to proceed," continued Sunderland, "I came down from the fort no better poet than I went up, and I had recourse again to the solitude of my own room. Grown desperate, and determined to get the album off my mind and have it over, an idea struck me which I almost blush to mention. Promise not to look at me, and I will amaze you with my candour."

Digitized by Google

Orinda pretended to hold her fan before her eyes.

"Are you sure you are not peeping between the stem of the feathers," said Sunderland. "Well then, now for my confession; but listen to it 'more in sorrow than in anger,' and remember that the album alone was the cause of my desperation and my dishonour. Some Mephistophiles whispered in my ear to look among the older poets for something but little known, and transfer it as mine to a page in the fatal book. I would not, of course, venture on Scott or Moore or Byron, for though I doubted whether my lady love, was better versed in them than in the bards of Queen Anne's reign, yet I thought that perhaps some of the readers of her album might be acquainted with the last and best of the minstrels. But on looking over a volume of Pope, I found his "Song by a person of quality."

"I recollect it," said Orinda; "it is a satire on the amateur love-verses of that period: such as were generally produced by fashionable inamoratoes. In these stanzas the author has purposely avoided every approach to sense or connexion, but has assembled together a medley of smooth and euphonous sounds. And could you risk such verses with your Dulcinea!"

"Yes," replied Sunderland, "with her, I knew that I was perfectly safe, and that she would pronounce them sweet and delightful. And in short, that they would exactly suit the calibre of her understanding."

"Yet still," said Orinda, "with such an opinion of her mental qualification, you professed to love this young lady—or rather you really loved her—no doubt you did."

"No, no," replied Sunderland, eagerly. "It was only a passing whim—only a boyish fancy—such as a man may feel a dozen times, before he is five and twenty, and before he is seriously in love. I should have told you at this period, I had not yet arrived at years of discretion."

"I should have guessed it without your telling," said Orinda, mischievously.

The young officer smiled, and proceeded.

"I now saw my way clear. So I made a new pen, placed Pope on my desk, and sitting down to the album with a lightened spirit, I began with the first stanza of his poem—

'Flattering spread thy purple pinions
Gentle Cupid o'er my heart,
I a slave in thy dominions,
Nature must give way to art.'

And I then added the second and sixth verses, substituting the name of my fair one for that of Aurelia."

"What would I not give to know that name!" thought Orinda. "But, in those verses," she remarked to Sunderland, "if I recollect aright, there is no direct compliment to the lady's beauty."

"But there is a very great one by implication," answered the lieutenant. "For instance, the line—'Hear me pay my dying vows.'—What more could I profess than to die for love of her! And a lady that is died for, must of course be superlatively charming. In short, I finished the verses, and I must say they were very handsomely transcribed. Now do not laugh. Is it not more excusable to take some pride in writing a good hand, than to boast of scribbling a bad one? I have known persons who seemed absolutely to plume themselves on the illegibility of their scrawls; because, unfortunately, so many men of genius have indulged in a most shameful style of chirography."

"Well, I viewed my performance with much satisfaction, and then proceeded to look attentively through the album, (I had as yet but glanced over it,) to see if any one excelled me in calligraphy. What was my horror, when I found among a multitude of Lines to Zephyrs and Dew-drops, and Stanzas to Rose-buds and Violets, the identical verses that I had just copied from Pope! Some other poor fellow, equally hard pressed, had been before-hand with me, and committed the very same theft: which, in his case, appeared to me enormous. I pronounced it 'flat burglary,' and could have consigned him to the Penitentiary 'for the whole term of his natural life.' To be compelled to commit a robbery is bad enough, but to be anticipated in the very same robbery, and to find that you have burdened your conscience, and jeopardized your self-respect for nothing, is worse still."

"There was one way," observed Orinda, "in which you could have extricated yourself from the dilemma. You might have cut out the leaf, and written something else on another."

"That was the very thing I finally determined on doing," replied Sunderland. "So after a pause of deep distress, I took my penknife, and did cut out the leaf: resolving that for my next 'writing piece,' I would go as far back as the poets of Elizabeth's time. While pleasing myself with the idea that all was now safe, I perceived, in moving the book, that another leaf was working its way out; and I found to my great consternation, that I had cut too deeply, and that I had loosened a page on which was faintly drawn in a lady's hand, a faint Cupid shooting at a faint heart, encircled with a wreath of faint flowers. I recollected that my 'fair one with locks of gold,' had pointed out to me this performance as 'the sweetest thing in her album."

"By the by," remarked Orinda, "when you found so much difficulty in composing verses, why did you not substitute a drawing?"

"Oh!" replied the lieutenant, "though I am at no loss in military drawing, and can finish my bastions, and counterscarps and ravelins with all due neatness, yet my miscellaneous sketches are very much in the style of scene-painting, and totally unfit to be classed with the smooth, delicate, half-tinted prettiness that are peculiar to lady's albums."

"Now," said Orinda, "I am going to see how you will bear a compliment. I know that your drawings are bold and spirited, and such as the artists consider very excellent for an amateur, and therefore I will excuse you from writing verses in my album, on condition that you make me a sketch, in your own way, of my favourite view of Fort Putnam—I mean that fine scene of the west side which bursts suddenly upon you when going thither by the back road that leads through the woods. How sublime is the effect, when you stand at the foot of the dark gray precipice, feathered as it is with masses of beautiful foliage, and when you look up to its lofty summit, where the living rock seems to blend itself with the dilapidated ramparts of the mountain fortress!"

Digitized by Google

"To attempt such a sketch for Miss Melbourne," replied Sunderland, with much animation, "I shall consider both a pleasure and an honour. But Loves and Doves, and Roses and Posies, are entirely out of my line, or rather out of the line of my pencil. Now, where was I? I believe I was telling of my confusion when I found that I had inadvertently cut out the young lady's pet Cupid."

"But did it not strike you," said Orinda, "that the easiest course, after all, was to go to your demoiselle, and make a candid confession of the whole: which she would undoubtedly have regarded in no other light than as a subject of amusement, and have been too much diverted to feel any displeasure."

"Ah! you must not judge of every one by yourself," replied Sunderland. "I thought for a moment of doing what you now suggest, but after a little consideration, I more than suspected that my candour would be thrown away upon the perverse little damsel that owned the album, and that any attempt to take a ludicrous view of the business would mortally offend her. All young ladies are not like Miss Orinda Melbourne"—(bowing as he spoke.)

Orinda turned her head towards the window, and fixed her eyes intently on the top of the crow's nest. This time the suffusion on her cheeks was not in the least doubtful.

"Well then," continued Sunderland, "that I might remedy the disaster as far as possible, I procured some fine paste, and was proceeding to cement the leaf to its predecessor, when in my agitation, a drop of the paste fell on the Cupid's face. In trying to absorb it with the corner of a clean handkerchief, I 'spread the ruin widely round,' and smeared off his wings, which unfortunately grew out of the back of his neck; a very pardonable mistake, as the fair artist had probably never seen a live Cupid. I was now nearly frantic, and I enacted sundry ravings 'too tedious to mention.' The first use I made of my returning senses was to employ a distinguished artist (then on a visit to West Point) to execute on another leaf, another Cupid, with bow and arrow, heart and roses, &c. He made a beautiful little thing, a design of his own, which alone was worth a thousand album drawings of the usual sort. I was now quite reconciled to the disaster which had given me an opportunity of presenting the young lady with a precious specimen of taste and genius. As soon as it was finished, I obtained leave of absence for a few days, went down to the city, and album in hand, I repaired to my Brooklyn beauty. I knew that, with her, there would be no use in telling the whole truth and nothing but the truth, and I acknowledge with shame that I suppressed the fact of my copying Pope's verses. I merely said, that not being quite satisfied with my poetry, I had cut out the leaf; and I then went on to relate the remainder exactly as it happened. As I proceeded, I observed her brows beginning to contract, and her lips beginning to pout. "Well, sir," said she, with her eyes flashing, (for I now found that even blue eyes could flash,) "I think you have been taking great liberties with my album: cutting and clipping it, and smearing it with paste, and spoiling my best Cupid, and then getting a man to put another picture into it, without asking my leave."

"Much disconcerted, I made many apologies, all of which she received with a very ill grace. I ventured to point out to her the superiority of the drawing that had been made by the artist."

"I see no beauty in it," she exclaimed, "the shading is not half so much blended as Miss Cottonwool's, and it does not look half so soft."

"I have observed," said Orinda, "that persons who in reality know but little of the art, always dwell greatly on what they call softness."

"I endeavoured to reconcile her to the drawing," continued Sunderland; "but she persisted in saying that it was nothing to compare to Miss Cottonwool's, which she alleged was of one delicate tint throughout; while this was very light in some places and very dark in others, and that she could actually see distinctly where most of the touches were put on, 'when in paintings that are really handsome,' said she, "all the shadings blended together, and looks soft."

"To conclude, she would not forgive me; and in sober truth, I must acknowledge that the petulance and silliness she evinced on this occasion, took away much of my desire to be restored to favour. Next day I met her walking on the Battery, in high flirtation with an old West Indian planter, who espoused her in the course of a fortnight, and carried her to Antigua."

Orinda now gave an involuntary and almost audible sigh; feeling a sensation of relief on hearing that her rival by anticipation, was married and gone, and entirely hors de combat.

Mr. and Mrs. Ledbury, who had been taking a long walk, now came in: and shortly after, the bell rang for tea. And when Orinda took the offered arm of Sunderland, (as he conducted her to the table) she felt a presentiment, that before many days, the important question would be asked and answered.

The evening on which our story commences, was that of the 3d of July 1825, and tea was scarcely over at the Mess House, when an orderly Serjeant came round with a notice for the officers to assemble in uniform at the dock, to receive General La Fayette, who was expected in half an hour.

The guest of the nation had visited the Military Academy soon after his arrival in America. He had there been introduced to Cadet Huger, the son of the gallant Carolinian, who, in conjunction with the generous and enterprising Bollman, had so nearly succeeded in the hazardous attempt of delivering him from the dungeons of Olmutz.

La Fayette was now on his return from his memorable tour throughout the United States. Major Worth, who was in command at West Point during the temporary absence of Colonel Thayer, happened to be at Newburgh when the steam-boat arrived there, in which La Fayette was proceeding down the river from Albany to New York; and he invited the General to stop at West Point, and remain till the next boat. The invitation was promptly accepted, and Major Worth instantly dispatched a messenger with the intelligence; wishing to give the residents of the post, an opportunity of making such preparations for the reception of their distinguished visiter, as the shortness of the time would allow.

Digitized by Google

The officers hastily put on their full dress uniform, and repaired to the wharf, or docks as it is called. The band (at that time the finest in America) was already there. The ladies assembled on the high bank that overlooks the river, and from thence witnessed the arrival of La Fayette.

On the heights above the landing place, and near the spot where the hotel has been since erected, appeared an officer, and a detachment of soldiers, waiting with lighted matches to commence the salute; for which purpose several pieces of artillery had been conveyed thither.

The twilight of a summer evening was accelerated by a vast and heavy cloud, portentous of a thunder storm. It had overspread the west, and loured upon the river, on whose yet unruffled waters the giant shadows of the mountains were casting a still deeper gloom. Beyond Polipel's Island was seen the coming steam-boat, looking like an immense star upon a level with the horizon. There was a solemn silence all around, which was soon broken by the sound of the paddles, that were heard when the boat was as far off as Washington's Valley: and in a few minutes, her dense shower of sparks and her wreath of red smoke were vividly defined upon the darkening sky.

The boat was soon at the wharf: and at the moment that La Fayette stepped on shore, the officers took off their hats, the band struck up Hail Columbia; and, amid the twilight gloom, and the darkness of the impending thunder-cloud, it was chiefly by the flashes of the guns from the heights, that the scene was distinctly visible. The lightning of heaven quivered also on the water; and the mountain echoes repeated the low rolling of the distant thunder, in unison with the loud roar of the cannon.

The general, accompanied by his son, and by his secretary Levasseur, walked slowly up the hill, leaning on the arm of Major Worth, preceded by the band playing La Fayette's March, and followed by the officers and professors of the Institution. When they had ascended to the plain, they found the houses lighted up, and the camp of the cadets illuminated also. They proceeded to the Mess House, and as soon as they had entered, the musicians ranged themselves under the elms in front, and commenced Yankee Doodle; the quick-step to which La Fayette at the head of his American division, had marched to the attack at the siege of Yorktown.

While the General was partaking of some refreshment, the officers and professors returned for the ladies, all of whom were desirous of an introduction to him. Many children were also brought and presented to the far-famed European, who had so importantly assisted in obtaining for them and for their fathers, the glorious immunities of independence.

Even now, while one who was present at this scene is essaying to describe it, her reminiscences are broken by the intelligence that has recently reached our shores of the death of that truly great man, a few hours in whose history she is attempting to rescue from the waves of oblivion. The star has now set which shone so auspiciously for our country at that disastrous period of our revolutionary struggle—

"When hope was sinking in dismay,
And gloom obscured Columbia's day."

Mouldering into dust is that honoured hand which was clasped with such deep emotion by the assembled sons and daughters of the nation, in whose cause it had first unsheathed the sword of liberty. And soon will that noble and generous heart, so replete with truth and benevolence, be reduced to 'a clod of the valley.' Yet, may we not hope that from the world of eternity, of which his immortal spirit is now an inhabitant, he looks down with equal interest on the land of his nativity, and on the land of his adoption: that country so bound to him by ties of everlasting gratitude, that country where all were his friends as he was the friend of all.

Tears suffused the beautiful eyes of Orinda Melbourne, when introduced by her lover, she took the offered hand of La Fayette, and her voice trembled as she replied to the compliment of the patriot of both hemispheres. Sunderland remarked to the son of the illustrious veteran, that it gave him much pleasure to see that the General's long and fatiguing journey had by no means impaired his healthful appearance, but that on the contrary, he now looked better than he had done on his first arrival in America. "Ah!" replied Colonel La Fayette, "how could my father suffer from fatigue, when every day was a day of happiness!"

After Orinda had resigned her place to another lady, she said to Sunderland who stood at the back of her chair—"What would I not give for La Fayette's autograph in my album!"

"Still harping on the album," said Sunderland, smiling.

"Excuse me this once," replied Orinda. I begin to think as you do with respect to albums, but if nothing else can be alleged in their favour, they may, at least, be safe and convenient depositories for mementoes of those whose names are their history. All I presume to wish or to hope from La Fayette is simply his signature. But I have not courage myself to ask such a favour. Will you convey my request to him?"

"Willingly," answered Sunderland. "But he will grant that request still more readily if it comes from your own lips. Let us wait awhile, and I will see that you have an opportunity."

In a short time, nearly all the company had departed, except those that were inmates of the house. The gentlemen having taken home the ladies, returned for the purpose of remaining with La Fayette till the boat came along in which he was to proceed to the city.

Digitized by Google

Orinda took her album; her admirer conducted her to the General, and with much confusion she proffered her request; Sunderland brought him a standish, and he wrote the name La Fayette in the centre of a blank page, which our heroine presented to him: it having on each side other blank leaves which Orinda determined should never be filled up. Highly gratified at becoming the possessor of so valued a signature, she could scarcely refrain, in her enthusiasm, from pressing the leaf to her lips, when she soon after retired with Mrs. Ledbury.

The officers remained with General La Fayette till the arrival of the boat, which came not till near twelve o'clock. They then accompanied him to the wharf, and took their final leave. The thunder storm had gone round without discharging its fury on West Point, and every thing had turned out propitiously for the General's visit; which was perhaps the more pleasant for having been so little expected.

The following day was the Fourth of July, and the next was the one fixed on by Mr. and Mrs. Ledbury for returning to New York. That morning, at the breakfast table, the number of guests was increased by the presence of a Mr. Jenkins, who had come from the city in the same boat with Miss Melbourne and her friends, and after passing a few days at West Point, had gone up the river to visit some relations at Poughkeepsie, from whence he had just returned. Mr. Jenkins was a shallow, conceited, over-drest young man, and moreover extremely ugly, though of this misfortune he was not in the least aware. He was of a family whose wealth had not made them genteel. He professed great politeness to the ladies, that is, if they had beauty and money, yet he always declared that he would marry nothing under a hundred thousand dollars. But he was good-natured; and that, and his utter insignificance, got him along tolerably well, for no one ever thought it worth while to be offended at his folly and self-sufficiency.

After breakfast, Mrs. Ledbury asked Orinda if she had prevailed on Mr. Sunderland to write an article in her album, adding—"I heard you urging him to that effect, the other day as I passed the front parlour."

"I found him inexorable, as to writing," replied Orinda.

"Well, really," said Mr. Jenkins, "I don't know how a gentleman can reconcile himself to refuse any think a lady asks. And he an officer too! For my part, I always hold it my bounden duty to oblige the ladies, and never on any account to treat them with hauteur, as the French call it. To be sure I am not a marrying man—that is, I do not marry under a hundred thousand—but still, that is no reason why I should not be always polite and agreeable. Apropos, as the French say—apropos, Miss Melbourne, you know I offered the other day to write something for you in your album, and I will do it with all the pleasure in life. I am very partial to albums, and quite au-fait to them, to use a French term."

"We return to the city this afternoon," said Orinda. "You will scarcely have time to add any thing to the treasures of my album."

"Oh! it won't take me long," replied Jenkins—"short and sweet is my motto. There will be quite time enough. You see I have already finished my breakfast. I am not the least of a gourmand, to borrow a word from the French."

Orinda had really some curiosity to see a specimen of Jenkin's poetry: supposing that, like the poor cadet's, it might be amusingly bad. Therefore, having sent for her album, she put it hastily into Jenkins's hand: for at that moment, Lieutenant Sunderland, who had, as usual, been breakfasting at the mess-table with his brother officers, came in to invite her to walk with him to Gee's Point. Orinda assented, and immediately put on her bonnet, saying, to her lover as she left the house—

"You know this is one of my favourite walks; I like that fine mass of bare granite running far out into the river, and the beautiful view from its extreme point. And then the road, by which we descend to it, is so charmingly picturesque, with its deep ravine on one side, filled with trees and flowering shrubs, and the dark and lofty cliff that towers up on the other, where the thick vine wanders in festoons, and the branches of the wild rose throw their long streamers down the rock: on whose utmost theights still linger some vestiges of the grass-grown ruins of Fort Clinton."

But we question if on this eventful morning, the beauties of Gee's Point were duly appreciated by our heroine, for long before they had reached it, her lover had made an explicit avowal of his feelings and his hopes, and had obtained from her the promise of her hand: which promise was faithfully fulfilled on that day two months.

In the afternoon, Lieutenant Sunderland accompanied Miss Melbourne and her friends on their return to the city. Previous to her departure, Orinda did not forget to remind Mr. Jenkins of her album, now doubly valuable to her as containing the name of La Fayette written by his own hand.

Jenkins begged a thousand pardons, alleging that the arrival of a friend from New York had prevented him from writing in it as he had intended. "And of course," said he, "I could not put off my friend, as he is one of the elite of the city, to describe him in French. However, there is time enough yet. Short and sweet you know"—

"The boat is in sight," said Sunderland.

"Oh! no matter," answered Jenkins. "I can do it in a minute, and I will send it down to the boat after you. Miss Melbourne shall have it before she quits the wharf. I would on no consideration be guilty of disappointing a lady."

And taking with him the album, he went directly to his room.

"You had best go down to the dock," said the cadet, young Melbourne, who had come to see his sister off. "There is no time to be lost. I will take care that the album reaches you in safety, should you be obliged to go without it."

They proceeded towards the river, but they had scarcely got as far as Mrs. Thompson's when a waiter came running after them with the book, saying—"Mr Jenkins's compliments to Miss Melbourne, and all is right."

"Really," said Sunderland, "that silly fellow must have a machine for making verses, to have turned out any thing like poetry in so short a time."

Digitized by Google

They were scarcely seated on the deck of the steamboat, when Orinda opened her album to look for the inspirations of Jenkins' Muse. She found no verses. But on the very page consecrated by the hand of La Fayette, and immediately under the autograph of the hero, was written in an awkard school-boy character, the name of Jeremiah Jenkins.

Written for the Casket.

THE VISION OF LIBERTY.

Or, the World's complete Emancipation.

BY L. W. TRASK.

Percipient Muse, whose animating fire
Bids every soul to nobler deeds aspire,
Assist my strain, thy towering flame impart
To kindle love in every freeman's heart.
Piercing the dark and lurid gloom that rears
Between the present, and expected years,
The muse's vision all the earth explores,
Her rising prospects and her endless shores.
And lo! bright glories from the earth's domain,
Ascends to heaven and filled the etherial plain;
The stars and sun with one reviving glow,
Beam heavenly radiance on the world below;
Rapt with the sight, extended forests leap,
And islands dance along the rumbling deep;
Enrapturing scenes amid the earth arise,
And laughing earth salutes the smiling skies.
The time arrives when LIBERTY pervades
The darkest spot of tyrants, and their shades,
The world rejoices, for the world is free
And songs resound to heavenly LIBERTY.
The cheerless islands of the northern wave,
The rocky coasts that southern oceans lave,
The burning Indies and the eastern isles—
Clothed with the joy, of lovely Freedom's smiles,
Announce the conquests of that promised power,
And gladly hail the consummated hour.
Thrones burst asunder, sceptres fall to dust,
And mighty cannons are as crumbling rust.
Dungeons are rent, and tyrants victims bear
Their feeble bodies to the breathing air—
And bloody ensigns of the tyrant race,
No more the world or wiser man disgrace!
In this new realm Eternal truth pervades
The dusky mists of superstition's shades;
And horrid fanes defiled with human gore,
Shrink at her sight, and fall to rise no more.
From pole to pole, from sea to sea, her flight
Illumes the darkness of the heathen night,
And the bright glories of a future day,
Beam with effulgence on her earthly way.
Fair science shines with rich transparent rays
And to the realm of human mind essays;
With rapid wing she mounts the bending sky,
Observes how worlds in circling orbits fly,
How flaming suns in sure attraction draw
Vast orbs around by nature's ruling law;
Then down to earth her various labors tend,
Where ponderous strata in rude circles bend—
Describes the boundary of the rolling waves,
The hidden pearls and distant coral caves—
And shows, arranged at one primeval birth,
How different strata form our solid earth.
In all her labors brilliant thought she finds,
That raises, elevates and cheers our minds.
Virtue, indigenious in Freedom's sway,
Wrests the cold sceptre of disgrace away,
Points up to fame, re-comforts the distressed,
And shows the place of perfect earthly rest.
As springing plants upon the flowery mead,
On sol's warm ray will only well succeed—
So virtue's graces, and perfections, run
And flourish best in freedom's lovely sun.
Mankind connected in one common joy,
Mankind disparted by no adverse tie—
War shall no more give forth his bellowing breath,
Nor wing the sable instruments of death!
But peace eternal springs in every clime,
Till HEAVEN ordain the final close of time.
The canvassed navies sail on every deep,
And agriculture graces every steep;
Extending cities rise on every strand,
And fair magnificence adorn the land!
Oh! lovely vision, tyranny is hurled!
And undistinguished glory crowns the world!
From star to star, the pleasing glory runs,
From worlds to worlds, and flaming suns to suns,
And should its course be bright as it portends,
Creation's bound its progress only ends!
Arise! ye freemen whom these flames inspire,
And show in action, what your hearts desire,
And live to see the good your deeds bestow,
When honour, virtue, GOD are loved below!

The following lines were written by the late Miss Martha Day, a daughter of President Day, of Yale College.

TWILIGHT FANCIES.

I would not wish that o'er my grave
A rose or myrtle bough should lean,
Nor e'en the willow there should wave,
Nor aught but wild-flowers should be seen.

I would not wish that those I love
Should wander there at close of day,
And think of her o'er whom they rove
As dwelling only with decay.

Or gazing on the little mound,
Imagine all they cannot see,
And, starting at the slightest sound,
With chilling horror think of me.

No, but in each familiar spot,
Which both to me and them was dear,
There I would not be by all forgot,
Yet ne'er remembered with a tear.

In the sweet home I loved so well,
Round them unseen I oft would fly,
Teaching the summer breeze to swell
With notes of spirit melody.

And something in that half-heard strain
Should breathe an unforgotten voice,
And bringing thoughts all free from pain,
Should still forbid them to rejoice.

Or when around the cheerful hearth
Parents and children meet at eve,
While beats each heart with love and mirth,
Oh! should I wish those hearts to grieve?

Yet I would hover in the air
And bind each heart with spells unknown,
Till they should feel my spirit there,
Mingling in every look and tone.

Each glance of childhood's sparkling eye,
Each thrilling sound of childish glee,
And every pensive look or sigh,
All should some token bear of me.

Yet with my memory should not come
One thought of dear affections crossed,
Or any shade in that dear home,
To which I never could be lost.

Digitized by Google

[From a German Paper.]

THE PIE.

Mr. Heftelmeyer was the court tailor, and had a due sense of his importance. No person, who would pretend to be well dressed, could think of wearing a coat that did not proceed from the gallery of Mr. Heftelmeyer; and all the attempts of his rivals to attain the singular elegance of his cut, failed most miserably. But he was perhaps more, and certainly more justly, renowned for the beauty of his daughter Amelia, than for his tailoring accomplishments transcendant as they were. All the flatteries which were addressed to her were disregarded; for she had vowed her affections to the son of a celebrated preacher, Mr. Seeheim; and although that reverend personage had expressed his disapprobation of his son's marrying Amelia, she was satisfied with the young man's assurances that nothing could ever change the affection he entertained for her.

Mr. Heftelmeyer could not understand why the preacher should object to this marriage, because he thought himself inferior to no one in importance; and moreover, he inhabited the first floor of the hotel, while Mr Seeheim lived in the second. His wife said she was sure it was not the preacher, but Madame Seeheim, whose pride opposed the union. The real truth was, that the whole affair was one of foolish vanity on the part of the parson. He was afraid that his relations, who were distinguished persons, would not countenance his son if he should marry a tailor's daughter. Maurice could not understand this, and resolved, although he was an obedient son, that as soon as he could establish himself in any way of living independent of his father, he would make Amelia his wife. In the meantime there was any thing but neighbourly feeling between the two families. One day Mr. Heftelmeyer wondered that his wife would eat no dinner, and at length extorted from her a confession, that she had set her mind on a pie which she had seen carried to Madame Seeheim, and in so ostentatious a manner that she had no doubt it was done purposely to mortify her. Amelia ventured to doubt this, and received a reproof for her pains. Mr. Heftelmeyer, like a good husband, consoled his wife with a promise that she should have such a pie as would make their neighbour's pie blush for very shame.

The court pastry cook was an artist not less distinguished in his line than the court tailor, and quite as proud of his productions. To this important personage, Mr. Heftelmeyer applied, and ordered a pie for the following Sunday, enjoining the pastry-cook, at the same time, to put on the top of it, by the way of ornament, a letter S. finely gilded; which was meant by the gallant tailor to be a compliment to his spouse, whose baptismal name was Sophia. The pastry-cook in vain represented that such a decoration was by no means in good taste; but it was Mr. Heftelmeyer's taste, and as he had to pay for the pie and to eat it afterwards, he had surely a right to follow his own vagaries. The pastry cook saw that a man might make good coats, yet know nothing of the true principles of taste; so he shrugged up his shoulders, and set about making the pie.

Sunday came and the pie was brought home. He enjoined silence to all his household, and intended to make his present a surprise to his wife. He had it placed on a table in the anti-chamber, and left the door open, in order that Madame Seeheim, might be sure to see it as she passed down stairs. Unluckily the good lady did not go out at all, so this part of the scheme was frustrated. Mr. Seeheim, however, who was gone to church, must see it as he came home, and so the door was still left open.

Before Mr. Seeheim's return, however an old woman, who was in the habit of asking alms, came up the stairs. She entered the anti-chamber where no person happened to be. She knocked at the inner door; but the child was crying most lustily and prevented her knocks from being heard. The old beggar, although she had just come from the church where Mr. Seeheim had been preaching a sermon against mendicity and theft, had not profited by his exhortations. The first she was already committing, and the sight of the pie induced her to commit the other. She seized the master piece of pastry with the gilt S. upon it, and made the best way down stairs.—Just as she reached the bottom she heard some one enter the passage; and thinking the best way of avoiding detection would be to turn back again, she mounted the staircase rapidly, and passing the tailor's door, went still further up stairs. The person whom she had heard, followed her, and she saw it was Mr. Seeheim, who was all the while congratulating himself on the effect which he thought his sermon would have in diminishing the practice of beggary and theft.

The old woman felt herself already in the hands of the police, when she found that she could not get higher than the second floor, and that Mr, Seeheim was behind her. A sudden thought occurred to her, which, as it promised her safety, she did not hesitate to put in practice. Making up a demure face, she told the preacher that she had been sent with the pie as a present to him and his wife, and begged his acceptance of it, with as many compliments as she could invent off hand.

'But who is it that has sent it, my good woman!' said the parson, perfectly dazzled at the sight of so handsome a present.

The old woman had her cue here, and said that she had been expressly forbidden to tell. Mr. Seeheim believed her, and seeing the gilded S on the pie, convinced him it had been made for him, and nobody else. He gave the woman something for bringing the pie, and returned to her the pewter dish on which it had been sent.

The old hussey, delighted at having got so well off hurried down stairs as fast as possible, and gaining the street, got clear away.

Madame Seeheim was delighted with her husband's handsome present. 'One would think,' she cried, 'that we live in times when good deeds meet with a certain and prompt reward. Yesterday you read to me your sermon on mendicity and theft, and to-day, almost as soon as you have finished preaching it, this handsome present is sent to you.'

Mr. Seeheim tried in vain to guess who it could be that had sent him this pie. He fixed upon and rejected various personages, and at last ended by declaring that he could not satisfactorily attribute this compliment to any one of his acquaintance. While he was occupied with these agreeable reflections, a scene of a very different nature was acting on the floor below. As soon as the loss of the pie was discovered, a noise and confusion which may easily be imagined, had ensued. Each person accused the other of inattention and negligence, but the tailor internally blamed himself for the ostentation with which he had displayed the pie; and but for which, the accident would not have happened. He enjoined his maid servant, under threats of immediate dismissal, not to say a word of the matter to any one, in order that he might at least avoid the scoffs of the preacher and his wife, who he concluded would be delighted to hear of his misfortune.

Digitized by Google

The inmates of the second floor, in the mean time, had tried the contents of the pie, which they found excellent. Madame Seeheim had just finished dinner when she said to her husband, 'I can't imagine what has happened below; but there is a great noise in our neighbor's rooms. I hope no accident has happened to the poor woman who is confiend.'

'I should indeed be very sorry,' said her husband, 'for although I don't want our families to be united, they are very honest people, and I have a great regard for them. They have, upon many occasions, been very civil to us; and I think it not be sorry to make the first advances to it conciliation; suppose we send down some the oth- pie to the lying-in lady. ensue.' benes

Madame Seeheim readily accorded with her husband's proposition; and as she also knew that Mrs. Heftelmeyer's name was Sophia, she sent that part of the pie on which the gilt S was placed.

While the servant carried this peace-offering down stairs, the worthy pastor was felicitating himself and his spouse upon what they had done. 'There would not,' he said, 'be half so many quarrels in the world, nor would they last half so long, if people would be willing to accommodate their differences. I'm sure we shall not have cause to repent this.'

Alas! how differently did the event turn out from what the pastor had predicted! The tailor had no sooner set his eyes upon the dish with the pie in it, than he rushed by the servant without hearing her message, and ran up stairs to his neighbor's room, which he entered very abruptly.

'How is this sir,' he cried: 'do you mean to insult me by this treatment?'

'Is it possible you can imagine that I mean to do so?' said the pastor, mildly.

'How can I think otherwise?' said the angry tailor; 'and how can I guess what has induced a man of your character and years to play so wanton a school-boy's trick?'

'I really don't understand you,' replied Mr Seeheim; 'but as your behavior and language is very offensive, I beg it may cease. If this is the return you make to an act of politeness and good will, I shall take care not to repeat it.'

'Politeness and good will, indeed!' cried the angry tailor; 'you shall see, sir, what the magistrate will say to such politeness, and be bounced out of the chamber.

Mr. Seeheim could only think that his neighbor had gone mad; and, as he saw him go out of doors soon after, he expressed a very sincere hope that he would come to no harm. In the course of a very short time afterwards, Mr. Herbst, a lawyer, entered.

'Your neighbor, the tailor, has been with me just now, he said, and has been consulting me with a view of taking legal proceedings against you; and I am come for the purpose of seeing whether I can arrange matters amicably between you.'

'How is it possible to arrange matters amicably or otherwise, with a man who is decidedly out of his senses?'

'Well, indeed, I have perceived no signs of insanity,' said the lawyer; and on the contrary I must confess that the complaint he makes against you has very much surprised me. My friendship for you makes me say that it would give me great pain if the trick you have played him should be made public.'

'Why, really, my dear Herbst,' said the pastor, 'you puzzle me as much as my neighbor has done. All the notions I have hitherto entertained of justice and decency, must have been mistaken. You think seriously that what has passed between Mr Heftelmeyer and me will furnish sufficient grounds for a formal complaint?'

'Certainly; how can I think otherwise? Either what you have done was in jest, which, under the circumstances of disagreement that subsist between you and Mr. Heftelmeyer, would be looked upon as a very unwise and unjustifiable liberty, or else it is a downright theft.'

'A theft'—

'Don't be angry—I know you are incapable of such an act; and, besides, your subsequent conduct shows"—

'Do give me leave. I will prove to you in two words, that Heftelmeyer is unquestionably mad, and that he has represented things to you most absurdly false. This is the fact. All this disturbance arises from a contemptible piece of pie, which I sent as a mark of civility to his wife, who is lying-in, and out of this, by some means or other, you make a theft, and an impropriety of behaviour.'

'Mr. Seeheim! Madame Seeheim!' cried the tailor, who at this moment appeared at the door with a most mortified and contrite air, 'I beg your pardon a thousand times. I beseech you not to mind any thing that Mr. Herbst may say. The whole matter is a mistake, and I come before you covered with shame at having requited your kind intentions so ungratefully.

This speech was an inexplicable as any part of the business; and the pastor and the lawyer looked at one another, as much as to say there was no doubt now that the poor fellow was really deranged.

Matters was soon explained. It appeared that the police had made a general perquisition, at the moment when it was least expected, among all the suspected persons in the city. The old woman by whose ingenuity the pie with the gilt S had found its way to Mr. Seeheim's apartments, had been taken, and the pewter dish, on which Mr. Heftelmeyer's name was inscribed, being found in his possession, had led him to inquiries, the result of which, with her own confession, cleared up the whole of the mystery.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Seeheim laughed heartly at the adventure, and readily forgave his neighbor's impetuosity. The lawyer seized the favorable opportunity for bringing about a firm reconciliation between the parties; and three months after the adventure of the pie, Maurice and Amelia, (notwithstanding Mr. Seeheim's great relations) were happily married.

DEATH.

BY THE REV. O. P. PEABODY.

Lift high the curtain's drooping fold,
And let the evening sun light in:
I would not that my heart grew cold,
Before its better years begin:
'Tis well at such an early hour—
So calm and pure—a sinking ray
Should shine into the heart with power
To drive its darker thoughts away.

The bright young thought of early days,
Shall gather in my mem'ry now,
And not the latter cares whose trace
Is stamped so deeply on my brow;
What though those days return no more;
The sweet remembrance is not vain—
For heaven is waiting to restore
The childhood of my soul again.

Let no impatient mourner stand
In hollow sadness near my bed—
But let me rest upon the hand,
And let me hear that gentle tread
Of her whose kindness long ago,
And still unworn away by years,
Has made my weary eye lids flow
With grateful and admiring tears.

I go—but let no plaintive note
The moment's grief of friendship tell;
And let no proud and graven stone
Say where the weary slumber well!
A few short hours and then for heaven!
Let sorrow all its tears dismiss,
For who would mourn the waining given,
Which calls us from a world like this!

DAYS OF ABSENCE.

Days of absence sad and dreary,
Cloth'd in sorrow's dark array,
Days of absence I am weary,
One I love is far away.

Hours of bliss too quickly vanish,
When will ought like you return,
When this heavy sigh be banish'd,
When this bosom cease to mourn?

Not till that lov'd voice can greet me,
Which so oft has charmed mine ear,
Not till that sweet eye can meet me,
Telling that I still am dear.

Days of absence then will vanish,
Joy will all my pangs repay,
Soon my bosom's Idol banish
Gloom but felt when he's away.

All my love is turn'd to sadness,
Absence pays the tender vow,
Hopes that fill'd the heart with gladness,
Memory turns to anguish now.

Love may yet return to meet me,
Hope may take the place of pain,
And one I love with kisses greet me,
Breathing love and peace again.

E.

From an English Paper.

THE WISH.

Say, what would be thy first wish,
If a Fairy said to thee,
"Now, ask a boon; I'll grant it, Whatever it may be."
The first wish of thy heart, I think
May easily be told—
Confide in me—deny it not—
Thy wish would be for gold.

"Oh, no—thou art mistaken—
That should not be the boon—
My thirst for this world's lucre
Is ever sated soon:
The only gold I prize, is such
As Industry has brought;
And gold like that from fairy's hands
Would fruitlessly be sought."

"Say, what then would thy first wish be—Ambition's laurelled name—
The pride of popularity,
The pinnacle of fame—
The pampered board of luxury,
Where crowds of menials wait—
Thy second wish would still be gold—
To furnish forth thy state."

"Ah! no—the days have long gone by,
When such had been my choice;
I ask not fame—far more I prize
The self-approving voice.
My first wish should not be for fame—
My second not for gold—
But listen to me patiently,
My wishes shall be told.

"Oh give me but a happy home,
To share with her I love—
Oh, let me from her path of life
Each anxious care remove—
And like the sweet days of the past,
May we have 'days in store,'
Oh, give me this—and only this—
I'll never ask for more."

THE PLEDGE.

By Miss L. E. Landon.

Come let your cup flash sunshine like
To friends now far away:
"Here's to the absent and the loved!"
The absent, did you say?

And wherefore shall we drink to them?
It is a weary toast;
What boots it to recall the friends
Whom we have loved and lost?

Fast cuts our good ship through the sea—
What does it leave behind?
There is no path upon the wave,
No track upon the wind.

Like that swift wind we have past on
And left no deeper trace;
The circle parted from at home
Has now no vacant place.

Fewer and happier years than mine
On thy young brow are set;
Soon thou wilt learn Time's easiest task
Is teaching to forget.

I'll fill as high, I'll drink as deep—
Or must a toast be said?
Well, here are all I ever pledge—
"The present and the dead."

Digitized by Google

Having expressed our opinion on the merits of Miriam Coffin, we annex an extract from the work, confident that the specimen will induce our readers to seek for more entertainment from the book itself.

The Murderer's Fate.

"But hist! seest thou that lurking rascal, prowling stealthily around the warehouse?"

"Ay—'tis the same that had to do with the boy just now: and see,—the lad is again gamboling in the water. Let us keep an eye upon him."

The Indian soon afterwards deposited his bundle of clothes between two oil casks, and dropped silently into the water, from the side of the wharf next the campus. He disappeared beneath the surface, as he doubled the corner of the pier, which had previously hid him from the sight of Isaac, who was carelessly and boyishly turning summersets in the water—sometimes floating like a sleeping animal upon its surface, and then diving like a waterfowl, and reappearing after a half minute's absence, a long distance from the place of his exit.

It was necessary for him to breathe more than once before he reached Isaac; and he did so with the dexterity worthy of an Indian, by turning on his back, and merely projecting his nose for an instant above water.

Jethro and the captain watched the wary approach of the Indian to the vicinity of the unsuspecting boy, until they had satisfied themselves of the ulterior design of the assailant. The skiff was again in motion. The assailant and assailed had both disappeared, the first to ferret out his prey, and take him by surprise; and the other, without a thought of what was about to issue, to try the length of time that he could remain beneath the water without drawing breath. Presently two heads approach simultaneously above water, confronting each other; and two long breathing sounds, like the blowing of a porpoise, accompanied by a hurried ejection of water from the mouth, freed the lungs of both the swimmers at the same moment.

A strife of breasting the waves again ensued, which betrayed the earnestness with which each sought to outdo the other. In every thing, physically speaking, the Indian appeared to be superior to the boy.—His sinewy frame, broad chest, and flat feet, were the identical requisites for a swimmer; while the undeveloped form of Isaac, and his protracted exertion in the waters, unfitted him for coping with his athletic opponent.

But though he was not the equal of the Indian in strength of limb, he was superior to him in stratagem, which the aquatic disciples of Franklin, who, in his time was a practised swimmer, knew so well how to execute in the water. Quibby had several times nearly overtaken Isaac, and had stretched forth his hand to secure his prey; but the little fellow eluded his grasp, and slid away from him under the water, in an opposite direction, which left the Indian completely at fault. Though the scoundrel was baffled time after time, he returned to the assault so often and so unrelentingly, that he succeeded at last in tiring the boy down. Isaac made his last dive, but the Indian anticipated him, and pounced upon his back, as he was repeating, for the fifth time, the trick of passing under his opponent; and thus, by a well managed feint, drawing his attention to a point towards which he appeared to be steering while his head was above water, but which he changed to a different direction the moment his body became submerged.

The greatest general of the age ceased to be victorious after he had taught his enemies the trick of his art, by beating them in a hundred battles. The obtuse intellect of the Indian (they have thick sculls like the African negro), at last comprehended that the little Quaker meant to go South below the surface, when his head was driving North above. But he had him now; and dearly did he intend to repay the gripe of the throat and the punch in the stomach which Isaac had administered. Take thy last look upon the sun brave boy! The demon of the island has fastened upon thee, and it will be a miracle if thy spirit is not soon winging its flight to eternity.

It is said that the struggles of the dying man, in the possession of all his faculties, are irresistible; and that no human hand can grapple and master his, without the sinews of a giant are brought to try the issue of strength. It was the demoniacal intention of the Indian to drown the boy forthwith, let the consequences be what they would. He had Isaac's neck between his legs, at the depth of several feet beneath the surface of the water, where he held him immovable; while with his hands he pressed the body again strongly to the bottom.

One minute in this position is an age! It is an eternity of time! The death-struggle was again come upon the poor little fellow, and the fiend was once more exulting over him! He felt the blood of his whole body rushing to his brain—imagined loathsome snakes twisting about his neck and brow, and his body assailed by frightful sea-monsters. A streaming gush of water poured into his ears and mouth. His reason was on the point of giving way, in the agony of gasping suffocation———but a moment, it rallied—and that moment was his salvation!

Isaac, without being aware of the fact had, in his struggles, been working himself, as well as his opponent, into deeper water. The murderer was obliged to discontinue his endeavors to press the body of the boy downwards, from the necessity which required that he should keep his own head, particularly his mouth, and nostrils, in the free air. By this means the limbs of the boy were left at liberty, and he was enabled to brace his feet firmly upon the sandy bottom. His hands were free; but heretofore he could do nothing with them, while his feet were hors de combat.

But now he gathered himself, instinctively, for a desperate effort, and locking his arms around the legs of his foe, and planting his feet strongly beneath his body, with one mighty surge he raised the Indian from the bottom, and pitched him headlong into the sea! The relief thus gained was just in time. A moment more would have closed the mortal career of the boy. But the advantage thus acquired was not to be lost. Isaac sprang after his enemy with the agility of a dolphin—and, ere he could regain his balance, his young hand, still nerved with the desperation of one battling for life, was firmly twisted in the lank black hair of the Indian. He avoided the experiment, which the native had tried, to conceal the struggling of his victim, and contented himself with holding the head, face downwards, beneath the water, at arm's length—caring nothing for the splashing and flourishing of the foe,—which the Indian, while he held the lad, was anxious to conceal, for fear of attracting notice from the shore.

"Perish!" exclaimed Isaac, in accents not loud, but deep;—"Perish!"—thou black hearted savage! Ay—kick if thou wilt, struggle on, monster!—It is my turn now;—I owe thee no mercy,—and die thou shalt the death thou hast twice escaped to bestow upon me, for the alleged sin of my father. Ay sprawl, bite, scratch, it will require something more than human interposition to save thee from death!"

"Boy! what doest thou do?—Release the Indian, and we will protect thee:—Release him, I say!" repeated an authoritative voice, close to the ear of Isaac.

"I am not deaf, good friends;—I shall release him in a minute or two, but in my own discretion. The peril be mine, keep off, meddle not with this quarrel, I am desperate! I was but now dying in the grasp of this hell-hound:—twice within the hour has he given me a taste of the other world; and it shall go hard but I requite the favor. Keep off, I say!—By the heavens above us, I will serve thee after the same fashion, if thou darest to come between me and my prey—Away!—I have said it, he shall die the death of a dog!—There, all is over now!"

Digitized by Google

The limbs of the Indian became relaxed and quiescent. The tide of life had withdrawn to the citadel whence it sprung;—the body floated for a moment, without convulsion, on the surface of the water, and then settled away gradually from the sight. Isaac had loosed his hold, and he stood gazing with stupid wonder upon the water.

"Isaac, my son, what hast thou done?" demanded Jethro, in a choked, but fatherly voice, as, sorrowfully, he reflected on the termination of the violent and tragic scene, and marked the wild and altered look of his son.

"Father is it thou?—Oh save me from the fangs of that dreadful Indian!—But where is he."

"Where, indeed!" responded the father, mournfully.

Macy plunged into the water after the drowned body. He found it without difficulty, for the water was shallow, and not more than half body deep. The captain placed the Indian carefully in the boat, across a seat in the stern with his mouth downwards to give the water egress from the stomach, and then quickly seizing the oars, he pulled for the shore with all his strength, leaving Jethro and his son wading in the sea. The case of the Indian would not brook delay. The gaze of poor Isaac was fixed and vacant, while Jethro, taking his passive hand in his own, led him gently towards the beach. Exhaustion had renderered him powerless; and perception and memory had fled. The faculties of his mind were sleeping, curtained by what seemed to be a horrid dream,—but which partook so nearly of a tragic reality.

Scene in a Private Mad House.

The following lines, descriptive of a scene in a private Mad House, are from the pen of M. G. Lewis, Esq. They were published in the National Intelligencer, about eight years since, the Editors of which paper introduced them with these remarks:—"If any one can read the following lines without shuddering in sympathy with the supposed captive, he must have a heart dead to every human feeling. The perusal of them had the more effect upon us, from the conviction we have for some time entertained, that insanity, when superinduced (not natural)—when it is an affection of the mind, and not a defect of organization—is often the consequence of the treatment of the disease—not merely of the estrangement of friends; of seclution from the world; of coercion; but of the horrible dread of being thought mad by others. We recollect hearing of the case of an enlightened physician, who was carried by his friends to an Asylum for the insane, after exhibiting symptoms of an alienation of mind.—'My God: am I come to this? Never shall I leave these walls!' and he died within them, not many days after:"

Stay, jailer, stay, and hear my woe!
She is not mad who kneels to thee.
For what I'm now, too well I know,
And what I was, and what should be.
I'll rave no more in proud despair,
My language shall be mild, though sad;
But yet I'll firmly, truly swear,
I am not mad: I am not mad!

My tyrant husband forged the tale
Which chains me in this dismal cell,
My fate unknown my friends bewail—
Oh! jailer, haste that fate to tell!

Oh! haste, my father's heart to cheer!
His heart at once 'twill grieve and glad,
To know, though kept a captive here,
I am not mad! I am not mad!

He smiles in scorn, and turns the key!
He quits the gate! I knelt in vain!
His glimm'ring lamp, still, still I see!
'Tis gone—and all is gloom again!
Cold, bitter cold—no warmth! no light!
Life, all thy comforts once I had!
Yet here I'm chained this freezing night,
Although not mad! no, no! not mad!

'Tis sure some dream! some vision vain!
What! I, the child of rank and wealth!
And I the wretch who clanks this chain,
Bereft of freedom, friends and health!
Ah! while I dwell on blessings fled,
Which never more my heart must glad,
How aches my heart! how burns my head,
But 'tis not mad—no, 'tis not mad.

Hast thou my child, forgot ere this,
A mother's face; a mother's tongue?
She'll ne'er forget your parting kiss,
Nor round her neck how fast you clung;
Nor how with me you sued to stay,
Nor how that suit your sire forbade;
Nor how—I'll drive such thought away—
They'll make me mad—they'll make me mad.

His rosy lips, how sweet they smiled—
His mild blue eyes, how bright they shone—
None ever bore a lovelier child—
And art thou now forever gone?
And must I never see thee more,
My pretty, pretty little lad?
I will be free—unbar the door—
I am not mad—I am not mad.

O, hark—what mean those dreadful cries?
His chain some furious madman breaks—
He comes—I see his glaring eyes—
Now, now, my dungeon grate he shakes—
Help—help—He's gone.—Oh—fearful woe,
Such screams to hear, such sights too see—
My brain, my brain—I know, I know
I am not mad—but soon shall be.

Yes, soon,—For lo, yon—while I speak—
Mark how yon demon's eye balls glare—
He sees me—now, with dreadful shriek,
He whirls a serpent high in air.
Horror—the reptile strikes his tooth
Deep in my heart so crushed and sad,
Aye, laugh, ye fiends, I feel the truth—
Your task is done.—I'm mad—I'm mad."

A LOVER'S SONG.

You are very lovely, lady!
Soft and fair your skin;
Beauty's pencil has been there,
Blending colours fresh and rare;
Is all fair within?
Yes; that blush, with modest glow,
Sweetly tells what I would know.

You are very gentle, lady!
Humble and discreet.
Let not words of artless praise
Kindle anger in your gaze.
Praise is not unmeet,
When the lip of truth doth find
Language for th' approving mind.

You are very dear sweet lady!
Will your hear my suit?
Honest is my love, and pure,
Lasting while my days endure;
Why are you so mute?
Ah! you smile, and blush, and sigh—
I do ask no more reply.

Digitized by Google

Battle of Monmouth.

The following graphic sketch of the Battle of Monmouth, is taken from the life of Hamilton, recently published in New York.

"On the evening of the twenty-seventh, Hamilton, who had rejoined the main body by order of Washington wrote to General Lee, directing him, from the apprehension that the enemy might move off at night, or early in the morning, to detach a party of six or eight hundred men, to lie near them, and to skirmish, so as to produce some delay; while Lee was directed to give orders to Colonel Morgan to make an attack for a similar purpose: a previous order had been issued to Lee to call the officers together, and an hour was appointed by him for their conference; but before they met, he rode out, and on the inquiry for orders, were informed that he had none to give.

In the interim, the enemy had taken a strong position with their right flank on the skirt of a small wood, and their left secured by a forest, and a morass running towards their rear, a wood also covering their front.

The main body of the Americans being put in motion to support him, Lee was ordered to commence the attack. Colonel Hamilton, who had rejoined the Marquis before break of day, as soon as he saw the probability of the van of the advanced corps being engaged with the enemy, returned to Washington, who was coming up with the main body, and advised* him to throw the right wing of the army round by the right, and to follow with the left wing directly in Gen. Lee's rear, to support him; and an order was immediately given to Greene to file off with the right wing, and take a position so as to protect the right of the army, which was done. Hamilton then went forward to reconnoitre. Lee, after having advanced a short distance ordered a halt, he then again moved forward, and in half an hour after, Wayne was directed by Lee, to leave his own detachment, and take command of the front. Scott's brigade, then advanced up the morass on one side, Varnum's following its rear. Wayne, on reaching the front sent intelligence to Lee that the enemy were moving in great disorder, and urged him to push on the rear. He continued to advance, crossing the morass near the road where they were marching. The whole force then in view halted; a body of British horse, covered by infantry, instantly charged the foremost regiment under Colonel Butler, who pouring in a well-directed fire, broke them, and threw their covering party into disorder. The pursuit was kept up; when the enemy opened a fire from their artillery inclining to the right of the Americans, in order to gain an eminence, where their veterans formed with admirable coolness, as they came up in succession. Wayne hoping to gain the advantage of the ground, formed Scott's brigade, under a heavy discharge of artillery, and still pressed on when an order was received from Lee, who Hamilton states "meditated the disgrace of the Americans," TO RETREAT. —The enemy seeing the situation of this detachment wholly unsupported passed a column through the village and gained a position between it and the remainder of the army, when they again made a spirited charge with their horse, and their whole advance was compelled to retire; which they did under cover of a wood, until they reached the body under Lee. Hamilton having urged in vain that possession should be taken of a hill which commanded the plain on which the enemy were coming up, and that there the battle should be fought,† rejoined Washington, to report what he had done. He thus represented the situation of the advance;‡ that when he came up with Lee, the enemy was drawn up with their right near a wood, their left in open ground covered by cavalry; that the American columns were within cannon shot of the enemy; that he rode up to the front of the column, and perceiving that their cavalry were filing off towards the left, as if to attempt Lee's right, he suggested to him that a column should wheel on their right and attack them. This suggestion was approved; and Hamilton, by Lee's order, directed Lafayette to wheel by his right, gain and attack the enemies' flank. At this instant, while Washington was standing with his arm extended over his horse, during a halt for a few moments, where the roads forked, a small party came rapidly up, from whom he learned that the advanced corps was on the retreat. He instantly, giving way to a burst of indignation, sprung upon his horse, and having ordered Colonel Harrison, who had returned from reconnoitring, to ascertain the truth, pushed forward to the rear of the advanced corps and rallied the retreating troops.

To every inquiry as to the cause of the retreat, an unsatisfactory answer was given. Colonel Ogden, who followed, exclaimed with an oath, "we are flying from a shadow." The troops were then in the greatest disorder, ignorant what direction to pursue.

Washington meanwhile reached the knoll, where Lee was,—he immediately ordered Wayne to renew the combat, directed cannon to be brought up, which was done by Colonel Oswald, and a brisk cannonade ensued. Then calling up Colonels Ramsay and Stewart, he vehemently exclaimed that they were the officers on whom he should depend to give the enemy a check. While these regiments were forming, Lee approached. Washington demanded of him, in haste, the cause of the retreat. He replied—Sir, Sir, with hesitation, stating that it was owing to contradictory information and disobedience of orders, and that he did not choose to beard the British army in such a situation; and that besides, the attack was contrary to his opinion. Washington replied, that whatever was his opinion, he expected his orders would have been obeyed.

At this moment, Hamilton rode up, and exclaimed to Lee, "I will stay with you my dear General, and die with you. Let us all die here, rather than retreat." Perceiving the enemy advancing on the artillery, which by the orders of General Knox had been posted on the right,§ he advised that a detachment should march to their succour; when, after a short interval, Colonel Livingston pushed forward and repulsed them with spirit.

Hamilton then rode towards the rear; when finding Colonel Olney‖ retreating with Varnum's brigade, and fearing that the artillery in their front would be lost, he ordered the brigade to form along a fence near him, with all possible despatch, which they immediately did, and charged at the point of the bayonet, where Hamilton, who had assisted in forming them, and had placed himself at their head, had his horse shot under him; when, hurt by the fall,¶ and overcome by the heat, (for he had ridden throughout the action without his hat,) he was compelled to retire.

This party, after exchanging a sharp fire gave time for the artillery to fall back; but too weak to prevent the enemy from outflanking them, retreated with considerable loss.

These two successive checks by Livingston and Olney afforded time to make a disposition of the left * Proceedings of a Court Martial for the trial of General Lee held at Brunswick, July 4th, 1778. Fitzgerald's testimony, p. 23. Tilghman's, p. 26.

† Lee's Defence, p. 53.

‡ Hamilton's testimony, p. 20.

§ Hamilton's testimony, p. 20.

‖ Hamilton's testimony, p. 21.

¶ Col. Olney's testimony, p. 40.

Digitized by Google

wing, and to form the second line of the army upon an eminence, and in a copse in the rear covered by a morass. On this elevation, Stirling, who commanded that wing, placed cannon, which protected the charges of the infantry, and produced a great impression on the enemy, and stopped their progress.

Greene, as soon as he heard of the retreat, pushed forward and selected a position on the right which Hamilton had advised Lee to take, crowned it with artillery and kept off the British advancing on the right while he severely enfiladed the left. Wayne then advanced, and pouring in a close fire, drove the enemy beyond the morass, near which Butler had at first repulsed them. Washington followed up the attack, by orders to General Poor, with two brigades; to move on the right, and Woodford on their left, while Knox brought his artillery to bear upon their front. These dispositions were made; but obstacles prevented their reaching the enemy until night had closed in.

The Americans, worn out by intense heat, reposed on the field of battle, hoping to renew the action in the ensuing day; but the enemy taking advantage of the darkness pressed on, and succeeded in embarking at Sandy Hook. Washington unfortnately, believing that no serious injury could be inflicted upon them, leaving only a small force to hover round them, moved up for the protection of the Hudson.

From the Saturday Evening Post.

Written under a Scotch Rose, which was painted for a young Lady.

Sweet Rose that blew on Scotland hill,
Or in the glen beside the rill,
I love thy modest feature.
But since 'tis not for me to gather
Thy blossom o'er the brake and hether,
I bid my pencil greet you.

Of virtue, thou an emblem art,
And all I love in human heart,
Methought when first I saw you.
The innocence upon thy brow,
And half hid charms remind me now
Of her for whom I draw you.

Hopkinsville Ky, W. P. Y.

THE DEPARTED.

O, sacred Star of Evening! tell
In what unseen celestial sphere,
The spirits of the perfect dwell,
Too pure to rest in sadness here.
Roam they the chrystal fields of light,
O'er paths by feet of angels trod;
Their robes with heavenly splendor bright;
Their home, the paradise of God!

Soul of the just! and canst thou soar
Amidst the radiant orbs sublime,
When life's delusive scene is o'er,
And all the griefs of changeful time?
And canst thou join the blissful choir,
Thro' heaven's high dome the song to raise,
Where seraphs strike the golden lyre,
In ever-during notes of praise?

O who would heed the chilling blast
That blows o'er life's eventful sea,
If doomed to hail—its perils past,
The bright wave of eternity?
And who the sorrows would not bear
Of such a fleeting world as this,
When faith displays beyond its care,
So bright an entrance into bliss?

Thomson, the poet.—The most extraordinary fact in the history of this excellent poet I derived from my late friend, Mr. George Chalmers, whose industry, research, and learning are well known. It was Mr. Chalmer's intention to write the life of Mr. Thomson, but whether to introduce into his elaborate work, "Caledonia," or not, I do not recollect. He told me, however, the following remarkable fact, in which, he assured me, I might confidently depend. Mr. Chalmers had heard that an old housekeeper of Mr. Thomson's was alive, and resided at Richmond. Having determined to write a life of the celebrated poet of his country, he went to Richmond, thinking it possible he he might obtain some account of the domestic habits of the poet, and other anecdotes, which might impart interest and novelty to his narration. He found that the housekeeper had a good memory, and was of a communicative turn. She informed him Thomson had been actually married in early life, but that his wife had been taken by him merely for her person, and was so little calculated to be introduced to his great friends, or, indeed, his friends in general, that he had kept her in a state of obscurity for many years; and when he, at last, from some compunctious feelings, required her to come and live with him at Richmond, he still kept her in the same secluded state, so that she appeared to be only one of the old domestics of the family. At length his wife, experiencing little of the attention of a husband, though otherwise provided with every thing that could make her easy, if not comfortable, asked his permission to go for a few weeks to visit her own relations in the north. Thomson gave his consent, exacting a promise, that she would not reveal her real situation to any of his or her own family. She agreed, but when she had advanced no farther on her journey than to London, she was there taken ill, and in a short time died. The news of her death was immediately conveyed to Thomson, who ordered a decent funeral; and she was buried, as the old housekeeper said, in the churchyard of old Marylebone church. Mr. Chalmers, who was indefatigable in his inquiries, was not satisfied with the old woman's information, but immediately went and examined the church register, where he found the following entry:—"Died, Mary Thomson, a stranger," in confirmation of the housekeeper's testimony. My late worthy friend, Mr. Malone, I doubt not, would not have been satisfied with this simple register, but would have pursued the inquiry till he had discovered all the family of Mary Thomson, the time of the marriage, and everything that could throw a light on this mysterious event, important and interesting only as it relates to a poet who will always be conspicuous in the annals of British literature. Thus we find, that the letter from Thomson to his sister, accounting for his not having married, which is inserted in all the biographical reports of Thomson, is fallacious; and that his concealment of his early marriage was the result of pride and shame, when he became acquainted with Lady Hertford, Lord Lyttleton, and all the high connexions of his latter days.—Taylor's Records.

Inflation of the Lungs of Newly-born Infants.—At a recent sitting of the French Academy of Sciences, M. Julia Fontanello stated a curious fact in confirmation of the usefulness of the practice of inflating the lungs of newly-born children apparently lifeless. An infant, born in a state of asphyxia, was brought, said the speaker, for dissection, to M. Portal;—it had already lain some time in the room, and the surgeon was about to commence the anatomy, but before proceeding to operate the thought occurred to him to blow into its mouth. This he accordingly did, and at the end of two or three minutes warmth returned, the circulation was excited, the heart beat, and the body was sent back to the parents—a living child.

Digitized by Google

From the New England Galaxy.

Human Life,

OR THE FIRST AND LAST MINUTE.

Minutes pass.—The anxious husband paces slowly across his study. He is a father, a man child is born unto him. Minutes pass—the child has been blessed by a parent, whom it cannot recognize, and pressed to that bosom, to which instinct alone guides for sustenance—the young wife too has faintly answered to a husband's questions, and felt his warm kiss on her forehead.

Hours pass.—The low moaning from the closely covered cradle, tell of the first wants of its infant occupant. The quiet tread of the nurse speaks of suffering around her; while her glad countenance says that the very suffering which she is trying to alleviate, is a source of joy, and the nameless articles, which from time to time she arranges on the hearth, tell of a new claimant for the courtesies and attentions of those, who have progressed further on the pathway of existence.

Days pass.—Visiters are thronging the chamber, and the mother, pale and interesting after her recent sickness, is receiving their congratulations, and listening proudly to their praises of the little treasure, which lies asleep in its rocking-bed at her feet. The scene shifts, and the father is there with her alone; as the twilight deepens about them, while they are planning the future destiny of their child.

Weeks pass.—The eyes of the young mother are sparkling with health, and the rose blooms again on her cheek, and the cares of pleasure and home engage her attention, and the father is once more mingling with the world; yet they find many opportunities each day to visit the young inheritor of life; to watch over his dreamless slumber—to trace each other's looks in his countenance, and to ponder upon the felicity, of which he is the bearer to them.

Months pass.—The cradle is deserted. But the chamber floor is strewed with play things, and there is a little one loitering among them, whose half lisped words, and hearty laugh, and sunny countenance tell you, that the entrance into life is over a pathway of flowers. The cradle is empty, but the last prayers of the parents are uttered over the small crib, which stands by their own bedside, and their latest attention is given to the peaceful breathings of its occupant.

Years pass.—Childhood has strengthened into boyhood and gamboled along into manhood. Old connexions are broken—parents are sleeping in their graves—new intimacies are formed—a new home is about him, new cares distract. He is abroad, struggling amid the business of life, or resting from it with those whom he has chosen from his own generation. Time is beginning to wrinkle his forehead, and thought has robbed his looks of their gaiety and study his dimmed his eyes. Those who began life, after he had grown up, are fast crowding him out of it, and there are many claimants upon his industry and love for protection and support.

Years pass.—His own children have become men, and are quitting him, as he also quitted the home of his fathers. His steps have lost their elasticity—his hand has become familiar with the cane, to which he is obliged to trust in his walks. He has left the bustle which fatigued him. He looks anxiously in each days paper among the deaths—and then ponders over the name of an old friend, and tries to persuade himself, that he is younger, and stronger, and has a better hold upon life than any of his contemporaries.

Months pass.—He gradually diminishes the circle of his activity. He dislikes to go abroad, where he finds so many new faces: and he grieves to meet his former companions, after a short absence, they seem to have grown so old and infirm. Quiet enjoyments only are relished,—a little conversation about old times—a sober game at whist—a religious treatise,—and his early bed, form for him the sum total of his pleasures.

Weeks pass.—Infirmity keeps him in his chamber. His walks are limited to the small space between his easy chair and his bed. His swollen limbs are wrapped in flannels. His sight is failing—his ears refuse their duty, and his cup is but half filled, since otherwise, his shaking hand cannot carry it to his shrunk lips, without soiling its contents. His powers are weakened—his faculties are blunted—his strength is lost.

Days past.—The old man does not leave his bed—his memory is failing—he talks but cannot be understood—he asks questions but they relate to the transactions of a former generation—he speaks of occurrences, but the recollection of no one around him can go back to their scenes—he seems to commune with comrades, but when he names them, it is found that the waters of time and oblivion have long covered their tombs.

Hours past.—The taper grows dimmer and dimmer—the machinery moves yet more and more slowly—the sands are fewer as they measure the allotted span. The motion of those about him is unheeded, or becomes a vexation. Each fresh inquiry after his health is a knell. The springs of life can no longer force on its wheels—the "silver chord" is fast untwisting—the pitcher is broken at the fountain—and time "is a burthen." His children are about him, but he heeds them not—his friends are near, but he does not recognize them. The circle is completed. The course is run—and utter weakness brings the damp, which ushers in the night of death.

Minutes pass.—His breathing grows softer and lower—his pulse beats fainter and feebler. Those around him are listening, but cannot tell when they cease. The embers are burnt out—and the blaze flashes not before it expires. His "three score years and ten" are numbered. Human life "is finished."

HEAVEN AND EARTH.

BY JNO. N. MAFFITT.

Is earth the vale of woe
Where hope's rich clusters fail,
The field where sorrows grow
And blighting storms prevail?

Heaven is the fount of light
Where rosy waves of love
Kiss with their billows bright
All who arrive above.

Is earth a chequered maze,
Like evanescent clouds
That life's young morning haze,
Wrapping the sun in shrouds?

In Heaven no clouds have been,
No change is feared or known,
An everlasting green
Is o'er its vallies thrown.

Is earth the spoiler's home,
Where sin's dark traces are—
Where cruel monsters roam,
And mad'ning passions war?

No sin high Heaven has marred,
It glows with holy light,
With gems of glory sparred—
Perennial—calm—and bright.

Do death's black banners wave,
On all the plains of earth:
Digs he a midnight grave
For every human birth?

In Heaven his frosty breath,
Blights not a single flower;
Thy sting is lost, O Death,
In glory's healing power.

Digitized by Google

Reminiscences.

RED JACKET.—It happened during the revolutionary war, that a treaty was held with the Indians, at which La Fayette was present. The object was to unite the various tribes in amity with America. The majority of the Chiefs were friendly, but there was much opposition made to it, more especially by a young warrior, who declared that when an alliance was entered into with America, he should consider the sun of his country as set forever. In this travels through the Indian country, when lately in America, it happened at a large assemblage of Chiefs, that La Fayette referred to the treaty in question, and turning to Red Jacket, said, "pray tell me if you can, what has become of that daring youth, who so decidedly opposed all our propositions for peace and amity? Does he still live—and what is his condition?" "I, myself, am the man," replied Red Jacket, "the decided enemy of the Americans, as long as the hope of opposing them with success remained, but now their true and faithful ally until death."

LA FAYETTE AND AN OLD SOLDIER AT MONTGOMERY.—When on his late visit to America, while at Montgomery, in the State of Alabama, he was visited by a veteran who had served under him in many battles, whom he immediately recognized, as an orderly and most gallant soldier. After much interesting and familiar conversation, the old man said, "there is one thing, General, which it puzzles me to account for—when we served together, I believed myself to be the youngest man of the two. But my locks are now perfectly grey, and you do not appear to have a grey hair in your head." "My good friend," replied the General, "you are altogether in error, the advantage is totally on your side. The hair of your head is grey—while I cannot boast a single hair on my head—I wear a wig!"

MRS. BRATTON, OF S. C.—At a period, when an absolute want of arms and ammunition precluded, in a great degree, the possibility of effectual resistance, a small depot of powder was entrusted to Mrs. Bratton, wife of Colonel Bratton, an active officer, serving in the field. The treachery of an individual communicated the important secret to the enemy, and a British detachment was pushed forward to secure so valuable a prize. Mrs. Bratton, informed of their near approach, immediately laid a train of powder from the depot to the spot on which she stood, and seeing no chance of saving her charge, blew it up. "Who," exclaimed the irritated officer who led the detachment, "has dared to do this atrocious act? Speak quickly that they may meet the punishment they deserve." "Know then," said Mrs. B., "'twas I—and let the consequence be what it will, I glory in having frustrated the mischief contemplated by the merciless enemies of my country."

A GLORIOUS EXAMPLE IN WASHINGTON.—When Colonel Washington was stationed at Alexandria, in 1754, there was an election for members of the Assembly, when Mr. W. Payne opposed the candidate supported by Washington. In the course of the contest, Washington grew warm, and said something offensive to Mr. Payne, who at one blow, extended him on the ground. The regiment heard that their Colonel was murdered by the mob, and they were soon under arms, and in rapid motion to the town to inflict punishment on the supposed murderers. To their great joy, he came out to meet them, thanking them for such a proof of attachment, but conjuring them by their love for him and their duty, to return peaceably to their barracks. Feeling himself to be the aggressor, he resolved to make honorable reparation. Early next morning, he wrote a polite note to Mr. Payne, requesting to see him at the tavern. Payne repaired to the place appointed, in expectation of a duel, but what was his surprise to see wine and glasses in lieu of pistols. Washington rose to meet him, and smiling as he offered his hand, began, "Mr. Payne, to err is nature; to rectify error is glory. I believe I was wrong yesterday; you have already had some satisfaction, and if you deem that sufficient, here is my hand—let us be friends." An act of such sublime virtue produced its proper effect, and Mr. Payne was from that moment an enthusiastic admirer of Washington.

ESCAPE OF CAPTAIN PLUNKETT.—Captain Plunkett, a high-spirited Irishman, whose attachment to the cause of liberty had led him to seek a commission in the Continental army, had, by the chances of war, been compelled to give up his sword, and to surrender himself a prisoner to the enemy. Previously to this untoward event, by the suavity of his manners, and uniformly correct conduct, he had rendered himself an acceptable guest in many families in Philadelphia, and particularly so, to one of the Society of Friends, who, however averse to warfare, were not insensible of the claims of those to their regard, who, by the exercise of manly and generous feelings, delighted to soften its asperities. There was among them a female, mild and gentle as a dove, yet, in firmness of mind, a heroine, in personal charms, an angel. She saw the sufferings of the captive soldier, and under the influences of pity, or perhaps a more powerful passion, resolved, at all hazards, to relieve him. It accidentally happened, that the uniform of Captain Plunkett's Regiment bore a striking resemblance to that of a British corps, which was frequently set as a guard over the prison in which he was confined. A new suit of regimentals was in consequence procured and conveyed, without suspicion of sinister design, to the Captain. On the judicious use of these rested the hopes of the fair friend to give him freedom. It frequently happened that officers of inferior grade, while their superiors affected to shun all intercourse with rebels, would enter the apartments of the prisoners, and converse with them with kindness and familiarity, and then at their pleasure retire. Two centinels constantly walked the rounds without, and the practice of seeing their officers walking in and out of the interior prison, became so familiar, as scarcely to attract notice, and constantly caused them to give way without hesitation, as often as an officer showed a disposition to retire. Captain Plunkett took the advantage of this circumstance, and putting on his new coat, at the moment that the relief of the guard was taking place, sallied forth, twirling a switch carelessly about and ordering the exterior door of the prison to be opened, walked without opposition into the street. Repairing without delay to the habitation of his fair friend, he was received with kindness, and for some days secreted and cherished with every manifestation of affectionate regard. To elude the vigilance of the British Guards, if he attempted to pass into the country, in his present dress, was deemed impossible. Woman's wit, however, is never at a loss for contrivances, while swayed by the influence of love or benevolence. Both, in this instance, may have aided invention. Plunkett had three strong claims in his favor: he was a handsome man—a soldier—and an Irishman. The general conduct of the Quakers, exempted the sect in a great measure from suspicion, in so great a degree indeed, that the barriers of the city were generally entrusted to the care of their members, as the best judges of the characters of those persons who might be allowed to pass them. A female Friend, from a farm near the city, was in the family, on a visit to a relative. A pretext was formed to present her with a new suit of clothes, in order to possess that which she wore when she entered the city. Captain Plunkett was immediately disguised as a woman, and appeared at the barrier accompanied by his anxious deliverer. "Friend Roberts," said the enterprising enthusiast, "may this damsel and myself pass to visit a friend at a neighboring farm?" "Certainly," said Roberts, "go forward." The city was speedily left behind, and Capt. Plunkett found himself safe under the protection of Colonel Allen M'Lean, his particular friend.

Digitized by Google

INDIAN GRATITUDE AND WIT.—Soon after Litchfield began to be settled by the English, an unknown Indian came into the inn at dusk, and requested the hostess to furnish him with food and drink; stating, that he had no success in hunting, and could not pay till he had better fortune. The woman refused; calling him a lazy, drunken, good-for-nothing fellow. A man who sat by noticed the Indian as he turned away from the inhospitable place, and perceiving that he was suffering very severely from want and weariness, he generously ordered the hostess to furnish him with a good supper, and call on him for payment. After the Indian had finished his meal, he thanked his benefactor again and again, and assured him he should never forget his kindness, and would, if it were in his power, faithfully recompense it. He observed, that he had one more favor to ask; if the woman was willing he wished to tell a story. The hostess, whose good nature had been restored by money, readily consented. The Indian, addressing his benefactor, said, "I suppose, you read the Bible?" The man assented. "Well, the Bible says, God make the world; and then he took him, and looked on him, and say 'all very good.' Then he made light; and took him, and looked on him and say, all very good.' Then he made land and water, sun and moon; grass and trees; and he took him, and looked on him, and say, 'all very good', Then he made beasts, and birds, and fishes; and he took him, and looked on him, and say, 'all very good,' Then he made man; and took him, and looked on him, and say, 'all very good.' Then he made woman; and look him, and looked at him, and —— he no dare say one such word."

Many years after this, the Indian's benefactor was taken prisoner by an Indian scout, and carried into Canada. He was saved from death by one of the tribe, who asked leave to adopt him in the place of a son, who had fallen in battle. Through the winter, he experienced the customary effects of savage hospitality. The following summer as he was at work in the forest alone, an unknown Indian came to him and appointed a meeting at a certain place, on a given day. The prisoner consented; but afterwards, fearing mischief might be intended, he neglected the engagement. The Indian again sought him, reproved him for his want of confidence in him, and assured him the meeting would be for his good. Encouraged by his apparent friendship, the man followed his directions. He found the Indian provided with muskets, ammunition, and knapsacks. The Indian ordered him to arm himself and follow him. Their course was towards the south, and day after day the white man followed, without being able to conjecture the motives of his guide. After a tedious journey he arrived at the top of an eminence, commanding a view of a country somewhat cultivated and populous. "Do you know that country?" said the Indian, with an arch smile. "Oh, yes! it is Litchfield," replied the white man, as he cordially pressed his hand. "Many years ago, you give weary Indian supper there," said he. "He promise to pay you, and he pay you now. Go home, and be happy."

As the frigate South Carolina, commanded by Com. Gillion, was cruising between the Bahama Islands and the Florida Keys, it happened one night, (Lieut. John Mayrant being officer of the deck,) that he was ordered to keep a good look-out and the lead a-going; and a Midshipman with a night-glass was placed at each quarter. About two hours before day, the one stationed on the starboard, announced that he perceived a rock: upon a nearer inspection, it proved to be a fleet, and on drawing still nearer, a Jamaica fleet. About ¼ A. M. the frigate was close aboard four of them, and another ship was to be seen at about five miles windward; to secure the whole prize was now the object of the Commodore, but one, which there was no possibility of attaining without having recourse to artifice; and, after a hasty consultation with his officers, the following line of conduct was determined on;—In the first place, the frigate, having British colors flying, hailed the four ships nearest to her, ordering them to heave to, and promising to send a boat aboard of them. Lieutenant Mayrant, was then ordered to take a barge, and with twenty-four choice men and about four or five marines, (himself, as well as the marines) being all in British uniform, to make for the furthest vessel, he did so, and when arrived under her stern, and rounding upon her quarter, in answer to the Captain's inquiry, as to what boat that was, replied that it was the barge of the D'Artois, commanded by Captain M'Bridge; the Captain ordered him to keep off, threatening to fire into him. Lieutenant Mayrant, in return, commanded him to heave a rope immediately, and asking if he would dare to fire in His Majesty's boat, ordered his men to pull along side: on hearing this, the British ship, without further dispute hove a rope, and manned her sides; such being the ceremony usually observed in receiving an officer. Lieutenant Mayrant immediately stept on board, having previously ordered his men not to follow, but on receiving a concerted signal; the Captain received him with great politeness, and the usual inquiries having been made and answered, Lieutenant Mayrant desired to see his papers, in order to examine them. No sooner had the captain gone below, in the search of them, than Lieutenant Mayrant's men, receiving the expected signal, stept on board to the number of twenty, all armed with cutlasses, and having pistols concealed under their jackets. The captain having returned, Lieut. Mayrant, after examining the papers, inquired how many men he had on board, and on his replying that there were forty, ordered him to take his papers and twenty men, and to go with them on board of the frigate; he replied, 'why, surely Sir, you do not mean to impress my men at sea.' Lieut. M. replied, 'certainly not, but Captain M'Bride being a very particular man, wishes to examine the men and papers himself. The Captain still hesitated, upon which Lieut. Mayrant reiterating his order, made a sign to his men to draw their sabres, on perceiving which, the Captain, not choosing to risk a contest, obeyed; Lieut. M. ordered him to row off, while he would undertake to carry the ship down to the frigate. As soon as the Captain was fairly off, Lieut M. ordering the remainder of the crew below, reversed the British colors. At which sight, the consternation of the Captain, who, from the barge, was a spectator of what had passed, may be better conceived than expressed; he declared it to be a damned Yankee trick; but, the deception was discovered too late, and he found himself obliged to go on board of the frigate: by this means, Commodore Gillion was enabled to capture the whole fleet, consisting of five Jamaica men, heavily laden with sugar and rum.

The most pure and exquisite pleasure which a man can experience is at the moment when the girl to whom he is fondly attached, but of whose affection he is doubtful, confesses that she loves him.—Modern Pythagorean.

Digitized by Google

THE MOON-LIT BOWER.

Grazioso.

Digitized by Google

2.

Nor bid me sing, for why should I
On things of sadness dwell—
To call the tear drop to thine eye,
Or cause thy breast to swell,
With feelings that would badly suit,
A heart so young as thine?
O let me die, ere I pollute
With grief, that bosom's shrine.

3.

The grave will soon, the happy grave
Will soon enshroud this form—
Which, like the ocean's trem'lous waves,
Hath often felt a storm:
And in some lone deserted spot,
My resting place shall be;
By native hill and stream forgot—
Perhaps by all but thee!

Digitized by Google

WIT AND SENTIMENT.

EPITAPH.

ON WILLIAM GRAY.

Here lieth wrapt in clay,
The body of William Gray—
I have no more to say.

Life is an inn, where all men bait;
The waiter Time, the landlord Fate;
Death is the score by all men due—
I've paid my shot—and so must you.

TO MARY, ON PRESENTING HER WITH A MONTHLY ROSE.

For you I plucked the Rose, my dear,
The emblem of yourself;
It blossoms without any care,
But sure the fairy elf
Who watched its bud and bloom,
Bespangled o'er with dew,
Ne'er loved it half so well, my dear,
As he who brought it you.

EPIGRAMS.

Whilst different aims in different lights appear,
What is the chiefest good?—A conscience clear.
Since rolling ages in their course began,
What has been man's worst wo?—His fellow man.
Who's rich?—Who seeks not to increase his store.
Who's poor?—Who having much yet longs for more.
What is the brightest gem that decks a wife,
And what her noblest dower?—A spotless life.
What woman's chaste?—Of whom fame fears to lie,
And tongue of scandal never once came nigh.
What marks the wise?—When wronged for suffered ill,
To have the power to hurt, but want the will.
What speaks the fool?—When hate and spleen devour,
To have the will to hurt, but want the power.

CAUSES OF RAIN.

There is a story in Germany, that when monks go abroad it is sure to rain. Frischlin says, that he heard a philosopher in Prague gravely attempt to account for the phenomenon, attributing it to the fumes of liquor easily escaping through the bald crowns, and becoming condensed by the cold of the atmosphere.

A BUSTER.—"Landlord," said Jonathan the other day, stepping up to the bar of a public house, "just give us a cent's worth of New England, and put it in two tumblers. Here Jim take hold, I'll pay—d—n the expenses, I say, when a fellow is on a bust!"

Filial Account of one's Father's Attraction.—Though my father was neither young, being 42; nor handsome having lost an eye; nor sober, for he spent all he could get in liquor; nor clean, for his trade was oily; nor without shackles, for he had five children; yet women of various descriptions courted his smiles, and were much inclined to pull caps for him.—Hutton's Autobiography.

Knowledge and Ignorance.—The man of knowledge lives eternally after his death, while his members are reduced to death beneath the tomb. But the ignorant man is dead, even while he walks upon the earth; he is numbered with living men and yet existeth not.—Arabian Author.

A man of uncommonly grotesque countenance, boasted of having received his infant heir's first smile. A friend observed, that it was not wonderful the child should only smile when no one else could look without laughter!

A candidate for medical honours, having thrown himself almost into a fever, from his incapacity for answering the questions, was asked by one of the professors, "how would you sweat a person for the rheumatism?" He replied, "I would send him here to be examined."—Boston News.

Some one remarking to Major O'D—— that a mutual friend of theirs was looking as yellow as a guinea—"Is it a guinea he is looking like?" exclaimed the Major; "you should have seen the poor fellow in India; there he was looking as yellow as five guineas at least."

At a baker's at the west end of London, any lady or gentleman so disposed may step in and have, as we are informed by notice over the door, his or her "vittals baked here."

DEGREES OF DRUNKENNESS.—These, according to the author of the "Frolics of Puck," are five; "First fresh; secondly, emphatic; thirdly, glorious; fourthly, uproarious; and lastly, insensible."

A horse slaughterer in London, lately made a horrible disclosure, and one calculated to produce a "sensation" among the board of epicures. Being asked why horses' tongues were never lately to be seen among the cats' meat hawked about the streets, he answered that they were "too valuable for that," as they were sold for reindeer's tongues, and under that name were eagerly sought for and purchased at a high price by the high livers of the metropolis.

There is a story told of the late Lord Mansfield, when Chief Justice of the King's Bench, that he thus retorted, upon a council, who in a very marked and angry tone, told him that he entirely differed with him in law and opinion. His Lordship replied, "To be sure you do! I know that very well; you are paid to do so."

A western editor thus apologises for what he modestly deems some deficiencies in his paper:—"Want of time, and the tooth ache, have interfered very considerably with our editorial duties for the last two weeks. Our right to complain louder than our readers, is of course indisputable."

The following compliments were paid to old Sheridan, in Norfolk, England, by an Irish servant belonging to Mr. Coke, who attended him in his shooting excursion, and which old Sherry retold with great glee: Shot the first (the birds all getting away.) "Fore God, your honour, did you see one little gintleman drop his leg as he went off; he'll never stand on his tin toes again."—Shot the second (ditto. ditto.) "By the powers, there they go! But didn't your honour hear the shots rattle among them like pase against a winder? They'll pray to never see your honour again on this side of the country."—Shot the third (birds all off again.) "Blood and ouns! but they've caught it. (After watching them awhile.) There's three wounded any how, for they could but just get over yonder hedge! They'll get no sleep this blessed night!" Shot the fourth (a pheasant gets away.) Well, I never saw a poor gintleman taken to like him! He'll remember your honour, many a day to come! That spalpeen shall carry away more shot than would set up an ironmonger at Ballyshannon!—Shot the fifth (a snipe gets off.) "Crake, indeed! You may take your long bill in against this world! You'll wake to-morrow morning with a lumbago in your soft head!" Poor Sheridan could stand it no longer but gave his countryman a handsome fee for his ingenuity, and proceeded on his beat alone.

Digitized by Google

A Ruse de Guerre.

Strategie as well as force is among all nations considered justifiable in war, but whether the conduct which is embraced in the anecdote which we are about to relate, should be considered strictly in accordance with the moral principles which ought to regulate the actions of men, we leave to casuits to decide.

During the early part of the last war with Great Britain, a small brig mounting about ten sixes, with a crew of forty or fifty men, sailed from New England as a Letter-of-Marque; with permission to cruise as a privateer for a certain length of time, and capture prizes from the enemy. While cruising in the latitude of the homeward-bound West Indiamen, the brig one morning fell in with a large ship, to which she gave chase, but the Captain, an "old sea dog," on reconnoitering her through his spy-glass, was satisfied that she mounted too many guns to contend with, with any prospect of success, and hauled off, much to the dissatisfaction of the crew, who attributed his conduct to want of spirit and courage. In fact, they were not backward in exhibiting their feelings, and the word coward was more than once bandied about the ship in the hearing of the Capt.

A few days afterwards the brig fell in with another vessel. Every stitch of canvass was spread, and just at night, the chase was made out to be a large West Indiaman, apparently well armed and manned, and looking like an "ugly customer." "Now" said the Yankee Captain to his crew, "I wish you to listen, men, to what I am going to say. I heard some of you muttering something, not long since, about cowards,—and to oblige you, I will give you an opportunity of testing the courage of every man on board. You see that ship ahead. She is pierced for twenty-four guns, and probably carries sixteen at least, of heavy metal. That ship shall be my prize before two hours. So look out for squalls. If some of you don't lose the number of your mess I'm mistaken. But mind ye, no backing out. COWARDS, ha."

The crew looked rather blank, at this pithy harangue, but dared not remonstrate. They were caught in their own toils, and resolved to fight it out like men.

Night came on, but they still kept sight of the Englishman. It was about half past eight in the evening, when they ranged up within hail, on the weather quarter of their more bulky antagonist, who had every man at quarters, evidently prepared for a brush, and with his high bulwarks, and numerous deck lanthorns presented rather a formidable appearance. The Captain of the brig seized his speaking trumpet, and in a peremptory manner hailed the stranger.

"Ship ahoy!"

"Hallo!"

"Heave to—and I'll send my boat on board."

"What brig is that pray?"

"The United States Brig ARGUS!"

"Aye, aye, sir!"

John Bull thought it would be madness to contend with the U. S. Brig Argus, which was well known to be a crack Sloop of War of twenty guns and accordingly backed his main top-sail, without further parley. The Yankees were thunderstruck at their Captain's impudence. But the quarter boat was lowered and officered and manned immediately in true man of war style.

The American officer ascended the gang-way of the English ship, with a "swab" on his shoulder. "What cup is this?" said he in an authoritive tone as soon as he reached the deck.

The English ship "Caernarvon Castle, sir, from Barbadoes, bound to Bristol," returned the Englishman submissively.

"Then sir, you will please to step into the boat, with your papers, and return with me on board the Argus. Mr. Simpson," said he to the Captain's clerk, who filled the post of a middy on this occasion, "I leave you with the men in charge of the ship! you will proceed to put the prisoners in irons ready to be transferred to the Argus."

When the British Captain arrived along-side the Argus, he was astonished at her diminutive size,—when he got on board, he saw at once that he had been duped; but it was then too late to remedy the evil.

"Sir," said he to the Yankee Captain, more in anger than in sorrow, "you told me this vessel was the United States brig Argus."

"And I told you the truth, sir. Her name is the Argus,—and she belongs to the United States!"

A DANGEROUS SITUATION.—When passing near the Riet river-gate, and while our oxen were grazing, Van Wyk, the colonist, related to us the following interesting circumstance; "It is now," he said, "more than two years since in the very place where we stand, I ventured to take one of the most daring shots that ever was hazarded. My wife was sitting within the house near the door, the children were playing about her, and I was without near the house, busied in doing something to a wagon, when suddenly, though it was midday, on enormous lion appeared, came up and laid himself quietly down in the shade, upon the very threshold of the door. My wife, either frozen with fear, or aware of the danger attending any attempt to fly, remained motionless in her place, while the children took refuge in her lap. The cry they uttered attracted my attention, and I hastened towards the door; but my astonishment may be well conceived, when I found the entrance to it barred in such a way. Although the animal had not seen me, unarmed as I was escape seemed impossible, yet I glided gently, scarcely knowing what I meant to do, to the side of the house, up to the window of my chamber, where I knew my loaded gun was standing. By a most happy chance I had set it in the corner close to the window, so that I could reach it with my hand; for, as you may perceive the opening was too small to admit of my having got in; and still more fortunate, the door of the room was open, so that I could see the whole danger of the scene. The lion was beginning to move perhaps with the intention of making a spring. There was no longer any time to think; I called softly to the mother not to be alarmed, and invoking the name of the Lord, fired my piece. The ball passed over the hair of my boy's head, and lodged in the forehead of the lion, immediately above his eyes, which shot forth as sparks of fire, and stretched him on the ground so that he never stirred more." Indeed, we all shuddered as we listened to this relation. Never, as he himself observed, was a more daring attempt hazarded. Had he failed in his aim, mother and children were all inevitably lost; if the boy had moved he had been struck; the least turn in the lion, and the shot had not been mortal to him. To have taken an aim at him without, was impossible; while the shadow of any one advancing in the bright sun would have betrayed him. So consummate the whole, the head of the creature was in some sort protected by the door post.—Naturalist's Library.

WOMEN.—Women are formed for attachment.—Their gratitude is unimpeachable. Their love is an unceasing fountain of delight to the man who has once attained it, and knows how to deserve it. But that very keenness of sensibility which, if well cultivated, would prove the source of your highest enjoyment, may grow to bitterness and warmwood if you fail to attend to it or abuse it.

Digitized by Google

[From the Nantucket Inquirer.]

GRUMBLINGS.

"Clam exclamate! be less clamorous, sirs!" Link. Fidelius.

"Fresh clams! fresh clams! who'll buy, who'll buy."
The world is in a stew—
I wish that fellow's clamshells there
Were univalv'd by glue.
Why, every animal that swims
Is floundering on land—
Scales grow upon your face and eyes,
Fins fasten to your hand.

"Fresh halibut!" just hear that boy
Yelling with alto lungs,
As if they were of triple brass,
Hinged to a thousand tongues.
Ere day has dawned, my rest is broke,
And if perchance I dream,
Millions of clamorous mouths expand,
And grin, and hiss, and scream.

"Tap! tap! it is the milkman's rap—
I hear him at the door;
He treads like some rhinoceros
Waltzing about the floor.
And there! his tin quart measure falls
Upon those steps of stone,
And grates like filing of a saw
Upon your every bone.

'*Yar-char-foin cod fish, fresh and corn'd, Mackerel and eels! who'll buy!"
Oh! hear that long tongued fellow sing
His everlasting cry!
Dreams! dreams! oh Clarence look'd not down
So deep into the sea,
Nor saw such monsters without heads,
As lash their tails at me.

A minnow beckons to a whale
To cool him while he boils
And sharks turn up their crisped snouts
And gape for roasting spoils.
Huge porpoises there roll along
Sea-serpents on their hams,
For pickled salmon foraging,
For chowder and for clams.

There shoals of herring tow along
Big skeletons of whales
And ever and anon they join Together all their tails.
Then change into a mermaid fair,
Who jigs it on the sea,
And whistles to those skeletons
To dance and have a spree.

"Fresh lobsters from the sea—who'll buy!"
Zounds, how he howls and sings;
When will the ocean yield its loads
Of creeping, wriggling things?
There's not a thing that crawls or swims,
From whale to smaller fry,
That is not thrust into my dreams—
By Jonah! I shall die!

Oh mercy! let a single man
Enjoy his blessed rest,
Nor overwhelm his morning thoughts,
Unquiet ones at best.
I have no wife to scold or fret
No brats to cry or tease;
Then bawl and sing! but give me leave
To grumble when I please.

* The vernacular for "here's the fine," &c.

T'd rather be a hake and gasp
And dangle from a line,
And have my either end bit off
Far down the bitter brine;
Than thus my twilight visions fill'd
With all that h— surrounds—(whew)
"Ancient and fishlike" cries and groans,
Unearthly tongues and sounds.

DISAPPOINTMENT OR THE BILLETDOUX.

Rat a tat, rat a tat, run, Lucy, run!
What can that stupid girl be at?
Why in the kitchen stay to chat?
Hark! hark! again! the postman's rap!
O, run! good Lucy, run!

Here's a pink letter, miss, for you!
Post paid, dear heart! why how you blush!
Cock'd-hat-like folded; (fashion new)—
The seal two doves, that bill and coo—
Well! hush, good Lucy, hush!

From Coronet Slender, of the Blues,
No doubt!—its every fold breathes sweets;
Dear charming youth—the muse he woos—
"Sophy, my darling, what's the news?"
N.o-thing, papa; how my heart beats!

I tremble—gentle wax unclose—
Goddess of nerves! support me still!
'Tis open'd—(pa's so kind to doze!)
Dear youth, I knew he would propose—
What do I see?—Miss Fitwell's bill!

Was it for this my heart so beat?
(With grief and rage I shall expire,)
Instead of Love's own whispers sweet,
A milliner's account to meet,
That feeds no flame except the fire

Shameful! that tradespeople should write
On tinted paper, sealed with doves;
Sure they may keep to "black and white,"
If these vile bills they must indite,
And leave the GRACES to the LOVES!

From the Boston Morning Post.

LOVE.

What is love? A sorry, sorry thing
That predisposes young men to straight jackets:
Ah! broken hearts—oh! broken heads they get,
And then are shipped from home in India packets,
The father whispers in the captain's ear,
'Mind that you keep him sea-sick," list, young masters!
"And when the rogue's on deck, please ship a sea, I'll pay for all gratuitous disasters."

Daughters of Eve! the fairest and the best
Of living things, fall not in love—because it's
The reason why you sew so bad sometimes,
And prompts ma'ma to lock you up in closets.
It generates romance and then you stroll
Away at eve to perpetrate sweet sonnets;
If clouds arise you heed them not; oh, no—
Till 'tis too late, then follow—ruined bonnets.

Byron and I you'll say are very wrong
To cry the bow-boy down, for all the poets
Wear out their goose quills, and their elbows too,
In penning odes and heaven knows what, to show it
All fal de ral for folks to try to teach to
That lovers an't sound, reasonable creatures.

Think as you list; but when you're cupid proof;
That is, have reached the t'other side of forty,
I'll lay a wager that you cry—"all sham."
And "Tom Moore ought not write such stuff—I be"

Digitized by Google

ALI BEY EL ABBASSI

Published by S.C Atkinson for the Casket.

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

ATKINSON'S
CASKET
OR GEMS OF
LITERATURE, WIT AND SENTIMENT.

Me other cares in other climes engage,
Cares that become my birth, and suit my age;
In various knowledge to instruct my youth,
And conquer prejudice, worst foe to truth;
By foreign arts, domestic faults to mend,
Enlarge my notions and my views extend;
The useful science of the world to know,
Which books can never teach, or pedants show.

No. 11.] PHILADELPHIA.—NOVEMBER. [1834.

ALI BEY.

We have, in the picture of Ali Bey, the portrait of a traveller, who wrote one of the most singular productions presented for many years to the public; a work composed in the name of a "Mussulman: a descendant of the illustrious family of the Abassides;" the original of which is in French, and is supported by a fictitious account of his birth and family. The London publishers determined to cast off a part of the veil, and to represent Ali Bey as no other than a Spaniard, travelling in the guise of a Mohammedan, who was personally known, they add, to Sir Joseph Banks, and other literati, having visited England in 1802 and 1814. As a farther proof of the authenticity of the work, they quote a passage from a letter from Monsieur Chateaubriand, who met Ali Bey at Alexandria, and who, in his usual style of amplification, describes the traveller as "the most polished and knowing Turk living."

To these circumstances, communicated in the preface to the travels, we are now enabled to add, from an American, formerly a resident at Tripoli, that Ali Bey's real name is Badia Y. Leblich; that he is a Spaniard, born in 1766; that he was educated at the University of Valencia; that, having acquired the Arabic language, and familiarized himself with Mussulman usages, he untertook his great journey in 1802, with the tacit sanction of the Spanish Government; and that he obtained from Godoy, (who was then all powerful at that Court, and who was so long known to the world by the unmerited name of Prince of the Peace,) an engagement for an annuity to his wife and daughter, in return for the public benefit that might be expected from this expedition.

Fortified with this important preliminary, and provided with the necessary stock of money, presents, and other means of travelling, Ali Bey (as we must continue to call him,) set out from the southern coast of Spain, in June 1803. His peregrinations occupied between four and five years, and embraced a wide tract of country then little known. The leading outline may be collected from the following sketches:—

I. Residence in the Morocco dominions for two years.

II. Voyage to Egypt, and journey across the country to Suez.

III. Pilgrimage to Mecca.

IV. Return by the way of Egypt, Palestine, Syria, Asia Minor, and Constantinople.

Previously to the commencement of his journey to these regions of barbarism and superstition, our traveller had not only adopted the dress and appearance necessary for the support of his assumed character, but also underwent the painful operation necessary to prevent detection, and to prove his adherence to the rights of Islamism. Assuming the Mussulman from the outset, Ali Bey begins with an invocation in Arabic, the first words of which are, "Praise to God, the Mightiest, the Immense." He proceeds to mention his passage across the Straits of Gibraltar to Tangier, where, when he arrived, he found himself in as different a part of the world as if he had traversed a thousand miles of European ground.

He soon had an opportunity of being introduced to the Emperor, or Sultan of Morocco, Muley Soliman, who happened to come to Tangier soon after. No sooner had he offered the customary presents, than he was very kindly received, the Sultan condescending to make him read aloud to him, and even to correct his pronunciation of Arabic. A further acquaintance led our traveller to shew his Camera Obscura to his Moorish Majesty, and to the observation of two eclipses which Ali foretold; the result of all this was that, besides other presents, the Sultan gave him a large estate, of which there is in the book a very prolix description.

From Tangier he proceeded to Fez, and thence to the city of Morocco, where the Sultan, with his usual magnificence, presented him with two females, the one fair, the other of the African dye, but he scarcely visited them, and they were left behind. The Emperor wished him to remain in his dominions, but Ali was not to be persuaded, and with additional presents, embarked for Tripoli.

Digitized by Google

Here he fascinates every body, and after some time spent in observation, he embarked for Alexandria, but was driven by contrary winds to the Island of Cyprus; his time was now spent in the survey of its classical antiquities, as well as those of other islands. At Alexandria he remained five months, and in the autumn proceeded up the Nile to Cairo, from whence he travelled with a caravan across the Desert to Suez, whence he embarked, and after a passage of great length, and some hazard, landed at Djedda, a harbour in the Red Sea; from which a journey of two days brought him to the Holy City of Mecca; the ceremonies there, he describes minutely, but their rehearsal here would exceed our limits.

The traveller's curiosity was strongly excited in regard to Medina, the second Holy City of the Mussulmans, and he determined to visit it. Setting out, he was robbed by the Wahabees, and losing his baggage was obliged to return to the coast, and proceeded through Palestine. To comprehend fully his account of this delightful country, it would be necessary to have recourse to his engravings.

We next find him at Jerusalem; and then at Jaffa, which, with other portions of the Holy Land, he describes at much length, and well. Damascus and Aleppo, also came within the range of his searching eye. The journey from the latter place to Constantinople, afforded nothing remarkable: on arriving there he resided with the Spanish Ambassador, taking the precaution to have the apartments fitted up in the Turkish manner; a precaution which, however, would not have availed him, if it had been known that he, a Spaniard and a Christian, had dared to set his feet within the Sacred Kaaba of Mecca. His account of Constantinople is curious. The book is concluded with the relation of the journey from thence to Bucharest, written by another person.

Here the narrative ends, but as we are enabled from an undoubted source, to add, that he came to Paris in 1806, soon after the completion of his journey; and that he was supposed to have had previously, an understanding with Bonaparte, whose projects of conquest, in fact, bear a considerable resemblance to his own wanderings. Be this as it may, he had little difficulty in obtaining from the French Court a favorable testimonial, with which he went to Madrid; and he was occupied in publishing his book, when his Imperial Patron commenced his usurpation of the Spanish crown. King Joseph Bonaparte appointed Ali Bey in 1810, to be Intendant of Segovia, and in the next year Prefect of Cordova; but fortune soon seemed to envy him his new honours, and condemned him, after the decisive day of Vittoria, to fly with his dethroned sovereign across the Pyrennees, and to take refuge in Paris, where he continued to reside for some time, seeming, at the last account of him, to regard that capital as his permanent abode; his daughter was married to M. de Sales, a member of the Institute.

His narrative in the main, is deemed authentic, though some of the details exceed credibility.

SLEEP.

——Sleep hath its own world,
A wide realm of wide reality. BYRON.

Sleep hath a wide and mighty realm
Of bright, unfettered things,
When every wild and wayward thought,
A wilder shadow flings.

Thoughts flash on thoughts, and visions rise
With an entrancing power;
The mighty lapse of ages seems
The drama of an hour!

How many withered hearts do feel
The gush of hope again!
Live o'er their time of sorrow here,
Without its bitter pain.

The felon in his dreary cell,
Finds in his heavy sleep,
A thousand sweet and blissful thoughts
Around his senses creep.

Feels the clanking fetters break,
The deed of sin removed,
And presses close the phantom breast
Of one he dares not love.

The captive, on some foreign strand,
Far from his native shore,
Sees in that sleep, when visions come,
His happy home once more.

Gathers his loved ones round his knee,
And talks of grief and pain,
Until the joyous spirit soars
Above the captive's chain.

The aged have their dreams—the one
Of three score years and ten,
Dreams upon the verge of time,
That he is young again.

Feels the rich blood rush through his veins,
The fire of youth mount high,
And echoes the shout of happy cries,
In mild and stirring cry.

All have their dreams—their glowing dreams,
In the still hour of sleep,
When the winged thoughts in wild array,
Across the senses sweep.

All have their dreams—and there are some
That come in waking hours,
And bright and wayward images,
Float round with mystic power.

When thought leads thought in mazy round,
And busy fancy's free,
Mocking the visions of the night,
In thrilling energy.

All have their dreams—delusive dreams!
And doubly blest are they,
Who peaceful pass this troubled life
In one sweet dream away. LAURA.

A poet that fails in writing, becomes often a morose critic. The weak and insipid white wine, makes at length, excellent vinegar.—Shenstone.

Digitized by Google

From the Saturday Evening Post.

ROSALIE VANE:

A SKETCH FROM REAL LIFE.

So young, so fair,
Good without effort, great without a foe,
But now a bride and mother—and now there!
How many ties did that stern moment tear!

BYRON.

Nor the most beautiful, but by far the loveliest girl, I ever met with, was Rosalie Vane. The child of very handsome parents; she could not well be otherwise than resembling them in this particular; and with less regular beauty than either father or mother, few of her sex were in appearance so sweet and engaging. Her's was not the faultless symmetry of Grecian models—the glow and grandeur of Circassian perfection; neither had she the brilliancy of French, nor the picturesque and passionate expression of Spanish beauty: her aspect rather realized our idea—not of a Helen or a Dione—but of Psyche, the young, the pure, the lovely. With a profusion of rich brown curls, and a complexion as clear and fresh as the lilies and roses of the fabled Aurora, the chief and distinguishing charm of this fair creature, lay in the delicious emanation that seemed to breathe from her whole face and form, of that feeling, which we have the authority of Scripture for believing, to be the essence of the Deity himself. There was Love in the languishing and soul-lit glance of her deep-blue eyes—love in her soft dimples, and the wreathed smiles ever playing about her ruby lips—love in the low, liquid tones of her melting voice: in a word, she looked and moved a personification of the tender passion, as fervent and as charming as the Veronese Juliet. Her person was below the middle height—but exquisitely moulded, though rather inclining to the fulness and voluptuous swell, so prized in the beauties of the East.

Nor was it outward loveliness alone, that adorned this sweet being; for she was as good as fair, as artless as intelligent, as full of simplicity as of accomplishment and grace. In manner, gay, and yet gentle, modest, though free,—her intellectual gifts and attainments were like herself, sensible, feminine, and elegant. Soft as a seraph, to which order of angels her name belonged, dependents, school-fellows and acquaintances alike idolized her mild and gracious incapability of a violent or unkind emotion; and when, in the bloom of girl-hood, she returned, after a long absence, from the Northern seminary, at which her education was completed, to her natal halls,—it was to be welcomed by high and low—at home and abroad, with such a jubilee, as after a Greenland winter, might hail the reappearance of the diurnal luminary. And this sun-shine, did Rosalie Vane continue, through life, to diffuse around the domestic hearth, and the haunts of social glee.

And fortune had been as kind to Miss Vane as nature. She was an heiress, not merely of immense wealth—but of the moral nobility attached to a name, on which attended universal respect and esteem. Her father, admired as a most gallant and polished gentleman—the Chesterfield of America—was a patrician par excellence, and at the head of Washington society—not in virtue of official—for of that he stood in no need—but of private and personal dignity. As opulent as the ownership of one-half of the City, and a good third of its principal Bank, could make him,—he was even richer in talent and sterling weight of character—and had moreover drawn a high prize in that most hazardous of lotteries: to wit, the hymeneal. The lady, wooed and won by a cavalier so highly gifted, and at that time a prominent member of Congress, from his native State of New York, had much beauty, a most amiable disposition, and a large inheritance to recommend her. The mother of the orphan, the friend of the destitute; she was reverenced as a public benefactress; having founded several charities to sanctify and perpetuate her name. Their union, so fertile in all the elements of happiness, had been long and prosperous, as the merit of the parties deserved—and was further cemented by the birth of one child, their darling Ann-Rosalie.

During the infancy and childhood of her daughter, Mrs. Vane had figured as the first in all fashionable circles—and upheld the honours of her state and station, with a success that more than justified the admiration of her doating husband. He, himself, one of the few Americans who could afford to live without professional exertion and emolument, as that most enviable of characters, a private gentleman,—was of the most refined and luxurious tastes; and these, together with his high style of living, drew around him all that was courtly and consequential in the promiscuous assemblage of metropolitan life. Possessed of a great indirect political influence, he was courted by all parties, and surrendered himself to none. Proud, high-minded, and feeling that it was his office to lead, not follow: he was in situation, bearing, and character, the Earl Grey of our Republic; (of course, I refer to that nobleman before he took office.)

Thus holding himself free from the trammels of place or party, General Vane occupied his time in the care of his vast property, and the enjoyment of social and domestic bliss, such as rarely blesses our lot below. The foreign representatives at the Federal City, stationary and transient, praised and frequented his house, as superior to their own Hotels; all strangers desirous of mixing with the élite of ton, had to bring letters to its President; and to be seen at Vane House—to exchange a word or bow, in public, with either of the distinguished couple—were privileges of which numbers were vehemently ambitious, though mostly "doomed to disappointment dire." And if such was the state of things before the advent of the lovely heiress, it may be supposed that the force of attraction did not lessen afterwards. The elegant owners of Mansion Square, as their town residence was called, had always studied a nice selection of visitors; and now the difficulty of admittance to them, was increased ten-fold. Parents introducing a beautiful daughter to the world, have been well likened to travellers bearing a precious charge through a country infested with numerous and fierce robbers; and without exactly proceeding upon this principle, Gen. Vane and his lady found themselves beset with those anxieties and apprehensions inseparable from the parental relation. Their sole and charming child was surrounded and solicited on all sides; society wooed her as its brightest ornament—no fashionable ré-union was held complete without her—no young aspirant of ton was satisfied unless he could gain permission to dangle in her train. Lovers came not by scores, but in troops; and the fair Rosalie reigned the queen of a little court; where the suitors and imitators contended for the distinction of her notice. Thus circumstanced, it behooved her natural guardians to be doubly exclusive—and so they were. A breath stains the surface of a crystal mirror; and the parents of my heroine, in their delicate sense of propriety, held the mere casual contact with many persons, generally circulating in society, to be contamination to a pure and polished young lady: so, soon none, save the highest and most irreproachable in the land, stood a chance of presentation to the sweet "sovereign of the hour."

Digitized by Google

Meanwhile Miss Vane's air, Miss Vane's dress, Miss Vane's attitudes were commented upon by all ambitious of an extérieur distingué. The characteristic of her manner, was a fine simplicity, happily exemplified when she sat at the harp. I have seen her portrait in this attitude, which embellished King's Gallery for a short time, where this pervading tone of "plain grace," is so admirably caught and expressed, as absolutely to enliven the canvass. I have gazed on it for hours, in mournful admiration and wonder, that a creature so spotless and so exquisite, should have been decreed to pass away so soon, and so sadly from existence. Insensibly, with these melancholy musings, would mingle the remembrance of my impressions when I first saw her in the glow and freshness of youth and hope: then life seemed opening its pathway before her, through a vista, carpeted with velvet, strewed with roses, and overcanopied with the garniture of splendour and love. Her sweet, confiding frankness of manner, the chastened vivacity of her graceful mirth—her father, too, following her every motion, with rapture in his eye—her mother's accents, softening into exulting tenderness, as she presented me—an old friend of the family—to her daughter, her Ann; the whole scene would appear plain and palpable before me. That group is indelibly impressed on my memory, as one, not only of the deepest interest, but forming a rare picture of beauty. It was a trio unique in personal endowments: the General, just in his prime, and a most handsome man—Mrs. Vane, her charms matured, not changed—and near her that fair girl, in the first blush of youth, like Summer and Spring, standing side by side.

At the period of my introduction to her, Rosalie had just reached the zenith of felicity. She had been the object of numberless proposals—but still the paternal sanction authorized none; and the daughter, as docile and guileless as a pet lamb—and her sensibilities not yet awakened on this paramount point, appeared to commit the matter entirely to his wiser care. At length, however, the happy man came; but, though he saw, he conquered not, at first. This was the son of a Carolinian, of senatorial rank, and great estate; to say nothing of his family, which was one of the oldest and haughtiest among the Southern aristocracy. The personal gifts of the lover in question, equalled his worldly advantages; and he loved the pretty Miss Vane, as few are capable of loving. She alone and his ardour eventully awakened in her gentle bosom, a sentiment as tender, if less warm. The General, though from the first, approving the overtures of this candidate, knew the full value of the treasure in his hands, and was, in proportion, cautious and chary of parting lightly with it. In truth, neither himself nor Mrs. Vane, relished the idea of giving away their idol thus early to another; but as they began to see how much her heart was in the match, parental fondness, as usual, sacrificed itself, and after a courtship of two years and better, preparations were at last making for the marriage of Rosalie Vane, to Arthur Morrison. These were conducted on a scale of magnificence conformable with the wealth and grandeur of the parties—and necessarily consumed much time in their completion.

"Heard, felt and seen, Possessed his every thought—"

The wedding day arrived; it was one which summer seemed to have adorned expressly for the occasion; and the stately chamber of [illegible] sion Square, glowing with paintings and exotics, and its finished gardens, equal in point of beauty, to that of Shenstone, were thrown open after the ceremony, to a concourse of the grand monde. The privilege of intimacy, entitled me to be present at the marriage, and I went thither, rejoicing in the simplicity of my heart, at the happy prospects of one, as perfect and as pleasing, as mere humanity can be. As I approached the bridal abode, the white walls of Vane House, gleaming from amid its screen of verdant vines, and "tall ancestral trees"—its balmy groves stirred by the whispering zephyr, and the superb grounds, with their perfumed bowers and green recesses, bounded by Potomac's silvery waves, seemed to smile with a gayer beauty—to breathe a fresher and more luxurious charm; and by contrast with the stifling dust and heat and noise of the streets I had just left, the whole demesne realized the poetic dreams of Eden, in its earliest hour of coolness and repose. And yet, an angel was about leaving this, her native Paradise, for another yet untried, though giving promise of an even dearer joy—a more extatic bliss. Groups of servants with their holy-day clothes and countenances on, laughed and loitered about the portico and vestibule; and every thing around, even to inanimate objects, appeared to brighten under the sunny influence of the festive hour.

Being shown in, and finding myself almost the first arrival, I made my way, in order to replace a book, towards the library, where I unexpectedly encountered the first and most touching scene of the nuptial day. I stopped, unseen, at the door, to survey the two persons within. The young bride, not yet

"Clad in her bridal robes, of taintless white,"

but in a negligée, whose unstudied elegance adorned her anew, half reclined in a caressing

Digitized by Google

attitude at her father's feet—her fair cheek resting on his knee—her sweet face bathed in tears—and yet in a glow of blushes and smiles, upturned to his. The General, as he concluded something that he was addressing her with great earnestness, stooped down and kissed her brow; then, as starting from her recumbent posture, she threw her graceful arms about his neck,—he caught her by one of the long, loose ringlets that wantoned down her alabaster throat,—and clipping it off, carefully hid away in his bosom this last memorial of his virgin daughter. In the deep emotion of that moment, neither observed me;—so I stole away softly to the Long Drawing-room, appointed for the performance of the conjugal solemnity, and which, in addition to the usual splendid furniture, was hung with draperies of white silk, and filled with fragrance from the rare flowers of an adjoining conservatory.

At last the French clock on the marble mantle piece, struck the hour of noon. The invited guests were all assembled, among them the Rector of St. John's, in full canonicals, and suavity of clerical complaisance—the white gloves and silver favours duly distributed—all preliminary observances properly gone through—and the bridegroom, who in excess of proud rapture, seemed transported out of himself, led down the lovely heiress, about to be made his own. An involuntary murmur, expressive of admiration and envy, ran through the male part of the company; while among the ladies, I overheard sundry emphatic whispers in praise of "those divine pearls," and "perfect silver flowers." Never did Rosalie look so coy and so captivating. She was dressed in white satin, and deeply veiled in the richest lace; there was a shy and tremulous radiance in her down-ward glance—the soft flush of maiden timidity on her transparent cheek; and yet she came forward with an elegant, and even easy air. I thought of Milton's lines, as applicable:

"Grace was in all her steps—Heav'n in her eye—
In every gesture, dignity and love."

It is a strange and sympathetic thing to witness—that ceremony coeval with the creation—the first ordinance assigned by Heaven to man. There is naught else on earth that so excites and blends contrary and yet consentaneous emotions. That sacred form of words, so simple yet solemn, acts as a talisman of mightier potency, than all that the world of nature or magic can besides produce. It consecrates or curses a new existence—it identifies two individuals as "one indivisible"—and the end of its bonds is with one at least, to be the end of time. Sensations, sad, uncertain, and yet sweet—all that is gay and gentle—all of power to thrill or soothe the soul, comes clustering around that single and charmed era of life. Joy and grief, modesty and love, pride and humility, hope alternating with fear, delight qualified by dread, alike wait upon the union of hearts and hands: and this was truly such.

The holy book is opened, and all eyes rivetted on the fair bride, who bore herself with a mingled majesty and modesty; how different from the nervous affectation of sentimental airs and graces, wherewith many young ladies disfigure the most interesting moment of their lives. Here was nothing of this absurd pretence, no assumption of false feeling and bad taste; and the gentle seriousness, the intense yet chastened fervour, the low yet distinct firmness of tone, with which the promissary responses were made, invested the ceremony, impressive as it always is, with additional solemnity and effect.

It was over; the fitting vows had been spoken—the awful compact, indissoluble through weal and woe, entered into; the young couple were pronounced man and wife—and Miss Vane was no more! Then came the pleasing bustle of kissing and wishing joy; and Rosalie, for the first time, both trembled and wept, as her mother folded the beloved child, now appertaining to another, in a long and silent embrace, whence she passed into her fond father's arms. But marriage, after all, is a joyous, not a melancholy celebration; and this passed off amid smiles and gratulations, as sincere as they were gladdening. An exquisite collation, which would have done honour to Udé's science, was doubly enjoyed amid the refreshing shades and perfumed coolness of the gardens; and I left the mansion and its splendid circle of guests, believing that if ever Heaven looked down auspiciously on a "connubial league," it was on that amiable girl, whom I had just seen put off the maiden, and assume the matron.

Immediately after this happy espousal, my affairs recalled me to a distant home: I left Washington, but not before the departure of the new-married pair. Time went by, and at the year's end, I found it necessary to visit the Capital on some old business. My first inquiries at the hotel, were for friends, the Vanes. I knew that their sweet daughter had accompanied her husband to the South, where her bridal tour had resembled the triumphal progress of a princess; I had also heard, that after a twelve-month of rapture, she had presented her adoring Arthur with a source of loftier happiness—of a more abiding beatitude of exalted feeling—in a fine son—and that the birth had taken place at her father's house, where the young couple still were. The person, whom I now questioned about them, handed me the morning's paper; I glanced over the paragraph he pointed out: it was an obituary! Gracious God! my queries were fearfully answered—my curiosity—the prompting of sincere regard—in an instant extinguished: Mrs. Morrison was dead! The star of hope and happiness to so many fond hearts, was lost—its lovely light quenched—and for ever. The young, the innocent, the idolized, had been snatched away in her prime; the greedy grave stood open for its tenant; and I, who had last made one at her marriage-feast, now read the mournful bidding to her obsequies. For some time I felt too much shocked to ask for particulars of this sudden catastrophe, but I could not escape hearing them in detail; for every body was full of the sad subject. The loveliest of wives, and of women, had died of a low fever, contracted before her confinement, but not till after her poor heart had bled,

"The mother of a moment, o'er her boy."

Digitized by Google

The same grave was to receive them both—and this the day set apart for the double funeral. It was already past the hour of attendance; still I dressed myself in a "suit of solemn black," and and set out to join in this last tribute of respect to the memory of my departed favorite.

It was a sad, cold day in April; the spring had been blighted in her backward bloom, and the appearance of nature so withered and wintry, as aptly typified the fate of the fair being thus cruelly cut off in the spring-time of life. It was a day congenial with the dismal duty of a burial-rite. There was gloom in the aspect of the dark and congregated clouds, as they hurried across the heavens—gloom in the melancholy wail of the wind, as it whistled, as if to mark an autumnal, not a vernal day—gloom in the dull, sloppy streets and marshy fields, along which my course lay. The whole city seemed pouring towards Vane House; and yet there was neither life nor hurry in the slow-rolling vehicles and sedate passengers, that swelled the collection around the porter's lodge, and within the darkened halls of the desolated mansion. A dull, misty rain dimmed the landscape around; and how different did the proud edifice, as from the serpentine approach, I caught a glimpse of it through the leafless trees, now look—the hearse with its black waving plumes, standing before the door—the bell handle and knocker, that I had last heard gaily ringing such frequent peals, and re-echoing to rap thundering upon rap, now muffled in crape—the undertaker's men, in their lugubrious garb, lining the entrance-hall—and the servants, in mourning, running hither and thither, and sobbing as if their hearts would break. Every body looked startled and aghast, as if some strange and awful visitation had smitten each individual self; and while recalling the late scene of marriage-merriment, now so frightfully reversed, I felt like one walking under the bewildering spell of an horrid but unreal vision.

After a greeting in dumb show from Col. ——, who acted as master of ceremonies, he ushered me into the chamber, where death lay sternly shrined in state. It was the same already signalized as the scene of one bridal solemnity, and now filled with still statue-like figures, ranged in formal rows, and imperfectly seen through the half-light that, counterfeiting gloom, came, faint and tremulous, through the sable hangings. The few words, now and then spoken under breath, indicated rather than broke the deep, dead silence, pervading the crowded apartment. Its centre was occupied by the palled and velvet coffin—that final tenement of frail mortality—within which the cold corpse of the sainted dead was already laid—but not alone—for its last, long rest. With steps of reverential stealth, I drew near, to take a parting look at what had lately been full of loveliness and angelic life. I raised the winding-sheet, thickly strewed over with the funeral herbs that embalm the dead. Before me, wrapped in a shroud of white satin, and extended in rigid length, I beheld a marble figure: the countenance was sweet and serene, as if in soft repose; love yet lingered on that pale, placid brow—and a languid smile half-parted the once roseate lips, whence the warm and perfumed breath was now for ever fled. And this was all that remained of Rosalie! the heiress of thousands—the idol of society—the treasury where so much deep love and doating hope had so long been garnered up! "Vanity of vanities! and all is vanity!" saith the preacher; and here lay the emphatic commentary on that solemn text. Who had possessed, like her, "all that makes mankind adore?" To whom had nature and fortune held out such fair promise of the future? Who seemed to smile so securely above the reach of fate? Youth, health, grace, goodness—the most brilliant prospects—the most endearing relations; all had been lavished only to render the victim more conspicuous, and to gild with a fugitive glory, the gloom of an early grave. To the dead body of Rosalie Morrison, the moralist might well appeal, as preaching more powerfully than a thousand sermons, the futility of all earthly expectations—the uncertainty of life—the insufficiency of wealth, grandeur and amiability, to ensure happiness, or avert the decree of destiny. It had sought and smitten a shining mark; like a pale, withered rose, whose fragrance survives decay, here lay the spotless sacrifice, motionless and stiff—the imperishable impress of parted immortality yet playing about that calm face; and, oh! touching sight! within those gentle arms, her infant sleeping upon its mother's lifeless breast; and her husband! her parents! the bereaved—the broken-hearted—where, alas! were they? Morrison appeared not: within the solitude of his widowed chamber, he yielded himself up to the tremendous bursts of despair that, maddening his brain, by turns, threatened destruction to himself, or wildly arraigned and scoffed at heaven—his strong mind still supporting, with more self-command, a dispensation so overwhelming.

Gen. Vane was present: he sat erect in the majesty of manly bearing; but though his superior fortitude disdained the outward show of complaint, yet none could look upon him without recurring to

"Laocoon's torture dignifying pain."

"Tried but not subdued," he struggled with his grief in such sort, that

"A father's love and mortal's agony,
With an immortal's patience blending," presents but a faint picture of the conflict between intolerable anguish and firm endurance, visible in the expression of his fine features.

I had not to turn in search of Mrs. Vane: she sat by the coffin that held the mortal reliques of her soul's darling; but her sufferings displayed not itself in the mode natural to her sex and her own meek character. Her looks were wan and wild—her dry eyes red and fixed; and the tearless agony, the mute despair in which she was plunged, only vented itself occasionally in a long, deep, convulsive sigh, that seemed to upheave her whole frame. The grim array of death glared upon her sight without informing her senses; she appeared uncertain—almost unconscious of her irrepairable loss, though its dreadful evidence lay so close beside her, and sat watching her daughter's cold remains with such intensity of eager love, as must have hung over and smoothed her sleeping couch. The trying moment arrived—that bitter moment in which the heart, rent with a double pang, seems, for the first time, fully to recognize the decease of a friend. The coffin lid was about to be screwed down—the veil drawn, which was for ever to hide her precious Ann from her longing eyes. With a dubious and hurried glance, the wretched mother started to her feet, and leaning over the corpse, laid her cheek upon the chill damp brow. The shock of conviction darted like an ice-bolt through her heart; the horrid truth, for the first time, flashed, with that touch, across her mind; and with a cry so piercing and prolonged, that it mocked the very shriek of despair, Mrs. Vane sunk senseless upon the floor. The ladies, her intimate friends, who hitherto had vainly dissuaded her away from the scene, now hastily, yet tenderly, raised and removed her, and the conclusion of the sad ceremony went on.

Digitized by Google

At last all was announced as ready; the superb coffin, with its storied plate, borne out by eight distinguished pall-bearers, was laid within the hearse—and slowly driven away from that house, through which the departed had shed a light and joy, that henceforth it was to know no more. Next to the gaunt and spectral-looking carriage of the dead, went the General's coach, containing himself as chief mourner, and one or two near relatives besides: then followed a string of carriages almost interminable; and the sad procession moved slowly on to the mausoleum of the Vane family, where, within the funeral vault, amid sobs and prayers and general blessings on her memory, were deposited the mortal remains of one who, too fair and good and pure for earth, had, while upon it, been worshipped as only a little lower than the angels, among whom she was now eternally admitted.

Such was the opening and closing scene of wedded life to Rosalie Vane; such the commencement and end—how unlike! of one brief year. To illustrate a fate so familiar in its tragical termination, to that of the Princess Charlotte, we may, not improperly, employ the inimitable stanzas, wherein Byron commemorates and bewails the royal, though not superior sufferer:

"Wo unto us! not unto her, for she sleeps well," might the forlorn parents of the lovely Mrs. Morrison, exclaim, as even while bending over her untimely bier, they felt their temporal loss to be her eternal gain. But in spite of this consolatory persuasion, nature asserted and received her right; and childless, hopeless, and enduring—not enjoying existence, Gen. Vane and his exemplary wife, in the possession of all that splendour and luxury can bestow, continued, long after the world supposed them recovered from the disastrous blow, to sigh and pine over the extinction of their fairest hopes and fondest wishes, and to experience how long

"The heart may break—yet brokenly live on."

"And thou, too, lonely lord,
And desolate consort! vainly wert thou wed:
The husband of a year!—the father of the dead!"

And thus disconsolate did Arthur Morrison remain. Faithful to the memory of his only love, he wooed no second bride,—but expatriating himself, sought in foreign travel and distant realms, to lose, or at least, assuage the keen sense of insupportable misery, still, in spite of time or effort, brooding incessantly over the image of her, "the mourned, the lost, the loved."

Alone—and more than once—I visited the sepulchre of Rosalie Vane; and while, with a mind saddened and soberized by the affecting contemplation, I looked down upon the hallowed spot, where "rests her gentle dust,"—its fit epitaph secured to me, as already written in the exquisite old lines, which (after taking the liberty to modernize the spelling) I cite in conclusion of this Sketch from Real Life:

"This shell of stone within it keepeth,
One who died not, but sleepeth;
And in her quiet slumber, seemeth
As if of heav'n alone she dreameth.
Her form it was so fair in seeming,—
Her eyne so holy in their beaming,—
So pure her heart in every feeling,—
So high her mind in each revealing,—
A band of angels thought that she
Was one of their bright company;
And on some homeward errand driven,
Hurried her too away to heaven."

E. C. S.

"AT TWILIGHTS' HOUR."

BY THE REV. JOHN N. MAFFIT.

At twilight's hour, when dews are falling,
Shadows gathering o'er the sky;
In the stilly moments hopes arising,
Brighten in the heart—to die.

Within the bosom's temple swelling,
Feelings burn in that lone hour,—
On earthly idols fondly dwelling,
Waked by memory's magic power.

But when the soul in holy musing,
Contemplates the Christian's rest:
Seraphic joy, divine, inspiring,
Thrills the striken, wearied breast.

What glorious scenes o'er heaven are breaking,
Bursting on the ravished view,
Hopes of eternal bliss awaking
In a world forever true;

Where no twilight shadows creeping,
Dim the carnival of joy;
No sorrow there, nor change, nor weeping;
All is bliss without alloy.

At twilight's hour, when dews are falling,
Shadows gathering o'er the sky,—
In the stilly moments hopes arising,
Clus.er where our treasures lie.

On an Infant's Grave.

'Tis well, perhaps, the flower has never bloomed,
Nor burst to beauty in this vale of tears:
'Tis well, perhaps, it now lies low entombed;
It fell unsullied ere the waste of years.

Affection saw the rude approach of death,
And strove in vain to arrest the impending blow;
Maternal feeling fed the latest breath,
Which kept a spirit in this world of woe.

Ah! why should grief your hapless life consume?
And why should sorrow thus pervade your breast?
In blissful realms your darling girl shall bloom,
And wake to raptures in eternal rest.

Digitized by Google

Misadventures of a Lover.

As I was walking one day up the Strand, arm-in-arm with a friend, we met an excessively handsome young female, with whom my friend was acquainted. "Miss Jackson," said he, making a polite inclination of the head from the young lady to me. "Mr. H——," said he, with a very pretty nod towards Miss Jackson. The half-minute's conversation we had with the young lady, only served to deepen the impression her charms had made on me at the first glance. My readers know, from what I have told them before I had got this length, the remarkable facility with which I fall in love. A look, a nod, a word spoken, from an engaging female, has a dozen times over "done" for my poor heart. To be brief, I was completely smitten in this case. In parting with Miss Jackson and her mother—I ought to have mentioned before now that her mamma was with her—I inquired of my friend where they staid. "Newman street, Oxford street, but do not recollect the number," was the answer. "Are you in love? Do you mean to call?" he inquired in a half jocular tone. That will do—that's very fair," said I, assuming a little pleasantry at his queries. The conversation was dropped.

Nothing further passed that day concerning the adorable Miss Jackson. To my ineffable surprise, I next day received a card from Mrs. Jackson, inviting me to form part of a select company who were to drink tea the next afternoon at her house. My immediate inference was, that, in the interim, my friend had met with Mrs. Jackson, and the conversation turning by accident, or otherwise, on me, he had spoken favourably of me—as I may say, without incurring the imputation of egotism, he had every reason to do,—and that the invitation I received was the result. I of course heartily accepted the invitation—drank tea with Mrs. Jackson and friends—and spent a most agreeable evening. I sat opposite Miss Jackson on the occasion, and went home in a state of transport.

"I will write her," thought I; "I will propose a meeting for next Friday afternoon, (the hour, four o'clock precisely,) at Hyde Park Corner." The only hesitation I had in doing this was, that as it was dark when I went to and came from her mother's house, I did not observe the number. I concluded, however, that, as I knew the street perfectly, the letter would in all probability find her. I did write her to the effect above hinted at, and a more tender note never emanated from a lover's pen.

The same evening the twopenny-postman brought me a neatly-folded letter, the address written in a style of penmanship which seemed to me the beau ideal of lady caligraphy. I guessed the writer; she could be none other than Miss Jackson. I looked at the seal before breaking open the letter: it spoke of the nature of the contents. The motto was, "Ever thine." I opened the letter with a heart palpitating from joy. I was not disappointed; the charming creature was most propitious. Nothing, she protested, could afford her greater pleasure than to meet me at the time and place appointed. Of what bliss was the receipt of this letter productive to me! I purchased a new suit of clothes—called in the aid of the perruquier—spent hours at my toilet—(have gentlemen toilets?)—in preparing for the appointed meeting. Last, though not least, I spent no inconsiderable sum—a greater one, I can assure my readers, than my ways and means afforded—in purchasing certain trinkets from the jewellers, which I intended to present to Miss Jackson.

The long-looked-for hour came at last. I was punctual to the appointed moment. The afternoon was particularly fine: all the beau monde of London, seemed to be in Hyde Park. Four o'clock struck. I was astonished at the non-appearance of Miss Jackson. I took out my watch, looked at it, was putting it again into my fob, when a tall, stern, Cossack-looking fellow came up to me. "Pray, sir," said he, in a gruff tone, "pray, sir, is that your hand-writing?" As he uttered these words, he held a letter before my optics. I looked, as any one in my situation would have done, amazingly stupid. My first glance was directed to the stout-whiskered animal before me—my next, to the sheet which he held in his hand. Sure enough it was my letter to Miss Jackson. I at once recognized the vile penmanship—I write a miserable scrawl.

"How the deuce could this booby have come by this letter? There is something mysterious in this business. It cannot be that Miss Jackson has also——"

I was interrupted in my unpronounced ejaculations, by a "Sir, I demand an answer to my question: is that letter (holding it in my face) in your hand-writing?"

I have already said it was mine; I could not deny it; besides, I am no disciple of Ferdinand Mentez Pinto. I accordingly muttered out, in a subdued tone, "Yes, sir, it is; and pray, wherein——"

I was about to inquire what interest he could have in the matter—what possible reason he could have to be offended by it, for it was clear he was offended—when I was cut short by a tremendous application of a whip—drawn out of the whiskered-monster's pocket—to my person.

"Sir, sir, what can be the meaning of——" I essayed to speak, but my poor voice was either drowned in the crackings of the whip, or my assailant heeded it not. Never was human being more unmercifully whipped before. How many lashes I received, is and will be a mystery; but this I know, that, but for the interference of some of the more humane bystanders, I might and should have received several scores more.

Miss Jackson did not keep to her promise; indeed, after what had occurred, I deemed it fortunate she did not. I went home, fully determined to institute an action against my assailant, so soon as I could ascertain his name and address. This, I knew, I could have no difficulty in doing, as there were so many present. As to witnesses to prove the assault, I had clouds of them, whenever matters were in a sufficiently advanced state to require.

On my return home, I found the friend who had introduced me to Miss Jackson waiting for me. I mentioned to him what had occurred, and the determination to which I had come to prosecute my unknown assailant. My friend was very inquisite to know who had thus assaulted me, and what could have prompted the fellow to such a step. I told him again, as I told him before though he seemed to think I rather wanted the will than the power, that I could give him no information on either head.

Digitized by Google

"Can you not, at any rate," said he, "give me some description of the personal appearance of your assailant?" I answered in the affirmative.

"Well, let me hear all you can communicate on the subject." I described the brute as well as I could.

"Oh! I know who it is! It is Mr. Jackson!" he exclaimed, after a moment's hesitation.

"Mr. Jackson! Impossible! Did you not tell me that Miss Jackson's father was dead, and that she never had a brother?"

"It is another Mr. Jackson," said my friend; one who lives in the same street. Do you not recollect having seen a Mrs. Jackson, a beautiful woman, among those present at Miss Jackson's mother's house? Her husband would have been present also, but was out of town that day!"

I did not recollect having seen a newly-married lady at Mrs. Jackson's on the evening in question. I mentioned this to my friend.

"But what possible ground of offence could you have given to her husband?" inquired my friend.

"None in the world that I know of," answered I. "I never before saw the man in my life; his wife I have never seen before or since that evening."

"The matter is certainly involved in much mystery. Did he say nothing when committing the assault, that could have led to infer the cause of his displeasure? Did you not write to his wife?—for if you did, however innocently, a jealous husband would construe an epistle from a man to his wife, into something bad."

"I never in my life penned a syllable to his or any other person's wife; but I will confess to you that I did write Miss Jackson, to whom you introduced me; and from the hasty glance I gave the letter which my assailant held in his hand, it is the identical one I addressed to her. How he came by that letter, is to me as mysterous as any of the countless incomprehensibilities in nature."

"What was the nature of your note to Miss Jackson, if it be fair to ask such a question?" said my friend.

"It was written in very general terms. I merely, as I suppose is common in all correspondence between the sexes, professed a fervent, an immutable, an eternal attachment to her—an attachment formed from what I had seen of her on the evening and at the party referred to, and concluding by urgently begging the favour of a meeting with her, next afternoon, at a given hour, at Hyde Park Corner."

"I have it!—I have it!" exclaimed my friend, Archimedes-like. "The letter you intended for Miss Jackson, has by mistake gone to Mrs. Jackson; and no wonder that such an epistle should have kindled suspicions in the husband's breast—no wonder that he chastised you as he did."

The hypothesis struck me as probable, though I could not exactly see how the mis-sending of the letter should have occurred.

"I will go to Mr. Jackson's," said my friend, and learn all the particulars from him."

He departed at that moment—he had not far to go; he returned in an hour afterwards, informed me his conjecture was quite right, and that he learned from Mr. J. the whole details of the awkward business.

The story may be told in a few words. The two Jacksons, as formerly mentioned, resided in the same street. The right house had no brass plate, with the name inscribed on the door; the wrong one had. Being ignorant of the number of the right house, I could not of course write it on the back of my letter. The postman, in these circumstances, very naturally delivered the letter at the wrong place. I scrawl a wretched indistinct hand; so that, when the letter arrived, Miss was read Mrs. The latter lady probably wishing to pass, in the estimation of her husband, for a woman of surpassing rectitude, showed him my letter, instead of consigning it, as she ought, to the flames.

"Why Charlotte, my dear," said the husband, "if ever villain deserved chastisement, this rascal does. You only do as I desire you—and if I don't give it him in style!"

Mrs. Jackson, being newly married, expressed her readiness to do any thing her husband desired her. "Augustus," said he, "you know, dear, your will is always a law with me."

"Well," says he, "as Solomon enjoins us to answer a fool according to his folly, you shall answer this villain according to his villainy. You will immediately write him, declaring that he made an indelible impression on your heart when you saw him at the party to which he refers, and acquiescing in his proposal for a meeting at Hyde Park Corner."

She did as she was bid. I, never having seen Miss Jackson's hand-writing, was of course easily deceived. I was in perfect raptures with the supposed success of my proposal for a meeting. The reader is already informed how transitory my joy was. I never saw Miss Jackson after this; I never wished to see her; I could not, after what had occurred, again look her in the face.

It was long before I recovered from the effects of this new shock. I had well nigh determined never again to speak to womankind; but a little reflection served to convince me, that, constituted as society was, that was impossible, unless I turned hermit.

It is the error of a great many, even of those who are considered sensible men, that they run from one extreme to another. This was the next error I committed in love matters. I resolved, as the best way of avoiding the recurrence of such mishaps as I have already encountered, to dispense with all and every thing in the shape of courtship, or lovemaking, and, by means of an advertisement, get married at once. The idea struck me as the happy one. I resolved to put it into effect without any unnecessary loss of time. Accordingly, taking my pen and paper, I that moment drew up the following advertisement, and caused it to be published in the Morning Herald—that journal being then, as I believe it is still, the medium most generally made use of for sending forth such notices to the fair world:—

Digitized by Google

"Matrimony.—Circumstances which it is unnecessary here to detail, having prevented the advertiser from mingling much in female society, he takes this opportunity of appealing to the heart, and soliciting the hand, of any young lady, who, like himself, possesses a good temper, and a disposition to be happy. If the partiality of private friendship has not exaggerated his personal appearance, he flatters himself that no lady, however fastidious in taste, will be dissatisfied with him on that score. As regards his principles and disposition, he takes on himself to say—though the statement would doubtless come with a better grace from another—that the former are perfectly unexceptionable, and the latter of the most amiable and affectionate kind. In fine, at the risk of being thought egotistical by those who know him not, the advertiser ventures to say, that it is extremely seldom that any young lady desirous of entering the matrimonial state—that state especially appointed by the Deity himself for the happiness of his creatures—has such an opportunity presented her. The strictest confidence may be relied on, on the advertiser's part, and he expects the same confidence on that of any female making application. It is hoped no male or female will exhibit any impertinent curiosity on the occasion. Address A. B. 23 Fetter Lane, Fleet street. No unpaid letters will be received."

At this time I lodged with an old woman, whose house I had entered eight days before. I mentioned to her, on sending the advertisement to the Herald office, that I expected early next day several letters, desiring her to receive such as should come, and bring them up stairs. My landlady nodded assent. Just as eleven o'clock forenoon chimed on St. Dunstan's, I heard a rap at the door. On my landlady opening it, a thickly-spoken lad inquired if there were any A. B.'s within. "A. B.! no!—there's no A. B. nor B. C. here!" said the old woman, somewhat ill-naturedly. "Bring the letter to me! bring the letter to me!" cried I, popping my head a little bit down stairs. My landlady brought the epistle up. I forgot to apprise her on the previous evening, that the letters I expected would be mostly, if not altogether, for a certain reason, addressed to A. B. I then repeated my request that all letters so addressed should be brought to me immediately. She had scarcely got down stairs, and shut the outer door, when another knock was heard. It was another A. B. letter, which of course was directly brought up stairs to me. In short, for an hour after, epistles in answer to my advertisement were brought up at the rate of one per minute; in one instance two arrived at once. By the time my landlady had brought me up twelve or fourteen, she evidently began to get surprised and alarmed at the number of A. B. letters; by the time she had delivered the twentieth—for it will be observed that she had hardly got down stairs when there was some new bearer of an A. B. epistle rapping at the door—by the time, I say, she had delivered the twentieth, the good old woman got fairly out of breath. When she came the length of No. 30, she began to think her best way would be to bring up several at a time, which would of course lessen the frequency of her up-stair journeys. By the time the fortieth epistle arrived, she commenced the system of bringing up six at once. By this time I myself had become dreadfully alarmed. I began to think I had done some excessively foolish action, and that surely all the unmarried ladies in London had of a sudden become correspondents of mine. I grew sick of love epistles. I could almost have wished both them and their fair inditers at the antipodes. "Here is too much of a good thing," said I emphatically to myself. While in this agony of uneasiness at the Mont Blanc of letters piled up on the table before me, there was a rather long interim between the last and next epistolary delivery. This gave birth to the fond hope that there would be few if any more letters. Foolish hope!—short lived delusion! The hope—the delusion, had hardly a moment's existence, when it vanished by the sound of my landlady's footsteps on another journey up stairs. She entered my apartment. "Here, sir," said she, throwing down on the table ten more A. B. letters, "here, sir; and if there come any more A. B.'s you must come down and fetch them up yourself, or get somebody else to do it for you."

In ten minutes thereafter I went down stairs, and to my ineffable satisfaction found there was only one new arrival. I was never more thankful in my life. I returned to my own apartment, and sat me down to examine the contents of the heap of epistles before me—for hitherto they had poured in so fast on me, that it required all my activity to receive them and lay them on the table, instead of reading them. An occasional stray one continued to drop in on me until nine o'clock post meridian. Not one of these late ones, however, was opened by me. I chucked them into the fire on their receipt, concluding that they could not be the offspring of true, ardent love, as that is always prompt in its motions.

Well, I at length got to the most important part of the business—that of reading the letters, and deciding as to the claims of their respective authors. O how my heart palpitated as I sat down to the task! I commenced. Though the inditers of all professed a boundless attachment to me, there were great differences in the contents of the letters. The first epistle I read, augured very ill indeed. The writer made sundry inquiries about my finances, my prospects in life, the rank of my relations, &c. which I assuredly did not like. I tossed her letter at once into the fire. The second epistle unfolded a candidate for matrimonial bliss who spoke a great deal touching the propriety, necessity indeed, of being regularly asked in church before marriage, and of having, in the event of making a bargain, a respectable wedding. "Bargain!" I hated the word. It imported something too sordid for me. The flourish about a respectable wedding I concluded to mean, if translated into plain English, that the fair scribe had a sheal of acquaintances—which I abhor in a wife. The third lady ran to the opposite extreme. She proposed an instantaneous elopement, lest her brother should hear of the thing, and by that means prevent the marriage.—"Elopement!" Brother!" How the words grated on my ears!

Digitized by Google

It would be endless, and would, besides, answer no good purpose, to specify the objectionable matter I discovered in every intervening letter until I came to the twenty-fourth. It was just the thing. Its contents were as much to my mind as if I myself had guided the pen of the lovely writer. Here it is:—

"My Dear Sir—Though as yet personally unknown to you, I hope I am justified—I am sure my own feelings justify me—in using the above affectionate epithet. I have read your intimation in the Herald of this morning; and never, I assure you, did human composition make such an impression on my mind: it went directly to my heart, from which I know it will never depart. My dearest unknown, but I trust destined husband, believe me when I say that your advertisement has led me to conceive of you as the beau ideal of all that a lover or husband should be. Words cannot express my admiration of your generosity and disinterestedness. You speak not, you give not the most distant hint of a love of money. How unlike the infinite majority of those who advertise for wives! But though money seems to be no object with you, I hope it will prove no objection, other matters being to your mind. I have a handsome competency solely at my disposal; for indeed I have no near relatives in Europe to interfere, either directly or indirectly, with me or mine. My fortune shall be the more readily laid at your feet, that it is moral worth and not sordid pelf of which you are in quest. Of my personal appearance, I will not speak, farther than to express a hope that it will not be offensive. My age, not being matter of opinion but fact, I may mention is twenty. I am morally certain, from the spirit that manifestly prompted your advertisement, that our dispositions are similar; and that, as far as human eye can see, our union, if it be effected, which I hope and pray it will, will prove one of unusual happiness to both. May I, my dear sir, have the felicity of an interview? If vouchsafed to me, be so kind as to write me immediately, when I will appoint such time and place for our meeting as will be most likely to secure us against the intrusion of any third party. Waiting with breathless anxiety your answer, I remain, my dear sir, yours, most affectionately. C. D.

"P. S.—Please direct C. D. 27 Paul street, Tottenham-Court road."

I was—who in my situation would not have been?—in raptures with this letter. It was just the thing,—there was intellect in it; there was judgment in it; there was affection in it.

"Shall I open and peruse any more of the mountain of epistles lying before me in beautiful chaos?" I asked myself this question. I hesitated a moment as to whether I ought to open more of the A. B. letters or not. My determination was, after a few moments' consideration, to read no more. Into the grate, therefore, I chucked the whole lot; and what a sublime and brilliant blaze they made!

In answer to Miss C. D. I wrote a most affectionate and sentimental letter. It is too long, and withal of too tender and delicate a nature, to be inserted here. It will suffice the reader to be informed, that I assured her, of all the numerous candidates who had made application to me in consequence of my advertisement, there was none but herself who came up to my conceptions of what a wife ought to be. I protested that the beauty and inestimable worth of her mind were established in her letter, beyond the power of mortal to controvert, and that nothing was so desirable to me as an early interview.

It is incredible how soon I received an answer. And how propitious! Miss C. D. fully responded to all I had said touching the peril of delays. She burned with an impatience to see me, which she declared must be greater than mine, for an interview with her. In short, she forthwith appointed a meeting;—the place, a house she described in a lane off Holborn; the time, that evening at five o'clock precisely.

What could be more satisfactory. What more soul-exhilirating than this! The appointed hour for the interview approached. Properly brushed up for the occasion, I went to No. 33 —— lane, Holborn. Tremulously—for in all such cases, I suppose, persons feel a certain degree of tremor—tremulously I lifted and let fall the knocker of the door. A very polite maid, as I had been made to expect, opened the door in an instant. "Is Miss Young within?" I inquired. "Yes sir; walk up stairs, if you please," said the "she domestic," simperingly.

The damsel, with all apparent respect, conducted me up one pair of stairs, and then showed me into an elegantly furnished apartment. "Miss Young will be here presently, sir," said the maid, as she held the door in her hand when quitting the room. She disappeared. The door was shut—I was left alone. That was an epoch in my history. The intensity of my anxiety to see my future partner in life, made by pedestals quiver beneath me; my whole frame shook. In about half a minute I heard footsteps approaching. In a second more, the handle of the door was lifted. I sprang to the door, and ere it was well opened, I seized in my arms, and most cordially embraced, the lady who was making her appearance. In the warmth and fervency with which I embraced Miss Young, my future wife, I actually lifted her off her feet, and carried her several yards towards the centre of the apartment. She at first uttered a wild shriek, and then set up, as loudly as her lungs (which were certainly of the Stentorian cast) would permit, a frightful yell of "Murder! Murder!"

"My dear Miss C. D." said I, "I am A. B.; don't be alarmed." The only answer she made was, a bound towards the poker, which she seized and hurled at my head with tremendous force. That the article did not come in terrible contact with my cranium, was more a matter of miracle than any thing else. I was so overwhelmed with astonishment at this singular circumstance, that I stood for some moments in the centre of the floor as motionless as the dome of St. Paul's. While thus standing a perfect personification of stuperfaction, in rushed, "like a torrent down upon the vale," half a dozen young fellows, exclaiming in discordant chorus, "What's the matter? What's the matter?" These harsh sounds, bellowed out by the idiots, were answered by the exclamation, that I had committed a gross assault as well as insult. "Take him into custody!" shouted one and all of the six ruffian intruders. I declared most vehemently my innocence, and that nothing in the world could have been farther from my intention than the perpetration of any insult or crime.

Digitized by Google

"What, then, brought you here? and what was the cause of the assault on this lady?" interrogated one of the notable blockheads.

I was silent, and looked, I have been since informed, remarkably stupid.

"Come, sir, answer, otherwise we hand you over to the authorities," said one Old Bailey-looking idiot.

"Sir—Gentlemen—Sir—Gentlemen," I was stammering out, not having the most distant conception of what I was going to say, when, observing that the door was fortunately open, I bolted out of the apartment, rushed down stairs, and, getting to the street, bounded away with a rapidity to which the heels of few men would be equal.

I got home, packed up my things, cleared scores with my landlady, and, ere a couple of hours, procured new lodgings. I was afraid of farther annoyances, if I vegetated any longer at No. 23 Fetter lane.

I will not attempt to describe my feelings at the issue of this adventure. During the whole of that night I was in the dark as to the business. Next day I made inquiries indirectly as to the mysterious affair, when I learned that the half dozen scoundrels who rushed into the room, had, on seeing my advertisement in the Herald, entered into a conspiracy together to hoax the "wight" as they had the audacity to call me; that one of six who had a sister—a lady I suppose she would call herself—as unprincipled as himself, got her to write to his dictation.

I will advertise no more. I have made up my mind to retire to some secluded spot, some "boundless contiguity of shade," if it can be had, where I will never more, or at least but seldom, see unmarried women. I am now convinced that all and every attempt at forming a matrimonial alliance would issue so unfortunately as to hold me up anew to the ridicule of the world; so convinced, I say, am I now of this, that all the logic in the world would not expel the persuasion from my mind.

An Irish Definition of "the Premier."—"But sure," added a third, "sure, didn't the Prime Ear himself lay it all out before the parleymint!" "What Prime Ear are you talking about, man dear?" said Paddy, rather testily. "Well, and who is the Prime Ear of his Majesty, and no less. Is that satisfaction for you, eh?" "Well, and who is the Prime Ear?" "Why, the Prime Ear of his Majesty, I towld you before. You see, he is the one that hears of every thing that is to be done for the whole impire in partic'lar; and bekase he hears of everything, thats the rayson he is called the Prime Ear,—and a good rayson it is."—Lover's Legends, &c. of Ireland, Second Series.

THE SCAR OF LEXINGTON.

BY MISS H. F. GOULD.

With cherub smile, the prattling boy,
Who on the veteran's breast reclines,
Has thrown aside his favorite toy!
And round his gentle finger twines
Those scattered locks, that with the night
Of four score years are snowy white
And, as the scar arrests his view,
He cries, 'grand pa, who wounded you!'

'My child, 'tis five and fifty years,
This very day, this very hour,
Since from a scene of blood and tears,
Where valor fell by hostile power—
I saw retire the setting sun,
Behind the hills of Lexington;
While pale and lifeless on the plain
My brother lay, for freedom slain.

And ere that fight—the first that spoke
In thunder to our land—was o'er,
Amidst the clouds of fire and smoke,
I felt my garments wet with gore!
'Tis since that dread and wild affray,
That trying, dark, eventful day,
From this calm April eve so far,
I wear upon my cheek this scar.

When thou to manhood shalt be grown,
And I am gone in dust to sleep,
May freedom's rights be still thine own.
And thou and thine in quiet reap,
The unblighted produce of the toil,
In which my blood bedewed the soil;
And while those fruits thou shalt enjoy,
Bethink thee of this scar, my boy!

But should thy country's voice be heard,
To bid her children fly to arms,
Gird on thy grandsire's trusty sword;
And, undismayed by war's alarms,
Remember on the battle field,
I made the hand of God my shield!
And, be thou spared like me to tell,
What bore me up, while others fell.

LOVE AND DEATH.

Young Love and Death, by chance one night,
Stopped at a hut together,
While raged the storm, with lurid light,
To shelter from the weather:
Love gave the host, with strict behest,
His darts to keep till morning;
Death, too, gave his, with looks—stern guest!—
Of future ills a warning.

Each to his chamber then retired:
But when the sun was peeping,
The Travellers of the host required
Their charge, left in his keeping:
The host complied; but, as we're told,
Too fatally mistaking,
Gave Death Love's arrows tipped with gold.
Young Love in turn Death's taking.

Whichever course the archers went,
They caused a sad confession!
Old age, on whom Death's aim was bent,
Felt playful Love's delusion;
While victims maids and youths became,
Where luckless Cupid wanders!
Young hearts drooped in a blighted frame,
And passion's bliss was squandered!

Love soon his fellow-traveller met,
And straight, with sobs and sighing,
Complained that all he'd aimed at yet
Were either dead or dying!
Said Death, "Dry up your tears, poor boy!
Take back your own bright quiver,
And give me mine." Love did with joy—
They parted then for ever!

Digitized by Google

A PASSAGE IN THE LIFE OF TEDDY O'DONOHU.

It was about a year after our revolution that Sergeant Teddy O'Donohu arrived in the town of Bergen.

Now the sergeant was as brave a bandy-legged little man as ever cheered a soldier on to battle. He was the son of old Michael O'Donohu, the great prize fighter from Limerick, but after a while old Michael was gathered to his fathers, and his son Teddy reigned in his stead. The patrimony was small and caused no litigation, consisting merely of an old pair of cast-off galligaskins, most carefully patched; a bountiful stock of impudence, and a strong, natural hankering after a canteen of whiskey, which last inclination was a sort of heirloom in the family, and descending to Teddy in a direct line from both father and mother, was strong in proportion; so that by the time he had reached the age of fifteen, sorrow a boy was there in the whole country round, could judge of the merits of a small jug of whiskey, equal to Teddy O'Donohu.

Shortly after the death of his father, he had crossed over to America, and during the war had enlisted on the side of congress, with the determination of seeking his fortune; but after having spent several years in the search, and during the whole war, having only arrived at a sergeant's halberd, he came to the conclusion that the fortune which belonged to him, was scarcely worth having, and sagely determined to give up the pursuit.

Setting out with this wise resolution, from that time the sergeant had never been known to trouble his head about the fortune; and if he could only contrive to assemble with three or four of his boon-companions over a canteen of whiskey, and relate the exploits performed by himself during the war, the sergeant was in his glory. He was excellent, also, in running up scores in the different bar-rooms in the neighbourhood, and there was not a tavern within ten miles of his residence, (that is of the place where he was most frequently seen,) but could point out a score chalked up as long as your arm, while the initials, T. O'D., very conspicuously brought up the rear.

But although the sergeant was thus villainously out of credit with the landlords, yet the scores contrived to wax larger and larger; for, to tell the truth, he had a mighty winning way with him, and many were the sly glasses handed to him with a smile while the husbands were absent, attending to their out-door concerns. And the women, heaven bless them, all thought it mighty hard that the evil of an empty stomach should be added to that of empty pockets, which it was already well known, pressed heavily upon the sergeant; so that never a day passed without his having received his full compliment of whiskey, and retiring to bed in what he termed "glorious case," but what another would call, pretty considerably well fuddled.

But to proceed to my narrative. It was upon a stormy evening, not very long after the revolution, that the inhabitants of the only inn in the little town of Bergen, had gathered around a cheerful fire, which was blazing in the huge chimney-place: the rain poured in torrents, the landlord edged his chair nearer to the fire, while gradually his head and shoulders settled down into the cushion formed by his ponderous abdomen. The landlady was busily engaged in plying her knitting-needle. A large gray cat was lolling in the ashes at their feet, with all that air of self-satisfaction which denotes a pampered favourite, occasionally breaking the silence by a lazy good-natured purr. Still the wind roared on as if the spirits of the storm had been let loose, and were bursting over the earth in fierce and joyous revelry; for a few moments it would hush up, and then again it howled forth like the yell of some tortured demon, and with a violence that shook the whole building to the foundation.

It was during one of these intervals that a tremendous knocking was heard at the door.

"Mynheer, dere ish somebody vot knocksh," screamed the landlady.

"Yaw," drawled the landlord, as his head and shoulders slowly emerged from the huge abyss of his portentous stomach.

Rap, rap, rap, rap, again thundered at the door.

"Dere ish somebody vot ish hurried;" said the landlord, scratching his head, but without moving from his chair.

Rap, rap, rap.

"Mein heavens! dere ish blenty of time," shouted the Dutchman, now springing to his feet and moving towards the door; for the last application was made with a vehemence that made the whole building ring, and threatened to dash the door from its hinges.

But the motions of great bodies are slow, and the landlord was not an exception to the general rule, for ere he had reached more than half way across the room, rap, rap, rap, was again heard, and the door flew open before the energetic blows of the traveller; and dripping with rain, he burst into the room.

A leather military cap was cocked sideways upon a mop of carrotty hair, and was intended to screen a face, which deep and incessant potations had covered with a continual blush; an old military undress coat was buttoned tightly over his broad, brawny shoulders, and two short, thick, bandy-legs were almost lost in a capacious pair of blue kersey pantaloons, considerably the worse for wear. In fine, it was our friend, Sergeant Teddy O'Donohu, who had been thus scurvily treated, and who now stalked up to the landlord with all the fury of a mad bull.

"A word with ye, you ould blackguard. What is it ye mane, by kapein' a gintleman, and that's meself, a drippin' and a drownin' in sich a rain like this; especially when he's willin' to pay for all that he calls for? If you had your desarts, you'd nivir been born, you ould thief you!"

For a long time the sergeant continued furious, paying no attention either to the apologies or pacific speeches of the landlord; but after railing and abusing until completely out of breath, he at last consented to listen to reason, and in a short time peace was restored—his clothes were dried, and long ere bed-time the sergeant was perfectly at his ease. He joked with the bar-maid, who had come simpering in with a large jug of home-brewed—he chuckled the landlady under the chin—and he drank glass for glass with the landlord—although, now and then, the perplexing thought would come over him, "How is all this to be paid for in the mornin'?" But as it was one of his maxims never to puzzle his brains about subjects which it was not easy to elucidate, he determined to let the morning take care of itself, and continued drinking for the rest of the evening, without troubling his head about the matter. It was late in the night when they had finished the jug; and the landlord, taking up the light, led the way, while the sergeant reeled after him to his bed-room.

Digitized by Google

It was a dull dingy-looking room; on one side was nailed a shelf, upon which were standing two large, dirty glass-rummers, probably left there by the last tenant; in one corner was placed a broad, wooden table, covered with crumbs of bread and the pieces of a broken pipe; and in the opposite corner was resting a dirty-looking bed, the intended resting-place of the sergeant. At its foot was a large wooden chest, probably intended as the receptacle for the clothes of the inmates; and in front of a fire-place, filled with ashes and burnt cinders, was standing a small oaken settee, which completed the furniture of the apartment.

But neither the disarray of his room nor the slovenliness of his bed, troubled the sergeant; he threw off his clothes upon the lid of the chest, tumbled upon the bed, and the music of his nose soon bore ample testimony to the soundness of his slumbers. How long he slept he knew not, but he was at length awakened by a shrill ringing laugh which burst in upon his ear, and seemed to proceed from the opposite side of the room. The sergeant started up in the bed, and rubbed his eyes. The candle, which was standing upon the table, had burnt nearly to the socket, while a tall, black cap of snuff was hanging upon the end of the wick, and throwing a dim, melancholy light through the chamber. The sergeant looked around the room, put seeing nothing, was again yielding to his soporiferous feelings—when chuckle, chuckle, chuckle, again sounded in his ears.

Again he started up in his bed; and now in front of him upon the floor he saw a little, broad-sterned, Dutch-looking figure, scarce a foot high, with an immense cocked-hat perched upon the top of his head, skipping up and down the room with all the agility of a Parisian rope-dancer. At last he paused opposite the sergeant, his eyes began to twinkle and twinkle, his broad little mouth began to spread——it opened—and chuckle, chuckle, chuckle, came pouring out with a vivacity that fairly caused his little fat body to quiver.

"Is it awake that I am?" exclaimed the sergeant, rubbing his eyes with one hand, and raking his head with the five prongs of the other.

Again the eyes of the little man began to twinkle, again his mouth opened, and chuckle, chuckle, chuckle, burst forth.

Now, the sergeant, who was a brave man, and feared nothing, earthly or unearthly, began to wax wroth at the repeated chuckle of his jolly little room-mate; to be awakened from a sound sleep was bad enough, but to be laughed at into the bargain—it was intolerable, and the sergeant was not the man to put up with it; his hair bristled up with anger, and the carbuncles on his nose grew fiery red. But as he was scrupulously honourable in all his movements, he determined, before proceeding to extremities, to afford his little room-mate an opportunity of exculpating himself; and knowing that the only method of holding a conversation with a ghost or hobgoblin, or any animal of that species, was to open the way, he accordingly commenced:

"Let me tell you, ould gintleman, that I look upon this conduct of yours as mighty improper, not to say ungintlemanly."

Chuckle, chuckle, chuckle, again burst from the lips of the little man, as he threw himself upon the floor, unable to support himself under the convulsive bursts of merriment which threatened to shake to pieces his oily little carcass.

"It's meself that will tache you manners, and will give you a little corriction that will be highly binificial to yoursilf and improvin' to your iddication," said the sergeant, as he stepped from the bed to seize upon his little friend, but he was gone.

Chuckle, chuckle, chuckle, rattled a voice from the opposite side of the room, and, turning around, the sergeant beheld his fat little acquaintance standing with his arms akimbo, nearly splitting his sides with laughter, while the tears were pouring in small rivulets down his oyster-like cheeks.

The sergeant waxed furious at being thus baffled by a man of such insignificant proportions, and commenced a hot pursuit around the room, but the little fellow was too nimble for him; at one time he was in front of him, at another he was behind him; he skipped from the floor to the bed, from the bed to the table, from the table to the shelf, and as the sergeant reeled after him he only succeeded in scraping the skin from his limbs, and bringing his nose violently in contact with the wall, all which he set down to the account of the little man—to be wiped off when he should succeed in capturing him. At last he had completely cornered him, there appeared no way of escape, he was sure of him, he balanced himself steadily upon his legs, and bringing his eyes to bear upon him, he made a plunge at him with all his force; but again the little man eluded his grasp, and darted between his legs, while the head of the sergeant came in contact with the wall with all the force of a battering-ram. Chuckle, chuckle, chuckle, again rung in his ear, and ere he had time to recover himself the little man bounced upon his back and clasped his arms around his throat.

"Ah, ha! have I caught you at last," shouted the sergeant; "but aisy, now; you're chokin' me, you divil; be aisy; its ungintlemanly."

Chuckle, chuckle, chuckle, again pealed out from the mouth of his rider.

"Is it laughing you are? by my soul, it's

Digitized by Google

meilf that will put a stop to that," exclaimed the sergeant, seizing hold upon the arms that encompassed his neck.

But the arms were immoveable, and it was in vain that he tugged and tugged; the little man grew peevish, and at last, downright angry, and commencnd hammering with his heels into the sides of the sergeant until he fairly roared.

"Let loose your grip, ould gintleman," exclaimed he, "and the bating that I'll give you will be nothing to the one that I intinded for you at first."

But the little man liked not the terms, and still continued his hold upon his neck, while thump, thump, still rattled his heels against the ribs of the sergeant. The sergeant waxed furious, and the legs waxed vigorous, as they flew to their full stretch from beneath the little broad-tailed coat, and were brought back into the sides of the soldier with a violence that nearly annihilated him, and completely baffled all his attempts to keep count of the score which was thus rapidly running up on his ribs.

The face of the Irishman grew black with passion, and he poured forth volleys of oaths, with a most impartial indifference both as regards quantity and quality, but they sufficed not, for his rider still maintained his position, plying his legs as briskly as ever.

Now the sergeant had a stock of patience, but it was a small one, and soon exhausted, and he determined to get rid of his tormentor at all hazards.

He writhed and he twisted, he bounced about the room, he rolled upon the floor, he dashed his back against the wall, but in vain; his little friend was too quick for him; when he rolled upon the floor he was standing by his head, waiting for him to get up, and when he dashed himself against the wall, he was by his side, until he had got through, and nearly broken his bones by this manœuvre; but, no sooner had he finished, than he was again upon his back, plying his heels as vigorously as ever, while the chuckel again grated in the ear of the discomfitted Irishman.

At last the sergeant, finding that the fate of the war was against him, determined to try the effect of expostulation.

"I'd like to ax you a question, you blackguard—is it gintlemanly in you to kape hammerin' an hammerin' in my ribs in sich a manner, and having no more regard to my convanience than if meilf was an empty rum-puncheon? And now let me tell you, that it's perfectly unplisant, and altogether improper, to say the laste of it."

Again the hearty chuckle of the little man announced his enjoyment of the prank, while his heels worked away more vigorously than ever.

"Aisy now, ould gintleman; for the divil a rib will there be lift, if I'm to be straddled and hammered at sich a rate till mornin'. Whist! a word in your ear," said he, with a winning air, and laying his finger along the side of his nose: "Isn't it a compromise that we might make, that's honourable to both, and disgraceful to nather?"

The little man again chuckled, and opening his mouth for the first time, condescended to speak: "Sergeant O'Donohu."

"Here," shouted the sergeant, as his military habits were, for a moment, revived by this call upon his name.

"I know that very well," returned the little man; "here you are, and here you are likely to remain, unless we can agree upon the terms of the compromise."

"Is it the terms? oh, iny thing."

"Well, then, as regards the beating with which you threatened me?"

"Was I sich a feol as threaten that?"

"You most certainly did."

"Och! it's mistaken that ye are, but nivir mind, we'll say nothing more about that; and now my little fellow, jist have the goodness to get off my shoulders."

"Stop, stop," quoth the little man, "not so fast; what pledge am I to have that you will keep to the terms?"

"The word of a soldier and a gintleman."

"Enough; honour is a thing I respect," answered the little man, "and now sergeant, bend down, so that I may get from your shoulders without injuring my limbs, and we'll seal the compact over a bottle of whiskey."

"Och, you're a beauty," shouted the delighted sergeant. "I knowed by the smell of your breath, that the whiskey you've been raised on is iligant. But methinks, my little fellow, that you were so mighty spry a short time ago, it could not trouble you much to git off my shoulders in the same way that you got on."

"Silence!" retorted the other, "that's my business."

"Divil a word will I spake," rejoined the sergeant, as the little man stepped from his shoulders, and bounded upon the table.

Here he paced up and down for some time, until the Irishman, who grew alarmed for his whiskey, thought it best to drop him a slight hint on the subject.

"I should not like to mintion the whiskey which we were spakin' about," said he bowing low, and laying his hand upon his heart, "but honour——."

"Oh, honour bright," answered the other, "it shall be paid;" and, fumbling in his coat-pocket, he drew out a small bottle, which might contain about as much as would fill a moderate-sized wine-glass. "Bring me those two glasses. Ah! ha! sergeant, we'll have a night of it," drawing the cork from the mouth of the flask.

Just then the sergeant, who had been eyeing the size of the flask with a very doubting look, stretched out his glass: "To help company first is manners," said he; "so, if you plase, I'll drink first, especially as that flask happens to be most particularly small."

Again the little man chuckled. "Small, sergeant; why it holds ten gallons."

"Tin gallons! niver."

"Do you doubt my veracity?" quoth the little man, bristling up.

"Doubt your voracity; divil a bit; divil a man that ever laid eyes upon that fat, round stomach of yours would be apt to do that."

"You are growing personal, sergeant," exclaimed the other, growing red in the face; "take care, or you will lose your whiskey."

Digitized by Google

"It was altogether unitintional, I assure you," apologized the sergeant; "but about that same whiskey. Is it tin gallans that there is?"

"You shall see," said the little man, who was as placable as he was quick-tempered; "hold out your glass."

The sergeant reached it out, and the other poured and poured, until the large rummer was filled to the brim, and still the quantity in the bottle appeared undiminished.

"It's a jewell, that bottle of yours," said the sergeant, eyeing it wistfully.

"It is, indeed, sergeant."

"And the whiskey, it's mighty powerful and intertanin' to the insides."

"It was called excellent at the place from whence it came," answered the little man.

"You may say that, but where did it come from? for if I may believe my own eyes, it come from no place at all."

"Ah! that's a secret," answered the little man, laying his finger against the end of his nose, with a very quizzical look; and only known to the initiated."

"The initiated, ph——w, I smell brimstone," retorted the sergeant, shoving back the oaken settle upon which he had seated himself, and feeling for his rosary; for, though a staunch toper, and not particular about his company, he was yet too good a catholic to enter into any compact that might endanger the forlorn hope which he yet entertained of sneaking through purgatory, without attracting more attention to himself than was absolutely necessary.

But at this motion the little man grew fidgety; "None of that, sergeant, none of that," said he, "it's uncivil, and I'll not submit to it; but come, fill your glass, an empty glass destroys fellowship."

"Might I take the liberty of asking your name?" said the sergeant, filling his glass.

"Ah, that, too, is a secret," said the little man, as his eyes began to twinkle, and a smothered chuckle rattled in his throat.

"Well, then, if I might make bould to reckon on sich a subject, your name is———."

"What?" asked the other.

"No offence, I hope?"

"None in the world."

"Why, thin, you are most commonly known by the name of Ould Nick," answered the sergeant.

"You have hit it exactly."

"And now sergeant, that you have discovered who I am, will you tell me what do you think of me? for I hear that some folks have slandered me, representing me as a crusty, ill-natured old fellow, who is continually getting his neighbours into trouble, and in fact, heaping upon my shoulders the accumulated villanies of every rascal that ever breathed."

"The blackguards!" ejaculated the sergeant.

"But, tell me, sergeant, what is your opinion of me?"

"Is it my opinion? Why then it is, that you are a divelish fine ould boy, and kape most excellent whiskey in that little bottle of yours. But, I say, Mr. Divil, none of your tricks; none of your compacts; no clawing hold of the soul, I'll not stand that."

"Oh, by no means," returned the other, bowing low; "honour! sergeant, honour! but still I should like to see a specimen of your hand-writing; suppose you merely write your name upon this piece of paper," said he, reaching out a long roll of paper, covered with cabalistical characters.

"On that paper? divil a particle of it," answered the Irishman, who strongly suspected a snare.

"Well, then, try on this parchment," said the little man, smiling.

"Divil a letter."

"Then, you'll not sign it?"

"Divil a bit."

"And the whiskey."

'It's beautiful."

"You will please to hand me the rhino for what you have already drunk."

"Is it the mony you mane?" asked the sergeant.

"Exactly," was the laconic reply.

Now the little man well knew that deuse a copper was there in the sergeant's pocket, but to tell the truth he was not more fully aware of this than the sergeant himself; however he boldly walked up to the chest and commenced fumbling over and over the pockets, which had been fumbled and fumbled a hundred times before, and with like success; the perspiration stood in large drops upon his forehead, for he now began to tremble for the safety of his soul, but still he ransacked in the deep abyss, for he well knew that it could not want much of daylight, and could he but keep the devil at bay till then, he might not only save his soul, but cheat him out of the pay for his whiskey into the bargain. But the little man seemed to know this too, for he grew impatient.

"I'm a little pressed for time and will trouble you for that money as quick as convenient," said he, at the same time extending his hand.

"Och, its funnin' you are," answered the sergeant, with a coaxing air, "for divil a copper has seen the inside of my pocket for this many a long day."

"Then you'll sign the paper," said the little man, with a winning smile, at the same time extending to him a small steel pen.

"That's perfectly impossible," returned the sergeant

"Then I am to understand that you will neither sign nor pay?"

"That's it exactly."

"Then, here's my respect to you," said he, and seizing the sergeant by the nose, he wrung it until it fairly hissed; he sprung to the floor, dragging the body of the sergeant at his heels; he raced round and round the room; he battered the body of the sergeant against the wall; at one time his crooked legs were scraping against the chimney corner, the next they rattled against the table; still the little man raced on until fairly out of breath, and until every limb of the yelling sergeant bore testimony to the good will of his little friend; at last the cock crowed.

"Whiz! I'm off," shouted the little man; "but you'll go along, sergeant," and darting to the fireplace, he flew up the chimney, still pulling the unfortunate sergeant by the nose; but here his broad shoulder befriended him, for tho' the flue was sufficiently large to admit the escape of the little man, the sergeant stuck in the hip, and brought up so suddenly, that the grip slipped from his nose, and he fell heavily back into the room.

Digitized by Google

It was late the next morning when the barmaid, coming up to awaken the sergeant for breakfast, found him snugly seated in the fireplace, while his nose, was holding forth in a most delectable soliloquy. A hearty shaking soon aroused the sergeant, and shortly afterwards he made his appearance at the breakfast-table, where he related his adventure; he was laughed at by all, but it was afterwards observed that from that period none of the family could ever be induced to visit that room after sunset; and a few years after, the whole house having gained the reputation of being haunted, was deserted and fell to ruin. How the sergeant settled his bill with the landlord, I never could fully learn; but I have since heard, that for more than a year afterwards, there appeared upon the side of the bar a long row of chalk-marks, the meaning of which no one could divine; but what puzzled them more than all, was the appearance of the three hieroglyphics, which stood beneath, and which, after close inspection, it was discovered were intended to represent the letters, T. O. D.—N. Y. Mirror.

STANZAS.

I gazed when the beauty of life was untainted,
The flush on the cheek was all blooming and gay;
But ere on the mind the heart's feelings were painted,
It hath in its loveliness faded away.

The young bud was nipp'd ere its leaves were expanded,
To catch the soft vapour, the dew or the sun;
Ere the soul to thy boundless realm's knowledge extended,
The life glowing flush of its beauty was gone.

Thou hast fled like a meteor or mist of the mountains,
Or the light clouds which fly on the wings of the gale;
As the spirits which float o'er earth's sunny bright fountains,
And o'er the soft breezes in mourning shall wail.

Bright as that sweet star which ushers the morning
Short as its lustre thy stay upon earth;
But loftier and brighter, where free from all mourning,
Thy spirit shall rest where they know of its worth.

I have silently cherished that early nipp'd blossom,
Though grief found no vent when thy soul didst depart;
Still deeper its lines hath been left on the bosom,
The deeper its image is press'd on the heart.

Pure as the fountain from which springs its being,
Thy spirit hath sought for the land of the blest;
Untainted and free from thy poor earthly dwelling,
Now go to thy Maker, sweet pilgrim, and rest.

Yea rest thee, my lov'd one, for bless'd is thy slumber,
No sin of this earth can disturb thy repose;
But angels shall waft thee, where souls without number,
Are resting with God, from earth's harrassing woes.

INDIAN BARD.

Written for the Casket.

PARADISE OF SPRING.

A DREAM.

It was on the evening of the last day of winter that I sauntered from my lodgings towards a picturesque and moss-covered knoll, rendered dear to memory, as well from a quondam occurrence, as the imposing scenery it commands. It stands half a league distant and overlooks Hopkinsville, a pleasant and beautiful town with its landscape, environs of farms and streams, of hills and barrens. I reached the summit of the knob and recognized the same features which my frequent haunts had rendered familiar several years before. On its utmost height stood the same huge and stormbeaten stone. Wind and time and tempest, had polished and whitened it, but never had they shaken the hoary sentinel from his post. No! nor yet had they erased the initials of one engraven as indelibly on its side as the memory of her virtues were set on my heart. But this is foreign from my subject, and must suffice for that being. That spot to me was holy ground, and the durability of that stone, the dial of my constancy.

Being seated, and leaning against its base, I committed myself to meditation, but no exertion of mind could banish the associations of the spot from my imagination, until sleep, pleasant sleep, came ever with its lulling balm, and presented a vision, having but little affinity with my last waking thought.——I saw the venerable monument against which I rested, slowly becoming higher, and still more elevated until it overlooked the grandest heights of earth. On looking round I saw Asmodeus, the demon tutor of Don Cleopas ascending the gentle slope on my right, and bearing company with a female personage whose mien and attire indicated a high order of being. The Demon of deformity informed me that his companion was the Genius of Fancy. At this I was startled with surprise; for in all my conceptions, and personifyings, in all the imaginings of the poet, and creations of the artist, she had never been presented in her present character! she stood a few paces distant and rested in noble negligence on the low bending trunk of a thunder-rent ash. She heeded not the persuasive invitings of romantic beauty that lay scattered in the distance; but seemed engaged in burying every sense in the deepest vault of thought. Her features were wrapped up with composure, and her face though unfurrowed with a trace of care or time, told more of the matron than,

> The nymph that "dwells
> In sylvan cells."

He related a ramble she had recently taken over the planet earth, in which journey she chanced to meet with the goddess of spring. The goddess was making a tour towards the south to her place of habitation in the "Paradise of Spring!" and in compliment to Fancy solicited her presence the next day, (1st of March) to witness the opening of the Paradise. Then waving his wand above my head I was directed to vault upon the summit of the spire, from whence I might behold Fancy through every trace of her voyage. I did as commanded, and soon found myself perched on the cloud crested pillar. I looked towards earth and discovered Fancy as she arose in her flight. She is now the archetype of her general character; her very self in propria persona. She is now the sportive Naiad the agile sylph that bounds from beauty to beauty courting smiles from one and caressing another. She is now the airy Grace of lightest mould and like the sea shallop, glides now from islet to islet, then chases from billow to surge the high riding coral. Her eye of light swam not but played like lightnings flash; and the carnation on her cheek was the tinge of an orient cloud. "Her locks were the white mists of the morning" that curled for a while then scattered in the gale. In this portraiture she flitted from the mossy mound; nor hasted her flight but glided apace and rested anon as one gilt spot of nature and another enchanted her gaze. In her wild orgies many was the rattling rill with mimic beach and ozier fringe to arrest her step, many a cliff was scaled to catch the enamelled profile of scenery away. Many the scowling crag she mounted to lave in the dimpled pool above, then dashing to the brink she rode on the mad cataract as its liquid tresses were flung from rock to rock down the rugged precipice. Now she sinks in a dank leafy dingle where the bittern's cry and the owlet's hoot is all that gives cheer to the gloom of the glen. She takes her hence to the sunny plain beyond the steep, but her pathway is the cavern that passes beneath. The fountain gush in some distant hall is the voice of the cave; and the lair of the lynx is the mark of an absent tenant. The inmost recess was shaded in darkness, but brilliant and burning was the sconce of the living day that poured in from the far off outlet, opening on a wide bounded plain that was studded with the livery of bloom.

Digitized by Google

That plain was the "Paradise of Spring!" it was the firmament of flowers, a diadem of brilliants giving back the lustre of a midday sun, like the clustering galaxy that mock with their twinklings the soft shining of the moon. Fancy paused—then wondered in delight; and moving towards the centre, she discovered the palace of the Goddess. The edifice was superb and spacious, and the materials of the structure the flowery products of spring. She was led by the Goddess through every border and bower of this panorama of nature's pearls. Beauties rich and rare, even such as had never appeared in the brightest galleries of her own paintings were constantly presented to her pampered gaze. But the creative laws of this Tempe were no fac-simile of the regulations of nature. Here was found no variation of climate to muffle with its mantle the products of April until those of March were matured; or retard the growth of May until the time and regular order of their coming. The same genial ray that warmed the germs of March, at the same time ripened and expanded the fruit and the blossom of May. Each month had its virgin florist and to each was a separate division in the Paradise alloted. The inclosure of March being thrown open for her departure through the world, they entered and found her making hasty preparations to leave the Paradise. She was a noisy blustering maid, of low though heavy statue, with a complexion rough, and as deeply flushed as though it were dyed in the aurora borealis. Some of her borders were set with dwindling shrubs whose once budded foliage had been crisped and seared by the frost. In others might be seen a few scattered blooms that were cautiously expanding, though in seeming defiance of a turbulent mistress. By these she brushed scowling along and just snatched a handful of buds in which were gathered a snowdrop or two, a daisy and violet, a crocus and daffodil, with some others, and clapping her loud wings, was borne in a gust. April was tall and graceful; her fine modelled symmetry and contour of face bore the impress of elegant refinement without becoming effeminate, and the air of benevolent majesty without the rude deportment of March. Though placid and gentle, the flashes of feeling sometimes lighted her eye and she was uncumbered with any decoration of ornament save the blooming tuft that flowed loose from her head. The guardian of May was the same gay, erratic little damsel that I had always conceived. Her dress was light and that of the holiday belle of the village. There was an unconscious though lively innocence that played continually on her features; and those features were sketched with the hectic life, glow that arises on the spring tide of youth. But her eye was too restless and wayward; too eager and active in buoyant sports, and herself too untiring in playfulness. It is true her face was always lighted, and seemed a mirrored image just taken from the cast of her soul, and reflecting from it every vibration of delight; for that soul was the refuge of no other feeling. The chaplet she wore hung low on her brow, and the gentle impulse that rustled its blooms was the soft breathing gale that arose from her lips. She sprang to throw open the vineclad portal to her visiters and Fancy found herself ushered into the same department which she had passed on her way to the palace, and which had charmed and captivated her every sense. The rich parterres were dressed up in all the deep-hued trappings of the world of vegetation. Nor was it "any city of solitude;" no Elysium for departed spirits, but a mighty reservoir of incense; a great shrine, where nature hung her luxuries. It was also the scene of the living. Philomel and the sweet-singing canary, the parrot and high crested eagle were perched together on the same evergreen tree. The bee had buzzed from its Hyblian heights; the butterfly with rainbow dress, and the humming bird from Arabia's groves, all sipped from the same fountain of sweet that rose in the "lily's virgin bell." The "dear gazelle" the gentle lamb, the fawn and the highland kid all couched them down in the same verdant fold. Having strolled to the northern extremity of the plain they stopped at the spout that burst out at the foot of an aged laurel, and quaffed its azure element caught in the silken cup of the tulip. Here Fancy swept with her glance the prospect beyond the enclosure; and erected on a small eminence she espied, a huge and dark mausoleum. This the Goddess informed her was the tomb of Winter, a certain hoary and merciless tyrant, who after subduing autumn, held the earth in bondage for a season, and was careering towards the confines of Spring when his icy armour was destroyed by the shafts of the vernal sun, and himself slain on the event of executing his ambitious scheme. Here I woke and found my magic tower dwindled down to the "stone of the hill" and catching the last lingering ray of the sinking sun. W. P. T.

Digitized by Google

Written for the Casket.

ISABEL L.

A TRUE STORY.

"When she was a tender, and beauteous infant in the cradle, did you see that unfortunate, that forlorn being? said a venerable female, to a friend who was sitting with her, by the bedside of a poor emaciated woman, on whose features, as she lay in a disturbed, and uneasy slumber, were indelibly impressed the traces of the deepest sorrow. But the skeleton of her former self, she was a fit representation, of the image of woe. "I saw her in her childhood," replied the sympathising friend; "she was an interesting child: little did her fond father think, as he dandled her on his knee, that she would ever be the victim of such deep, such incurable sorrow; or he certainly would have prayed, when she was at the verge of the grave, rather for her to have been taken from the evil to come, than for her restoration to health, which he so fervently did." A low moan, proceeded from the object of their mutual sympathy. They were silent; "Ah, my husband, don't leave me," murmured, she in a low tone, a deeper gloom overspreading her countenance, "don't leave me!" repeated she mournfully, "how can you deride me thus? if I have done wrong sometimes, have I not borne much for you, and from you? But you will not listen to reason, I see that your heart is hardened against me, and fixed on another: you take an exaggerated view of every thing; my imperfections, and the supposed perfections of another are alike distorted." After a short pause—"Oh," cried the still sleeping invalid, with evident emotion,—"that you were now, what you once were! then—however unworthy of your regard I might have been, you could not have witnessed such suffering, as you now cause, without relenting." A shiver seemed to run over the frame of the unhappy woman, as she started from her unquiet slumber. "Poor creature," murmured the old lady, "she cannot even sleep in peace." A deep sigh burst from the aching heart of the sufferer, as she opened her eyes and looked around; on seeming to recollect herself, she appeared confused and distressed,—"Don't be agitated, my dear," said her kind friend, "you have been dreaming, we are here, to do all we can for you; and your mother is not far off:" she closed her eyes with a shudder, her weeping sister, who had been sitting at the foot of the bed unobserved, now approached, and kneeling down by the bedside, pressed her hand on the throbbing temple of the afflicted one, "yes, my poor sister," said she, "we are all anxious to do all we can for you;" after a moment's silence, she turned her head, and leaned it on her sister's shoulder; "yes my dear Anna, I know that; and I desire to be thankful, for the many blessings I have left; God will chasten his children for their wanderings, but he will not utterly forsake them. My affliction is of a peculiarly distressing nature, but no doubt, it is intended for my good, and I desire to be, and hope that I am, entirely resigned to the will of Heaven."

But I have commenced my story in the wrong place; I must give some account of the heroine, before I finish the sad tale of her suffering—but it must be a short sketch; it is too gloomy to enlarge on, there is too much truth in the history of this unfortunate female, to permit the writer to be very eloquent, in describing her troubles. Isabel M. was born in 18—, it makes no matter where, and it is not necessary that any notice should be taken of her life, until she reached the age of twenty-one, as nothing of any peculiar interest occured before that time, or rather, I would say, from that period may the commencement of her troubles be dated, it was then she became a wife, it is true, with her own choice, but the attachment between her and Mr. L. was hastily formed, and they were as hastily united; her kind parents were too indulgent to oppose the wishes of their daughter, on whose judgment they placed much reliance, and she reposed too much confidence in her lover to refuse compliance to his urgent solicitations, to become his without delay—she could not doubt the purity of his motives, and indeed, it cannot be said, that they were improper, at least he said, and I believe, thought they were good; but still I cannot think, that Isabel was ever truly and devotedly loved by her husband:—he was in need of a wife at the time, and imagined, he loved the inexperienced, and fond girl, who was willing to marry him without delay, whether her friends approved of her hasty proceeding, or not. In a few days after, she promised to be his; Mr. L. carried the then happy Isabel to his home; and she, full of romantic notions, (for alas: she had studied romances too much for her good,) imagined that her bliss was complete, that she could never know what sorrow was; my dear Edward loves me, thought she, too tenderly, ever to be unkind,—he is the idol of my heart, how then can I ever be unhappy?—no, it can never be,—the world may censure, but what is all that to me, I have happiness they can never touch.

But alas! how mistaken was Isabel; Mr. L. had been a married man before; his former wife was his senior, and probably his superior, in every respect—she had much wealth at her command, and what was better, her youthful husband, was all her own; he looked up to her with reverence, as to a superior being; but now the case was exactly reversed;—he had married a girl much younger than himself, inexperienced in the ways of the world, and in the management of a family; and with a mind, it must be acknowledged, too full of visionary notions. Mr. L. soon discovered this, and what she thought, would operate much in her favour—that is, her disregard of the opinions of the world, in marrying him so suddenly, had the contrary effect; he soon formed a low, and even a contemptible opinion of his wife. The first symptoms Isabel saw of it, astonished and distressed her so, that she only made matters worse, by her excessive grief; she took, what he afterwards said was intended for advice, as unkindness; and without trying to conform to his wishes, at least, without trying in a proper manner, as she afterwards forcibly felt; she yielded herself up to incessant sorrow: her husband remonstrated: for it cannot be supposed that he did not wish his wife to counteract any impressions, that were made on his mind, to her prejudice: but things only grew worse, they could not understand each other; she took every renewal of his remonstrance with her, as just evidence that he had never loved her. and he construed her continued griefs, into stubborness and violence of temper. Sometimes, there would be a partial understanding between them. Mr. L. would occasionally manifest more than usual tenderness for her, it would fill his poor wife's heart with joy, and she would hope that all would yet be well; but unfortunately for Isabel, she had not discrimination to know how to improve those moments. I think she never knew her husband's disposition fully. He was a man of very peculiar turn of mind; possessed of strong prejudices, and extreme quickness of temper, it required great discernment and prudence in a wife, particularly one he considered his inferior, to get along comfortably with him; but alas! for Isabel, she possessed neither of those qualifications, in that degree, that was necessary for her peace and happiness; added to which, she also had a temper which she had not learned to govern properly. Thus, for the want of discernment, prudence and self command, on the part of Isabel, and of affection and forbearence, on her husband's part, was then a fatal blow given to the happiness, the peace—ah, even the last prospect of earthly felicity to the unfortunate Isabel; by her own hands, and the hands of one who had promised to protect and cherish her, under all circumstances. And here, were I to suffer the feelings that arise and oppress my heart, to predominate, I would lay down my pen and let the remainder of the sad story of Isabel L. sink forever into oblivion; but a hasty recital of her sorrow may prove a warning perhaps, to some inexperienced girl, should it fall into the hands of any such. In consequence of the continued misunderstanding between Mr. L. and his wife, his heart, which had never been her's as it should have been, ere he made her his wife, was entirely estranged from her, and the most bitter hatred seemed to take possession of his soul. Being of a warm temperature naturally, he sought and found another object, on whom to lavish all his fondness, and who, like his first wife, possessed many advantages, over his now neglected one. I, however, have not the least doubt, had Mr. L. ever felt half the affection for Isabel, that he now did for his new found love, that there was no obstacle in her to their permanent happiness, but might have been removed by kindness and perseverance on the part of an experienced and affectionate husband. If the entire alienation of Isabel's husband had been concealed from her, she could have borne the want of his love better, as she had now become a mother, which was certainly calculated to draw off her mind from former disturbances; and she would, in all probability, have grown more and more domesticated, and eventually have become such a wife, as even her scrupulous husband could not have objected to, but that could not be. Mr. L. found it necessary to his interest to make his wife a confident; it was highly necessary to his character, that the connexion which he had formed with a young and beautiful girl, should be concealed from the world; and he could not bear the idea of relinquishing one who had now engaged all his heart. Mr. L. therefore determined to throw himself on the generosity of his wife, he had no fears of her betraying him, he explained his situation to her, but did not permit her to know the strength of his affection for her happy rival, and gave her assurances that his love for her still existed, that it was not entirely gone; and that any thing she might do to promote his happiness now, would be adding to her own, as it would tend to render her more dear to him; and indeed he professed not to know which was most dear to him, his wife or the youthful Malvina; and said he could not reconcile it to himself, to desert the young and innocent girl, who had relinquished every prospect for him. He entreated his wife, therefore, to bear with him, and promote their happiness together—by doing which, she would secure his lasting gratitude and love. Isabel felt greatly shocked and astonished, when thus made acquainted with her husband's secret movements; but she immediately saw that opposition would do no good, but much harm: she also felt much cheered by the assurances of her husband's love, which she had feared was entirely extinguished; and by yielding, she was made to believe, that she would be nearer to her Edward, than she had ever been, and that was all that was necessary to her happiness in this world. She could not in her heart approve of her husband's conduct, yet she felt that acquiescence on her part was the best she could do; nay, she even went so far as to conform to every wish of his, under the solemn pledges he had made her, that such a course should ever operate in her favor. She could not blame her rival—her extreme youth and inexperience were a sufficient apology to the mind of Isabel, for her departure from a correct course which she knew had been only caused by the incessant importunity of her husband; the blame, therefore, was all his; and perhaps, thought Isabel, mournfully, had I done all my duty as a wife, this had never occurred; let me therefore bear it patiently, and be thankful that I have a part of my husband's affections left. The reader, if a gentleman, may laugh at Isabel's folly in thus flattering herself, for her hopes, her newborn expectations, were doomed to perish in the bud. For my part I know too little about the heart of man, to determine whether she was justifiable in entertaining such hopes as she did, or not; but from the observations I have made in a short, and not uneventful life, I think differently. But be that as it may, poor Isabel was disappointed, bitterly disappointed; she saw her last hope wither before her eyes, like the tender flower that is just planted under the scorching rays of the midday sun. When she saw her imaginary hopes dissolve in the air—when the solemn pledges of her husband were permitted to pass as words without meaning—then it was she gave herself up to despair. Sometimes, under very peculiar aggravation, which she had daily to bear, she would become almost reckless of consequences, would yield herself up to fits of desperation and folly, which only made the breach between her and her powerful and revengeful husband, still wider. At length poor Isabel's cup of bitterness and woe, was filled to the brim. I would forbear going over a description of her trials, of her anguish of soul, of the contempt and ill usage that was heaped upon her devoted head; neither will I pretend to say that Isabel, at all times, acted prudently; but this much I will say, that she endured much. But the time did arrive when endurement was no longer possible. A seperation took place. Isabel was deserted by her husband, and cast off a heart-broken wife. She lingered a few months after, but her peace, except what was drawn from a hope of immortality beyond the grave, was forever gone; her constitution was broken, and not all the kind attention of sympathising friends, could restore the heart-broken Isabel—she sunk into the grave, pitied by all who knew her sad story.

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

Thus perished the earthly hopes, the earthly prospects, and the earthly life of Isabel L. But her melancholy fate will be remembered and lamented by some, while life lasts. A.

LINES.

Yes—one by one earth's fondest ties,
Are sev'ring within my breast;
And in my long scar'd bosom lies
No hope—no wish to make it blest.

Would the dark curtain of the grave
Could close around my weary head,
As calmly as the ocean wave,
Above the sinking wrecks o'erspread.

For once, I thought the world was fair,
And knew not that such dark deceit
Lay under beauty's 'semblance there;
This was I unprepared to meet.

I placed my all upon one cast;
I loved her as none loved before;
And misery I found at last
Too soon—my hopes prostrate and o'er.

I loved, through happiness and ill,
Without a hope—without a fear—
We ne'er could be united—still
I'd love her, even to her bier.

Oh! 'twas a portion of that love,
That all around the eternal throne,
Unites the hearts of those above,
The ties that mortals love to own.

It was with me—ah, vain—I thought
That she could love me, with a feeling
As pure as mine—unasked—unbought—
As music o'er the senses stealing.

Heard at a distance wild and free,
Producing o'er the attentive mind
A dreaming thought of extacy—
A thought that could not be divined.

Such was my love—my adoration,
Imagination—like a dream,—
Such was my love—heart's dedication,
To her, my constant—only theme.

Ah! those were happy days—though fled
As evening's golden shadows haste;
Still will I call it from the dead,
A green spot in my memory's waste.

Though young in years, my hopes are crushed,
Withered as buds before a blast;
A blight as o'er my spirits rushed,
My days of sunshine all have past.

Once, nature's charms were dear to me—
The music of the water-fall—
The songster in the green-wood tree—
The echo-cavern's rocky hall.—

The tall blue mountains' rugged breast—
The gently flowing, waveless river,
Whereon the dark green shadows rest,
Of forests that have stood forever.

There's rapture in the setting sun,
There's glory in his crimson beam,
The rapture has departed—gone,
The glory from the mirror-stream.

My strain must close—would 'twere the last—
The last sweep of my breaking chords;
Oh! how the memories of the past
Rush, at the lone heart's parting words!

A light has o'er my spirit broken,
A light that I have shunn'd before,
I feel it—yes—it is a token,
That my worn spirit must give o'er.

Earth's but a "broken reed at best,"
Still we must tread the path we've trod;
The weary soul will find no rest,
But in the bosom of its God. W. F. D.

From the New York American.

THE HEBREW REQUIEM.

"They made a funeral oration at the grave, after which they prayed, then turning the face of the deceased towards Heaven, they said—"Go in peace;"
Hebrew Antiquities.

Go thou in peace—we may not bid thee linger
Amid the sunlight and the gloom, of earth,
Where ev'ry joy is touched by sorrow's finger,
And tears succeed the brightest hour of mirth;
Thine upward gaze is fixed upon the dwelling
Where sin and sorrow never more are known,
And seraph lips, the loud Hosanna swelling,
Have caught the music of celestial tone.

Go thou in peace—thy home on earth now leaving
In the lone chamber of the dead to dwell,
Thou hast no portion in the sorrow heaving
The hearts whose anguish tears but freely tell—
A path of light and gladness is before thee,
The hope of Isreal in fruition thine,
And thou wilt gaze upon the beams of glory
Around the throne of Isreal's God that shine.

Go thou in peace—why are the loved ones weeping
Around the spot where now thy form is lain,
There is no cause for grief that thou art sleeping,
Free from each trial, and untouched by pain;
Thy path has been through many a scene of sorrow,
The weary form has needed this repose;
Calm be thy rest until the eternal morrow
Its light and glory on thy dwelling throws.

Go thou in peace—temptation cannot sever
The tie that now unites thee to thy God;
The voice of sin—of unbelief—can never
Enter the precincts of thy low abode:
We leave thee here with mingled joy and sadness,
Our hearts are weak, our faith is low and dim,
Yet to the Lord we turn with chastened gladness,
And yield our friend—our brother up to him.
M. J. W.

Digitized by Google

THE TIGER'S CAVE.

An Adventure in the Mountains of Quito.

On leaving the Indian village, we continued to wind round Chimborazo's wide base; but its snow crowned head no longer shone above us its clear brilliancy, for a dense fog was gathering gradually around it. Our guides looked anxiously towards it, and announced their apprehension of a violent storm. We soon found their fears well founded. The thunder began to roll, and resounded through the mountainous passes with the most terrific grandeur. Then came the vivid lightning; flash followed flash—above, around, beneath,—every where a sea of fire. We sought a momentary shelter in the cleft of the rocks, whilst one of our guides hastened forward to seek a more secure asylum. In a short time, he returned and informed us that he had discovered a spacious cavern, which would afford us sufficient protection from the elements. We proceeded thither immediately, and with great difficulty and not a little danger, at last got into it.

When the storm had somewhat abated, our guide ventured out in order to ascertain if it were possible to continue our journey. The cave in which we had taken refuge, was so extremely dark, that we could not see an inch before us: and we were debating as to the propriety of leaving it, even before the Indians came back, when we suddenly heard a groaning or growling in the further end of the cavern, which instantly fixed all our attention. Wharton and myself listened anxiously; but our daring and inconsiderate young friend Lincoln, together with my huntsman crept about on their hands and knees, and endeavored to discover, by groping, from whence the sound proceeded.

They had not advanced far into the cavern, before we heard them utter an exclamation of surprise; and they returned to us, each carrying in his arms an animal singularly marked, and about the size of a cat, seemingly of great power, and furnished with immense fangs. The eyes were of green color; strong claws were upon their feet; and a blood red tongue hung out of their mouths. Wharton had scarcely glanced at them, when he exclaimed in consternation, "We have come into the den of a ———" He was interrupted by a fearful cry of dismay from our guides, who came rushing precipitately towards us, calling out, "A tiger! a tiger!" and, at the same time, with extraordinary rapidity, they climbed up a cedar tree, and then hid themselves among the branches.

After the first sensation of horror and surprise, which rendered me motionless for a moment, had subsided, I grasped my fire arms. Wharton had already regained his composure and self-possession; and he called us to assist him instantly in blocking up the mouth of the cave with an immense stone which fortunately lay near it. The sense of approaching danger augmented our strength; for we now distinctly heard the growl of the ferocious animal; and we were lost beyond redemption if he reached the entrance before we could get it closed. Ere this was done, we could distinctly see the tiger bounding towards the spot, and stooping in order to creep into his den by the narrow opening. At this fearful moment our exertions were successful and the great stone kept the wild beast at bay.

There was a small open space however, left between the top of the entrance and the stone, through which we could see the head of the animal, illuminated by his glowing eyes, which he rolled glaring with fury upon us. His frightful roaring too, penetrated to the depths of the cavern, and was answered by the hoarse growling of the cubs. Our ferocious enemy attempted first to remove the stone with his powerful claws, and then to push it with his head from its place; and these efforts proving abortive, served only to increase his wrath. He uttered a tremendous, heart piercing howl, and his flaming eyes darted light into the darkness of our retreat.

"Now is the time to fire at him," said Wharton with his usual calmness, "aim at his eyes: the ball will go through his brain, and we shall have a chance to get rid of him."

Frank seized his double barrelled gun, and Lincoln his pistols. The former placed the muzzle within a few inches of the tiger, and Lincoln did the same. At Wharton's command they both drew their triggers, at the same moment; but no shot followed. The Tiger who seemed aware that the flash indicated an attack upon him, sprang growling from the entrance, but feeling himself unhurt, immediately turned back again, and stationed himself in his former place. The powder in both pieces was wet.

"All is now over," said Wharton, we have only to choose whether we shall die of hunger, together with these animals who are shut up along with us, or open the entrance to the blood thirsty monster without, and so make a quicker end of the matter.

So saying, he placed himself close beside the stone, which, for the moment, defended us, and looked undauntedly upon the lightning eyes of the tiger. Lincoln raved, and Frank took a piece of strong cord from his pocket, and hastened to the further end of the cave; I knew not with what design. We soon, however, heard a low, stifled groaning, and the tiger, which had heard it also, became more restless and disturbed than ever. He went backwards and forwards before the entrance of the cave, in the most wild and impetuous manner; then stood still, and stretching out his neck in the direction of the forest broke forth in a deafning howl.

Our two Indian guides took advantage of this opportunity, to discharge several arrows from the tree. He was struck more than once; but the light weapons bounded back harmless from his thick skin. At length however, one of them struck him near the eye, and the arrow remained sticking in the wound. He now broke anew into the wildest fury, sprang at the tree, and tore it with his claws, as if he would have dragged it to the ground. But having at length, succeeded in getting rid of the arrow, he became more calm, and laid himself down, as before, in front of the cave.

Frank now returned from the lower end of the den, and a glance showed us what he had been doing. In each hand, and dangling from the end of the string, were the two cubs. He had strangled them; and before we were aware what he had intended, he threw them through the opening to the tiger. No sooner did the animal perceive them than he gazed earnestly upon them, and began to examine them closely, turning them cautiously from side to side. As soon as he became aware that they were dead, he uttered so piercing a howl of sorrow, that we were obliged to put our hands to our ears.

Digitized by Google

The thunder had now ceased; and the storm, had sunk to a gentle gale, songs, of birds were again heard in the neighboring forest, and the sunbeams sparkled in the drops that hung from the leaves. We saw through the aperture, how all nature was reviving, after the war of the elements which had so recently taken place; but the contrast only made our situation more horrible. We were in a grave from which there was no deliverance; and a monster, worse than the fabled Ceberus kept watch over us.—The tiger had laid himself down beside his whelps. He was a beautiful animal, of great size and strength; and his limbs being stretched out at full length, displayed his immense power of muscle. A double row of great teeth stood far enough apart to show his large red tongue, from which the white foam fell in large drops. All at once, another roar was heard at a distance, and the tiger immediately arose and answered it with a fearful howl. At the instant our Indians uttered a shriek, which announced that some new danger threatened us. A few moments confirmed our worst fears; for another tiger, not quite so large, came rapidly to the spot where we were.

The howls which the tigress gave, when she had examined the bodies of her cubs, surpassed every thing of horror that we had yet heard; and the tiger mingled his cry with hers.—Suddenly her roaring was lowered to a hoarse growling, and we saw her anxiously stretch out her head, extend her wide and smoking nostrils, and look as if she were determined to discover immediately the murderers of her young. Her eyes quickly fell upon us, and she made a spring forwards, with the intention of penetrating to our place of refuge. Perhaps she might have been enabled, by her immense strength, to push away the stone, had we not, with all our united power, held it against her. When she found that all her efforts were fruitless, she approached the tiger, which lay stretched out besides his cubs, and he rose and joined in the hollow roarings. They stood together for a few moments, as if in consultation, and then suddenly went off at a rapid pace and disappeared from our sight. Their howling died away in the distance, and then entirely ceased.

Our Indians descended from their tree, and called upon us to seize the only possibility of our yet saving ourselves, by instant flight; for that the tigers had only gone round the height to seek another inlet to the cave, with which they were, no doubt, acquainted. In the greatest haste the stone was pushed aside, and we stepped forth from what we had considered a living grave. We now heard once more the roaring of the tigers, though at a distance; and following the examples of our guide, we precipitately struck into a side path. From the number of roots and branches of trees, with which the storm had strewed our path, and the slippyness of the road, our flight was slow and difficult.

We had proceeded thus for about a quarter of an hour, when we found that our way led along the edge of a rocky cliff, with innumerable fissures. We had just entered upon it, when suddenly the Indians, who were before us, uttered one of their piercing shrieks, and we immediately became aware that the tigers were in pursuit of us. Urged by despair, we rushed towards one of the breaks, or gulfs, in our way, over which was thrown a bridge of reeds, that sprang up and down at every step, and could be trod with safety by the light foot of the Indians alone. Deep in the hollow below rushed an impetuous stream, and a thousand pointed and jagged rocks, threatened destruction on every side. Lincoln, my huntsman, and myself, passed over the chasm in safety; but Wharton was still in the middle of the waving bridge, and endeavoring to steady himself, when both the tigers were seen to issue from the neighboring forest; the moment they descried us, they bounded towards us with dreadful roarings. Meanwhile, Wharton had nearly gained the safe side of the gulf, and we were all clambering up the rocky cliff, except Lincoln, who remained at the reedy bridge, to assist his friend to step upon firm ground. Wharton, though the ferocious animals were close upon him, never lost his courage or presence of mind. As soon as he had gained the edge of the cliff, he knelt down and with his sword divided the fastenings by which the bridge was attached to the rock.

He expected that an effectual barrier would thus be put to the further progress of our pursuers; but he was mistaken; for he had scarcely accomplished his task, when the tigress with a moment's pause rushed towards the chasm, and attempted to bound over it. It was a fearful sight to see the mighty animal suspended for a moment in the air, above the abyss; but the scene passed like a flash of lightning. Her strength was not equal to the distance: she fell into the gulf, and before she reached the bottom, was torn into a thousand pieces by the jagged points of the rock. Her fate did not in the least dismay her companion; he followed her with an immense spring, and reached the opposite side, but only with his fore claws; and thus he clung to the edge of the precipice, endeavoring to gain a footing. The Indians again uttered a wild shriek as if all hope had been lost.

But Wharton, who was nearest the edge of the rock, advanced courageously towards the tiger and struck his sword into the tiger's breast. Enraged beyond all measure, the wild beast collected all his strength, and with a violent effort, fixing one of his hind legs upon the edge of the cliff he seized Wharton by the thigh. The heroic man still preserved his fortitude; he grasped the trunk of a tree with his left hand, to steady and support himself, while, with his right, he wrenched and violently turned the sword that was still in the breast of the tiger. All this was the work of an instant. The Indians, Frank, and myself, hastened to his assistance, but Lincoln who was already at his side, had seized Wharton's gun, which lay near the ground, and struck so powerful a blow with the butt end upon the head of the tiger, that the animal, stunned and overpowered, let go his hold, and fell back into the abyss.—Edin. Literary Journal.

Digitized by Google

[The following poem, written by one of the young ladies of the Albany Female Academy, obtained the first premium gold medal, at the recent annual examination in that institution.]

THE MEDITERRANEAN.

BY ANNE CHARLOTTE LYNCH.

Hail! thou eternal flood, whose restless waves
Roll onward in their course, as wild and free
As if the shores they lashed were not the graves
Of mouldering empires? When I think of thee,
Thou dost remind me of the ebbless sea—
The sea of Time, whose tide sweeps unconfined,
Its channel Earth, its shores Eternity;—
Whose billows roll resistless o'er mankind:
Like that thou rollest on, nor heed'st the wrecks behind.

Thy shores were empires; but the tide of Time
Rolled o'er them, and they fell; and here they lie,
Wrecked in their greatness, mouldering yet sublime.
And beautiful in their mortality;
And godlike men were there, the wise and free;
But what are they who now look o'er thy waves?
They're but as worms, that feed on their decay,
They kneel to stranger lords—a land of slaves,
Of men whose only boast is their ancestral graves.

Upon thy shores the Holy Prophets trod,
And from their hill-tops came the voice of One
Whom thou obeyest, even the Eternal God;
And on thy breast the Star of Bethlehem shone.
That star, though quenched in blood, hath risen a sun,
And other climes are radiant with its light;
But thy fair shores, alas! it shines not on,
Save when some land with its effulgence bright,
Reflects the heavenly rays upon their moral night.

Philosophy hath decked her form divine
In all her loveliest draperies, and wrought
Her brightest dreams by thee, thy shores her shrine;
Thy sons her oracles, the kings of thought;
But they have passed, and save their names, are naught
And their bright dreams are buried like their clay,
Or shattered, like the fanes where they were taught
But though religions, empires, men decay,
Thou, restless, changeless flood—thou dost not pass away.

There Poesy hath woven such fair dreams,
That man hath deemed them bright reality;
There she hath peopled hills and vales and streams
And thy blue waters with her phantasy;
And fabled gods left heaven to roam by thee;
There she embodied passions of the heart
In such fair forms, that frail mortality
Failed to conceive, until triumphal Art
Bade from the Parian stone the immortal image start.

The loftiest bards whose names illume the past
Have hung upon thy shores, and thy deep tone
Ceased at their Orphean lyres;—but now the last,
"The Pilgrim Bard," whose matchless song alone
Hath made thy name immortal as his own,—
A stranger of the north, but "as it were
A child of thee," his spirit too hath flown,
Thus have the greatest passed. Thine azure air
Still echoes to their song, but thou alone art there.

Thine empires one by one have fall'n, and now
The last is crumbling in decay—yea, she,
The coronet upon thy furrow'd brow,
The mistress of the world, the queen of thee,
The paradise of earth, sweet Italy;
Stript of her queenly robes in dust she lies,
Enchained by slaves nor struggling to be free.
There hath she fallen, as the dolphin dies,
More brightly beautiful in her last agonies.

But though thy shores are sepulchres that time
Hath peopled with dead empires, though they are
But shattered wrecks, and every other clime
Hath sprung from their decay; yet Nature there
Hath made her pall of beauty—sadly fair.
And they shall be, while thy blue waves shall foam,
The Mecca of the world—the altar where Science, Devotion, Genius, Art, shall come,
And feel as Moslems feel above their Prophet's tomb.

And thou, unchanging flood, that wanderest on Through that dark path of ruin and decay,
Still must thou roll untainted and alone.
Men shall arise, and shine, and pass away,
Like the bright bubbles of thy glittering spray;
And thrones shall totter, kingdoms be laid waste—
Yea, empires rise and fall along thy way,
Like the dark heavings of thy troubled breast;
But thou shalt still roll on—for thee there is no rest.

From the Saturday Evening Post.

STANZAS,

On the Death of a talented Young Friend.

"Great God! how could thy vengeance light
So bitterly, on one so bright?
How could the hand that gave such charms,
Blast them again?" MOORE.

Bright, viewless dead! receive the lays
Which flow from friendship, most sincere
If round this globe, thy spirit strays,
Or haunts the scenes that once were dear.

The muse who knew thy gifted powers—
Who oft admir'd thy burning verse—
Shall strew thy urn with brightest flowers,
And all thy matchless worth rehearse.

When night his ebon throne resumes,
When skies reflect their softest ray,
When flow'rs give out their sweet perfumes,
Around thy dew-wet grave I'll stray.

Some friendly hand a tomb will raise,
And genius rear the sculptur'd stone,
Which justly shall record thy praise,
And tell how bright thy virtues shone.

The youths, whose generous bosoms swell
With rapture, at thy rising fame,
Shall all thy manly graces tell,
And hand to future time thy name.

For thee, on each returning year,
Beauty will heave the tender sigh;
For thee shall drop the briny tear,
And all her native numbers try.

Around yon kind paternal dome,
Where oft thy childish footsteps stray'd,
Methinks there hangs a solemn gloom,
Which saddens all the distant glade.

Like Virtue's image, sent on earth,
Thou charm'd'st awhile our wondering eyes,
Then sought the climes that gave thee birth,
And wing'd thy way to happier skies!

If Virtue can a crown receive,
What dazzling glories deck thy head!
No longer, then, let friendship grieve,
Since thou, from woe to bliss art fled.

But why did all-mysterious heaven,
Form such a faultless piece of clay?
Why was the transient blessing given,
Thus to be torn so soon away!

* * *

Digitized by Google

Written for the Casket.

AN ESSAY

On the Education of Females.

"Remember, man, the universal cause
Acts not by partial, but by general laws;
Heaven breathes thro' every member of the whole,
One common blessing as one common soul."

POPE.

In this country, talent and good sense have been united to promote the general respectability and comfort of the community—the laws of other nations have been consulted, and the efforts which they produced examined prior to the formation of our own code, judging from the experience of others, those which had been proved to be beneficial, were selected, and any having a tendency to lessen the dignity of man, where rejected—no wild speculations were hazarded—no Utopian theories were attempted to be realized, and if it be true that originality is simply judicious imitation, we may claim for our edict the merit of being original, as well as admirable. They gave to every American a right to vote, and in order that this inestimable privilege should be granted to men capable of using it with propriety, they gave them likewise every facility for obtaining an Education calculated to enlarge the mind and fit them for their duties to themselves and the commonwealth—the species of knowledge most necessary, and the best method of conveying that knowledge, have been frequently discussed, and the formation of a College in consequence of Mr. Girard's bequest, has elicited the opinions of men whose experience, enlightened minds and benevolence, gives us an assurance that their prospects are such as would tend to the advancement of the rising generation, both in a moral and political point of view; yet while so much care has been evinced for the cultivation of the minds of men, it seems strange that one material circumstance should be overlooked, namely, the foundation upon which those excellent principles of instruction are to rest—when an architect draws his plan of an edifice, it does not escape his recollection that the basis by which it is to be supported, must be solid, durable and in keeping with the remainder of the building, although it is not destined to share in the admiration which the structure, when complete, may excite either by its usefulness or its beauty—and should not the architect of the human mind look out for laborers suited to the task of forming its first ideas in order to qualify it for its future destruction? To whom is the earliest formation of the mind necessarily entrusted?—To women—and are women prepared by their own Education to perform this duty? It is to be feared, not—custom has made it indelicate for an unmarried lady to speak of being a wife or mother; ought not this to be rectified—should she not on the contrary be made fully to understand the importance of the stations assigned to her. How would a man act in his trade, his profession, or as a citizen, if it were considered a breach of decorum on his part to speak on the subject—or if they were made theories for jests to be laughed or blushed at—why cannot women receive the same advantages as men in this case? why cannot their early years be passed in preparing them for the situations they will be called upon to fill when they arrive at maturity? The only reply that can be given to this question is, that custom has arranged otherwise; but it should be broken—this, like many other absurdities which have clogged the human mind, and which are day after day discovered to be "more honoured in the breach than in the observance." A gentleman who had lately written some able and ingenious letters upon the Education of young men, says "there are fewer absurdities in the Education of Females, than in that of the opposite sex"—if this be true, it is indeed to be desired that such men as the writer alluded to, would devote their talents to clear away the dark cloud which hangs between them and the light of reason and truth—yet there can hardly be a greater absurdity than the ignorance in which women are kept of the duties of their alloted sphere—another fault exits in the lure held out to induce them to learn. A young lady commences the attainment of some accomplishment—she finds it, difficult and this difficulty engenders a dislike—she asks why she must learn it, and what is the answer, "because it is fashionable—because Miss such a one learns it, and because it will make you appear to advantage when you grow up;" these are sown—the seeds of that vanity, which is attributed to females—the child naturally concludes that it must be of great consequence to appear to advantage, and no wonder if it becomes her first object in after life; in place of drilling her to appear to advantage in company, it would be more conducive to her usefulness and to her happiness, if she were taught to look upon her accomplishments as means to render her more pleasing to her family or more capable of passing her solitary hours agreeably; this would alleviate some of the sorrows of the female sex—she who leads a life of celibacy would by this course be taught to turn to her accomplishments as sources of delight, in place of that disgust to which the present mode of tuition gives rise; how does she regard them as years advance, and it chances that no one sues for her hand.—Her acquirements have failed in their object, they have not, after all, made her appear to sufficient advantage to obtain for her one eligible offer—they were given her for ornament, not for use, and the victim of a fallacious mode of Education, is left to repent, "a youth of follies," and to meet "an old age of cares"—so much for its effect upon single ladies; and how for married ones—she whom Heaven gave to man for a companion, but alas! the designs of providence are prevented, custom has said that as the duties of men and women do not assimilate, neither need their education—is not this an absurdity; on the contrary, ought not some means be devised to encourage a reciprocity of taste; persons of opposite tempers may agree, but those whose taste differ, rarely do—or indeed who would, if he consulted his reason, choose for a companion one who was ignorant of the subjects which interested him or who disliked the pursuits he loved to follow. For this reason, men often seek abroad for that social intercourse from which they are debarred at home; this leads to dissipation and extravagance, and is the cause of many of the evils of wedded life; in like manner it produces ill effects between a mother and her son—the child remains in her charge for five or six years or even for a longer period—or if he is sent to school, it is frequently to a female teacher who is not better qualified for the task than is the mother herself—at length he is placed under the care of a master, and objects are presented to his imagination, totally different from those he has been hitherto accustomed to contemplate. He hears other boys in the course of their lessons, tell some historical anecdote which attracts his attention; he relates it in turn to his mother and and how does she act—does she seek to show forth his ideas upon the subject—does she relate some similar circumstance, and throw a clear light upon the interesting fact, alas! no—she either evinces an indiscreet admiration of her boy's acquisition of knowledge, or she shows an equally indiscreet indifference about it. In the former case, she exalts the child's opinion of his own understanding, and lessens his reverence for her, and in the latter, she represses the natural desire of his young mind to make his mother his confident, and in consequence his affection diminishes, he seeks for another heart to be the repository of his thoughts, and thus a bar is placed between him and the mother who watched over his helpless infancy, and she mourns, when he arrives at the age of manhood, that he neither pays respect to her advice nor shows a desire for her society. If women were made aware of the necessity of conforming themselves to the taste of their husbands and sons—if their minds were allowed the same advantages, there can be no doubt of their using their knowledge with propriety—they are told that a well ordered house ought to be their chief boast, and behold what neatness, what cleanliness and what an appearance of comfort is found in those of the American women; but their domestic avocations do not employ their whole time, even in the humble walks of life, and habit has rendered them so easy, that although they employ their hands, they do not occupy their thoughts too much, therefore, would not be imposed upon them, if in addition to their present studies they were called upon to assist in the formation of the minds of their children, it would prove an advantageous exercise for their mental faculties, it would lessen their fondness for dress, expensive furniture, and above all, that senseless gossip on which men look with contempt. Let the ample page of history be laid open for the perusal of females, in place of their present superficial knowledge of its contents. In every female seminary let some portion of each day be set apart for conversation and needlework, let the governess then introduce some subject combining instruction and interest, this will create a distaste for that idle chit chat, to which many females, estimable in other respects, are so much addicted—and this will relieve them from the necessity of seeking for topics suited to the limited understandings of women when they are conversing with them. The line drawn between the two sexes is a remnant of barbarism, a custom engendered when war was the business of men, and at periods when women were sunk beneath their proper standing or elevated far above it. It is a line which Providence has not drawn, never was it said to the intellects of women as to the troubled waves, "So far shalt thou go and no further"—Oh no—in all improvements projected for the male part of the creation, if some care is not bestowed upon the other portion of it, the scheme will prove visionary—an air-built castle which resembles the poet's wish for his mistress.

Digitized by Google

As half in shade, and half in sun;
The world along its path advances—
Oh may the side the sun's upon,
Be all that ever meets thy glances.

This is very beautiful, but it is also impossible—and it is equally impossible for men to bask in the light while women are left in the dark. The stronger mind of man may sustain the full glare of intellectual beams as the eagle's eye is framed to meet the full rays of the sun, while that woman can only encounter its brightness at a distance; but if she is completely left in the shade, her influence will prevent men from ever leaving it totally—this influence is of the most dangerous kind under the present state of things; for it is unacknowledged and therefore, no care has been taken to inspire women with a prudent use of it, yet has it existed through all nations.—Behold the Spartans whose matrons were employed to deliver the shield to their sons on going forth to battle with words to unite them to bravery. Behold the Romans, who when their State was on the brink of ruin, sent their females to the Volscian camp, and the proud, the injured Coriolanus yielded to the tears of his mother—by her influence, did Esther save her tribe; let us therefore take example from the history of other countries and seek to turn this power of women to good account, and in place of [illegible] ing weeds to spring forth in their [illegible] let us teach flowers to grow—[illegible] to Reason. Education most refine the soul—it softens the vices of the English Elizabeth, and to it she owed the glory of her reign. It strengthened the unfortunate lady Jane Grey—preserved her during her youth from the dissipation of high life, and assisted her to resign her throne and her life, without a sigh. But we need not look to other times or other countries, for its effects. who can read the pure effusions of Mrs. Sigourney's muse, without acknowledging the delight which educated minds, when endowed with genius, can give, or who can be [illegible] Mrs. Hale exerting her talents for the support of her orphan family, without feeling proud of their countrywomen—these are bright constellations, shining forth amid darkness; nor are they alone—yet although, we do not expect such luminaries to rise in every man's home any more than we should hope that each separate star in the milky sky, should omit the effulgence of Venus or Mars, yet we desire, ardently desire, that every female mind may receive its portion of light, whether it afterwards sheds it around for the benefit of others, or confine its rays to a narrower orbit—then should the glowing lines of the poet be verified—

"Woman, lovely woman,

Digitized by Google

Nature made you to temper man;
We had been brutes without you—
There's in you all that we believe of Heaven;
Amazing brightness—purity and truth;
Eternal joy and everlasting love."

MRS. BELL.

Written for the Casket.

FLOWERS.

"How nature paints her colours, how the bee Sits on the bloom extracting liquid sweet."

O nature's charms, I love them—
But view'd in flowers the most,
The loveliness 'tis theirs to wear, the fairest cannot boast;
The Tulip gay, I love it—
With its bright spreading leaves,
And the sweet and modest violet that scents the passing breeze.

The fragrant Rose, I love it—
Emblem of beauty meet;
And the little flower Forget-me-not that springs beneath my feet!
The Lilly pure, I love it—
The fairest of all flowers,
With its snow-white leaves so delicate, so fit for queenly bowers.

The Cowslip small, I love it—
With its tiny cups of gold;
And the Hyacinth, whose fragile bells are cast in beauty's mould!
Sweet flowers, I dearly love ye,
Remembrancers of youth,
Remembrancers of days now past, of friendship, home, and truth.

Oh! childhood's days were happy,
When I placed ye in my hair—
And my playmates sporting, called me the "fairest of the fair."
Now when your beauties charms me,
In garden, vale or glen,
I do not fly as once I did, to pluck ye from the stem;

For those who love'd me now are gone,
With them my joys are fled;
Some far away, some cold estranged, some numbered with the dead.
Your simple graces oft recall
The playful group again,
Alas! that memory of past joys should add to present pain.

To me sweet flowers, your fading,
With it a sadness brings,
It seems to say, how fleeting are earth's most lovely things—
It seems to speak of pleasure's past,
Fled like the morning's ray;
It speaks of young affection crushed, bright dreams, ah! where are they?

Faded and flown like May's last flowers
In rude December's blast—
Like them too bright, too beautiful, in this cold world to last!
But not like them to bloom again
With the first breath of spring,
Oh no! they never, never know, a second blossoming.

FLORA.

From Outre-Mer.

THE BAPTISM OF FIRE.

The more you mow us down, the thicker we rise; the Christian blood you spill is like the seed you sow; —it springs from the earth again and fructifies the more.

TERTULLIAN.

As day was drawing to a close, and the rays of the setting sun climbed up the dungeon wall, the prisoner sat and read in a tome with silver clasps. He was a man in the vigor of his days, with a pale and noble countenance, that wore less the marks of worldly care than of high and holy thought. His temples were already bald; but a thick and curling beard bespoke the strength of manhood, and his eye, dark, full, and eloquent, beamed with all the enthusiasm of a martyr.

The book before him was a volume of the early Christian Fathers. He was reading the Apologetic of the eloquent Tertullian, the oldest and ablest writer of the Latin Church. At times he paused and raised his eyes to Heaven as if in prayer, and then read on again in silence. At length a passage seemed to touch his inmost soul. He read aloud:

"Give us, then, what names you please, from the instruments of cruelty you torture us by, call us Sarmenticians and Semaxians, because you fasten us to trunks of trees, and stick us about with faggots to set us on fire; yet let me tell you, when we are thus begirt and dressed about with fire, we are then in our most illustrious apparel. These are our victorious palms and robes of glory; and mounted on our funeral pile we look upon ourselves in our triumphal chariot. No wonder, then, such passive heroes please not those they vanquish with such conquering sufferings. And therefore we pass for men of despair, and violently bent upon our own destruction. However, that which you are pleased to call madness and despair in us, are the very actions, which under virtue's standard lift up your sons of fame and glory, and emblazon them to future ages."

He arose and paced the dungeon to and fro, with folded arms and a firm step. His thoughts held communion with eternity.

"Father, which art in Heaven!" he exclaimed; "give me strength to die, like those holy men of old, who scorned to purchase life at the expense of truth. That truth has made me free; and though condemned on earth, I know that I am absolved in heaven!"

He again seated himself at his table, and read in that tome with silver clasps.

This solitary prisoner was Anne Du Bourg, a man, who feared not man. Once a merciful judge in that august tribunal, upon whose voice hung the life and death of those, who were persecuted for conscience' sake, he was now himself an accused,—a convicted heretic, condemned to the baptism of fire, because he would not unrighteously condemn others. He had dared to plead the cause of suffering humanity before that dread tribunal, and in the presence of the king himself to declare, that it was an offence to the majesty of God to shed man's blood in his name. Six weary months,—from June to December,—he had lain a prisoner in that dungeon, from which a death by fire was soon to set him free. Such was the clemency of Henry the Second!

Digitized by Google

As the prisoner read, his eyes were filled with tears. He still gazed upon the printed page, but it was a blank before his eyes. His thoughts were far away amid the scenes of his childhood, amid the green valleys of Riom, and the Golden Mountains of Auvergne. Some simple word had called up the vision of the past. He was a child again. He was playing with the pebbles of the brook,—he was shouting to the echo of the hills,—he was praying at his mother's knee, with his little hands clasped in hers.

This dream of childhood was broken by the grating of bolts and bars, as the jailor opened his prison door. A moment afterwards, his former colleague, De Harley, stood at his side.

"Thou here!" exclaimed the prisoner, surprised at the visit. "Thou in the dungeon of an heretic! On what errand hast thou come?"

"On an errand of mercy," replied De Harley. "I come to tell the———"

"That the hour of my death draws near?"

"That thou mayst still be saved."

"Yes; if I bear false witness against my God—barter heaven for earth—an eternity for a few brief days of worldly existence. Lost, thou shouldst say,—lost, not saved!"

"No! saved!" cried De Harley with warmth; "saved from a death of shame and an eternity of wo! Renounce this false doctrine—this abominable heresy—and return again to the bosom of the church, which thou dost rend with strife and dissention."

"God judge between thee and me, which has embraced the truth."

"His hand already smites thee."

"It has fallen more heavily upon those who so unjustly persecute me. Where is the king?—he who said, that with his own eyes he would behold me perish at the stake?—he, to whom the undaunted Du Faur cried, like Elijah to Ahab, It is thou, who troublest Israel! Where is the king?—called through a sudden and violent death to the judgment seat of heaven?—Where is Minard, the persecutor of the just?—Slain by the hand of an assassin! It was not without reason, that I said to him, when standing before my accusers, Tremble! believe the word of one, who is about to appear before God; thou likewise shalt stand there soon,—thou, that sheddest the blood of the children of peace. He has gone to his account before me."

"And that menace has hastened thine own condemnation. Minard was slain by the Huguenots, and it is whispered, that thou wert privy to his death."

"This at least might have been spared a dying man!" replied the prisoner, much agitated by so unjust and so unexpected an accusation. "As I hope for mercy hereafter, I am innocent of the blood of this man, and of all knowledge of so foul a crime. But tell me, hast thou come here only to embitter my last moments with such an accusation as this? If so, I pray thee, leave me. My moments are precious. I would be alone."

"I came to offer thee life, freedom, and happiness."

"Life—freedom—happiness! At the price thou hast set upon them, I scorn them all! Had the apostles and martyrs of the early christian church listened to such paltry bribes as these, where were now the faith in which we trust! These holy men of old shall answer for me. Hear what Justin Martyr says in his earnest appeal to Antonine the Pious, in behalf of the Christians, who in his day were unjustly loaded with public odium and oppression.

He opened the volume before him and read:

"I could wish you would take this also into consideration, that what we say is really for your own good; for it is in our power at any time to escape your torments, by denying the faith, when you question us about it; but we scorn to purchase life at the expense of a lie; for our souls are winged with a desire of a life of eternal duration and purity, of an immediate conversation with God, the father and maker of all things. We are in haste to be confessing and finishing our faith; being fully persuaded, that we shall arrive at this blessed state, if we approve ourselves to God by our works, and, by our obedience, express our passion for that divine life, which is never interrupted by any clashing evil."

The Catholic and the Huguenot reasoned long and earnestly together; but they reasoned in vain. Each was firm in his belief; and they parted to meet no more on earth.

On the following day Du Bourg was summoned before his judges to receive his final sentence. He heard it unmoved, and with a prayer to God, that he would pardon those who had condemned him according to their consciences. He then addressed his judges in an oration full of power and eloquence. It closed with these words:

"And now, ye judges, if indeed you hold the sword of God as ministers of his wrath, to take vengeance upon those who do evil, beware, I charge you beware, how you condemn us. Consider well what evil we have done; and before all things, decide whether it be just, that we should listen unto you, rather than unto God. Are you so drunken with the wine-cup of the great sorceress, that you drink poison for nourishment? Are you not those, who make the people sin, by turning them away from the service of God? And if you regard more the opinion of men than of heaven, in what esteem are you held by other nations and principalities and powers, for the martyrdoms you have caused in obedience to this blood-stained Phalaris?—God grant, thou cruel tyrant, that by thy miserable death, thou may'st put an end to our groans!

Why weep ye? What means this delay? Your hearts are heavy within you. Your consciences are haunted by the judgment of God. And thus it is, that the condemned rejoice in the fires you have kindled, and think they never live better, than in the midst of consuming flames. Torments affright them not,—insults enfeeble them not,—their honour is redeemed by death—he that dies is the conqueror, and the conquered, he that mourns.

No! whatever snares are spread for us, whatever suffering we endure, you cannot separate us from the love of Christ. Strike then—slay—grind us to powder! Those that die in the Lord shall live again; we shall all be raised together. Condemn me as you will—I am a Christian; yes, I am a Christian, and am ready to die for the glory of our Lord—for the truth of the evangelists.

Digitized by Google

Quench, then, your fires! Let the wicked abandon his way, and return unto the Lord, and he will have compassion on him. Live—be happy—and meditate on God, ye Judges! As for me, I go rejoicing to my death. What wait ye for! Lead me to the scaffold!"

They bound the prisoner's hands, and leading him forth from the council-chamber, placed him upon the cart, that was to bear him to the Place de Grève. Before and behind marched a guard of five hundred soldiers; Du Bourg was beloved by the people, and a popular tumult was apprehended. The day was overcast and sad; and ever and anon the sound of the tolling bell mingled its dismal clang with the solemn notes of the funeral march. They soon reached the place of execution, which was already filled with a dense and silent crowd. In the centre stood the gallows with a pile of faggots beneath it, and the hangman, with a burning torch in his hand. But this funeral apparel inspired no terror in the heart of Du Bourg. A look of triumph beamed from his eye, and his countenance shone like that of an angel. With his own hands he divested himself of his outer garments and gazing round upon the breathless and sympathizing crowd, exclaimed:

"My friends; I come not hither as a thief or a murderer; but it is for the gospel's sake!"

A cord was then fastened round his waist, and he was drawn up into the air. At the same moment the burning torch of the executioner was applied to the faggots beneath, and the thick volumes of smoke concealed the martyr from the horror-stricken crowd. One stifled groan arose from all that vast multitude, like the moan of the sea; and all was hushed again, save the crackling of the faggots, and at intervals the funeral knell, that smote the very soul. The quivering flames darted upward and around; and an agonizing cry broke from the murkey cloud:

"My God! My God! forsake me not, that I forsake not thee!"

The wind lifted the reddening smoke, like a veil, and the form of the martyr was seen to fall into the fire beneath, that glowed like a furnace seven times heated. In a moment it rose again, its garments all in flame; and again the faint, half-smothered cry of agony was heard:

"My God! My God! forsake me not, that I forsake not thee!"

Once more the quivering body descended into the flames; and once more it was lifted into the air, a blackened, burning cinder. Again, and again this hellish mockery of baptism was repeated; till the martyr with a despairing, suffocating voice, exclaimed:

"O God! I cannot die!"

The chief executioner came forward, and either in mercy to the dying man, or through fear of the populace, threw a noose over his neck, and strangled the almost lifeless victim. At the same moment, the chord which held the body was loosened, and it fell into the fire to rise no more. And thus was consumated the martyrdom of the Baptism of Fire.

IDLE WORDS.

I have a high sense of the virtue and dignity of the female character; and could not, by any means, be thought to attribute to the ladies emphatically, the fault here spoken of. But I have remarked it in some of my friends, who, in all but this, were among the loveliest of their sex. In such, the blemish is more distinct and striking, because so strongly contrasted with the superior delicacy and loveliness of their natures.

"My God!" the beauty oft exclaimed
With deep impassioned tone—
But not in humble Prayer she named
The High and Holy one.

'Twas not upon the bended knee,
With soul upraised to heaven—
Pleading, with heart felt agony,
That she might be forgiven.

'Twas not in heavenly strains to raise
To the great Source of good
Her daily offering of praise,
Her song of gratitude.

But in the gay and thoughtless crowd,
And in the festive hall,
'Mid scenes of mirth and mockery proud,
She named the Lord of All.

She called upon that awful name,
When laughter loudest rang—
Or when the blush of triumph came—
Or disappointment's pang!

The idlest thing that flatt'ry knew,
The most unmeaning jest,
From those sweet lips profanely drew,
Names of the Holiest.

I thought how sweet that voice would be,
Breathing this prayer to heaven—
"My God, I worship only thee;
O, be my sins forgiven!"

LINES

Extracted from an unpublished Poem.

"Oh, believe not the tears that in torrents are rushing
"Unnoticed, unchecked, down the colourless cheek,
"Oh! believe not the sobs from the bursting heart gushing
"A sacred, a deep rooted sorrow bespeak."

Prize Song—Hosea.

No, 'tis not the eye dimm'd with weeping and sadness,
That tells the dark tale of a desolate heart;
It is not the soul that is frenzied with madness,
Can tell the deep pangs that its blighting imparts.

Oh! when the lov'd idol at whose cherish'd shrine
So often in fond adoration we've knelt,
Is torn from the spot, and the heart must resign
Each hope that it clung to, each wish that it felt.

Then, then, can the tear tell the torture of feeling?
Oh no, as it rose 'twould congeal in the eye,
And calm, settled gloom o'er the mourner's heart stealing
He would hide all his sorrows, and silently die.

Full many a cheek, that with smiles may be lighted,
Is a mask to the heart that is with'ring beneath,
As the core of the tree may be perish'd and blighted,
Tho' freshness and fragrance around it may breathe.

Digitized by Google

THE SOIREE MUSICALE.

From "Gale Middleton," a new novel, just published by Carey, Lea & Blanchard.

Where now, ye lying vanities of life,
Ye ever-tempting, ever-cheating train!
Where are you now? and what is your amount?
Vexation, disappointment, and remorse.—THOMPSON.

It happened that, on the day fixed by the Duchess of Harrowgate for the musical party in Portland Place, Sir Matthew, having some official business to transact in his capacity of alderman, with the common councilmen of his ward, had engaged a party of them to dine with him afterwards at the London Tavern, a circumstance very acceptable to Lady Middleton, who, knowing his boon companions of the city to be no less staunch topers than himself, had no apprehension of seeing him return home until long after the departure of her fashionable guests. How she had toiled and tormented herself in all the preliminary arrangements; how keenly she had calculated the mode in which the greatest display could be reconciled with the smallest expense, so as to combine magnificence with meanness; how she had racked her imagination and exhausted her taste in arranging the decorations for the rooms, and the ornaments for the supper table; how long and deeply she had meditated upon the new dresses to be worn by herself and her daughter—these and a thousand other hows, whys, and wherefores, "the willing Muse shall tell." Suffice it to state, that all was at length completed to her entire satisfaction; the great, the important, the long expected night had arrived; the drawing-rooms, hung with rich draperies, and brilliantly illuminated with wreath-entwined lamps, lustres, and candelabra, seemed to anticipate, by their joyous aspect, the gay and glittering pageant of which they were shortly to be the scene; every thing, in short, was ready, and every thing wore a look of cheerful expectation, unless we may except the bass-viols, violoncellos, and other musical instruments deposited in a little orchestra, fitted up at the extremity of the suite. These vehicles of harmonious sound, which had so often enraptured a polite audience, and were about to do so again, appeared, by their grave aspect, to be wrapped up in the dignity of their own silence, and to be either feeding upon the recollection of their past exploits, or to be seriously perpending what they should next achieve. The leader's violin, supported by a music-book, was evidently consulting the bow, twisted beneath its bridge; the subordinate instruments were not less obviously listening to the conference; and as to a portly bass reclining against the wall in a brown study, you might have sworn that he was weighing the respective merits of Rossini and Mozart. Perhaps we may have erred in thus interpreting the meditations of these inanimate occupants of the orchestra; but as to the significant and serious air of self-importance which they severally assumed, we speak without the smallest fear of contradiction.

Lady Middleton's good taste, of which we have already made honourable mention, shone conspicuously in the embellishments of the apartments, which were at once chaste and rich; sufficiently resplendent to stimulate and delight, but not so gorgeous as to dazzle and satiate the spectator, or to offend him by an air of ostentation. In her personal appearance the same nice tact was perceptible. Other wives, circumstanced like herself, might have thought themselves justified, considering the great reputed wealth of Sir Matthew, in bedizening themselves with diamonds, and challenging the admiration which the high and low vulgar willingly concede to such evidence of opulence. Aware of her origin, though she did as much as possible to forget it, and determined not to afford a plea for any sneering imputations upon civic finery, Lady Middleton left her jewels in their box, and, avoiding all attempts at magnificence, only sought to render her attire as elegant and as becoming as possible.

As a special favour, she had procured from Lady Barbara Rusport a list of the company to be invited, with an intimation, however, that some addition might be subsequently made to the number. Over this catalogue, many names of which appertained to members of the high and mighty exclusives, superlatives, and inaccessibles, had she brooded with the exultation of a little mind, which tells that it is about to triumph over and mortify all its competitors. Of these names she had extracted the most fashionable conspicuous, to weave into a variety of newspaper paragraphs, writing them with her own hand, and seldom concluding her employment without ejaculating in a tone of triumphant delight, "So much for Mrs. Maltby! I will take care she shall have all the papers. Poor thing! she will be half killed with envy!" Many people are in the habit of imputing malignant feelings to those whom they dislike, as an excuse for their own; a species of self-vindication in which it will be seen that Lady Middleton was not deficient, although, in point of fact, there was little or no ground for the charge against her sister, and, consequently, no valid pretext for her own jealous and uncharitable feelings. "There will be no small uproar," she continued, "among my old acquaintance, when they find that not one of them is invited to my party; but as I shall be under the necessity of cutting them when I have the entrée among the exclusives, it may be as well to bring our separation to immediate issue, and give them their dismissal at once. It is only to be never at home to them when I am in the house, and never to see them when I am abroad, and the whole affair will be settled in three months."

This soliloquy was interrupted by the entrance of Cecilia, who, under her mother's directions, was attired with an elegant simplicity, though the effect of her well-turned and well-dressed figure was neutralised by her inexpressive features and general air of insipidity. "I am sorry that we are not to have Sir Dennis tonight," said the mother, "he assures me that he could easily have accomplished it, through some of his noble friends who are acquainted with the Duchess; but as he abhors a crowd, has no particular penchant for music, and abominates trouble of all sorts, he declares that he would not be at pains of applying for a ticket."

To this observation the daughter made some

Digitized by Google

unimportant reply, and, as they walked up and down the room, both endeavouring to assume an air of self-possession, which was foreign to their hearts, they fell into conversation upon the approaching entertainment, each hoping that the Duchess and Lady Barbara would come early, as there would otherwise be so much awkwardness in their being totally unacquainted with their guests. It was not without a sudden start of the body, and some little trepidation of spirit, that they heard the first thundering knock, which seemed sufficiently consequential to announce the desiderated patroness of the entertainment; but, to their great disappointment, it proved to be a party of titled strangers, whose names they could not catch, so miserably were they blundered by Dupin, who Gallicized one half of what he heard, and perverted the other moiety into gibberish. Carriages now rolled in uninterrupted succession into Portland Place; loud and incessant became the appeals to the knocker; Dupin announced a whole Babel of unintelligible appellations; peers, peeresses, and commoners, poured through the open door; the drawing-rooms began to fill with turbaned chaperons, rouged staring dowagers, tittering young ladies in tulle dresses and wreaths, roué-looking elderly gentlemen with bald heads and spindle shanks, and here and there a solitary juvenile beau. Tongues chattered in every variety of intonation, from the loud confidence of the oracular and infallible peeress, to the lisp of the simpering debutante; plumes waved, diamonds glittered, and silks rustled; but still the Duchess and Lady Barbara did not make their appearance, and the embarrassment of Lady Middleton and her daughter, who, amidst all this interchange of recognitions and tittle-tattle, were no more noticed in their own house, than if they had been statues, increased with every passing minute. Evident as was the awkwardness of their situation, it excited not in their distinguished visitants the smallest attempt to remove it; they conducted themselves exactly as if they were in a theatre, or other public place, into which they had paid for admission. Upon these occasions there is a negative rudeness which none but the polite world can assume, and which is almost as offensive as a positive incivility. They who had first arrived, and who could not, therefore, fail to recognize the mistress of the mansion and her daughter, measured them superciliously through their glasses, and passed on with a cold stately indifference to criticise the rooms. There were but two unnoticed outcasts, and their situation spoke for itself, although many of the promenaders seemed to be quite unconscious of their presence, as with a condescending and patronising air they ejaculated—

"Really, now—all things considered, the rooms are by no means inelegant—I hadn't the least idea they could get up these things so decently in this part of the town—ar'n't you amazed, Lady Wriggleton?"

"Oh, never more so! quite an agreeable surprise. It must be confessed that the apartments are admirably fitted up, though I understand that Sir Matthew——— really I quite forget the old gentleman's name—is a citizen and alderman. How very odd!—exceedingly singular!—remarkable! People may well talk of the march of intellect!"

Pride, it is said, feels no pain; but even Lady Middleton, with all her pitiful ambition and grovelling aspirations, felt humiliated at being exposed to so much impertinence in her own house. Cecilia, abashed at the bold and almost contemptuous stare with which she was regarded, whenever she ventured to lift up her eyes, could have cried outright; and both the mother and daughter listened with increasing impatience for the announcement of the noble patroness, who was to introduce them to their visitants, and enable them to be at home in their own house.

At length they caught the welcome names of the Duchess of Harrowgate and Lady Barbara Rusport, when they were presented in form, first to her Grace, and, subsequently, to several of her friends; most of whom comported themselves with an air of stiff, cold, haughty condescension, little better, even in its assumed courtesy, than a direct insult. At this juncture a name was announced, which would have induced Lady Middleton to distrust the evidence of her ears, but that individual to whom it appertained was presently ushered into the drawing-room. It was no other than Mrs. Howard Maltby, who, having by some inexplicable means procured an introduction to the Duchess, had contrived to get invited to the party. Magnificently dressed, and looking provokingly well, she tripped up to the Duchess, made her a profound obeisance, smiled graciously on the mistress of the mansion, and then ran up to every individual with whom she was acquainted, in order to state that she came as the friend of the Duchess, not in virtue of her relationship to the lady of the house. Poor Lady Middleton was ready to sink into the earth with vexation. To mortify Mrs. Howard Maltby had been the main object of the party which she had collected together with so much management; and now to find that her sister had anticipated her in making the acquaintance of the Duchess, and outsparkled her in her own house, was beyond all human endurance. The victim, thus justly punished by the disappointment of her machinations and the recoil of her own angry feelings, writhed under the infliction; but good-breeding and conventional politeness enabled her to conceal her emotions beneath a smile more than usually bland and complacent. After the Duchess had gone through the form of presentation, leaning all the while on the arm of Miss Borradaile, she inquired for Gale Middleton; and, on learning that he had been compelled, on account of his health, to visit the country, she expressed her disappointment in terms that showed her to be out of humour, while her protegée brought her spectacles nearer to her eyes, and uttered a doleful and dissonant hem! From this moment her Grace, evidently piqued, introduced no more of her friends, but sank into an easy chair, gazing at the assemblage with a vacant unconcern, and venting her spleen upon her unfortunate toady; for Lady Barbara, anticipating this burst of peevishness, had made her escape.

Lady Middleton, already distressed and disconcerted, saw that something had annoyed her illustrious patroness, though she knew not what, and, by way of supplying some new object of attention, wished to expedite the music, as the performers had, by this time, mostly taken their positions in the orchestra; but even this she hardly knew how to accomplish without contravening the instructions she had received from Lady Barbara, and appearing vulgar, which it was her special object to avoid. "Laissez faire," was to be her motto, and an absolute nonchalence was to mark her demeanour. Far from caring for her guests, she was not even to wear the semblance of caring for herself, so that she wandered disconsolately up and down her rooms, with an anxious and aching heart, but smiling and gracious countenance, not knowing to whom to speak, and spoken to by none: wishing the concert to begin, and yet afraid to give any orders for accelerating it, lest she should exhibit an unfashionable empressement. For want of proper arrangements beforehand, a tedious day ensued, but the leader, at length, gave his preparatory flourish, the company took their seats, the place of honour being appropriated to the Duchess, and the concert at length began.

Digitized by Google

It exhibited the usual features presented by such entertainments among a people who pay more and care less for music than any other upon the face of the earth. The timid young ladies, who had been afraid lest their voices should be overheard, now ventured to flirt and chatter, like parrots, under cover of some of the finest pieces of Bethooven and Rossini; while the dowagers and old women gossips of either sex, seemed determined that their tongues should keep tune with the fiddlesticks, getting into a louder key with every crescendo movement, as if resolved to "to ride on the whirlwind and direct the storm." Had Orpheus himself played to such a herd of human animals, he would have set nothing dancing but their tongues. Even the vocal performers failed to command more than an occasional attention, most of the company being evidently of opinion that no voice was so sweet as their own; while all afforded a most audible and irrefragable proof, that even the taciturn English may be stimulated into loquacity by really good music. Upon this occasion, however, the spectators, we cannot call them auditors, were not less enthusiastic than discriminating in their applause, invariably lavishing the most ecstatic "bravos!" upon those songs or pieces to which they had paid the least attention. To be sure, they reserved these marks of favour for the conclusion, so that they were perhaps merely expressing their natural delight at being brought so much nearer to the termination of the concert. By the help of incessant discourse and occasional plaudit, it did terminate at length, all parties, and especially those who had been the most incessant talkers, agreeing that it had been a remarkably good concert, and had gone off uncommonly well. Let us not, however, be misunderstood as imputing to our countrymen a uniform indifference to the charms of music. When a private concert is to be followed by a supper, the two or three pieces are sure to collect a numerous and eager audience, a fact that was illustrated at Lady Middleton's, where a knot of officers, a bevy of beaux, and two or three vieux garçons; all of whom, if they had no stomach for music, had, at least, an excellent ear for champagne and Roman punch, simultaneously made their appearance full three minutes before the commencement of the finale.

The performers, doubtless very much flattered by the vehement applauses they had received for not being heard, now took their departure, and the company began to perambulate the rooms, waiting for the announcement of supper, when a disturbance sounded up the stairs from the hall, of which we must give a passing explanation. Foiled in all her attempts to procure a ticket for the party, and yet determined to make a bold push for admission, Mrs. Burroughs had arranged with her friend Dupin, whose services she had procured by a bribe, that she should be smuggled into the drawing-room during the melée, that usually precedes the going to supper. For the music she cared not, but she coveted the éclat of being present; and she only desired to be in time for the supper, because her dear little darlings were so fond of bonbons. Attired, accordingly, in her new figured silk dress, and bedizened with all her jewels, baubles, and gold chains, she presented herself in Portland Place; but, unfortunately for the success of her scheme, the Duchess had ordered that none should be admitted who did not bring their cards of invitation, and, to guard against interlopers, had directed that one of her own servants should be stationed in the hall. Faithful to her orders, this man put a veto upon her introduction; and Mrs. Burroughs, in the fear of a detection that would not place her in a very enviable light, made a precipitate retreat, leaving her battle to be fought by Dupin, who lavished abuse in broken English upon the Duchess' menial, and would, probably, have received a broken head in return, had he not taken to his heels and sought sanctuary in the drawing-room.

Here the company were still lounging about in different groups, beguiling the time with such elevated and edifying conversation, as is usually heard in similar assemblages. After complimenting one another on their mutual good looks, their divine toques, delicious turbans, and exquisite tiaras, the elderly ladies parted from their dear friends with a most affectionate smile, and then whispered to their companions,—"Never saw her look so ill in my life,—a frightful head-dress, but, poor thing! she never had an atom of taste." The young ladies flirted, and simpered, and talked nonsense, almost as glibly as the dandy danglers by their side; while the elderly gentlemen, gathered together in solemn conclave, discoursed with a becoming gravity of the winners and losers at the Newmarket meeting, of the new female opera-dancer, and of a recently discovered intrigue in fashionable life, upon the subject of which they evinced a proper sense of morality, unanimously condemning the parties for the irremissible crime of—suffering themselves to be found out.

Tom Rashleigh, for thus familiarly was he always termed, who affected, upon every occasion, to be the very latest of the late, and who had rather hear the liquid music of out-poured champagne, than the finest strains of Paganini, now made his way into the drawing-room, where his progress was presently arrested by the Duchess of Harrowgate, to whose arm-chair he was summoned. Her Grace's motives for wishing to conciliate the man she most disliked, we have already stated; but though she feared him, she found a certain pleasure in his society, for he sometimes said droll things, sometimes abused her best friends, and, in either case, administered a momentary excitement to her stagnant faculties. "Dear Mr. Rashleigh!" she exclaimed, "I am glad you are come, but how shockingly late you are! This affair is awfully dull; I have not found the least pleasure in it, hitherto, and now I have lost Miss Borradaile."

Digitized by Google

"Surely that must be a pleasure. I congratulate your Grace on the loss, and recommend you to offer a handsome reward to any one who shall find and not bring her back."

"Nonsense! do tell me whether you have passed her in the melée."

"Oh, yes! I saw her just now—quite plain."

"I understand the meaning of your emphasis, but I will have no reflections on poor Miss Borradaile, who does not make any pretensions to beauty."

"I don't know why she should not, since she lays claim to talents."

"Why should you always be so censorious, Mr. Rashleigh?"

"Why should others wish to monopolize all the scandal to themselves?"

"You do not glance at me, I hope. No injurious rumours can be laid at my door: I am merely an echo."

"Echo never begins a story, and in babbling about what she has heard from others, makes it less at every repetition. Far be it from me to doubt that your Grace acts up to this character."

"Nay, our dull gibes may be excused; they fall to the ground by their own weight."

"But mine, your Grace would infer, being pointed with wit, and sometimes barbed with epigrammatic verse, fly like an arrow, and seldom suffer their object to escape without a wound. Ay, there's the rub. Doubtless you think, as others have done, that I deserve to smart for my smartness. I might be as malignant as others, if I would only be as stupid. Many thanks for the implied flattery. I never knew a man who would refuse a compliment to his head at the expense of his heart. But I differ from your Grace; there is a species of slander, which, being adapted by its ponderous dulness to every capacity, has a wider range than any other: like a leaden bullet, its heaviness only enables it to go farther, and hit harder."

"Nay, I am not in the humour for arguing, nor, indeed, for anything else. You know how anxious I have been to get a good lion for my next grand party. I had already exhibited the man who performs upon his chin, and the child who plays the Battle of Prague upon a penny trumpet, and the Swiss milk-maid, who yells the Ranz des Vaches; and for my coming soirée, I had made sure of securing the son of our civic host, about whose strange adventure in the church-yard all the world have been lately talking; but he has taken himself off into Sussex—was ever any thing so provoking! One cannot easily get another man who has been buried alive."

"Not in London, Duchess! in the country they are common enough."

"They say that the poor young man's intellects, not of the strongest order before, will never recover from the fright."

"Talking of frights, yonder is Miss Borradaile, walking arm-in-arm with old Lady Totteridge, who pretends to have a nervous affection in the head—the only thing she has in it, by the by—in order that she may display her diamond tiara to more glittering advantage. I wonder that your protegée should select for her companion a deaf, dull, peevish crone, who, were it not for the Thames Tunnel, would be the greatest bore in existence."

"It must be confessed, that Miss Borradaile is somewhat singular in her tastes: she always attaches herself to what every body else dislikes."

"I never understood until now the secret of her inordinate self-love."

"You are prejudiced against her; in solid attainments, I can assure you, that there are very few of either sex who come near her."

"They are quite right; I wouldn't, for one. Ah! I do her an injustice; I see she can admire something besides herself, for she is evidently eulogising the drapery of yonder curtains, and, in common candour, I feel free to confess that the apartments are fitted up with an inexplicable taste, considering that they belong to a PARVENU a roturier, an actual bonâ-fide alderman, and a native of the terra incognita, eastward of Temple Bar. We shall soon hear of Hottentots building habitable hotels." It required no small impudence in a man of the most obscure origin to affect this fashionable arrogance, but Rashleigh had upon all occasions so confidently sneered at upstarts and fellows of low birth that he had actually extorted credit for being a person of good family. "Pray, Duchess," he continued, "did you notice that beautiful cast of Minerva in the hall?"

"No!"

"Then I will speak about it to Lady Bridget O'Leary; she, you know, must have seen it, for she has always a cast in her eye."

"How can you be so illiberal? her's is by no means a squint, but an agreeable obliquity of vision. Her admirer, Jack Rutland, thinks it a beauty."

"Ay, her eye is like a bowl; its bias takes it out of the straight line, only that it may more certainly hit the Jack. Apropos of little deviations from the straight line, where is your friend, Lady Barbara Rusport?"

"Just now she was sitting at the window of the boudoir, gazing at the moon, of which she has always been fond."

"That I can understand, for there is a man in it."

"I cannot listen to such innuendoes. Would you insinuate that Lady Barbara———?"

"I only say that she is a philanthropist. A person so charitable as your Grace will hardly hold this to be a disparagement."

"Really, Mr. Rashleigh, I do not exactly comprehend you."

"Truly, Duchess, I can very easily believe it; but, hark! there is the supper bell, which few will deny to be the best and pleasantest music they have heard to-night. Shall I have the honour of escorting your Grace down stairs?"

Digitized by Google

Lady Middleton had requested the most distinguished nobleman present to offer his arm to the Duchess, which he tendered accordingly; but so completely was this dictatress of the fasionable world enslaved by her fear of ridicule, that, in defiance of all established rules, and to the profound horror of many a "tenth transmitter of of a foolish face," she pleaded a prior promise to Rashleigh, and suffered him to conduct her to the supper-room.

A considerable quantity of plate, with a variety of handsome ornaments, having been hired for the decoration of the tables, they presented a very beautiful appearance; the banquet was elegant without any gewgaw tawdriness, and sufficient without superabundance; yet the comfort of the whole entertainment was spoiled by some of those paltry economies from which Lady Middleton could not refrain, even in the midst of a profuse expenditure. Rather than pay the full price to men accustomed to wait at table, she had engaged a cheaper and less expert set of assistants, who, not knowing where to find any thing that was wanted, and unable to comprehend the broken English of the sputtering Dupin, ran over each other, spilled the liquids and the viands upon the guests, and filled the whole apartment with most admired disorder. The champagne, being from Sir Matthew's cellars, was of excellent quality, but as her ladyship would not incur the expense of ice, which she declared to be unnecessary, and had moreover ordered the wine to be deposited upon the table beforehand lest it should be purloined by the servants, it had become so warm as to be scarcely drinkable. Nor had she been more fortunate in his Roman punch, which, having been furnished by an inferior confectioner, who supplied it at a lower price, was little better than a libel upon the exquisite and unrivalled beverage of which it bore the name.

As some of the young sprigs of fashion conducted themselves very much as if they had been at a tavern, their dissatisfaction at these epicurean delinquencies came to the cognizance of Lady Middleton, not only by their distasteful looks, but by very unequivocal exclamations of surprise and disappointment, which filled her with inexpressible mortification. Though she could not hear Tom Rashleigh, she gathered from his manner, and the sneering laugh of his immediate circle, that the wag who affected an ultra and superlative epicurism, was unmercifully quizzing the contents both of the long and the green glasses. It annoyed her also to perceive that the Duchess, evidently ennuyée, notwithstanding the sallies of the witling at her side, looked frequently and impatiently at her watch, as if anxious for the hour at which she had ordered her carriage.

In spite of these partial failures, the banquet seemed to be passing off with a tolerable cheerfulness, so far as might be judged by the commingled clatter of tongues, glasses, and plates. A supper-party is almost always pleasant and sociable, and the present offered no exception to the festive and hilarious character of such entertainments, so far as the guests were concerned; though the mistress of the mansion and her daughter were not participants in the general gaiety. With a serene and complacent smile mantling over her features, the former sat upon thorns; while Cecilia, abashed, and unnoticed, and feeling herself completely out of her element, sighed more earnestly for the conclusion of the entertainment than she had ever desired its arrival. The general exhilaration, however, continued to increase; the madeira and frontinac, which were pronounced admirable, seemed gradually to thaw the torpor of even the most frozen fashionable; the bonbon crackers exploded with a sharp report, that justified an affected exclamation of alarm from some, and a derisive simper from others; the significant mottoes elicited pleasant titterings; smiling countenances, white teeth, and sparkling eyes were to be seen in every direction; the solemn foppery of haut ton had been so far forgotten, that an unequivocal, we had almost said a hearty, laugh had more than once been heard; in short, the whole party was at its very acmé of enjoyment, when a sudden and obstreperous irruption of strange figures into the banquetting-room, filled some with terror, and all with utter amazement, instantly silencing every sound, except the screams of the more timid young ladies.

We have recorded that Sir Matthew had engaged a party of common-council-men to dine with him at the London Tavern, all of whom were as unflinching topers as himself. At a late hour of the night some of these revellers were still at table, and still calling for fresh bottles or shouting Bacchanalian songs, when, upon a proposal being made that some devilled turkey should be ordered for supper, Sir Matthew ejaculated—"Hey, what?—do you want some—hick!—supper I mean. Lots to be had at my house. Mag has got the platter-faced Duchess, and a set of scarecrow Countesses to listen to—hick!—twedle dum twee, and squally-wally. More fool she:—never mind: can't make a silken sow of a purse's ear. Tell 'ee what, lads—'Spose we tumble in upon 'em, and help 'em to—hick! finish the—hick!—capital fun! frighten platter-face and the scrags of mutton out of their wits. Hick, hick, hick! Ha, ha, ha!"

For an enterprise that was to begin with a wild frolic and end with a supper and champagne, his auditors, who were still more intoxicated than himself, were exactly in cue, and they accordingly received it with a shout of assent. Sir Matthew, scarcely able to stand, less, however, from ebriety than from his chuckling laughter, as he thought of the astonishment which his unexpected appearance would excite, invested himself in his alderman's gown; his companions put on their robes; and the whole party reeled into a hackney-coach, shrieking a verse of one of their standard Bacchanalian songs—

What's life but a frolic, a song and a laugh,
My toast shall be this, while I've liquor to quaff,
May mirth and good fellowship always abound,
Boys, fill up a bumper, and let it go round.

On descending from their vehicle in Portland Place, they found lying on the hall table, some of the instruments belonging to the performers,

Digitized by Google

when each, "for madness ruled the hour," the motion of the coach having completed the intoxication of the whole party, imitated the example of Sir Matthew, by snatching up a fiddle, followed him to the door of the supper-room, and burst into the midst of the assemblage, all scraping their violins in a dissonant screech, and yelling in chorus—

Boys, fill up a bumper, and let it go round.

In the belief of many of the guests that this uncouth and boisterous pageant constituted a portion of the night's entertainment, and that the performers were destined to enact some species of mask, the first cries and faint screams of the females were rather indicative of surprise than dismay; while the rest preserved silence, in order to gather, if possible, the meaning of the scene. Meanwhile, Sir Matthew, still plying his screeching fiddle and hiccoughing his Bacchanalian chorus, advanced to the head of the table, and, fixing his fuddled grapy eye upon her Grace of Harrowgate, stammered out—"What, hey, are you the moon-faced Duchess?—hick! very glad to see—no—ar'nt glad at all—not my doing—all Meg's—hick! But now you're come I'll give 'ee a buss, not—notwith—notwithstand—hick!"

The first person that seemed to comprehend Sir Matthew's real plight, was the Honourable Augustus Fortescue Sidney Clavering, a sprig of nobility and a coronet of dragoons, who, after peering at him through a jewelled eye-glass, ejaculated with a distastful look, and in an effeminate lisping voice—"Ath I hope to be thaved! the nathty fellow'th beathtly drunk!" This had already been discovered to be the case with the Baronet's companions, who, in the fond, maudlin blindness of intoxication, had offered to salute some of the mummy-like dowagers, and rouged scraggy countesses, occasioning a shrieking dismay, and confusion, which it would be difficult to describe. In the midst of this hubbub, the reeling Alderman put his audacious arm round the fat throat of the Duchess, and attempted to salute her cheek, when her Grace, struggling to avoid the indignity, escaped from the embrace, leaving in his arm not only her toque and its splendid ornaments, but the entire wig that concealed the ravages of time upon her head.

Heavens and earth! was ever such a profanation known? The dictatress of the haut ton; the queen of fashion, the autocratrix of the exclusives and the inaccessibles, to be thus exhibited to the élite of her subjects, sitting upon her throne with a bald pate!! Even the inebriated Sir Matthew seemed, by his solid and bewildered stare, to be struck aghast at this unexpected apparition of a bare scalp; but, as he discovered the cause of the phenomenon, he exclaimed—"Hey, what? little scull, big body—like a turnip on a sack of—Hick, hick, hick! Ha, ha, ha!"

The age of chivalary hath not altogether passed away. An indignant cry of—"Knock him down!" burst from the Knights and Cavaliers who had witnessed this inexplicable outrage, and several of those who surrounded the offender prepared to obey the summons; but the object of their wrath, always as bold in spirit as he was powerful in body, and enflamed by the vinous valour that delights in a scuffle, no sooner perceived their intention, than he brandished his violin as a weapon of defence, and whirled it round him with a sudden and vehement swing, which brought its extremity in collision with the scull of the Honourable Augustus Fortescue Sidney Clavering. The hollow sound that ensued, might have proceeded either from the instrument, or from the cranium upon which it impinged; but the effects upon the respective vacua were very different. With a lugubrious groan, the smashed violin breathed its last upon the spot, while the unwounded cornet merely measured his length upon the floor, beholding an incalculable number of additional lights, and ejaculating "Oh, the thocking, thanguinary thavage! Thave me! thave me! I am quite thure he hath thplit my thcull!" He had nothing farther, however, to apprehend from his assailant, for Sir Matthew having overreached himself in the blow, tumbled beside his prostrate victim, and was utterly unable to rise again from the floor.

In other quarters of the room two or three of the common-council-men, not less pugnacious than their leader, struggled and fought with those who endeavoured to secure them; but they were forcibly expelled, and their companions fairly carried out of the apartment in the simultaneous rush, and dispersed them in search of their respective carriages, amid hysterical cries, and indignant execrations, and vociferous orders, and clamorous footmen, and swearing coachmen, and a general confusion, such as had never before been witnessed in the respectable and well regulated purlieus of Portland Place. Either on foot or in carriages, for the withdrawing of the visitants rather resembled a disorderly flight, than an ordinary dispersion, the whole of the fashionables had presently betaken themselve to more appropriate haunts, leaving the scene of recent uproar to a melancbly tranquility. Although the Duchess, by the assistance of some of her friends, had almost instantly re-established herself in her toque and peruke, she was too much mortified by the exposure she had suffered, and her apprehension of the ridicule which would be entailed upon her by Tom Rashleigh's satirical muse, to proceed to any other party; and she, accordingly, returned home in a most splenetic mood, vexed beyond all measure that she should have subjected herself to so much humiliation and annoyance, and yet not have succeeded in procuring the desiderated husband for Miss Borradaile.

Sir Matthew, the unconscious Marplot of all his lady's schemes and devices, had fallen fast asleep upon the floor, whence he was raised, and carried to bed in the arms of his servants. The weeping and trembling Cecilia—for she was both grieved and terrified out of her customary composure—had already obeyed the orders of her mother, by retiring to her apartment. Lady Middleton, shortly afterwards, did the same; but sleep, in the agitated state of her mind, being entirely out of the question, she threw herself into an arm-chair, covered her crimson face with her hands, as if she felt that she should never be able to show it again, and, bursting into an agony of tears, remained for a long time overwhelmed with a painful and humbling conflict of shame, rage and vexation.

Digitized by Google

Thus ended the grand soirée musicale, which had been planned and executed with so much care, cost, and contrivance, and which, from its first concoction to its final failure, had heaped upon the meanly ambitious Lady Middleton nothing but bitter disappointment and pitiable degradation.

From the New Monthly Magazine for August.

RECORDS OF PASSING THOUGHTS.

A SERIES OF SONNETS, BY MRS. HEMANS.

I.

A Vernal Thought.

O vestal Spring! 'midst thy victorious glow,
Far spreading o'er the awaken'd woods and plains,
And streams that bound to meet thee from their chains
Well might there lurk the shadow of a wo
For human hearts; and in the exulting flow
Of thy rich songs a melancholy tone,
Were we of mould all earthly; we alone,
Sever'd from thy great spell, and doom'd to go
Farther, still farther, from our sunny time,
Never to feel the breathings of our prime—
Never to flower again!—But we, O Spring!
Cheer'd by deep spirit-whispers not of earth,
Press to the regions of thy heavenly birth,
As here thy birds and flowers press on to bloom and sing.

II.

To the Sky.

Far from the rustlings of the polar-bough,
Which o'er my opening life wild music made,—
Far from the green hills with their feathery glow
And flashing streams, whereby my childhood play'd:—
In the dim city, 'midst the sounding flow
Of restless life, to thee in love I turn,
O thou rich Sky! and from thy splendors learn
How song-birds come and part, flowers wane and blow.
With thee all shapes of glory find their home;
And thou hast taught me well, majestic dome!
By stars, by sunsets, by soft clouds which rove
Thy blue expanse, or sleep in silvery rest,
That Nature's God hath left no place unblessed
With founts of beauty for the eye of love!

III.

On the Memorials of Immature Genius.

Oh! judge in thoughtful tenderness of those Who, richly dower'd for life, are called to die
Ere the soul's flame through storms hath won repose
In Truth's pure ether, unperturb'd and high.
Let their mind's relics claim a tasteful sigh!
Deem them but sad sweet fragments of a strain,
First notes of some yet struggling harmony,
By the strong rush, the crowding joy and pain
Of many inspirations met, and held
From its true sphere. Oh! soon it might have swell'd Majestically forth:—No doubt that He,
Whose touch mysterious may on earth dissolve
Those links of music, elsewhere will evolve
Their grand consummate hymn, from passion-gusts made free.

IV.

On Watching the Flight of a Skylark.

Upward and upward still! In pearly light
The clouds are steeped; the vernal spirit sighs
With bliss in every wind; and crystal skies
Woo thee, O Bird! to thy celestial height.
Bird, piercing heaven with music, thy free flight
Hath meaning for all bosoms,—most of all
For those wherein the rapture and the might
Of Poesy lie deep, and strive and burn
Their high place. Oh, heirs of Genius! learn
From the sky's bird your way!—no joy may fill
Your hearts—no gift of holy strength be won
To bless your songs, ye Children of the Sun,
Save by the answering flight—upward and upward still!

V.

A Thought of the Sea.

My earliest memories to thy shores are bound—
Thy solemn shores—thou ever-chanting Main!
The first rich sunsets, kindling thought profound
In my lone being, made thy restless plain
As the vast shining floor of some dread fane,
All paved with glass and fire! Yet oh, blue Deep!
Thou that no trace of human hearts dost keep,
Never to thee did Love, with silvery chain,
Draw my soul's dream, which through all nature sought
What waves deny—some bower for steadfast bliss;
A home to twine with fancy, feeling, thought,
As with sweet flowers. But chastened Hope for this
Now turns from Earth's green valleys, as from thee,
To that sole, changeless World where "there is no more sea."

VI.

Distant Sound of the Sea at Evening.

Yet, rolling far up some green mountain dale,
Oft let me hear, as oftimes I have heard,
Thy swell, thou Deep! when Eve calls home the bird,
And stills the wood; when summer tints grow pale,
Seen through the gathering of a dewy veil:
And peasant-steps are hastening to repose:
And gleaming flocks lie down, and flower-cups close,
To the last whisper of the falling gale.
Then, 'midst the dying of all other sound,
When the soul hears thy distant voice profound Lone worshipping, and knows that through the night
'Twill worship still, then most its anthem tone
Speaks to our being of the Eternal One Who girds tired Nature with unslumbering might!

THE PROPHETIC DEW-DROPS.

In a garden where flowrets were blooming wild,
One arid and sultry morning,
There restlessly wandered a beautiful child,
Whose sense was too clearly dawning:
"Ah, father!" he cried,
As the buds he eyed
That languidly drooped before him—
"The dew-drops to-day
Have been snatched away
Too soon, and we're left to deplore them!

Alas, not permitted to glitter on flowers,
As happier dew-drops have been,
That have sparkled at eve on the moonlight hours
Like fairy lamps o'er the scene,
And liv'd through the night
And the morning bright,
On the buds, till the noon of the day:
But the heat of the sun,
Or his wrath, has undone
These poor dew-drops, and chas'd them away!"

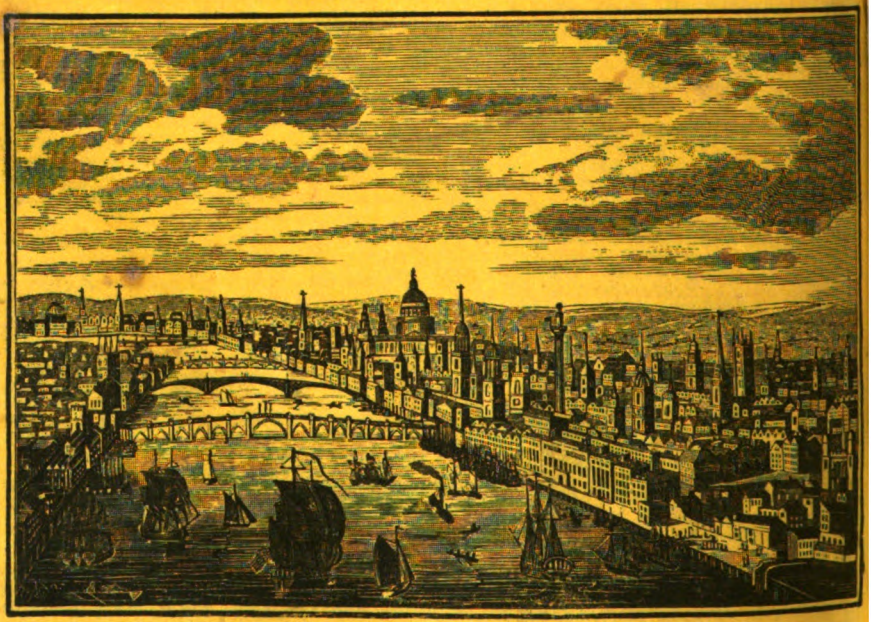
Thus had murmur'd the child, when a fleeting show'r,
Bore down from the darkening sky,
And a rainbow appear'd ere the closing hour,
As a beautiful arch upon high:
"See the drew-drops fair
In the rainbow there,
More brilliantly set than before!
So that which fades here,
In a purer sphere
Will re-bloom to be blighted no more!"

While thus spoke the father, how little he knew
That his words as prefiguring fell,
Or that the fair infant, soon fading from view,
Ah! would witness their truth but too well:
For this child of light
In the morning bright
Of his wisdom, too early given,
By sickness assailed,
Was even exhaled
As a dew-drop from earth into heaven.

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

St. Mark's Place, Venice.



River Thames, and City of London.

Digitized by Google

ST. MARK'S PLACE, VENICE.

The beautiful building in which was formerly deposited the Library of St. Mark, is situated on one side of the Piazza di S. Marco. The architect was Sansovino, to whose genius Venice was indebted for many of her most magnificent structures. Jacopo Tatti, who afterwards assumed the name of Sansovino, was born at Florence, about the year 1479, and became the pupil of a sculptor, Andrea Contucci da Monte a Sansovino. His labours at Florence having rendered him much celebrated, he transferred his studio to Rome, where he became known, not only as a sculptor, but also as an architect of the highest talent. On the sack of Rome, in 1527, Sansovino was compelled to fly, and retreated to Venice, intending from thence to proceed to the court of France, whither he had been invited. Having been called upon to superintend the affairs of the Church of St. Mark, he executed this duty so much to the satisfaction of the Senate, that he was appointed to the office of chief architect of the republic.

The first building erected in Venice, from the designs of Sansovino, was the Zecca, or Mint, which was followed by that of the Library. In the execution of this work, however, the reputation of Sansovino was greatly endangered. Owing to some unforseen cause, the roof of the Library fell in, an accident which was attributed by the Senate to the negligence of the architect, who was thrown into prison, heavily fined, and deprived of the office of protomaestro. From this confinement, however, he was soon liberated, and being restored to his official situation, he continued to ornament the city with his splendid and classical designs. The remainder of his life was spent by Sansovino at Venice, where he died in 1570, at the advanced age of ninety-one, having embellished that city not only with its most magnificent buildings, but also with many beautiful specimens of sculpture.

The Library of St. Mark is said to be indebted for its origin to the generosity of Petrarch. The poet had visited Venice in the character of Ambassador from the Visconti, to negotiate peace between the Republic and Genoa; and the consideration and respect with which he was received, appear to have produced an impression upon his mind highly favourable to the Venetians. Visiting the city on another occasion, he announced his intention of bequeathing to the republic his library. The Venetians gratefully accepted this inestimable present, which became the foundation of the Library of St. Mark. Amongst the manuscripts collected by Petrarch were one of Homer, presented to him by Nicholas Segoros, Ambassador from the Emperor of the East; a Sophocles, which he had received from Leontius Pilate, his instructor in the Greek language; a Latin translation of the Iliad and the Odyssey by the same person, copied by the hand of his pupil Boccaccio, together with the greater part of the works of Cicero, which the poet had himself transcribed.

Stimulated, probably, by the example of Petrarch, Cardinal Bessarion, in the year 1468, presented to the republic of Venice his rare collection of Greek and Latin manuscripts. In the letter which he addressed on this occasion to the Doge and Senate, he stated that, even from his boyhood, he had exerted all his labour, care and study, in the collection of books in every branch of literature. That, in his early youth, he had not only copied several volumes in his own hand, but had expended all the little money he could save in the purchase of manuscripts. That although he had ever been earnestly bent on such acquisitions, yet that, after the destruction of Constantinople, he had consumed his entire care, strength, power, and industry, in increasing his collection of the Greek writers; and that he had now selected the city of Venice as the depository of his library, on account of its admirable government, the number of Greeks who frequented it, and the benefits which he himself had derived from that city. This splendid gift was gratefully received by the Venetians, and by a decree of the Senate, was lodged in the ducal palace. The learned Sabellicus was the first librarian to whom the care of this collection was confided.

The chief benefactors to the Library of St. Mark, after its illustrious founders, Petrarch and Bessarion, were Geronymo Justiniani, Jacopo Nani, several members of the illustrious family of Contarini, Venturi Leonigo, Piero Morosini, and Nicolo Manuzzi. The librarians to whom the literary treasures of St. Mark were committed were of two classes, the superior or honorary librarian, and the acting librarian. In the list of the former, many of the most celebrated Venetian names are to be found—the warriors, the scholars, and the Doges of Venice. Of the acting librarians many have been distinguished by their attachment to literature, and by their successful efforts in its cause.

Venice has always occupied an illustrious station in the republic of letters. She claims, though the claim has been disputed, the glory of having been the first to introduce the art of printing in Italy. The manuscript treasures of St. Mark's Library, and the learning and munificence of the Venetian nobility, soon drew to that city the most distinguished printers of the fifteenth century. The editiones principes of many of the classical writers were ushered from the Venetian press, which also gave to the world the first edition of the Bible printed in Hebrew characters. To Venice also is referred the invention of newspapers, a very remarkable fact, when the nature of the government is considered. The name of Gazette is derived from gazetta, a small piece of money paid for the Venetian newsletters. In literature, the annals of Venice present a long roll of splendid names—scholars, poets, and philosophers.

RIVER THAMES AND CITY OF LONDON.

London, the most ancient constitutional borough of England, is a city of great antiquity. Without going further back to the historical romance of Geoffry, of Monmouth, who attributes its foundation to a descendant of Venus and Anchises, and enumerates seventy successive kings before the invasion Julius Cæsar, it may suffice our purpose to state that Cæsar gives no description, in his narrative of his conquests, of any other kind of town in Britain, than a thick wood, fortified by a ditch and a mound. Hence, it is concluded, that London was commenced, or at least assumed the appearance of a town, at a later period even than the invasion of Cæsar.—Tacitus is the first Roman historian who mentions London by name. He speaks of the number and opulence of its merchants, and the abundance of its provisions.

Digitized by Google

A continued struggle appears to have existed between the Roman generals and the natives of Britain under their queen Boadicea, Caractacus and their successors, till Agricola, with his legions achieved the conquest of nearly the whole Island. Agricola being appointed governor of Britain, exhorted the natives, says Tacitus, to cultivate the arts of peace, to build temples and houses, and imitate their enlightened conquerors.—This caused London to revive after the severe defeat of Boadicea to such an extent, that Herodian, in his life of the emperor Septimus Severus, who reigned from the year 193, to 211, calls it a great and wealthy city. It extended from Ludgate to Town Hill in length, and from the causeway above Cheapside to the Thames, in breadth.

The erection of the wall of London is attributed to Constantine the Great: it was adorned and strengthened with many towers of so firm a structure that two were in existence in Maitland's time; and Dr. Woodward doubts not, that nearly the whole circuit of the city wall as it stood in 1707, was erected upon the old Roman foundation, which comprehended an area of more than three miles in circumference.

When the mighty Roman Empire was crumbling to pieces, by slow but certain steps, the British island separated itself from its great protector. The Roman forces being withdrawn, the natives were left to the ravages of the Saxon pirates and their neighbouring enemies of Ireland and Caledonia.

It would not accord with our limits to quote a history of this great city to the present day.

A brief sketch, descriptive of the annexed engraving must suffice.

The first bridge in the centre is London bridge, the length of it is 915 feet. The second is Queen street bridge, consisting of three arches, it is constructed of iron, the length is 708 feet.—The third is Blackfriars bridge, 995 feet long.—The fourth is Waterloo bridge, 602 feet long and adjoins a large stone building on the right, named Somerset house, built by the proud duke of Somerset, and now used as offices connected with the government. The church with the tall spire next to the right is St. Bridges, near Blackfriar's bridge, built in the year 1680, and has the highest spire in London: the next church is St. Magnus. The principal building in the centre, is the celebrated building so well known, named St. Paul's Cathedral, built by Christopher Wren, the length of the church, including the western portico, is 514 feet, its breadth 386 feet, the height to the top of the cross, 330 feet, and diameter of cupola, 145 feet; entire circumference of building 2292 feet. The next is Bow church, 228 feet high. St. Magnus is the next principal church at the foot of London bridge, a very old building. The custom house, to the right of London bridge, was built in 1817, its south front measures 488 feet, in length, and is 107 feet deep.

The monument above the custom house is a fluted doric column,—the diameter at the base is 15 feet, height of shaft 123 feet, the cone at top being a blazen urn of gilt brass, measures 42 feet, and height of massy pedestal 40 feet. The church with the pointed arches, is Allhallows Barking, built in the year 1651. The Tower is the next principal building, erected first by William the conqueror, and consists of four white towers: the extent of the tower within the walls being 12 acres and 5 rods.

THE RIVER THAMES.—This source of all the greatness and wealth of the metropolis of London, and one of its chief ornaments, deserves an especial notice.

The forest of masts which are presented by the shipping from London Bridge, fills every beholder with astonishment; but how much is this feeling increased, when in an excursion down the river, it is discovered that this forest covers the Thames for several miles, and also that all the docks are full of shipping.

The Port of London, as actually occupied by shipping, extends from London Bridge to Deptford, being a distance of nearly four miles, and from four to five hundred yards in average breadth. It may be described as consisting of four divisions, called the Upper, Middle, and Lower Pools, and the space between Limehouse and Debtford: Upper Pool extends from London Bridge to Union Hole, about 1600 yards; the Middle Pool, from thence to Wapping New Stair, 700 yards; the Lower Pool from the latter place to Horse Ferry Tier, near Limehouse, 1800 yards; and the space below to Deptford about 2700 yards.

The Thames rises two miles south-west of Cirencester, in Gloucestershire: at Lechdale, 138 miles above London, it becomes navigable for barges of 80 or 90 tons: it is navigated by ships of 700 or 800 tons up to London Bridge, and by the largest ships to Deptford and Greenwich. The tide flows eight miles in four hours, as high as Richmond, but the water is not salt higher than Gravesend, which is thirty miles below London Bridge. At London, it is about a quarter of a mile broad, and at Gravesend, about a mile. Its whole course is about 200 miles.

Its fall from Oxford to Maidenhead, is 25 feet every 10 miles, and thence to Brentford, 20 feet every 10 miles, but the fall from Brentford where the tide ends, to the Nore, a distance of 60 river miles, it is but seven feet.

The southern banks of the Thames, contiguous to the bridges, for a considerable extent, are lined with manufactories and warehouses; such as iron-founders, dyers, soap and oil-makers, glass-makers, shot-makers, boat-builders, &c. &c. To explore these would repay curiosity; in a variety of them, that powerful agent steam, performs the work, and steam engines are daily erecting in others.

The mercantile importance of this noble stream is greater than that of any other river in the world. Its merchantmen visit the most distant parts of the globe; and the productions of every soil, and of every clime, are wafted home upon its bosom, to answer the demands of British commerce. The frozen shores of the Baltic and North America, the sultry regions of both the

Digitized by Google

Indies, and the arid coasts of Africa, have alike rescounded with its name: and there is not a single country, perhaps, in any quarter of the earth, bordering on the sea, but what has been visited by its sails.

It deserves to be remarked in conclusion, that notwithstanding the very existence of London depends on the navigation of the Thames, insomuch that if this river were rendered unnavigable, London would soon become a heap of ruins, like Nineveh and Babylon, yet some of the passages of this important river, below the Nore, are suffered to become half choaked, and almost impassable, from the increase and shifting of sand-banks.

City of London.—It is impossible, in our limited space, to furnish any like a complete sketch of the city of London, or indeed even to glance at the numerous public buildings which ornament its various parts. Most of our readers, we presume, have formed some idea, from their readings, of the extent, magnitude and wealth of the city, and it is therefore unnecessary for us to enter into a minute detail. The annexed sketch of London—taken from the travels of Count Pecchio—will, however, probably be new to some.

If the sky is dark, not less gloomy is the whole first appearance of London to him who enters it by the Dover road. The smoky colour of the houses gives it the appearance of a city that has been burnt. If to this be added the silence which prevails in the midst of a population of, perhaps, one million four hundred thousand persons, all in motion (so that one seems to be in a theatre of Chinese shades), and the wearisome uniformity of the houses, almost all built in the same style, like a city of the beavers, it will be easy to imagine, that on first entering this darksome hive, the smile of pleased surprise soon gives way to a gloomy wonder. This was the old English style of building, which still prevails in the country. But, since the English have substituted the blue pill for suicide, or, still better, a journey to Paris; and, instead of Young's Night Thoughts, read the romances of Walter Scott, they have cheered up their houses with a coat of white, and have recently rebuilt the western part of the capital "west end" in a gayer and more varied style of architecture.

The houses are small and fragile. The first night I spent in a lodging-house, I deemed myself still on board the vessel; the walls were equally slender, and, in great part, of wood, the chambers small, and the staircase like a companion ladder; the walls are generally so thin, that they allow the passage of sounds without interruption. The lodgers would hear one another talking, but that they are accustomed to speak in an under tone. I could hear the murmur of the conversation of my neighbour overhead,—my zenith, as well as that of the other neighbour beneath my feet, like the opposite point nadir; and I distinguished, at intervals, the words, "Very fine weather,—indeed—very fine—comfort—comfortable—great comfort" words which occur as often in their conversation as stops and commas in a book. In a word, the houses are ventriloquous. As I said before, they are all uniform. In a three-story house, there are three bed-rooms, one over the other, and three parlours in the same situation, so that the population is as it were, warehoused in layers, like merchandise—like the cheese in the storehouses at Lodi and Codogno. The English have not chosen without design this (I will venture to call it) naval architecture. The advantages they derive from living in houses of small size and durability are these: in general, a house is only built for 99 years; if it outlive this term, it belongs to the proprietor of the ground on which it is built. It seldom happens, therefore, that they attain to any great longevity; on the contrary, they sometimes tumble to pieces before the natural period of their existence. The English, who are better arithmeticians than architects, have discovered, that, by building in this slippery manner, they consume less capital, and that consequently the annual interest and the annual loss of principal are proportionately less. There is another advantage: by this method, posterity is not hampered or tyrannised over. Every generation can choose and build its own houses, according to its own caprices, and its own necessities; and, although in a great measure composed of wood, all the houses are as it were incombustible, by means of the insurance companies, which guarantee the value of the house, the furniture, and every thing else. A fire is no misfortune, but merely a temporary inconvenience to the inmates; a something to look at for the passengers, and an entertaining paragraph for the newspapers. To an Englishman, his house is his Gibraltar; he must not only be inviolable, but absolute, without dispute or fuss. He prefers living in a shell like an oyster, to living in a palace with all the annoyance of a hen-roost.

Why are not the English good dancers? Because they do not practise. The houses are so small and so weak, that he who would cut a caper in the third story must run the risk of thundering like a bombshell down into the kitchen, which is placed under ground. This is no mere hyperbole of mine. One of the stipulations on taking a house in London, is often that no dancing shall take place in it. Why is it that the English gesticulate so little, and have their arms almost always glued to their sides? For the same reason, I believe: the rooms are so small that it is impossible to wave one's arm without breaking something, or inconveniencing somebody.

In London I have often risen early, in order to be present at the spectacle of the resurrection of a million and a half of people. This great monster of a capital, like an immense giant awaking, shows the first signs of life in the extremities. Motion begins at the circumference, and, by little and little, goes on getting strength, and pushing towards the centre, till at ten o'clock commences the full hubbub, which goes on continually increasing till four o'clock, the Change hour. It seems as if the population followed the laws of the tide until this hour; it now continues flowing from the circumference to the Exchange. at half past four, when the Exchange is shut, the ebb begins; and currents of people, coaches, and horses, rush from the Exchange to the circumference.

Digitized by Google

VISITS AND SKETCHES AT HOME AND ABROAD.

THE following beautiful and pathetic story is taken from the first volume of a new work, by the accomplished Mrs. Jameson, called "Visits and Sketches at Home and Abroad."

A SISTER'S LOVE AND COURAGE.

My heroine—truly and in every sense does she deserve the name—was the daughter of a rich brewer and wine-merchant of Deuxponts. She was one of five children, two much older and two much younger than herself. Her eldest brother was called Henri: he had early displayed such uncommon talents, and such a decided inclination for study, that his father was determined to give him all the advantages of a learned education, and sent him to the university of Elangau, in Bavaria, whence he returned to his family, with the highest testimonies of his talents and good conduct. His father now destined him for the clerical profession, with which his own wishes accorded. His sister fondly dwelt upon his praises, and described him, perhaps with all a sister's partiality, as being not only the pride of his family, but of all his fellow-citizens, "tall, and handsome, and good," of a most benevolent, enthusiastic temper, and devoted to his studies. When he had been at home for some time, he attracted the notice of one of the princes in the north of Germany, with whom he travelled, I believe, in the capacity of secretary. The name of the prince, and the particulars of this part of his life, have escaped me; but it appeared that, through the recommendation of this powerful patron, he became professor of theology in a university of Courland, I think at Riga, or somewhere near it, for the name of this city was continually recurring in her narrative. Henri was at this time about eight-and-twenty.

While here, it was his fate to fall passionately in love with the daughter of a rich Jew merchant. His religious zeal mingled with his love; he was as anxious to convert his mistress as to possess her—and, in fact, the first was a necessary preliminary to the second. The consequences were all in the usual style of such matters. The relations discovered the correspondence, and the young Jewess was forbidden to see or to speak to her lover. They met in secret. What arguments he might use to convert this modern Jessica, I know not, but they prevailed. She declared herself convinced, and consented to fly with him beyond the frontiers, into Silesia, to be baptised, and to become his wife.

Apparently their plans were not well-arranged, or were betrayed; for they were pursued by her relations and the police, and overtaken before they reached the frontiers. The young man was accused of carrying off his Jewish love by force; and this, I believe, at Riga, where the Jews are protected, is a capital crime. The affair was brought before the tribunal, and the accused defended himself by declaring that the girl had fled with him by her own free will: that she was a Christian, and his betrothed bride, as they had exchanged rings, or had gone through some similar ceremony. The father Jew denied this on the part of his daughter, and Henri desired to be confronted with the lady who was thus said to have turned his accuser. Her family made many difficulties, but by the order of the judge she was obliged to appear. She was brought into the court of justice, pale, trembling and supported by her father and others of her kindred. The judge demanded whether it was by her own will that she had fled with Henri Ambos? She answered in a faint voice, "No." Had then violence been used to carry her off? "Yes." Was she a Christian? "No." Did she regard Henri as her affianced husband? "No."

On hearing these replies, so different from the truth—from all he could have anticipated—the unfortunate young man appeared for a few minutes stupified; then, as if seized with a sudden phrensy, he made a desperate effort to rush upon the young Jewess. On being prevented, he drew a knife from his pocket, which he attempted to plunge into his own bosom, but it was wrested from him; in the scuffle he was wounded in the hands and face, and the young lady swooned away. The sight of his mistress insensible, and his own blood flowing, restored the lover to his senses. He became sullenly calm, offered not another word in his own defence, refused to answer any questions, and was immediately conveyed to prison.

These particulars came to the knowledge of his family after the lapse of many months, but of his subsequent fate they could learn nothing. Neither his sentence nor his punishment could be ascertained; and although one of his relations went to Riga, for the purpose of obtaining some information, some redress, he returned without having effected either of the purposes of his journey. Whether Henri had died of his wounds, or languished in a perpetual dungeon, remained a mystery.

Six years thus passed away. His father died: his mother, who persisted in hoping, while all others despaired, lingered on in heartwearing suspense. At length, in the beginning of last year, (1833,) a travelling merchant passed through the city of Deuxponts, and inquired for the family of Amboe. He informed them that in the preceding year he had seen and spoken to a man in rags, with a long beard, who was working in fetters with other criminals, near the fortress of Barinska, in Siberia, who described himself as Henri Amboe, a pastor of the Lutheran church, unjustly condemned, and besought him with tears, and the most urgent supplications, to convey some tidings of him to his unhappy parents, and beseech them to use every means to obtain his liberation.

You must imagine—for I cannot describe as she described—the feelings which this intelligence excited. A family council was held, and it was determined at once that application should be made to the police authorities at St. Petersburgh, to ascertain beyond a doubt the fate of poor Henri—that a petition in his favour must be presented to the emperor of Russia; but who was to present it? The second brother offered himself, but he had a wife and two children; the wife protested that she should die if her husband left her, and would not hear of his going; besides, he was the only remaining hope of his mother's family. The sister then said that she would undertake the journey, and urged that, as a woman, she had more chance of success in such an affair than her brother. The mother acquiesced. There was, in truth, no alternative; and being amply furnished with the means, this generous, affectionate, and strong-minded girl, set off alone, on her long and perilous journey. "When my mother gave me her blessing," said she, "I made a vow to heaven and my own heart, that I would not return alive without the pardon of my brother. I feared nothing. I had nothing to live for. I had health and strength, and I had not a doubt of my own success, because I was resolved to succeed; but ah! Bobe madame! what a fate was mine! my poor old mother!" Here she burst into tears, and threw herself back in the carriage; after a few minutes she resumed her narrative.

She reached the city of Riga without mischance. There she collected the necessary documents relative to her brother's character and conduct, with all the circumstances of his trial, and had them properly attested. Furnished with these papers, she proceeded to St. Petersburgh, where she arrived safely in the beginning of June, 1833. She had been furnished with several letters of recommendation, and partica-lately with one to a German ecclesiastic, of whom she spoke with the most grateful enthusiasm, by the title M. le Pasteur. She met with the utmost difficulty in obtaining from the police the official return of her brother's condemnation, place of exile, punishment, etc.; but at length, by almost incredible boldness, perseverance, and address, she was in possession of these, and with the assistance of her good friend the pastor, she drew up a petition to the emperor. With this she waited on the minister of the interior, to whom, with great difficulty, and after many applications, she obtained access. He treated her with great harshness, and absolutely refused to deliver the petition. She threw herself on her knees, and added tears to entreaties; but he was inexorable, and added brutally—"Your brother was a mauvais sujet; he ought not to be pardoned, and if I were the emperor I would not pardon him."

Digitized by Google

She rose from her knees, and stretching her arms towards heaven, exclaimed with fervour—"I call heaven to witness that my brother was innocent! and I thank heaven that you are not the emperor, for I can still hope!"

The minister, in a rage, said—"Do you dare to speak thus to me! Do you know who I am?"

"Yes," she replied; you are his excellency the minister C——; but what of that? you are a cruel man! but I put my trust in heaven and the emperor; and then," said she, "I left him, without even a courtesy, though he followed me to the door, speaking very loud and very angrily."

Her suit being rejected by all the ministers, (for even those who were most gentle, and who allowed the hardship of the case, still refused to interfere, or deliver her petition,) she resolved to do, what she had been dissuaded from attempting in the first instance—to appeal to the emperor in person: but it was in vain she lavished hundreds of dollars in bribes to the inferior officers; in vain she beset the imperial suite, at reviews, at the theatre, on the way to the church: invariably beaten back by the guards, or the attendants, she could not penetrate to the emperor's presence. After spending six weeks in daily ineffectual attempts of this kind, hoping every morning, and almost despairing every evening—threatened by the police, and spurned by the officials—Providence raised her up a friend in one of her own sex. Among some ladies of rank, who became interested in her story, and invited her to their houses, was a Countess Elise, something or other, whose name I did not write down. One day, on seeing her young protegée overwhelmed with grief, and almost in despair, she said, with emotion, I cannot dare to present your petition myself, I might be sent off to Siberia, or at least banished the court; but all I can do I will. I will lend you my equipage and servants. I will dress you in my robes; you shall drive to the palace the next levee day, and obtain the audience under my name; when once in the presence of the emperor, you must manage for yourself. If I risk thus much, will you venture the rest?"

"And what," said I, "was your answer?"

"Oh!" she replied, "I could not answer; but I threw myself at her feet, and kissed the hem of her gown!"

I asked her whether she had not feared to risk the safety of her generous friend? She replied, "That thought did not strike me—but what would you have? I cast it from me. I was resolved to have my brother's pardon—I would have sacrificed my own life to obtain it—and, heaven forgive me, I thought little of what it might cost another."

This plan was soon arranged, and at the time appointed my resolute heroine drove up to the palace in a splendid equipage, preceded by a running footman, with three laquais in full dress, mounted behind. She was announced as the Countess Elise——, who supplicated a particular audience of his majesty. The doors flew open, and in a few moments she was in the presence of the emperor, who advanced one or two steps to meet her, with an air of gallantry, but suddenly started back——.

Here I could not help asking her, whether at that moment she did not feel her heart sink?

"No," said she firmly; "on the contrary, I felt my heart beat quicker and higher! I sprang forward and knelt at his feet, exclaiming, with clasped hands—'Pardon, imperial majesty! Pardon!'"

"Who are you?" said the emperor, astonished; "and what can I do for you?"

He spoke gently, more gently than any of his ministers, and overcome, even by my own hopes, I burst into a flood of tears, and said, "May it please your imperial majesty, I am not Countess Elise——, I am only the sister of the unfortunate Henri Amboe, who has been condemned on false accusation. O pardon!—pardon! Here are the papers—the proofs. O imperial majesty!—pardon my poor brother!" I held out the petition and the papers, and at the same time, prostrate on my knees, I seized the skirt of his embroidered coat, and pressed it to my lips. The emperor said,

"Rise, rise!" but I would not rise; I still held out my papers, resolved not to rise till he had taken them. At last the emperor, who seemed much moved, extended one hand towards me, and took the papers with the other, saying,—

"Rise, mademoiselle—I command you to rise." I ventured to kiss his hand, and said, with tears,

"I pray of your majesty to read that paper."

He said, "I will read it." I then rose from the ground, and stood watching him while he unfolded the petition and read it. His countenance changed, and he exclaimed once or twice,

"Is it possible?—This is dreadful!" When he had finished, he folded the paper, and without any observation said at once,

"Mademoiselle Amboe, your brother is pardoned." The words rung in my ears, and I again flung myself at his feet, saying, and yet I scarce knew what I said,

"Your imperial majesty is a good man upon earth; do you indeed pardon my brother? Your ministers would not suffer me to approach you; and even yet I fear ——!" He said,

"Fear nothing: you have my promise." He then raised me from the ground, and conducted me himself to the door. I tried to thank and bless him, but could not; he held out his hand for me to kiss, and then bowed his head as I left the room.

"Ach ja! the emperor is a good man—ein schoner, feiner, mann! but he does not know how cruel his ministers are, and all the evil they do, and all the justice they refuse, in his name!"

[The excitement and fatigue produced a severe attack of illness under which she was still labouring, when, on the fifth day after her interview with Nicholas, a laquais in the imperial livery came to her lodging with a sealed packet, and "the emperor's compliments to mademoiselle Amboe." It was the pardon for her brother.]

Those mean official animals, who had before spurned her, now pressed upon her with offers of service, and even the minister C—— offered to expedite the pardon himself to Siberia, in order to save her trouble; but she would not suffer the precious paper out of her hands: she determined to carry it herself—to be herself the bearer of glad tidings: she had resolved that none but herself should take off those fetters, the very description of which had entered her soul; so, having made her arrangements as quickly as possible, she set off for Moscow, where she arrived in three days. According to her description, the town in Siberia, to the governor of which she carried an official recommendation, was nine thousand versts beyond Moscow; and the fortress to which the wretched malefactors were exiled was at a great distance beyond that. I could not well make out the situation of either, and, unluckily, I had no map with me but a road map of Germany, and it was evident that my heroine was no geographer. She told me that, after leaving Moscow, she travelled post seven days and seven nights, only sleeping in the carriage. She then reposed for two days, and then posted on for another seven days and nights; alone, and wholly unprotected, except by her own innocence and energy, and a few lines of recommendation, which had been given to her at St. Petersburgh.

Digitized by Google

At length, in the beginning of August, she arrived at the end of her journey, and was courteously received by the commandant of the fortress. She presented the pardon, with a hand which trembled with impatience and joy, too great to be restrained, almost to be borne. The officer looked very grave, and took, she thought, a long time to read the paper, which consisted only of six or eight lines. At last he stammered out,

"I am sorry—but the Henri Ambos mentioned in th s paper—is dead!" Poor girl! she fell to the earth.

When she reached this part of her story she burst into a fresh flood of tears, wrung her hands, and for some time could utter nothing but passionate exclamations of grief.

"Ach lieber Gott! was fur ein schrecklich shicksal war das meine! What a horrible fate was mine! I had come thus far to find not my brother—nur ein grab! (only a grave!") she repeated several times, with an accent of despair. The unfortunate man had died a year before. The fetters in which he worked had caused an ulcer in his leg, which he neglected, and, after some weeks of horrid suffering, death released him. The task-work, for nearly five years, of this accomplished and even learned man in the prime of his life and mental powers, had been to break stones upon the road, chained hand and foot, and confounded with the lowest malefactors.

From Blackwood's Magazine.

THE CRUISE OF THE MIDGE.

The period was now approaching when we were to part company, the Gazelle for Jamaica, and the Midge for Havana; and on such a day, having received my orders, we altered our course a point or two to the northward, and lost sight of the Commodore before the night fell.

Nothing particular occurred until we arrived within a couple of day's sail of Havana, when we made out a sail lying becalmed right a-head; we carried the breeze up to within half a mile of her, when it failed us also, and there we both lay rolling on the glass-like swell of the great Bahama Channel, one of the hottest quarters of the globe in a calm that ever I was in. The heat was absolutely roasting.—The vessel we had seen was a brig with bright sides, which, as we approached, had hoisted a signal of distress at the mizen peak, the American ensign, with the stars down, and stripes uppermost. I immediately manned a boat, and pulled towards her, for apparently she had none of her own. As we neared her, the crew, some six or eight hands, were running about the deck, and holding out their hands imploringly towards us, in a way that I could not account for. As we came closer, the master hailed us in a low husky voice, "For Heaven's sake send some water, sir, we are perishing of thirst—water, sir, water if you please." I was now alongside, when three men absolutely tumbled over the brig's side into the boat, and began, before we could recover our surprise, to struggle who should first get his lips into the small puddle of dirty water in the bottom of it. Brackish as it must have been, it was drank up in a moment. The extremity of the poor fellows was evidently great, so I jumped on deck, and immediately sent back the boat for a breaker of water, with orders to pull for life and death.

Sailors have their virtues and their vices like other men but I am not arrogating when I say, that a scene like this, in all its appalling bearings, that misery, such as we saw before us, so pecurliarly incidental to his own condition, would, were it from this cause alone thrill to a sailor's heart, with a force unknown and undreamt of by any other human being. Dogvane, the old quarter master, had steered me on board. He now jumped up in the stern sheets, and cast off his jacket—"You Jabos, you limber villain," said he to a slight boy who pulled the foremost oar, "come out of the bow, and take the tiller, will ye? and mind you steer steady. Shift forward my hearties, and give me the stroke oar." The boat's crew at this hint tore their hats off, with a chance of a stroke of the sun before their eyes, and threw them to the bottom of the boat, stripped up their frock sleeves to their armpits, undid the ribbons that fastened their frock collars, new fitted their stretchers, and wetting the palms of their hands, feathered their oars, and waited for the word. "Now mind you strain, my lads," again sang out old Dogvane, "until the boat gathers way—no springing of the ash staves, do you hear? Give way now." The boat started off like an arrow—the oars groaned and cheeped, the water buzzed away into a long snow white frothy wake, and in no time she was alongside the felucca, on whose deck, in his red-hot haste, Dogvane first toppled down on his nose, and then bounded down the main-hatchway; in another moment a small cask, ready slung, slowly ascended, and was rolled across the deck into the boat. But this was not all; the Midges on board the felucca were instantly all astir, and buzzing about at a devil of a rate—out sweeps was the word, and there was the little vessel torn along the shining surface of the calm sea, right in the wake of the boat, by twelve long dark sweeps, looking for all the world, in the distance, like a beetle chasing a fly across a polished mirror, blazing with intolerable radiance under the noonday sun.

It appeared that, first of all, the brig had been a long time baffled in the Horse latitudes, which ran their supply of water short; and, latterly, they had laid ten days becalmed where we found them. Several days before we fell in with them, they had sent away the boat with three hands to try and reach the shore, and bring back a supply, but they had never returned, having in all likelihood either perished from thirst before they got to land, or missed the brig on their way back. No soul on board, neither captain nor crew, had cooled his parched tongue for eight-and-forty hours before we boarded them—this in such a climate!

There was not only no water, but not a drop of liquid unconsumed of any kind or description whatsoever, but some new rum, which the men had freely made use of at first, until two of them died raving mad in consequence. When I got on board, the cask was lying on the tap, and perishing as they were, not one of them could swallow a drop of it if they had tried: they said it was like taking molton lead into their mouths, at any time when driven, by the fierceness of their sufferings, to attempt to assuage their thirst with it. I had not been five minutes on board, when the captain seemed to go mad altogether.

"My poor wife, sir—oh, God, she is dying in the cabin, sir—she may be dead—she must be dead—but I dare not go below to look at her. Oh, as you hope for mercy at your dying day, hail your people to make haste, sir—half an hour may be too late"—and the poor fellow dashed himself down on the deck, writhing about, like a crushed reptile, in a paroxysm of the most intense agony; while the men, who were all clustered half-naked in the bows, with wet blankets on their shoulders, in the hope that nature would in this way absorb some moisture, and thus alleviate their sufferings, were peering out with their feverish and blood-shot eyes, and wan faces, at the felucca, watching every motion on board with the most breathless anxiety.

Digitized by Google

"There, there—there is the cask on the deck—they are lowering it into the boat—they have shoved off—oh, great God in Heaven, we shall be saved after all"—and the poor fellows raised a faint hurrah, and closed in on me, some shaking my hands, others dropping on their knees to bless me; while one poor creature lay choking on the hard deck in a fit of hysterical laughter, as if he had been a weakly woman.

The boat could not possibly be back under ten minutes; so I went below into the cabin, and never did I behold such a heart rending sight. The small table that had stood in the centre had been removed, and there, stretched on a coarse wet blanket, lay a half-naked female—pale and emaciated—her long hair dishevelled, and hanging over her face, and down her back, in wet clotted strands, with a poor miserable infant pulling and muzzling at her wasted breast; while a black woman, herself evidently deep sunk in the same suffering, was sprinkling salt water from a pail on the unhappy creature and her child.

"Oh, massa," cried the faithful negress—"oh, massa, give misses some water, or him dead—I strong, can last some time yet—but poor misses"—and here she sobbed, as if her heart would have burst; but the fountains of her tears were dried up. The white female was unable to raise her head—she lay moaning on the deck, and mumbling audibly with her dry and shrunken lips, as if they had been ossified, but she could not speak.

"Keep a good heart, madam," said I—"I have sent on board for water—it will be here in a minute." She looked doubtingly at me, and clasped her hands together above her child's head, and seemed to pray. I ran on deck—the boat in an incredibly short time, was alongside again, with the perspiration pouring down the flushed faces and muscular necks of the kind hearted fellows in her—their duck clothing as wet and dank as a boat-sail in a race.

"Now, Dogvane—hand up the breaker—quick, man, quick." My order was unnecessary; it was on deck in an instant; and before I could turn round the men of the brig made a rush aft, in a vain attempt to carry it forward, but they had not the strength of children. We easily shoved them aside as it was necessary they should not get water-logged by a too free use of it at first. "Now, Dogvane, mind what I tell you—make that small tub there full of five-water grog—no stronger, mind—and serve out a pint to each of these poor fellows, and not a drop more at present." I seized a cup full of the first of it, and ran below. "Here," said I, to the black servant—"here, take a mouthful yourself, and then give some to your mistress." She shook her head, and made a sign as if she would have helped her mistress first; but the selfishness, occasioned by the grinding force of her own misery, conquered the poor creature's resolution; and dashing, rather than carrying the glass to her mouth, she ravenously swallowed the whole contents in a second, and fell flat on deck with a wild laugh.

"Oh, massa, I can't help it—nobody love misses like Juba; but could not help it for the life-blood of me, massa captain. Oh, my eye, my eye like cinder,—like red-hot bullet dem is, massa—oh, for one tear, one little tear—oh, dere come one tear—but God, God, him is hot more as boiling rum, and salt—ah, ah, ah,"—and the poor creature sprawled about the deck in the utmost distress.

The master of the vessel had by this time entered, and lifted up his wife into a sitting position; and there she sat, with her parched mouth all agape, and the black fur on her tongue, and with glazed and half shut eyes; her pinched features and death-like complexion, evincing fearfully her tremendous sufferings.

He poured some water into her mouth, but she could not swallow it; he tried again, and from the gurgling noise in her throat, I thought she was suffocating, especially as I noticed, that, as if conscious she was departing, she clutched her poor wasted baby to her shrunk bosom with all the strength she possessed. But she had swallowed a little, and this revived her; and after several other trials, the poor fellow had the happiness to see his wife snatched from the jaws of death, and able to sit up by herself with her back against the locker. She now began to moan heavily, and to rock herself to and fro over her helpless, all but dead infant, as it lay, struggling faintly, and crying with its small imploring voice, on her knee; at length she acquired sufficient strength to gasp out, "God bless you, sir—God bless you—you have saved my child, and all of us—God bless you,"—and then resumed her moaning, as if she was suffering something that she herself could not describe. I sent on board for more water, and spared some tea and other small luxuries to the poor people; and that same evening, as the setting sun was dropping into the water, under a canopy of glorious clouds, beneath which the calm sea glowed like molted gold, gradually melting into gorgeous purple, I saw a small dark ripple ruffling the mirror-like surface of the sleeping waters in the east and gradually steal down towards where we lay becalmed, until I felt a light zephyr-like air on the palm of my wet hands as I held it up. Presently as the grey cat's-paws became darker, and fluttered down stronger and nearer to us, and were again withdrawn, and shifted about, shooting out and shortening like streamers. Mr. Peake sung out, "There, there's the breeze at last, sir, there, there;" and the small smooth shining canals that divided the blue shreds of ripples, gradually narrowed, and the latter increased and came down stronger, until the whole sea to windward was roughened into small dark waves, that increased as the night fell, until both the Midge and the brig were buzzing along on the course to Havana before a six knot breeze.

The next evening we were under the Moro Castle, where we anchored; and at daylight on the following morning we ran in through the narrow entrance, and under the tremendous forts that crown its high banks on each side, and anchored before the magnificent city, this Tyre of the West, while its batteries and bastions, with the grinning cannon peering through the numberless embrazures, and the tall spires and towers and the highest of the houses, and the masts and drying sails of the numberless vessels, and their gay flags, British, American, French, Spanish, and of almost every country in the world were glancing bright and fresh in the early sunbeams.

PASSION FLOWER.—The passion flower is so named from its supposed resemblance to the instruments of crucifixion, and is imagined, by the devout, to have particular reference to the Saviour's passion, or suffering on the cross. Hervey, in his Meditations in a Flower Garden, has an account of all the apparatus used in the crucifixion, and supposed to be found in the passion flower. There is a description of the cord that bound the limbs of the victim; of the nails that fastened them to the wood; of the hammer that drove the nails; and of the thorns that formed the crown.

Digitized by Google

I Love the Shepherd's Artless Rhymes.

Andante Expressivo.

Digitized by Google

3.

When hopes that could the heart entrance,
On airy wings have vanish'd;
When all the dreams of wild romance,
From memory's page are banished;
Such strains the heart awhile may soothe,
Mid foreign wilds deserted;
Though all the joys that pleased our youth,
Have one by one departed!

3.

Sweet is the dream of former years,
When sleep the eye has shrouded;
Sweet as the star that oft appears,
When all the rest are clouded;
Sweet as the warbler's latest strain,
When storms the year have shaded;
Or ling'ring rose that decks the plain,
When all the rest have faded!

Digitized by Google

WIT AND SENTIMENT.

When to leave off Drinking.—When you feel particularly desirous of having another glass, leave off—you have had enough. When you look at a distant object, and appear to see two, leave off—you have had too much. When you knock over your glass, spill your wine upon the table, or are unable to recollect the words of a song you have been in the habit of singing for the last half dozen years, leave the company—you are getting troublesome. When you nod in the chair, fall over the hearth rug, or lurch on a neighbour's shoulders, go home—you are dead drunk.

A Saving.—An English stock-jobber, known for his unexampled parsimony, although possessed of an immense fortune, one day met a very poor man, one of his own relations. "Come hither, George," said the miser, "do you know I have just now made my will, and remembered you handsomely my boy?" "God bless your honor," said the grateful man, "you will be rewarded for so charitable an action, for you could not have thought of a more really distressed family." "Are you indeed so very poor, George?" "Sir, my family's starving!" said the man, almost crying. "Hark ye, then, George, if you will allow me a good discount, I will pay your legacy immediately." We need not add, that the terms were accepted of, and that they parted equally pleased with the bargain they had concluded.

Substitute for a Soul.—The custom of judging whether a man has a soul or no soul, by his disposition in regard to money matters, is not badly illustrated in an article from the Vermont Free Press, of which the following is an extract.—A stuttering man, in great wrath, was rating a neighbor, who had overreached his wife in the sale of a rennet-bag.

"I know you, you sti-i-ngy dog you and your fa-a-ther before you—when you was bo-o-rn your fa-a-ther found a so-o-oul would cost a shi-i-illing, and he could get a gi-i-zzard for nine pence, and so he bo-o-ought a-a-a gizzard.

Pretty Good.—Tip was a tippler when we knew him.—He was in the habit of lounging about one of the bar-rooms, taking every opportunity to get liquor free of expense. It was his peculiar way, when a glass was mixed, and the back of the purchaser turned, to drain the glass and slip stily off. The ostler had called for a glass of brandy, when Tip came in. He immediately thought of a trick, and left his brandy upon the bar, while he stepped to the door. On returning, he saw the glass empty, and exclaimed, "Brandy and opium! enough to kill forty men!—Who drank that poison I had prepared? Tip was frightened—'I,' stammered he. "You are a dead man," says Brush. 'What shall I do?' said Tip. "Down with a pint of Lamp Oil!" answered Brush—and down went the pint of oil, and Tip not only got over the poison, but tippling too.

One Man's Proportion.—Jonathan came down from his farm yard to see the lions in the city, and among the rest our men o' war. He went accordingly on board of a national vessel, where his swaggering air happened to take the notice of honest Jack. The tar watched him a long time, and at length sidled up to him, with, "Who may you be if its a fair question?"—"Who, why I am one of the owners!" "One of the owners!" "Yes, this ship belongs to the people of these United States, and I reckon I'm one on 'em.' "Take your share of the ship and scud then!" said Jack, as he gave Jonathan a rope yarn and shewed him to the gangway.

A pretty considerable Head-ache.—A jolly son of Bacchus, who wears a nose like a handful of ripe strawberries, and resides within a hundred miles of Matlock Bath, after having sacrificed at the shrine of the rosy god, thus described his sensations on the ensuing morning:—"Talk of a head ache! my head aches all over from my crown to my chin! every hair of my head aches!! (and pulling out half a dozen) I can feel these aches while I hold them in my hand."

E Pluribus Unum.—A few years since the captain of a Militia Company in a certain town in New Hampshire who felt all the importance of the high station to which he had been lately elevated, resolved to have a base drum added to the drum and fife ordinarily used in his company. He accordingly visited the town of Portsmouth for the purpose of making the necessary arrangements, and with some difficulty at length succeeded in finding a person, who had a base drum, of which he was willing to dispose, and a bargain was soon struck. But the Captain was somewhat puzzled with the phrase "E Pluribus Unum," which was carried in the beak of the American Eagle, and painted on the drum. He demanded an explanation—and was told by the wag, that that was the name of the captain of the company to which the drum formerly belonged. "Then it must be altered." "Certainly." The drum was accordingly taken to a painter, and the objectionable words, Pluribus Unum were erased, and other words substituted in their place. For many years this drum was carried at the head of the company—the Eagle proudly bearing in his beak the scroll, to which was attached the name of the brave and well meaning Jonathan Pilsbury!—Bost. Jour.

A Toast helped Out.—At a fourth of July celebration in Delhi, N. Y. where General Root presided, a militia colonel, who was sitting next to him, was called upon for a toast. Not having prepared himself before hand, he was a little puzzled what to give. He thought a moment and then concluded that it should be something of a military nature; but precisely what, he had not fully determined, when he rose and thundered forth:

"The Military of our country—may they never want"—here he hesitated—"may they never want"—here he boggled—"may they never want"—and here he came to a full stop, and looking imploringly at the president, whispered, "what the devil shall I say next?"—

"And never be wanted," whispered back the General.

"And never be wanted," roared out the Colonel.

Thus they made between them a capital toast, which neither of them and perhaps nobody else would originally have thought of—reading, when put together, as follows:—

"The Military of our country—May they never want, and never be wanted."

Unwise Men.—The angry man—who sets his own house on fire, in order that he may burn up that of his neighbour.

The envious man—who cannot enjoy life because others do.

The robber—who, for the consideration of a few dollars, gives the world liberty to hang him.

The hypochondriac—whose highest happiness consists in rendering himself miserable.

The jealous man—who poisons his own banquet, and then eats of it.

The miser—who starves himself to death, in order that his heir may feast.

The slanderer—who tells tales for the sake of giving his enemy an opportunity to prove him a liar.

Digitized by Google

REVOLUTIONARY REMINISCENCE.

General Isaac Huger.—An officer calling out to him, "General Huger, I plainly see one of the enemy's riflemen taking deliberate aim to destroy you." "That is no concern of mine," said the General. "If you think proper, order one of your men to take the fellow off." "Dodge, or, change your position," rejoined the officer, "or you are a dead man." "I will neither dodge nor quit my post," replied the General, "be the consequence what it may."

The properties due to a Lieutenant's Portmanteau.—"When we received a route for Kilkenny, we were ordered to precede the baggage, and therefore directions were given to have it placed in the store, which was two stories high. I was always of opinion, that the less an officer was encumbered with baggage the better; but for such ideas I never received any credit, and my acting up to them was invariably ascribed to want of means to increase it. Be this as it may, my light portmanteau was put in the tackle; and one of the men, by a couple of quick hauls with one hand, whisked it up to the top of the store in a moment. The serjeant conceived that this was not done in a respectful manner, and called out to the fellow, "What way is that, sir, to hoist the lieutenant's baggage? Lower that trunk immediately!" And, as soon as this order was obeyed, "Now, sir," cried the exact non-commissioned officer, "clap both hands to it, and hoist away handsomely." The portmanteau was then raised as slowly, and with as much seeming exertion, as if it had possessed the respectable weight of half a ton."

The Golden Age in France.—A French periodical gives the following curious tariff of the value put upon injuries to the person, by the tribunal of correctional police, in the time of Louis the tenth. The ordonnance was granted at Vincennes, in 1314. For a blow with the hand, twelve deniers. For a blow with a stone, five sous. For taking a person by the throat with one hand, five sous—with two hands, fourteen sous. For spitting in a person's face, five sous. For a blow on the nose without blood, five sous—if there be blood, ten sous. For a kick, ten sous. For a sword-thrust without blood, ten sous—and if there be blood, twenty sous. For a wound with blood above the teeth, thirty-six sous—below the teeth, fifty-two sous. For a broken arm or leg, seven francs and four sous. And for each broken tooth, seven francs and four sous.

The Twin Brothers.—The Count de Ligniville and Count D'Autricourt, twins, decended from an ancient family in Loraine, resembled each other so much, that when they put on the same kind of dress, which they did now and then for amusement, their servants could not distinguish the one from the other. Their voice, gait, and deportment the same, and these marks of resemblance were so perfect, that they often threw their friends, and even their wives, into the greatest embarrassment. Being both captains of light horse the one would put himself at the head of the other's squadron without the officers ever suspecting the change. Count D'Autricourt having committed some crime, the Count de Ligniville never suffered his brother to go out without accompanying him, and the fear of seizing the innocent instead of the guilty, rendered the orders to arrest of no avail. One day, Count de Ligniville sent for a barber, and after having suffered him to shave one half of his beard, he pretended to have occasion to go into the next apartment, and put his night gown upon his brother, who was concealed there, and taking the cloth which he had about his neck under his chin, made him sit down in the place which he had just quitted. The barber immediately resumed his operation, and was proceeding to finish what he had begun, as he supposed, but, to his great astonishment, he found that a new beard had sprung up. Not doubting that the person under his hands was the devil; he roared out with terror, and sunk down in a swoon on the floor. Whilst they were endeavoring to call him to life, Count D'Autricourt retired again into the closet, and Count de Ligniville, who was half shaved, returned to his former place. This was a new cause of surprise to the poor barber, who imagined that all he had seen was a dream, and he could not be convinced of the truth until he beheld the two brothers together. The sympathy that subsisted between the two brothers was no less singular than their resemblance. If one fell sick, the other was indispoed also; if one received a wound, the other felt pain, and this was the case with every misfortune that befell them; so that, on that account, they watched over each other's conduct with the greatest care and attention. But what is still more astonishing, they both had often the same dreams.—The day that Count D'Autricourt was attacked in France by the fever of which he died, Count de Ligniville was attacked by the same in Bavaria, and was near sinking under it.—Paris Journal.

Phrenology.—One anecdote concerning St. Clair the assassin, having excited considerable interest among the partisans of phrenology, we are requested to insert the following authentic narrative. Some surgical students of Paris, being desirous of laying a snare for the celebrated Gall, (who was at that time delivering his course of surgical lectures in that city,) contrived to purchase from the executioner of Versailles the head of a remarkable malefactor, and to place it among the human skulls deposited before the lecturer, to afford illustrations of his discourse; after which, they took their places among the audience, to enjoy the blunders about to be committed by the unfortunate craniologist. "What have we here," cried Gall, the moment he cast his eye upon the skull.—"How came this fearfully organized head into my possession? Never did I behold so frightful a developement of human passion! The owner of this head must have been under the dominion of the most dreadful propensities, and with a singular tendency to their concealment." The skull was, in fact, that of Leger, guillotined a few years since on conviction of having decoyed a young girl into a remote cave in the forest of Versailles, where, after a series of outrages, he murdered her, cooked a portion of her remains, and actually fed upon them; a greater criminal probably never fell into the hands of justice.—The discomfiture of the boxers may be readily guessed.

Preparing for an expected evil.—Fraser, in his history of Persia, relates that an acquaintance of his, while residing in a certain town, was alarmed by hearing, in a neighbouring house, a sort of periodical punishment going on daily. Heavy blows were given, and a person was continually crying out, "Amaum! amaum! Mercy! mercy! I have nothing—heaven is my witness, I have nothing!" Upon inquiry, he learned that the sufferer was a merchant reputed to be very rich, who afterward confessed to him, that having understood the governor of the place to be meditating how he should possess himself of a share of his wealth, and expecting to be put to the torture, he had resolved to habituate himself to the endurance of pain, in order to be able to resist the threatened demands. He had brought himself to bear a thousand strokes of a stick on the soles of his feet, and as he was able to counterfeit great exhaustion and agony, he hoped to be able to bear as many blows as they would venture to inflict, short of death, without conceding any of his money

Digitized by Google

From the New England Galaxy.

Degrees of Drunkenness;

"First, Fresh; second, Emphatic; third, Glorious; fourth, Uproarious; lastly, Insensible."

FROLICS OF PUCK.

FIRST.

That ruby cheek, and sparkling e'e
Prove jolly Bacchus in possession;—
Premonitory of a spree,
They mark the aspect of a Fresh'un.
He fills the goblet to the brim,
Drinks and refils
Until his happy senses swim,
And his head reels.
He thinks his every thought is attic,
And soon from fresh, becomes

EMPHATIC.

As in a crowded house the throng,
Fast to the door are borne along,
Shoulder to shoulder, hip to hip,
All the ideas by liquor wrought
Are in a chaos, sudden brought Upon the burdened lip;—
Jostling, pushing,
Outward rushing
The crowd, each other's steps embarrass;
So one word o'er another trips,
Upon the EMPHATIC bibber's lips;
Though pressed not half ex-pressed, in vain,
You strive his meaning to attain,
His words but put himself in pain,
And serve the listener to harrass;—
Forthwith he rises to the squall-ics
As if each word were in italics;
With gestures odd, and upraised hand
He emphasizes if and and;—
Till to all present, 'tis notorious,
That he has reached the order

GLORIOUS.

As difficulties but incite
The impetuous mind to further daring,
His swollen tongue, tho' oft he bite
Yet will he still continue swearing;—
While deeper his potations grow,
His patriotism 'gins to flow;—
He damns the fool who does not think
A man to drunkenness should drink;
In politics his op'site party
Is visited with curses hearty;—
'Till his noise shews he has from glorious,
Gone a step further to

UPROARIOUS.

'Wake Snakes!' 'Huzza!' waste, and confusion
Bye-words, and shouts, and noisy revel,
Wassail and wine in sad profusion
Have with his senses played the devil!
Windows are smashed, and glasses broken;
Too drunk to speak; no longer spoken
His oaths are bellowed, such a rate on
As to astonish even Satan.
Until with liquor gorged full
He drops him down

INSENSIBLE.

Here 'Bacchi plenus,' full of wine
Behold the 'human form divine!'
Like leather bag of ages back
His hide is but a liquor sack!

Friendship hath the skill and observation of the best physician, diligence and vigilance of the best mother.

LOVE'S LAST REQUEST.

"Farewell, farewell, I talt'ring cried,
When I return thou'lt be my bride,
'Till then be faithful;—sweet adieu,
In absence oft I'll think of you."
The glist'ning tears stained her bright eyes,
Her thick'ning breath is choked with sighs
Her tongue denies her bosom's sway,
'Farewell'—I tore myself away.

"One moment stay," she stammered out,
And quick as thought I wheeled about;
"My angel, speak! can ought be done,
To comfort thee when I am gone?
I'll send thee specimens of art,
From every European mart;
I'll sketch for thee each Alpine scene,
To let thee see where I have been—
A stone from Simplon's dreadful height,
Shall gratify thy curious sight—
I'll climb the fiery Ætna's side,
To bring home treasures for my bride,
And oh, my life, each ship shall bear,
A double letter to my fair."

"Ah, George," the weeping angel said,
And on my shoulder fell her head,
"For constancy my tears are hostage,
But when you write, pray pay the postage." L.

PETER-PINDARICS.

A milk-maid with a very pretty face,
Who lived at Action,
Had a black cow the ugliest in the place,
A crooked-back'd one,
A beast as dangerous, too, as she was frightful,
Vicious and spiteful,
And so confirm'd a truant that she bounded
Over the hedges daily, and got pounded.
'Twas all in vain to tie her with a tether,
For then both cow and cord eloped together.

Arm'd with an oaken bough, (what folly!
It should have been of birch, or thorn, or holly,) Patty one day was driving home the beast
Which had as usual slipp'd its anchor,
When on the road she met a certain Banker,
Who stopp'd to give his eyes a feast
By gazing on her features, crimson'd high
By a long cow chase in July.

"Are you from Action, pretty lass?" he cried:
"Yes," with a courtsey she replied.
'Why then you know the laundress, Sally Wrench?'
"She is my cousin, sir, and next door neighbor."
"That's lucky—I've a message for the wench,
"Which needs despatch, and you may save my labor.
Give her this kiss, my dear, and say I sent it,
But mind you owe me one—I've only lent it."

"She shall know," cried the girl, as she brandished her bough,
"Of the loving intentions you bore me;
But as to the kiss, as there is haste you'll allow
That you'd better run forward and give it my cow,
For she, at the rate she is scampering now,
Will reach Action some minutes before me."

YOUTH.—We were much amused the other day by a little urchin, who threw a missile at one of his playmates, through the glass of a greenhouse. Of course, several panes were broken, to the apparent astonishment of the delinquent, who said, with great naivete, that "he did not mean to break the glass—he only wanted to hit Tom."

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

Painted by T. Maher

Engraved by Annis & Smith

AN ESCAPE.

Published by S C Atkinson.

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

ATKINSON'S

CASKET

OR GEMS OF

LITERATURE, WIT AND SENTIMENT.

"The wrathful winter hast'ning on apace,
With blust'ring blasts had all ybar'd the treen,
And old Saturnus, with his frosty face,
With chilling cold had pierc'd the tender green;
The mantles rent wherein enwrapped been
The gladsome groves, that now lay overthrown,
The tapets torn, and every tree down blown!"

No. 12.] PHILADELPHIA.—DECEMBER. [1834.

AN ESCAPE.

FROM A TRAVELLER'S SKETCH BOOK.

It was the afternoon of an autumn day, and my journey led me over a range of low, broken hills, that skirt the southern border of the Ohio, not far from its junction with the Mississippi.—The path was narrow, and but little travelled, and wound with a devious course amid open prairies, knolls covered with dwarf trees, and glades of thick forest.

I had pursued my way for several hours, without seeing a human being, or observing a human habitation. But I did not regret their absence, for solitude often feeds the mind better than society. I left my horse to choose his way, and determine his pace; and, musing on things far or near, as they came pouring through my imagination, I proceeded on my journey.

It was at a late hour, and with a feeling of some surprise, that at length I observed a thundercloud spreading over the western sky, and already shooting down its lightning upon the tops of the distant hills. Its grey masses were whirling in the heavens, as if agitated by the breath of a hurricane; and the mist that streamed down from its lower edge, declared that it was full of rain. It was idle for me to turn back, with the expectation of finding any other shelter, than what the forest might afford; I therefore pushed on, in the hope of reaching some hut or house, before the tempest should burst upon me.

I had scarcely taken this resolution when a bolt of lightning fell upon a tall tree, at no great distance, at the same time ploughing a deep furrow in its trunk, and scattering the kindled fragments around in every direction. There was a momentary pause, and then a rush of wind that made the firmest oak of the forest tremble like a reed. This was succeeded by a second and third sweep of the gale, when a tall chestnut-tree, by the side of my path, was beset by the tempest. It wrestled with the wind for a moment like a giant, but suddenly it was torn from its place, and thrown over exactly in the direction where I chanced at the moment to be. I heard the sound, and saw the falling tree, and, believing that I must inevitably be crushed, felt that momentary stupor, which often attends the first discovery of instant peril. But the instinct of my horse was not thus paralyzed. He, too, saw the descending mass, and with a bound, placed himself and me out of danger. But the branches, as they fell, struck his back, and his tail had well nigh shared the fate of that which adorned Tam O'Shanter's mare. This, however was the only adventure we met with, for I soon arrived at a small inn, and there sheltered myself and horse from the torrent, which began shortly after to pour down from the cloud.

Written for the Casket.

On seeing the Sun shine, after many days of Cloudy Weather; in Autumn, 1832.

FAREWELL! thy rays just gleamed awhile,
To teach me how I lov'd thee,
And e'er I felt thy cheering smile,
Its glad'ning beams had left me.

Black hanging clouds, like mourning robe,
Are floating high above me,
While gloom, and rain, falls on our globe,
To tell how they regret thee.

Perhaps, when looking from yon sky,
Upon the world beneath thee,
Ashamed—for Mars' enormity
In grief I see, thou'st left me!

Heavenly, cheering, brilliant sun,
I pine, thus long to lose thee,
Along yon track thy course still run,
Its brilliant hues to cheer me.

Perhaps, thy rays, in glory bright
Are playing on the sea,
Whilst we are left in gloom and night,
So long to mourn for thee. ERINETTE.

Digitized by Google

From the Saturday Evening Post.

An Old Maid's Early Dream.

BY MRS. H. M. DODGE.

"I AM glad to go to the city, at last," exclaimed a joyous, rosy-lipp'd girl of sixteen, to her young school-mates, as she crammed an open letter into her pocket, and flew across the hall with the lightness of a bird. "Look!" she continued, flinging the out-side door wide open, and pointing to a shining vehicle which had just arrived; "I am to go in that; is'nt it beautiful?" Her associates, who had followed close behind, looked with something like envious eyes, at the splendid equipage, which was to convey their classmate to a scene which they imagined to be the finest in the world.

"To-morrow, to-morrow!" exclaimed Emily Browne, "only one night more, and I shall leave this old-fashioned dormitory, this enormous bird-cage, and launch out into an ocean of pleasure and fashion. Oh! how delightful, to be always amid smiling and happy faces, amidst music and parties, to be always dressed and always admired. But I must be off, and prepare for the happy to-morrow." Thus saying, she bounded up the long stair-case, while her sad-faced school-mates passed to the now dull and tedious monotony of the recitation room, to con over their lessons, while their hearts were far off, on more beautiful imagery. Emily felt a sort of contemptuous pity for them, when she thought of their low pursuits, as she now styled the duties of the school-room; and her heart beat rapidly, at the idea of the happiness which her sanguine imagination painted in long perspective before her.

Her apparel all looked shabby and common, as she packed the different pieces into an elegant new travelling trunk, which had been sent her from the city, and it was with much difficulty that she could find any thing suitable for her debut into the fashionable world. Her eye first rested on a pale lilac merino, but she turned from it with astonishment at herself, when she recollected that the summer was not yet past and she laughed outright, thinking what a figure she should make in the city with this dress, adding, as she folded it rudely up, "How tastefully it would shine in New York, in the blaze of an Autumn sun!"

The next that underwent her scrutiny, was a silk plaid, which had been greatly admired among her young associates, for the richness and beauty of its colors; but suddenly remembering to have heard it observed, that plaids of all kinds, had become extremely unfashionable in the city, she laid it carefully aside; for she could not find it in her heart to abuse so faithful and valuable an old friend.

The next in rotation, was a pink satin, but, Oh, dear me! The sleeves were so sadly out of fashion, that the poor garment was actually torn in pieces, and next morning the fragments distributed among the girls, to be manufactured into ridicules, pin-cushions, thread-cases, &c. &c. as keep-sakes, to be used on holidays only; for after all, Emily thought the stuff beautiful. The next which came to view, was an elegant flounced and embroidered muslin, sent from the city only the season before; but she thought it would better become a school-girl, among the Hudson Highlands, than a belle in New York; so it was given away to one of her most intimate friends, and her mind became at length settled on a pea-green damask, which, though a legacy of her mother's, it had nevertheless been recently done up in fashionable style, and so it was laid aside with a nearly new calash, of the same color, to be worn on the joyful to-morrow. The tea-bell rang before every thing was duly arranged, but she returned again to the delightful task with new alacrity, and while yet the sun-light lay on the tops of the forest trees, she had put all in proper order, and seated herself by her open window, to watch the last beam of light, as it departed slowly from the top of the tallest tree, on the summit of the highest mountain.

Now, when the cooling influence of the evening breeze, from the Hudson, was shed around her, and the sweet hum of nature, which is ever heard at twilight, among country scenes, stole upon the listening ear, her spirits became gradually calmed, and her mind soothed from the feverish, anxious delight, in which it had existed for several hours. She was an enthusiastic admirer of nature, and often had she leaned out at this very window, and gazed with delight on the profusion of fruits and beautiful wild flowers around her; but her chief object of admiration was the broad, calm bosom of the Hudson, rolling its pure waves at the foot of the eminence on the top of which the house was situated, and winding along among the mountains, like a beautiful thread of silver, filled the mind of the beholder with sensations as chastened as purity itself.

Emily possessed naturly an excellent mind, and quick perceptive faculties; and at this secluded seminary, where she had been nearly four years, she was acquiring a thorough and useful education, when the long solicited permission to go to the city, put an end to her acquirements. This permission was at last brought about, by the decease of a good old maternal aunt, who had resided in the family for many years, and at the death of Emily's mother, took the entire superintendence and command of all the household concerns, and even Mr. Browne himself, never formed the most trivial plan without first consulting Aunty Sybil. The three elder sisters felt her loss in the domestic management of the family, but were, nevertheless, released from a sort of bondage which was very irksome to them during her life-time. Their father never restrained them in any thing, and they now felt their liberty to be complete. The case of poor Emily was soon brought into consideration. They had looked upon her as a sort of exile, banished from the pleasures of life for a season, to acquire something which they possessed not, and cared not to find in another; and all to please Aunty Sybil's "queer whims and notions." They had removed to the city after Emily's departure from home, and all along, their letters to her had been filled with blazing descriptions of the splendid scenes they mingled with in New York, the numerous parties they attended, the elegant and fashionable dresses they were constantly appearing in, and above all, the admiration, nay, even the homage which a beautiful female would receive in the fashionable circles in which she moved. Emily's mind was kept in a constant uneasiness, by these extravagant and ill-timed letters, and she often plead bitterly with Aunty Sybil, to be allowed to leave the boarding-school, and spend at least the vacations in the city; but the wary old sentinel, knew too well the effect such visits would be likely to produce, and utterly refused her permission to set her foot in New York until her education was completely finished, and her mind stored with that useful information and valuable knowledge, which would render her an ornament to her family and sex. The poor girl knew it was in vain to remonstrate, and she therefore redoubled her diligence in her literary pursuits, that her task might be the sooner completed, and the liberty her sisters enjoyed conferred upon her also. Not unfrequently, at twilight, after a day of excessive literary labor, would she steal out a few rods among the Highlands to enjoy the free mountain air, and perchance to watch a solitary steam-boat, as it passed down the Hudson to her beloved city. Often was the feverish temperament of her mind soothed, and rendered gentle and amiable, by these little rambles; and sometimes would she sit nearly a whole night at her open window, and gaze on the calm and beautiful earth, in its repose; while not the sound of a living thing was heard, save now and then it might be the plaintive voice of some lonely whippoorwill, which is a frequent wanderer among the Hudson Highlands. She loved solitude; and had she never heard of New York, and its splendid follies, she would have been most happy in this secluded spot: and even now did she sometimes forget all the world in the objects before her, and the pleasant emotions which tranquilized her bosom.

Digitized by Google

The letter which contained the news of Aunty Sybil's death, contained also permission for Emily's removal to the city; and it was accompanied with such glowing descriptions of the delights of the place, and the splendid parties in contemplation for the ensuing season, that the poor old lady was quite forgotten, in the first ecstacy of the moment; and even afterwards, when she attempted to drop a tear to the memory of her faithful old friend, she could not drive away the deep gush of joyful anticipation, which covered her cheek with a crimson glow, and made her bosom throb with delight.

As she was sitting by her window, indulging the various thoughts, and yielding to the various emotions which the circumstances naturally inspired, the notes of a lonely lute broke on the stillness of the evening, and fell on her ear with such strange and mournful sweetness, that her heart was softened with the most tender emotions; and she wept, with the rich solitude of feeling which flung itself into her soul. She had heard those notes before,—she knew the voice which accompanied them—she knew they were breathing a parting strain for her—and then—for the first time—did she feel a strong tie binding her to the Highlands; a depth of affection like that of mind for kindred mind—or, like the yearning of the soul after its likeness in another; and she sobbed like an innocent child, as she covered her face with her hands, and listened to the last melody of the expiring music. She never, until that moment, realised the true feelings of her heart, or felt the strength of the bands which had been imperceptibly twining themselves for years around her heart; forming a captivity which even the splendors of city life, in long and beautiful perspective, could not burst at a time when the softer emotions of the soul held dominion.

A tree rose at the side of her window, and extended its branches above her head: she heard a rustling among its leaves; but supposing it to be the motion of some wakeful bird, she looked not up, until a low, trembling whisper caught her ear, and assured her of the proximity of some human being; she started back in terror, but her fears were suddenly allayed by the kind words of a well known voice.

"Forgive me, dear Emily," said the romantic intruder, peering from among the branches, and placing one hand on the old fashioned casement, "forgive me, for thus stealing upon your solitude; but they told me you were about to leave us; and I thought——," he hesitated;—her heart spelled out what his would have uttered. "You are going to a dangerous place;" he continued, after a short pause; "and many are the temptations and snares which will there beset you. Why not consent to remain with us a little longer? Surely the beautiful scenery of the Highlands cannot be wholly devoid of charms, if every other object fail to interest you."

She replied not, and taking courage from her silence, bending nearer, he added: "Dearest Emily, I once fondly hoped—but why talk of my hopes?—To-morrow, will convey you forever from my sight; and you will forget—in the dazzling vortex of gaiety and fashion, that the humble Henry Manor, ever wandered by your side along the shores of the Hudson, and braided wreaths for your hair, of the most beautiful wild flowers he could call—that you chattered in his ear, like a playful and happy bird—and that you familiarly called him by the endearing names of friend and brother." He paused, and waited her reply.

They had spent the last four years together, like two joyful and innocent children, in each other's society; not dreaming that a pang was taking root in either heart, to grow up in bitterness.

Henry was the only child of the good woman who conducted the seminary; and never did a son have a more excellent parent. She was training him up to the business of a silver-smith, and never did he go to his work, which lay in a village, about a mile distant, without first receiving her prayers and her blessings. He was fatherless, but so unwearied and efficient had been the kindness and labors of his devoted mother, that he felt it not. He was now just twenty years of age; to a tall and graceful form, began to unite that decided and manly appearance, which constitutes the whole secret of beauty and interest, in the countenance of the male sex. His fine form and face, formed a frequent topic of conversation among the school-girls; but Emily admired most of all, the rich black hair, which clustered above his pale and thoughtful brow, and flung a softened charm over the proud expression of his haughty black eye. He sometimes sighed, that he was to be trained up a mechanic, but he always replied to these murmurings of his heart, that it was his mother's wish; and filial duty should prompt him to entire obedience. He loved Emily, tenderly and unreservedly; but had never breathed aught in her ear, beyond what the most common friendship might have dictated: but now—that she was going forever away—and going to mingle with scenes which would crush in the bud, any little cherished tenderness, which she might have indulged towards him, he felt he must know if he had any thing to hope for in the future; or, whether that parting must be a final separation. These inquiries were made and replied to, with deep embarrasment; but they were free from deception, and coquetry; and contained assurances of reciprocal attachment. A letter correspondence was agreed upon, and Henry retired with a happy heart to his apartment; not to repose, but to meditate on the felicity which he fondly believed would soon be his. Emily also, still remained at her window, to indulge the sweet visions which rooted pleasantly through her mind. She thought of the future, and joy and light seemed written on her footsteps, all along that uncertain track. Soft and harmonious sounds of love and contentment were breathed around her spirit: they flung a sacred charm over her mind, and wrapped up her senses in unutterable delight. The splendors of city life, died away in her imagination, when compared with the rich enjoyment of sweet domestic life; and the unrivalled possession of such a heart as Henry Manor's. A new world seemed open before her, and its sunshine and holy charm, bathed every object with ineffable radiance; life seemed a blessed vision of sinless things, fanned by the fragrance of perennial climes, and soothed by the happy songs of the birds of paradise. Her young heart bounded with delight, and how could it be otherwise, with such a shrine of unsullied innocence and purity? The gloomy forms of art and deception had never entered there, and the rich buoyancy of her spirits beamed from her eye, and covered her countenance with a smile of peace which lasted many days. More than an hour, she indulged these blissful anticipations and early dreams, inspired by purity itself: but at length remembering it was late, she retired to rest, and her sleeping visions were in the same train with her waking.

Digitized by Google

On her arrival in New York, she found that splendid preparation had been made for her reception; but the treasures of her heart had been left among the highlands, and she secretly pined to return again to their peaceful quiet. At length, however, the dazzling light of fashion and admiration began to allure her understanding—the adder tongue of flattery, began to have a sweetness in its sound, and she was persuaded to look with contempt on the quiet of country life, and above all, to despise the idea of corresponding with a mechanic. At length, Henry's letters remained unanswered, which caused great uneasiness in his mind, and made him resolve on as early a visit to the city as business would permit. Meanwhile Emily became wholly engrossed with the gay scenes around her; she received proposals of marriage from many a flaunting suitor, but her choice fell on one of great wealth, and of whom it was said, he would be the most eloquent speaker at the bar of any lawyer in New York; her sisters often jeered her on the subject of her former intimacy, asking her if she did not prefer a mountain boy, a highland mechanic, to Esq. B——; telling her she would make a fine figure, walking down Broadway with a silversmith! At first, she was displeased at these remarks, but at length she learned to carry on a jest at the expense of poor Henry, with a very good zest, and even, as the love of coquetry strengthened, she would introduce the subject herself.

Her nuptials were to be celebrated on the 22nd of February, and as strange fate would have it, Henry's first visit to the city was made on that very day. His announcement caused the poor bride considerable consternation, and she flew to her sisters for advice, "Go to him, Emma, and speak kindly; tell him we wish his presence to a fine party here this evening; but hark ye, say nothing about your wedding."

The trembling girl knew it was in vain to remonstrate, but her heart smote her bitterly, at the idea of thus treating her old friend and lover; but suddenly the recollection of the admiration or envy, she expected to see flashing from every eye that evening, the high alliance her beauty and wealth had secured her, and above all, the little garlands of coquetry she had been for some time wreathing, she thought would be most gracefully displayed on that occasion; "And Oh!" she said, her heart bounding with delight, "what a fine figure it will make, when it comes to be whispered about, that so handsome a youth as Henry Manor, has come so many miles to sigh, and perhaps to weep at my wedding." Her vanity, and foolish love of coquetry now entirely overcame the better feelings of her heart and understanding, and she determined to make herself appear as lovely as possible in his eyes, that the triumph of her coquetry might be the more complete. Poor Henry little thought of the plot which was maturing, to destroy his peace and make him the object of ridicule and contempt for the party which he promised to attend, and for which he left his Emily with a buoyant heart, to make the necessary preparations. He fancied himself the happiest of men, and as the appointed hour drew near, he paced his room with impatience, keeping his watch before him, that not a moment might be lost by delay, not that he anticipated so much pleasure from the festivities of the scene, as from the society of his almost adored Emily.

The elegant mansion of Mr. Browne shone with great splendor that evening, and never, perhaps, in New York, had a more becoming bridal dress been worn, than graced the beautiful form of Emily, and gathered up a sort of scornful expression in her eye, as she adjusted the last ringlet, and seated herself in her own apartment to wait Esq. B——'s arrival. The hour passed over, however, and he came not; it was thought exceedingly singular, but no one doubted of his speedy arrival. Henry wondered greatly at what he saw and heard, and inquiry at length unfolded to him the whole mystery with which he had felt himself surrounded. He dashed through the crowd, and declaring he had something of importance to say to Emily, was conducted to her apartment. Supposing it to be her intended husband, she arose to meet him; but what was her surprise, when she beheld the injured Henry Manor before her, pale and trembling with emotion, and scarcely able to articulate her name. Soon recovering his self-possession, he said in a low voice: "I came, not to upbraid you, Emily, but to leave you my forgiveness and my blessing. I hope you may yet see, and understand, the wrong you have inflicted on the most devoted of hearts; but, may GOD avert its punishment from your head. I shall endeavour to forget this painful evening, and————" his voice faltered, and his manly heart seemed contending with powerful and conflicting emotions; but it was for a moment only. Rallying himself, he added; "Should your ever need a friend, call on Henry Manor;"—then gazing steadily in her face a moment, he hurried from the apartment, and was seen no more in that place. Emily felt her heart sink within her, but striving against her better feelings, she essayed to laugh at his emotion, and scorn his offers of friendship.

Digitized by Google

Another hour passed, and strange surmises and whispers began to be industriously circulated among the vast company, which was now all assembled, and waiting in uneasy suspense. At length, however, a messenger came, and brought sad tidings! The bridegroom had been seized with sudden illness, and begged to be excused; but the fact was, he had all along secretly solicited the hand of another, who had perseveringly refused his suit, and he had given the case up as hopeless, until that very evening, when he received a short note from his lady love which made him the happiest man in the world, and the next week they were married, without any farther comment or explanation. Emily was so chagrined, and her pride so deeply wounded by this dreadful slight, that she shut herself up in her room, and refused all society. Her sisters, who were not less mortified than herself, now set themselves busily at work to put slanderous stories in motion respecting the newly married couple, particularly the wife, who seemed the object of their most inveterate malice; her family stood very high in society, and soon this slanderous abuse of their relative was so resented by them as to plunge Mr. Browne deeply into the law; and the daughters still continued to take so active a part in the business, that they rendered themselves disgusting. They were accordingly neglected by degrees, and finally no one visited the house, unless it was some old family gossip, or perchance now and then, some dandy money-hunter, who cared more for his mustaches than his mind, and valued in the same ratio a heavy purse and the good qualities of a wife.

At the expiration of a few months, Mr. Browne informed his daughters, that in addition to what he had expended in the law, he had lost several very large sums in trade, by the failures of country dealers, which had reduced him to actual poverty, and in the course of a few weeks he should be under the necessity of removing to some small and hired mansion. In this dilemma, the poor girls shut themselves up to consult together what they should do. After a distressing time of resolves and re-resolves, the eldest proposed that each one should accept of some rejected offer, and thus secure herself some sort of a settlement, before their father's insolvency became public.

"But here is little Emma," exclaimed one of them; "she looks exceedingly dejected; thinking, probably, that no one will have her, after such a disgrace as she has sustained."

"What, not the genteel highland mechanic?" cried another, tapping Emily on the cheek; "never fear, sister; he would gladly walk on his head to New York, could he but carry you back with him."

"I have no doubt of his good will," replied Emily, "but it humbles me exceedingly, to have to offer myself to him, after what has passed."

"But that was only a trifle," said another, "written on the page of coquetry, which marriage will blot out. I intend to have Dick Denson, the country merchant, whom I treated so scornfully last fall. He knows not what I have suffered in society, nor my ruined fortune, and you all know he thinks me next to an angel."

Several letters were forthwith despatched, and never was the arrival of the penny post, or some sort of messenger, more eagerly desired. At length Mr. T ——, was announced. The elder of the sisters laughed aloud with joy, and hastily renewing her rouge, and putting on one of her prettiest airs, she passed to the best parlour, not a whit doubting but she should soon walk there a bride. Mr. T——— received her very gravely, and after the first salutation, desired her to sit down and hear him patiently a few moments, as he had but a short time to remain.

"Your note, Miss Browne," said he, looking her full in the face, "was duly received; but I am surprised that you should think of a connection with me. When I offered you my hand, I believed you possessed of all those amiable qualities which render woman lovely, and also tenderly solicitous for my happiness; but when I discovered your entire want of regard for me, your coquetries and flirtations, I feared you, and have since deemed my escape a merciful interposition of Heaven. Take my advice, Miss Browne, and never desire a connection with a man for whom you have no tender regard, or with whom you have thus trifled." Wishing her prosperity through life, he bade her good morning, and hurried from the parlour, leaving her as pale and motionless as a statue.

Her next sister was more successful, as the dandy physician to whom she offered herself, cared for her fortune only; and deeming this secure, he joyfully accepted her proposal. They were speedily married, and each secretly triumphed in the bargain they believed they had made; but the wretchedness that ensued in after life, was a stern proof, that marriage contracted on such narrow and selfish principles, can never be productive of domestic felicity.

A short time after this event, the same penny post brought a letter from Dick Denson and

Digitized by Google

Henry Manor. Emily grasped the anxiously looked for packet, and trembling with emotion, fled to her own apartment. The letter from the country merchant was broken open on the spot, and its contents were as follows:

DEAR MADAM:—I am sorry to disappoint you, but really, I was married to a lovely woman in just three weeks after leaving you. It is surprising that you should possess so deep a regard for me as to have it still continue, and make you so extremely miserable. Please excuse the brevity of my note, as you know that commonplace business usually receives but a small share of attention while the honey-moon lasts.

Yours, &c. RICHARD DENSON.

The vexation of the poor girl was indescribable. She beat her breast in an agony of grief and shame, and flinging herself flat on the floor, she gave full vent to her feelings in a flood of tears. The torrent of passion having subsided, she remembered that Emily had received a letter also, and with a sort of envious emotion, she hastened to learn its contents. She found Emily as colorless as the letter in her hand, which she grasped convulsively, and yielded only at her sister's earnest entreaties. It read as follows:

DEAR EMILY:—Your communication was the first intelligence I have received from you since I saw you, as I supposed, on the evening of your marriage. I am sincerely sorry for your misfortunes; and be not offended at my plainness, if I assure you, that pride and deception seldom go unpunished. Had you loved me, Emily, as my devoted heart fondly believed, and as you declared, you could never have treated me as you did; and this fact taught me a lesson, which was exceedingly painful to be learned; but the task is now nearly accomplished, and I would not, for the wealth of the Indies, have those feelings revived which once existed in my bosom. The coquet is altogether an unsuitable companion for a sober and rational man. I would therefore entreat you, if you expect any happiness in this life, or in the life to come, to repent before God, and to forsake the dangerous path you are pursuing. I am still your friend, and any assistance I can render you, shall be cheerfully done; but a dearer sentiment than common friendship, must never again be awakened in my heart towards you. I am happy now, and that you may be so also, is the sincere prayer of your Well wisher, &c. H. MANOR.

"What fools we have been," exclaimed Emily's sister, with bitterness; "we might——but why talk of what we might have done? all is over now. But stop: I have just bethought me of the tall young poet, and his intimate friend, the printer. You recollect the delicate sonnet the former composed on my beauty, and also the splendid visiting cards which the latter presented you, as a specimen of his uncommon ingenuity. We will invite them to tea to-morrow."

Seven years from that evening, Emily Browne sat in the little parlor of a friend, alone, and sad hearted. She had buried her father and two sisters; and the one who remained, was nothing less than a living death. Married as she had been for the sake of her supposed fortune, a knowledge of her poverty had rendered her a hated and miserable being, and the abuse she constantly received from her iron-hearted husband, was fast bringing her also, to an early grave.

Poor Emily had not received a single offer of marriage since her disappointment, and she now subsisted solely on the trifling income of her needle. She often wept bitterly over her egregious errors, and the image of Henry Manor was seldom out of her mind. She had heard of the high reputation he had acquired in society, and of the wealth his talent at business was rapidly accumulating. She had also heard he was still unmarried, and who could tell but she was the cause. Some had said, that early and deep affection never wholly expires; and perhaps, should he behold her, (and she deemed herself as beautiful as ever,) the inextinguishable spark might be rekindled into as bright a flame as when it first existed. She sat alone, brooding over her hard fate, when a new resolution suddenly crossed her mind, and its effect was like the first ray of morning over the darkened earth. She flung aside her needle, and made preparations for a journey. That journey was a pleasant one, for the days of other years came over her memory with rich and delightful views; and when she beheld at a distance the Hudson Highlands, her heart throbbed with sweet emotion, produced by the lovely imagery which crowded before her fancy. The bliss of her artless and innocent days seemed flinging back a sort of sunshine on her wearied spirit, and lighting it up to hope, and pleasing anticipation. It was evening when she reached the seminary house. A soft and holy charm rested on the face of creation, and the quiet moonbeams slumbered, as they had used to do, on the bosom of the Hudson. The same rich hum of nature—the same deep murmur of the winds among the surrounding mountains—and the same image of hallowed purity rested on that beloved spot; and in comparison with their charms, she despised the most splendid city life.

"Oh, that I had never left you, blest seclusion from temptation and vanity;" she sighed, as the cool breeze lifted her still glossy ringlets, and wafted by the fragrant breath of June. Entirely overcome with the overflowing emotions of her soul, she dismissed her attendant, and sat down on the stone steps, to enjoy the mournful delight which the scene inspired, and nerve her feelings to meet her old friends with less embarrassment. Suddenly the soft touch of instrumental music fell on her ear, and soon the high strains of vocal harmony united in the joyous peal, and filled all that lonely spot with the voice of happy but sacred song. Emily entered the hall, and soon perceived that a considerable company were assembled in the large parlor. She stood in the shade, and could distinctly see what was passing. She soon discovered Henry, and a very young and beautiful female at his side, attired in her bridal array. She listened with breathless anxiety—the voice of music was breathing a nuptial hymn—the sacred Administrator was there—with his flowing robe—all—all confirmed the painful fact!—her head grew dizzy—she saw and heard no more.

Digitized by Google

* * * * All was silent as the tomb in the apartment, where she found herself on the return of consciousness: a feeble light glimmered on the hearth, and a female whom she recognized as an old family domestic, was sitting beside her. She was bewildered a moment, but suddenly the whole truth flashed before her recollection, and her hurried inquiries told the bitter repentance and anguish of her heart. The old domestic informed her that, about three years previous, a widowed lady, in delicate health, took board at the seminary, for a few weeks, for the benefit of the free mountain air. She was accompanied by her only child, a daughter, just fourteen years of age. The lady's health declined so rapidly that she soon found herself on the eve of death. She gave up her daughter to the care of Mrs. Manor, declaring she knew no person, among an extensive circle of friends, with whom she would sooner trust her orphan child. She begged her, with her dying voice, to watch carefully over her religious and moral education, as well as those of books, and be to her a mother, when she should be motherless in the world. The young orphan possessed a handsome fortune, which was also entrusted to the care of Mrs. Manor and her son, until she should become of age. The sympathy which Henry felt for her in her lonely situation, soon ripened into a deeper sentiment. The superior intelligence and excellence of her mind, developed by degrees, secured his highest esteem; he sought to assimilate her views and feelings to his own, and to blend their minds together, if possible, that they might be suitable companions for after years. Nor was he disappointed in this; for they soon became so entirely one in spirit, that they were happy only in each others society; but their marriage was delayed until her education was finished.

Emily heard this little narration through, and felt that her heart was bursting in silence. She begged to be assisted to a large arm-chair standing by the window, and then to be left alone. It was the very room she used to occupy when a scholar at the seminary; and there were the same articles of furniture, which used to constitute its ornament and convenience. She was sitting in the same chair, and by the same open window, as on the evening before her departure for the city; but oh! what different emotions now filled her bosom! Then she was floating away in the dreamy existence of many happy years—now she was brooding over the gloomy days of a desolate future. Her last hope was now wrenched from her heart, and she felt like a miserable outcast on the face of the earth. What was she, and what might she not have been! "Oh! that I could roll back the wheels of time," she exclaimed, with unutterable agony of spirit, "to that pleasant evening when I last sat here; that I could but feel what I then felt;—Alas! that early dream has departed forever from my heart, and my own folly has averted its fulfilment! Henry Manor justly hates me—he loves another—he is married!" and she burst into a flood of bitter tears. Suddenly the door opened, and Henry himself entered, supporting his lovely bride. She sobbed aloud, and refused to be comforted. "Emily," said he, "we are all happy here, come and be happy with us. I have heard of your sorrows, I know you are a pennyless orphan, but let not that afflict you. This place shall be your home as long as you will remain with us. I will be a brother to you, and my beloved Cynthia will be a sister. She deeply pities you, for her heart is all tenderness and affection. My excellent mother is also ready to extend the hand of sympathy and consolation. Come, Emily, draw a veil over the past, and blend the sunlight of hope with the future." She replied only with the burning tears, wrung from an agonized heart.

* * * * * *

Several years after this, a stranger visited this romantic solitude. The old seminary house had been metamorphosed into an elegant country seat, and Henry Manor still lived there, with an interesting family rising around him. Poor Emily Browne was still an inmate there; but her hollow eye, and faded cheek, told how the errors of youth embitter the years of after life.

Written for the Casket.

A Father's Lament for his First Born.

BY JOHN C. M'CABE.

She's gone! that lovely flower, which late so fond I prest.
And that young heart that beat so quick hath hushed itself to rest;
And as the rolling billow, that dies along the shore,
Makes a low soul-touching moan, and then is heard no more;
My little prattler gazed awhile upon the earth and sighed,
Then closed her azure lids o'er her soft blue eyes, and died.

Farewell, my little charmer! farewell, my Mary dear!
O t from thy father's eye shall fall, the agonizing tear;
When memory from her treasury brings each feature fond to view;
The coral lip, the rosy cheek, the eye of melting blue,
When fancy shall the ear with touching music fill,
Of that loved voice, oh! how the soul with anguish keen will thrill.

'Tis said that kindred spirits, watch over those on earth they love,
And art thou, dearest Mary, looking from thy home above,
O'er the pathway of thy father, as he wends him to thy grave,
Where night-winds whisper solemnly, and weeping willows wave?

Oh! couldst thou leave thy happy home, beyond those star-lit skies,
Or could I take an angel's wing, and to those regions rise,
That I might clasp my child once more, and give a parent's kiss,
A calm would o'er my spirit steal, and grief would yield to bliss.

It cannot be! it cannot be, thou never wilst return,
Nor can my clay-clogg'd spirit rise, to where those pale lights burn:
But at thy little tomb I'll watch, 'till each star fades away—
Night! thou shalt witness all my grief, too sacred 'twere for day.

Digitized by Google

ROULETTE.

(FROM THE FRENCH.)

ROULETTE! The word is ignoble—base. It combines in its eight letters a thousand horrid and shameful associations:—embezzlements—dishonour—ruin—want—despair—and even a violent death! Gentlemen of uniform habits—mild and gentle housewives—students—timid young girls, whose lively step and graceful gait but speak of love and happiness—parents, whose only hope is in your first born, does not this word, with its hidious "cortegè," sound frightful to your ears?

To me it was so, but confusedly.

"Bah!" said I one day—I wished to see it.

This was curiosity.

You are aware that one always feels an emotion, not to be defined upon first visiting an unknown and mysterious place, but mine was an uncontrollable palpitation of the heart—it was terror. At the entrance, in a long hall but faintly lighted, covered with an immense number of hats, whose owners were there, engaged at roulette;—figures who never smile, and whose scrutinizing looks would almost seem to penetrate your soul—examine attentively your person—your countenance; and immediately behind these are "Gens d'armes," who look like mastiffs ready to leap forward and seize their prey. The appearance is chilling. Thoughts of the malefactor—of the thief—the prison—of the inquisition, came over me; the penetrating and distrustful looks, which convey to your mind the idea of the secret and invisible police! Yes, it is evident the moment you enter here, the compact is ratified—"Tell me whom you associate with, and I will tell you what you are!" Of this I was conscious these men make no distinction. I thought of my mother, my friends, and my sweet Marie, and my heart melted. I had determined not to hazard a "denier;" but of that hereafter.

I have now entered. This is worthy of description:—In the centre of a vast hall, which occupies almost the whole extent of the building, you perceive an immense throng, who are, as it were, immoveable. In the midst of this collection of men, is a space occupied by a large oval table, tightly covered with cloth of a beautiful and sightly green; upon this cloth are traced lines of a yellow golden colour. Each number has a little enclosure where it is distinctly visible, and seems to say to the eye which regards it, come to me, and not to my neighbour. Around the numbers and on the opposite side, these words were written—"Manquè," marking the division from 1 to 18—"Passe,"—that from 19 to 36,—"Pair,"—"Impair."—Upon each side there is also a laxenge, the one "rouge," and the other "noir." The figures are exactly the same on both sides of the table, in the centre of which is seen that infernal instrument the Roulette. At the base of a shining and beautifully polished cavity of mahogany, about two feet in diameter, a cylinder turns upon a pivot, upon which are figures in circular order, alternatively "rouge" and "noir," the numbers on the cloth, and each number furnished with a little case.

Four personages of grave and unchangeable countenance, sit on the right and left in semi-circular spaces cut in the table; before them are arranged, in symmetrical order, rouleaux of gold and silver. Three hold between them a long "rateau," fit simbol of their terrible power. The fourth, grasping with one hand the sticks of copper, by means of which the cylinder is put in motion, gives it a lively push, and with the other, at each revolution of the cylinder, throws with force an ivory ball. The silence is deathlike—each eye is fixed with intense anxiety upon that ball, as upon that of a judge from whose sentence there is no appeal. It quickly makes eight or ten rotations the length of the shining partitions of the basins, then losing its force, it declines towards the centre, and encountering the little obstacles purposely placed in its route, is forced to fall at last into one of the numerous cases of the cylinder. The number which has "Manquè," is proclaimed in a loud voice, and the tranquil banker unpityingly removes the stakes, or ostentatiously throws to the fortunate players a shower of gold.

This sight is not sad—despair does not agitate any one; a brilliant light shines directly upon the lively green cloth, where, like the brightest diamonds, glitters the newly coined gold. A delicious warmth is circulated throughout the hall, and gives to my limbs the elasticity of which a cold winter's month had deprived them. Thus the emotion of fear and shame which I had at first felt, waxed fainter and fainter, until I stood, in bold relief, the attentive observer of the game and the gamester.

Behold me now, well familiarized. I placed myself first to observe all the players. They belonged partly to that of the middling class—partly to that of the necessitous and eminently "Parisienne," whose clothes, without being mean, showed long service. Persons whose expedients were inexhaustible—of a wan and haggard appearance.—the last fourth, of the working class. All ages, with the exception of infancy and youth, were here indistinguishably commingled. There were also to be seen from time to time, old and hoary heads, which shook and seemed to intimate that in this place, as well as in all others, we shall attain old age.

In the street, either of these figures could not but have arrested my attention. Here only they have nothing in their appearance which could excite particular notice. Here all have the same appearance. The green cloth gives to each a uniform and general cast of countenance—that of cupidity, but tranquillity. A short experience taught me that it was but from time to time that concealed emotions suddenly manifested themselves. A deathlike paleness, the livid compression of the lips, the haggard fixedness of the eyes, following the last piece of money, which goes and leaves in exchange misery and despair.

I perceived, also, that some players almost covered the table with gold and notes which nightly made and sank fortunes, and it was that which forcibly struck my imagination. But no! some pieces of two and five francs are the stakes. Roulette is not the giant monster whose insatiate rapacity devours all in an instant, but like the snow-ball, it increases with each revolution, insidiously but constantly. Whatever obstacles are opposed to its march, it speedily overthrows—still rolling on, until it accumulates all. But the justice of this last comparison was not yet demonstrated to me.

Digitized by Google

For curiosity I studied the complicated motion of the machine, and I perceived that in the payment of the winnings, the bank always had the balance in its favour; but it did not appear to me in an unequal proportion, for I made the illusory calculation that the hazard was subject to the laws of equilibrium, whilst there was a power which advantageously counterbalanced the chances against the banker, and gave them in his favour. Alas! it is this cursed idea which governs the actions of those who play; it is the foundation of all their ingenious but erroneous systems—the true malady which undermines and slowly consumes the source of riches, and even that of life itself—an insurmountable barrier opposes all his efforts—the limits imposed upon the winnings. Finding myself under the influence of this idea, I studied the game to myself. After having attained what I thought would give the probable chances in my favour, I played by myself long, and always fortunately. A feverish and irresistible desire to substitute the reality for fiction came over me.

I did so—hazarding little, it is true, at first. Fortune did not leave me to sigh. The moment my plan began systematically to unfold itself, I became suddenly relieved and consoled. I returned a possessor (in comparison with what I had hazarded) of winnings, which encouraged me to return. As I had been likely to have lost all my stake, I put my experience to good account. I passed the rest of the night, pen in hand, in forming a plan more extensive and systematic, which would by successive gradations, make me possessor of five hundred francs!

I did not deceive myself. I did not suppose that my calculation was infallible. I saw a possibility of losing, but it was distant and improbable, and which, should it occur, would find me covered by anterior winnings. I was not without emotion, but I calmed myself by the common reflection, that "if I do lose, I shall not die, and will play no more."

Who would believe that in the course of twenty-seven nights, in intervals of three and four hours, my winnings were constant as the gain was in proportion to the extreme precaution which I took in my stakes, (which were always the smallest possible,) it was not a fortune, but still it amounted to three thousand six hundred francs. It requires but little knowledge of the weakness of poor human nature, to perceive that a French head could not long resist this good fortune entranced by all its fascinations. But it did not last. I had discovered the secret for which the pale alchymist had so long laboured, of which so many sages had dreamed. I saw in the far perspective all the pleasures in the power of luxury and riches to bestow. I arrived at such a point of infatuation that I was agitated by fears lest the public rooms should be suddenly closed by an ordinance of government.

On the 28th day, (for I noted it particularly, having given myself a month's leisure to judge whether my calculations were correct,) on the 29th day I repeat, I dressed myself gaily according to custom and repaired to the table as a source from which I could derive all the happiness in the power of gold to bestow. I saw with a malignant joy and a kind of triumph, that the bankers threw furtive glances upon the two little tablets placed before me and sought to discover what that system could be which so unceremoniously diminished their piles of treasure.

At length the moment arrived when the period prolonged by the sortie of several numbers, put the chances in my favour, and gave me an opportunity to commence my play. My calculation had thus far proved correct, but I had little success. Behold me now at the last throw, the loss of which involves that of five hundred francs. I listen with anxiety—my fate is pronounced, and five hundred francs are lost.

This blow overcame me. I took a few hurried turns in the hall, and was obliged to have recourse to the wretched beer which is there gratuitously distributed.

When a few minutes had reconciled me to the idea of my loss which it would take five or six days to repair, I again advanced to the fatal field of battle, but not with the same confidence. In short, with an inconceivable perversity and without in the least deviating from the rules I had laid down, I lost twice the amount of the whole stake. It was all I had brought with me. Fifteen hundred francs! One night has seen them all disappear. As my elevation had been rapid, so was I the more discouraged by my ill success. I must now fall from the dizzy height to which I had so lately been raised. It would be well to reflect. One thing is evident, what happens to-day may happen to-morrow—may occur repeatedly and end by ruining me.

I would have been wise had I retained this lesson, but a deceitful hope glitters anew before my eyes, and not to fatigue the reader by the repetition of the same scenes, let it suffice, that in a few evenings I not only lost the sums I had won, but after a few fluctuations of insignificant winnings, I saw myself stripped of nearly two thousand francs—my primitive property. One cannot form an idea of the whimsical strangeness with which objects and persons appeared to my eyes during the last days of my visits to this place. It was no longer life. It was a dream. I tossed upon my sleepless pillow until I became almost delirious, whichever way I turned the little balls of ivory met my eyes. Mine ear accustomed to the monotonous tones of the banker was unceasingly tortured by the importunate repetition. During the night my situation was insupportable, the whole phantasmagoria appeared to my tortured imagination with an intolerable eclat, and when the light of day appeared bringing with it returning reason, I could only make the cruel but just reflection, that without play I was absolutely miserable. Nevertheless I had not resolution to abstain, an irresistible impulse still urged me madly forward to the total loss of all my money.

An hundred francs were to be remitted to me by my sister-in-law, these must also pay their tribute. I flew to her and whilst she opened her secretary to seek for them, I gazed upon the cheerful fire which enlivened the room—the neat and well arranged apartment in which she so much prided herself—the half opened book so tastefully laid beside the familiar lamp and I felt as a being of another world—like something hideous.

Digitized by Google

These joys are no longer mine—the calmness which is painted on the face, and which, (as it were,) identifies itself with the atmosphere in which she lives, have long since fled from me. How bitterly did this thought recur—with what an agitated hand did I receive the money which a few brief minutes would probably see engulphed. The poor girl in giving me the money, noticed five recently coined gold pieces, and remarked, that "they were very new;"—"they are worth keeping, mon cher." I fled from her presence. Had an adder stung me, I could not have felt it more keenly. Bitter indeed were my reflections, and for a moment my better genius prevailed. It was but for a moment. The insatiable thirst again came over me, and ere another hour had pass'd I was at Roulette! I threw my five pieces upon the table. I have lost.

Well—some may think that it has the appearance of fiction, but I swear that a sombre satisfaction gladdened my heart, I had received a deserved and complete punishment for my folly, and I re-entered upon life—the happy life of other men. I again enjoyed the refreshing breeze of the early morning, the smiling face of my friends, and the tender endearments of her whom I love.

Behold me now leaving the accursed place, firmly resolved never to re-enter, when a man tolerably well clad, standing at the entrance of the alley, in the "Rue de Valois," seeing me advancing with a smiling face, humbly stepped forward, and begged me to have pity upon his misery. I was not in a frame of mind to refuse and mechanically put my hand to my pocket, I felt something in the corner of my vest pocket. It is money. 'Tis a franc. Here, said I, seizing him forcibly by the hand. There was something in my tone, something that told of joy and triumph, which had a visible effect upon the wretched being who speculated upon the generosity of the lucky players. He imagined that I came out with pockets lined with gold.

That man was one of the innumerable victims of play, and his appearance at that door was as forcible a lesson to me as that which I had a few moments before received.

Both have had their effects upon me, and may they yet be of service to the player, whose eye may by any chance fall upon this chapter.

Mc L.

If you are ever at a loss, as to the individual character of the person you wish to gain, the general knowledge of human nature will teach you one infallible specific—flattery. The quantity and quality may vary according to the exact niceties of art; but in any quantity and in any quality it is more or less acceptable, and therefore certain to please. Only never (or at least very rarely) flatter when other people, besides the one to be flattered, are by; in that case you offend the rest, and you make even your intended dupe ashamed to be pleased.—Bulwer.

ADVENTURE WITH A PIRATE.

It is about three years since I first became acquainted with a young Englishman named Ord, who having on the death of his father, come into possession of some valuable estates in the West Indies, was at that time engaged in examining the value and management of his patrimony. In the prosecution of this object he visited Cuba, where my father, whose mercantile transactions were connected with his, resided, and where Ord remained for some weeks. He had a complete passion for the sea, and in the course of many pleasure trips among the neigbouring islands, in a fine little schooner which he had brought from England, we became the most intimate friends. There was a noble, almost a wild enthusiasm about his character, which though it harmonized well with his athletic and handsome appearance, would have appeared Quixotic, had it not been borne out by his utter contempt of danger, when danger really existed. I will give one instance out of many. We were boating up against a stiff south-east breeze off Cape Tiburon, in Hispaniola, when one of the men, who had gone aloft to take in a reef in the fore-top-sail, sung out to those below that a piratical galley was bearing down upon us with all sail set. Ord and I were at that time in the cabin, and having exhausted every social subject of amusement, half devoured with ennui, were engaged separately and almost silently; I, in turning over a set of engravings of sea fights, and Ord cursing these "piping times of peace," in lazily setting up a few of the ropes of a frigate, which he was making as a model. Immediately, however, that the man, entering the cabin doffed his cap, and smoothing down his hair, told his story, Ord uttered a whoop of delight, and springing up with a haste which snapped half the spars in his beloved frigate, rushed on deck.

The man at the helm was waiting for the expected order to put the vessel about, and the crew were at the sheets and braces ready to execute the manœuvre; but Ord, singing out "steady" seized a spy-glass and ran up the shrouds to examine the pirate. In a minute or two he came down, with a joyous expression of countenance, and seeing that his men whispering discontentedly to each other, well knowing the bloody dispositions of these pirates, he addressed them thus:

"My lads! there are just a score of strapping negroes in the galley bearing down upon us; of course they will be well supplied with cutlasses and small arms, but they have not a single piece of metal among them; now you all know well enough that the little petral (the name of our schooner) has the legs of these luffards, and my wish is to send a message from our long Tom in a friendly way among them; we can run when we can do no better—so all you who are willing to stand by your captain, will draw off to the weather side—and if there are any of you who are afraid of a few naked blacks in a long boat, with a lug sail, keep your present stations."

Our crew consisted of four Englishmen, a Scotchman, a Dutchman, and three or four negroes, and it was curious to observe the effect of our captains speech upon them. The En-fishermen gave three loud cheers, and sprang to the weather side of our little craft; the Scotchman more slowly, but quite as determinedly, followed, muttering, that "it was by no means prudent, but hang him if he would craw the dunghill craw;" while the Dutchman, without uttering a word, turned his quid in his cheek, squirted the juice deliberately over the lee bulwark, and hitching up his trowsers walked after his companions. The negroes alone remained standing; they seemed utterly terrified at the idea of attacking these bloody and remorseless pirates, of whose atrocities they had seen and heard so much, and cast fearful glances towards the nearing galley, as if they felt their long knives already at their throats.

Digitized by Google

A good dram, and a threat of keelhauling them, however, presently put them all right, and they bustled about with great alacrity to get "long Tom" (a long barrelled gun which we carried, and which was generally stationed amidships) placed astern with the muzzle depressed, and covered with a tarpaulin. For my own part, as I was more familiar than Ord with the barbarous cruelties of our pirates, I confess that I did not enter into the affair with the joyousness which he seemed to feel, I knew that a moment of ir-resolution, a chance shot, or a sheet missing stays, might place the pirate alongside of us, and then there was nothing for us but torture and death. However, I had every confidence in the excellence of our seamen, in Ord's coolness, and, above all, in "long Tom." The crew seemed also to consider the gun as their principal defence, for every glance at the approaching pirates was followed by one directed to the manœuvres of one of the companions, who under cover of the tarpaulin, was cramming "long Tom" with what he called "his grub," being several pounds of grape shot, old spike nails, and-so-forth.

We were still standing off on the starboard tack, and the pirates not at all expecting the warm reception we were preparing for them, bearing down with a flowing sheet upon us, when Ord, hailing them through a speaking trumpet, ordered them to stand clear or he would fire upon them. The only answer to this summons was a loud discordant laugh, which coming down the wind to us, sounded as if they were already alongside.—Turning round with a calm smile on his face, Ord nodded to his men, who having before received their instruction, rounded the little Petrel on the keel, and swept away on the larboard tack, with a celerity which could hardly have been surpassed by the sea bird whose name she bore. But though the manœuvre was performed with the most admirable dexterity, it placed the galley of the pirates for a moment within a hundred yards of us; and as, with our sheets close hauled, we stretched away from them, a shower of bullets discovered their vexation on being thus baffled. Most of the balls fell short, though two or three rattled through the cabin windows, and one whizzing between Ord and the man at the helm, snapped off one of the spokes of the wheel, and buried itself in the mainmast. "That's a Spanish rifle," said the helmsman, with great sang froid "and you thundering thief in the bow of the boat fired it; I can see the long barrel shining yet: none of their clumsy muskets could have sent a ball as far into a spar of the little Petrel;" and he passed his hand down the splintered wheel-spoke, as a person might examine the wounded limb of his friend. "Never mind," said Ord, "we'll return their civility presently;" and lifting his hat he cheered on the pirates, who had got their boat round, and with sails and sweeps were labouring in our wake.

Meantime we got 'long Tom's' nose, as the seamen jocosely called it, leveled, and ready for being thrust out on the larboard quarter, the carpenter, with his axe, standing ready to smash the bulwark, which yet concealed the gun from our pursuers. They were soon so near as that he could perfectly distinguish every individual of their crew, and fierce bloody looking wretches they were as ever I beheld. Most of them were nearly naked to the waist, where a belt, at which hung pistol and cutlass, girded their brawny frames. A tall, grey-headed negro stood at the bow of the boat holding with one hand by the forestay, and the other resting upon the long Spanish barrelled gun, which our steersman had before noticed. "I could hit him now, sir, if you would but trust me with your rifle for a moment," said the man, casting another glance at his partially shattered wheel. Whether Ord was pleased with that congenial pride in his vessel, and that desire to revenge an injury done to her, which every true seaman possesses and which the wish of the helmsman discovered, I do not know; but putting the rifle into the man's hand, and taking his place at the wheel, he simply desired him to make sure. Never did I see gratitude more forcibly developed than in the helmsman's face, nor did I ever behold more intense agony displayed in human features, than a moment produced in his. The gun which he was raising dropped from his grasp upon the deck, and his arm, shattered at the elbow, quivered convulsively at his side. A glance at the old pirate's rifle, showed the cause of this sudden injury; while it gave proof of the quickness and deadliness of his arm. At this moment the men cried out that other galleys where making from the shore, which we were now at no great distance from; and looking around, we saw two or three large boats pulling lustily out of a creek, where they had been concealed by the spreading cocoa-nut trees and thick tangled underwood.

It was now that Ord's perfect coolness and resolute courage displayed themselves; he put the helm into my hands, and giving the word "ready about," to his men, took up his rifle which the wounded seaman had dropped. The old negro was loading his piece, and we could even hear his chuckling laugh at the success of his late exploit. Immediately when Ord presented himself over the taffrail there was a general volley fired at him by the crew of pirates, amid which he stood as unmoved as a rock, until catching his opportunity, as our vessel hung on the top of a wave, he fired and the old negro tumbled headlong among his companions, while his gun was discharged by the shock, shewed that the Petrel and her steersman was fully avenged. "About ship," cried

Digitized by Google

Ord, as he laid his rifle carefully down on the deck, and looked at me with a half suppressed smile of triumph. Every thing was so silent that the creaking of the ropes and flapping of the wet canvass, as our sails gibed, where heard distinctly, but in an instant the little craft was about, and getting hold of the wind began to skip over the waves for the offing. The pirates were now on our larboard quarter, and within a few oar's length of us, when Ord with a hand as steady as if he were writing an invitation for dinner, took the apron off 'long Tom' with one hand, received a lighted match from a seaman with the other, then nodded to the carpenter, who broke away the obstructing bulwark with one blow of his axe. I still think I see the horrified countenances of the pirates, and their quick dilated glances as they discovered the gun and their confused oaths, and the rattling of the oars and cordage as they attempted to escape the range of the shot. At this moment of unutterable anxiety when our lives depended upon the coolness of our captain, and the success of our discharge. I caught a glimpse of his features. He was with his head turned from the gun, blowing gently at the match to keep it clear from ashes; his countenance was, I thought, pale, but calm and resolved; the next instant it was shrouded in the smoke, as kneeling he stretched forward, and applied the match to the touch hole. We were not an instant in doubt. Ord had seized the moment when the partial confusion of the pirates had placed their galley within twenty feet of us, her huge sail shivering and herself almost motionless on the crest of a wave. Before that wave had lifted the little Petrel, before the smoke of the gun had drifted by—the crash and the plunge, and the horrible yells of the scattered and mangled wretches, assured us of their destruction. The boat, and great part of her slaughtered crew wheeled down into the deep at our very stern, while a few, who had not been wounded, struggled for a little time, and went down one by one as their strength failed. A stiff breeze and a flowing sheet, soon placed us out of hearing of their dreadful cries for help, and out of the sight of their still more dreadful features, convulsed with agony, and their eyes turned up white in the last death wrestle. The next morning we entered St. Jago, to place our wounded men under proper care.—New Monthly Magazine.

The distinguishing trait of people accustomed to good society, is a calm imperturbable quiet, which pervades all their actions and habits, from the greatest to the least. They eat in quiet, move in quiet, live in quiet, and lose their wife, or even their money in quiet; while low persons cannot take up either a spoon or an affront without making such an amazing noise about it.—Bulwer.

When a person is once heartily in love, the little faults and caprices of his mistress, the jealousies and quarrels to which that commerce is so subject, however unpleasant they be, and rather connected with anger and hatred, are yet to be found, in many instances, to give additional force to the prevailing passion.—Hume.

From the Saturday Evening Post.

THE MINSTREL'S LAMENT.

On a moss-covered rock, by a pure bubbling fountain,
The Minstrel sat down, with his harp in his hand;
And sweetly he sung, of the vale and the mountain,
The wild woods and groves, of his own native land.

A land far away, where the days of his childhood,
Like a bright summer morning, passed sweetly away,
Where his heart was as free as the birds in the wild-wood,
And hope shed around him, her bright cheering ray.

The sun's latest rays, from the plains had departed;
And night's sable shadows fell dark on the lea;
When he sat himself down in despair, broken-hearted,
For weary, and sad, and dejected was he.

Like a bird that is caged, he exclaimed in his anguish,
I sigh for the long lost endearments of home;
In grief and despair I forever must languish,
Condemned, in the land of the stranger to roam.

Oh! when shall the smiles of contentment surround me,
And the blossoms of pleasure, for me, again bloom,
Or the spell of affliction, which deeply has bound me,
Be broken; its terrors no more to resume.

In the land of the stranger, my spirit can only
Recur to the scenes I have left far behind,
For here I am friendless, forsaken, and lonely,
To sorrow, and sadness, forever resigned.

My home! Oh! that name is still dear to this bosom;
For yet I remember the smile and the tear,
The wild throb of pleasure, and each fond emotion,
Which there rose and vanished, no more to appear.

Far down life's dark vale, midst the scenes of my childhood,
In fancy I linger, for there only there,
By the pure gliding brook, or alone in the wild-wood,
Fond memory lingers, midst pleasures that were.

Vain, vain, are the hopes that the minstrel may cherish,
Illusive the dreams of enjoyment to him;
For his joys like the roses of Summer will perish,
And the sun-light of pleasure be clouded and dim.

E.

The Language of Love.

There's a language that's mute, there's a silence that speaks,
There is something that cannot be told;
There are words that can only be read on the cheeks,
And thoughts but the eye can unfold.

There's a look so expressive, so timid, so kind,
So conscious, so quick to impart;
Though dumb, in an instant it speaks out the mind,
And strikes in a moment the heart.

This eloquent silence, this converse of Soul,
In vain we attempt to suppress;
More prompt it appears from the wish to control,
More apt the fond truth to express.

And oh! the delight in the features that shine,
The raptures the bosom that melt;
When blest with each other this converse divine,
In mutually spoken and felt.

Digitized by Google

For the Casket.

Reminiscences of the West.

"Enlarge the place of thy tent, and let them stretch forth the curtains of thine habitations: spare not, lengthen thy cords, and strengthen thy stakes;

"For thou shalt break forth on the right hand and on the left; and thy seed shall inherit the Gentiles, and make the desolate cities to be inhabited."—Isaiah liv. 2, 3.

"For as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are my ways higher than your ways, and my thoughts higher than your thoughts."—Isaiah, lv. 9.

These were the texts from which was preached the first sermon, I distinctly remember to have heard, and dark and terrible was the occasion. Though still an infant, for I had not yet seen my eighth birth-day, the figure of the preacher is still before my mind's eye. Thin, spare, pale and solemn was his visage; his person slender, even light, and his whole figure contrasting and not according with the stern aspect of all around him. His eye however appeared as lamps in the gloom of night. Amid grim war this man seemed a spirit of peace; a spirit of re-assurance in an hour of peril he certainly was, and in a life of more than ordinary change and circumstance never since have I seen, tears so suddenly changed to smiles of hope, and the murmurings of despair so quickly followed by the aspirations of confidence in a power all was made to feel to the inmost soul.

Mark Lee's narrative published in the Casket for June of this year, closes with the following paragraph:

"A mountain seemed to be removed from the breasts of both my parents, and in a few days afterwards, the Rubicon of that day, the Monongahela was passed by us all; and in those regions were spent the early and middle life of Mark Bancroft."

Reader, before we again repass the deep flowing river, which winds along yon valley, let us seat ourselves on this rocky mountain brow and glance over the regions towards the setting sun, whilst in retrospect we return to the autumn of 1781. What do we see? One wide sweep of forests in the recesses of which, streams wind in silence, broken only by the wild scream of native animals.—The rude habitation of man appears to open at intervals, but man here dreads the echo of his own voice; in the innocent song of his children, he hears intermingled their death-cry and the chilling howl of the savage; he hears the wife of his bosom and her infants imploring Heaven and him, to save them from a worse than tigers rage.

Now let fifty three years pass away, and turn thine eye on the same landscape.—Canst thou conceive that the former desolation could be so changed, and dost thou not doubt the evidence of thine own senses? Yes! reader, the face of earth is the same, and the streams meander along the same valleys. Where thine eye swept over one vast forest—towns and villages, orchards, meadows, and farms now spread over the canvass. * * *

On a heavy autumn day, the 25th of November 1781, my mother with a beating heart and face bedewed with tears, three children at her side and one at the breast, crossed the Monongahela; my father, a man never a victim to idle fear could not entirely conceal apprehensions for his sacred charge. Well do I remember, as we rose the then winding road from Gillespie's ferry-house, and as the mountain-hill exposed the eastern view, that both turned their eyes frequently towards fields they were never to revisit. Still there was a something in even the savageness of the scenes then presented, which gave strength and fortitude to the mind, and that something operated on the heart of my poor mother, for as the river, valley and the hills and mountains beyond receded or were concealed by the trees, her natural buoyancy of mind returned, and the prattle of her children, the smiles of her husband, and hope, all combined to smooth the path. It is the little incidents which form the fine lines of human individual history, and describe, if I may use the expression, the very tones and vibrations of the human heart. My mother spoke the German language fluently, and from long associations loved the German character, two circumstances which tended greatly to throw a veil of softer texture over the dark picture before her. A Mr. William Wolf, who had been an intimate acquaintance of my parents on Swatara, but who had removed with his brothers and sisters and settled on Buffaloe creek, in what is now Washington county, Pennsylvania, five or six miles westward of where the beautiful village of Washington now stands; this man had accompanied my father on his return to Redstone, and was with us, when we crossed the Monongahela. With a very prepossessing countenance, Mr. Wolf entered into an animated description of the west, making a mere thing of shadows of Indian war. The face of a real friend, tones to which she had been long accustomed, and perhaps, carried backwards to more sunny days, the evening came peacefully to my fond mother as we reached our resting place, a Mr. Riley's, and in a rude log cabin, perhaps a more joyous night was never spent, by as many pilgrims, for as pilgrims we were in search of a place of rest.

Here I cannot resist doing justice to Mr. Alexander S. Withers, the author of "Chronicles of Border Warfare," and to the people he describes. Speaking of the persons who constituted the early society of "The Western Country, or Back-Woods," as the region beyond the Appalachian mountains was then called, Mr. Withers with graphic truth observes:

"Although hunting was not the object of most of the old settlers, yet it was, for a good part of the year, the chief employment of their time.*

* Extremes touching nothing more than in human society; and it is very doubtful which extreme is most seductive, that of the highest state of civilization or that of the hunter. When no danger of savages marred his pleasure, I am of opinion, that no human being ever was more joyfully happy than the American Hunter. Though never a hunter myself, long years of experience in surveying amid uncut woods, enables me to judge of the peculiar feelings of man in these solitudes. The true cause why so many continued hun-

Digitized by Google

And of all these, who thus made their abode in the dense forest, and tempted aggression from the neighbouring Indians, none were so well qualified to resist his aggression, and to retaliate upon its authors, as those who were mostly engaged in this pursuit. Of all their avocations, this 'mimicry of war,' best fitted them to thwart the savages in their purposes, and to mitigate the horrors of their peculiar mode of warfare. Those arts which enabled them, unperceived to approach the watchful deer in his lair, enabled them likewise to circumvent the Indian in his ambush; and if not always punish, yet frequently defeat him in his object. Add to this, the perfect knowledge they acquired of the woods, and the ease and certainty, with which they consequently, when occasion required, could make their way to any point of the settlements and apprize the inhabitants of approaching danger; and it will be readily admitted, that the more expert and successful the huntsman, the more skilful and effective the warrior.

"But various soever as may have been their objects in emigrating, no sooner had they come together, than there existed in each settlement, a perfect unison of feeling. Similitude of situation and community of danger, operating as a magic charm, stifled in their birth those little bickerings, which are so apt to disturb the quiet of society. Ambition of preferment and the pride of place, too often lets and hindrances to social intercourse, were unknown among them.—Equality of condition rendered them strangers alike, to the baneful distinctions created by wealth and other advantitious circumstances; and to envy, which gives additional virus to their venom. A sense of mutual dependence for their common security, linked them in amity; and conducting their several purposes in harmonious concert; together they toiled and together suffered.

"Not all the 'pomp and pride and pageantry' of life, could vie with the Arcadian scenes which encircled the rude cottages of these men.—Their humble dwellings were the abode of virtue, rarely found in the 'cloud cap'd towers and gorgeous palaces of splendid ambition. And when peace reigned around them, neither the gaudy trappings of wealth, nor the insignia of office, nor the slacked thirst for distinction could have added to the happiness which they enjoyed.'

"In their intercourse with others, they were kind, beneficent and disinterested; extending to all, the most generous hospitality which their circumstances could afford. That selfishness which prompts to liberality for the sake of remuneration, and proffers the civilities of life with an eye to individual interest, was unknown to them.—They were kind for kindness sake; and sought no other recompense, than the never failing concomitant of good deeds—the reward of an approving conscience.

"It is usual for men in the decline of life, to contrast the scenes which are then being exhibited, with those through which they have passed in the days of youth; and not unfrequently, to moralize on the decay of those virtues, which enhance the enjoyment of life and give to pleasure its highest relish. The mind is then apt to revert to earlier times, and to dwell with satisfaction on the manners and customs which prevailed in the hey-day of youth. Every change, which may have been wrought in them is deemed a deteriorating innovation, and the sentence of their condemnation unhesitatingly pronounced. This is not always the result of impartial and discriminating judgment. It is perhaps, more frequently founded in prepossession; and based on the prejudices of education and habit.

"On the other hand those who are just entering on the vestibule of life, are prone to give preference to the habits of the present generation; viewing, too often, with contemptuous derision those of the past. Mankind certainly advance in intelligence and refinement; but virtue and happiness do not, at all times, keep pace with this progress, 'To inform the understanding' is not always 'to correct and enlarge the heart;' nor do the blandishments of life invariably add to the sum of moral excellence; they are often, 'as Dead sea fruit that tempts the eye, but turns to ashes on the lips.'—While a rough exterior as frequently covers a temper of the utmost benignity, happy in itself and giving happiness to all around.

"Such were the pioneers of this country; and the greater part of mankind, might now derive advantage from the contemplation (and imitation) of their humble virtues, hospitable homes, and spirits, patient, noble, proud and free—their self-respect, grafted on innocent thoughts; their days of health and nights of sleep—their toils, by danger dignified, yet guiltless—their hopes of cheerful old age and a quiet grave, with cross and garland over its green turf, and their grandchildren's love for epitaph."

If it was ever in any man's power to endorse the preceding picture, it is in mine, and with very partial exceptions, I can do so with full confidence. As to the reflections of one age upon another, the fact is solvable by distance, which in time as well as in space, softens asperities. To the ordinary rule, however, I must present myself as an humble exception. The virtues and energies of the western pioneers were terribly necessary and their happiness most dearly purchased. In every country, and in every age, there is some one possession which is paramount in estimation as in power. At the time, (1781,) that my father with his family crossed the Monongahela, the Hunter-warrior was the man! by pre-eminence, and never was any set of men more necessary to any society. To these men the lives of the people were doubly entrusted. Upon their activity, vigilance, and courage, all depended, and nobly indeed did many of them fulfil their mission. With not a few, hunting and war was a combined trade.—They had risen from infancy in war, which in fact never ceased, and was only at intervals relaxed from 1754 to 1795, or through forty-one years. This protracted and sanguinary conflict was raging in all its horrors when I was led an infant to "The Border;" and if not an eye-witness, was very soon an ear-witness, almost on ters, when the necessity ceased of that mode of life, was its peculiar pleasures. The Leatherstocking of Cooper is one of the most perfectly natural characters ever sketched.

Digitized by Google

the threshold of the theatre. But to return to the regular thread of my narrative.

We reached our momentary resting place late in November 1781, at a moment of excessive and violent excitement. The capture of Cornwallis and his army had electrified the country to the utmost border. It was a story told and retold, but momentary enthusiasm was finally cooled by reflection. Another and far more terrible enemy hovered on the frontier, and no one week, scarce a day passed without the report of murders being heard; nor were we long in our cabin until the dreadful sound came in reality.—The scene of alarm is now before me; a young woman, sister to the Henry Jolly, mentioned in one of my former tales, and the daughter of a near neighbour came to the house. She belonged to a family little subject to idle fear, and long inured to danger.* Miss Jolly knew the incessant fears of my mother, but also knew that no immediate apprehensions of savages need be entertained in our settlement for the best of reasons; she knew the Indian character, and of course knew that the least danger to be apprehended from them was immediately after their having "made a stroke" as their sudden and murderous blows were then provincially termed. This young woman came to my father where he was making fence, whilst myself and little brother were amusing ourselves by his side. I think I see him now, as he stood for at least a minute looking steadily at the young woman after she told in a very earnest manner "Oh! Mr. Hawkins has been killed." He had raised a fence-rail, and held it balanced in his hands while the dreadful tidings was communicated and for some time afterwards; but finally dropped the rail, cast a despairing glance over his hard labour, returned to the cabin, and in two hours more we were all on our way to Wolf's Block-House; our cabin was never again seen by one of the family.

Many may deem such details trivial, but it is sparks which often produce conflagrations by which cities are consumed. This was early in the spring of 1782, and the opening of a distressful tragedy. Hawkins, was only one of many murders which followed in rapid succession. A Mr. Wallace, above Wheeling, with his wife and five children, were surprised and massacred. A family of the name of M'Intosh, in Wheeling, were all except one daughter destroyed. A Mr. Monteur and family, near Pittsburgh, met a similar fate. These sanguinary depredations extended to western Virginia,—where several murders were perpetrated. The minds of the whites already exasperated, became absolutely furious, and the unaccountable apathy or neglect of the government, left them to their own passions and resources. The necessity of forming a strong post on the Ohio far below Pittsburgh, was felt before the revolution, and the events of that war demonstrated such necessity. The capture of Cornwallis and his army in the autumn of 1781, relieved the continental government from all apprehensions of the result of the contest, and excited hopes, which were never realised, in the breasts of the frontier people, of effective aid against their savage enemies.

By a fatality, which unfortunately for human nature, was not singular, the neglect of the government and rage of the people combined to inflict vengeance on the innocent, for the crimes of the guilty. Between the peace of 1763 and the revolution, the Christian Indians, usually called Moravians, from having been converted by that sect, had considerably increased, and three villages inhabited by them, were situated on Muskingum river, these went by the names of Salem, Gnadenhutten, and Shoenbrun. It was in fact at one of these very villages, that a strong outpost ought to have been formed early in 1782.—These people were, from their pacific professions, objects of contempt, and from their position of hatred and suspicion to two belligerant parties, breathing war and vengeance. If the Moravian Indians had been sufficiently powerful to maintain their neutrality, their situation would have enabled them to preserve peace on both sides, but it certainly was the very height of human infatuation, to expect less than destruction to an unarmed handful of people alike suspected by whites and Indians.

"In the spring of 1781, the principal war-chief of the Delawares, apprised the missionaries and them, of the danger which threatened them, as well from the whites as the savages, and advised them to remove to some situation, where they would be exempt from molestation by either.—Conscious of the rectitude of their conduct as regarded both, and unwilling to forsake the comforts which their industry had procured for them, and the fields rendered productive by their labor, they disregarded the friendly monition, and continued in their villages, progressing in the knowledge and love of the Redeemer of men, and practising the virtues inculcated by his word?"*

On a former occasion in "The Tale of the Moravians," I stated some of the leading facts

* Few families had a more bitter knowledge of war than that of Jolly; Henry Jolly himself had been one of General Morgan's immortal rifle corps, and a circumstance connected with their history, defies romance. One of the first settlements of that country, was formed at the Forks of Wheeling, at the place where Henry Clay's monument now stands on the United States road. A fort long stood on the point above the confluence of the two branches, known as Shepherd's Fort. Amongst the families who sought refuge in this port from Indian depredation, was one by the name of Howell. The father had sat down in the forest of Little Wheeling, near where the United States road now follows the deep vale of that creek, and had been driven into Shepherd's Fort. After some days, thinking the danger over, and rejecting advice, he prepared to return to his cabin. Something detained him behind his family who were proceeding along the path, towards their home, and had reached about two miles above the Fort, when they were assailed by the savages. Several were murdered and one son made prisoner. One of the daughters who had been tomahawked and scalped, was found alive, was taken to the Fort, recovered, and became the wife of one of my early friends, Henry Jolly. What rendered the case of Mrs. Jolly the more remarkable, was that it was the third day after her wounds had been inflicted before surgical aid was procured.

* Wither's Chronicles of Border Warfare, p. 233-4.

Digitized by Google

in the final fate of this devoted people. In the present instance, I am employed in sketching the causes of the event. Col. David Williamson, the nominal commander of the party who destroyed the Moravians, has been not only censured but loaded with execrations for this deed, in the perpetration of which, in fact he was little more than a passive spectator. The true facts of the case as I always understood them, are truly and briefly stated by Mr. Withers, upon I think, the very respectable authority of the honorable Philip Dodridge.

After detailing the capture of the almost unresisting Moravians, and their being collected into one body at the village of Gnadenhutten, Mr. Withers proceeds to state:

"A council of war was then held to determine on the fate of the prisoners. COL. WILLIAMSON HAVING BEEN MUCH CENSURED FOR THE LENITY OF HIS CONDUCT TOWARDS THE INDIANS IN THE EXPEDITION OF THE PRECEDING YEAR, the officers were unwilling to take upon themselves the entire responsibility of deciding upon their fate now, and agreed that it should be left to the men. The line was soon formed, and they were told it remained with them to say, whether the Moravian prisoners should be taken to Fort Pitt or murdered; and Col. Williamson requested that those who were inclined to mercy, should advance and form a second line, that it might be seen on which side was the majority. Alas! it required no scrutiny to determine. Only SIXTEEN, or at most EIGHTEEN men stepped forward to save the lives of this unfortunate people, and their doom become sealed.

"From the moment these ill-fated beings were immured in houses, they seemed to anticipate the horrid destiny which awaited them; and spent their time in holy and heart-felt devotion, to prepare them for the awful realities of another world. They sang, they prayed, they exhorted each other to a firm reliance on the Saviour of men, and soothed those in affliction with the comfortable assurance, that although men might kill the body, they had no power over the soul, and that they might again meet in a better and happier world, "where the wicked cease from troubling and the weary find rest." When told that they were doomed to die, they all affectionately embraced, and bedewed their bosoms with mutual tears reciprocally sought, and obtained forgiveness for any offences which they might have given each other through life. Thus at peace with God, and reconciled with one another, they replied to those, who impatient for the slaughter, had asked if they were not yet prepared? Yes! We have commended our souls to God, and are ready to die."*

So fell ninety-six human beings, who had adopted and far more earnestly followed the precepts of Christianity, than many of their destroyers; but cruel and useless as was the act, the exclusive abuse heaped on the head of David Williamson, was and is not one jot less cruel or useless. This man was really anxious to save the Moravians, and had their fate depended on him, not a drop of their blood would have been shed. He was as most militia officers ever are, utterly powerless to stem the violence of men they nominaly command. Again, it is only those who lived at the time, and on the theatre, who can form a correct opinion of the instiating circumstances which silenced the still small voice of humanity.

I was very young at the time, but perhaps the impression on that account was the deeper and more permanent. I was present when the men returned, and present when the sermon was preached, the text of which stands at the head of this reminiscence. The public mind was agitated by every passion which could rouse to action and at the same time blind men to future consequences. The murder of the Moravians, never it is probable was justified by any cause, by any one, except necessity, and the preacher was one of the few who took a rational view of the whole face of affairs. He predicted the certain ruin of the Indian, and the equally certain spread of the white race.

Few dared to pronounce though many felt, that the whole scence of blood and wretchedness could have been prevented by one or two efficient garrisons.

It appears to be a law of human nature to concentrate into a focus, on the heads of individuals, both praise and censure. Effects which are in themselves emanations from popular, sometimes almost universal feeling, are placed to account of persons of prominent situation, but who have a limited agency to produce, and are utterly powerless to prevent the catastrophe, be it for good or evil. MARK BANCROFT.

* Wither's Chronicles of Border Warfare, p. 235-6.

From Blackwood's Magazine.

TWILIGHT THOUGHTS.

Hoarse clatter'd the crow on the boughs overhead,
And the owl, from a time-ruin'd tower,
Boded forth to my spirit its omens of dread,
And added fresh gloom to the hour:
Earth frowned like a desert; the clouds roll'd above
In murkier shadows, a desolate throng;
While the stream, as it flow'd through October's wan grove,
Had turn'd into wailing its song.

Then sunk the red sun o'er the verge of the hill,
The dull twilight breeze roam'd abroad,
And sigh'd—while all sounds of existence were still,
Through the scenes that bordered the road.
'Twas a scene of seclusion—beneath an oak tree,
All pensive I sate on a moss-covered stone,
And thought that, whatever the future might be,
How sweet were the days which were gone!

I mused on the friends who had passed to the grave,
Like spectres they rose on the mind;
Then, listening, I heard but the dull hollow wave
Of the rank grass, bestirr'd by the wind.
I thought on the glory, the sunshine of yore,
When Hope rear'd her fairy-built piles to the view;
Then turn'd to the darken'd plain scowling before,
And the wither'd plants laden with dew.

Thrice happy I deem'd, were the perish'd and dead,
Since pleasure but wane into woes;
And the friends, with whom youth's sunny morning was led,
Have left us alone e'er its close.
Who longest survive but the longer deplore,
Since Heaven calls its favorites the soonest away;
The holly-tree smiles through the snows lying hoar,
But the passion-flower fades in a day! DELTA.

Digitized by Google

THE DIAMOND ROCK.

The annexed engraving is a view of the celebrated Diamond Rock, situated near Martinique, which was taken possession of and fortified in the year 1803, by lieut. Donett, of the Sophia, while that vessel and the Centaur, commodore Samuel Hood, were blockading ports Royal and St. Pierre. An interesting description of the place is given by captain Bonsall of the R. N. from which we extract the following particulars.

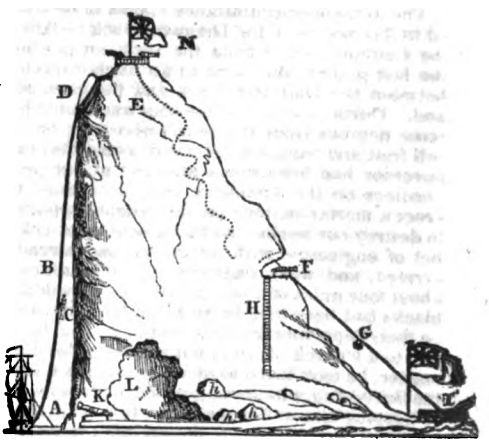
"While Mr. Donett was engaged on this service, he made frequent trips to the Diamond, for the object of procuring food for his stock, and found an abundance of thick, broad-leaved grass, well adapted for making straw hats for the seamen, which soon became a matter of some importance to them, as the schooner's crew had many orders from the ship for a supply. There was also growing on the rock, and almost covered it, an excellent substitute for spinach, called by the natives calallo; it is much the shape of the large common dock-leaf, and turned out a most useful vegetable to our people, as they had been long on salt beef; and the calallo, when boiled in large quantities and served out daily, put a stop to a heavy sick-list of scurvy cases.

The Diamond Rock now became a favourite spot, as the schooner had brought us so many good things; and I remember, when cruising on our usual station off Point Solomon, the schooner joined us. Mr. Donett came on board, when Sir Samuel then determined to take possession of the Diamond, fortify it, and to put it upon the establishment of a sloop of war. Next day, black-smiths and carpenters were set to work, making intrenching tools, hand-barrows, &c., and the seamen to make and prepare the necessary purchases. All in about a week was ready, as far as the resources on board the ship would admit; and a working party of fifty seamen and twenty-five marines, under the orders of lieutenant Andrew Maurice, with fourteen days' provisions, were landed on the Diamond Rock. As the party was to keep the launch completely armed with her 24 pounder carronade, she was secured at the only landing-place, and the gun, mounted on a projecting point, commanding this little cove. Immediately opposite the landing-place a very large cave was discovered, in which the forges were erected, and the carpenters and other artificers established their workshops; indeed it was so capacious that it contained the whole party and material for the first night. The interior of this cave, generally with the whole rock, being grey limestone, was very dry. From the roof were suspended numerous stalactites, which made a most brilliant appearance when the forge and other lights were burning; added to which, the mirth and fun of the party at getting on shore after long confinement on board, and our very novel employment of fitting out such a nondescript vessel as his majesty's sloop, the Diamond Rock, made this evening pass off very cheerfully; and, at the next dawn, our party entered most zealously into the various duties they had to do, so very different from what they had lately been accustomed to.

The low flat ground, as seen in the wood-cut, was soon cleared of its long grass and wild spinach; and a number of small dry caves and openings at the base of the rock were selected by the seamen for suspending their hammocks, and forming themselves into messes, while the officers were in tents, pitched on the flattish part of the ground, containing about three quarters of an acre. There were also two other caves of large dimensions, which became of importance to the safety of the rock, as well as conducive to the health of the squadron cruising amongst the French islands. It was armed with a 32 pounder carronade; and here was afterwards executed the grand magazine called "Hood's Battery."—It is about half way up the rock, (see wood-cut) at least three hundred and sixty feet from the water-line. This gun was sent up traversing on the jack-stay, or rope, secured at the top of the cave and on the low ground; and the latter was always used afterwards, by attaching a large tub to it, to convey stores and provisions to the upper parts of the rock; and when taken away, in the event of an enemy getting possession of the guns on the low grounds, the upper ones being deemed impregnable as long as they had ammunition or provisions, which was the case when the French fleet attacked it. They landed and stormed the lower forts, covered by their ships, after a heavy loss. Unfortunately, when our sailors retreated to the upper guns, they had not sufficient ammunition and water, and were obliged to surrender.

The other cave, on the east side of the rock, was built up in front to the height of three stories, and converted into a most excellent and well-aired hospital, (where the sick and wounded were sent, instead of conveying them to Barbadoes or Antigua,) amply supplied, after we left it, with a good medical staff, and every comfort for such an establishment.

NORTH-EAST SIDE.



A His Majesty's ship Centaur.
B Jack-stay and purchase, with the long 24 pounder slung.
C Gun, vial-black, and slings.

Digitized by Google

D Projecting piece of rock at top, where upper end of the jack-stay was secured.
E Footpath to upper battery.
F Hood's battery, 24 pounder carronade, grand magazine. Provisions were also kept here for a month or six weeks.
G Jack-stay and purchase, with a large tub called the Royal-Mail, as a communication between Hood's battery and low ground for provisions, &c.
H Jacob's ladder, also communicating to Hood's battery, and hauled up every night.
I Centaur battery.
K Diamond, or Queen's battery.
L Hospital Cave.
h h h Caves where the people slept and trussed.
N Upper, or Chicel's battery, two long 24 pounders.

This nondescript man-of-war existed about two years and a half, and was of great service to many of the squadron stationed about the French islands. Here a few bullocks and sheep, with other fresh provisions, were kept for them; and the hospital was of infinite service in recovering the crews after fever, or other casualties,—indeed, in our estimation, it was the most favoured spot in the West Indies.

The Diamond Rock was at last retaken by a French squadron, in 1805 or 1806, after a gallant defence, owing to the want of ammunition, and perhaps not considered of so much importance by the admiral who succeeded our commodore, whose squadron was, indeed, employed in a more distant part of his station; and the only attraction now on this desolate rock is the chance visit of some old friend or shipmate who served in the West Indies at that period, to trace the graves of Reynolds and Neville, who gallantly fell in action, and are buried here with many other brave spirits, who all, like myself, had the happiness and honour to serve under that distinguished chief, Sir Samuel Hood.

The following circumstance claims to be added to this notice of the Diamond Rock:—After the Centaur parted from the rock, on getting the last gun up, she came to an anchor inside, between the Diamond Rock and the main island. During the nights, the ship was visited by some negroes from the shore, who stole off to sell fruit and bananas. It was reported that the governor had been much annoyed at our proceedings on the Diamond, and determined to erect a mortar-battery on the heights opposite to destroy our works, and that a lieutenant-colonel of engineers, with an escort, had already arrived, and were quartered at a plantation about four miles off from the beach. One of the blacks had been long in an English family, and on their departure from the island he had been sold to a French planter; but not liking his new master, he took leave to claim protection under the British flag, which was granted, and a promise of keeping him in the service, a free man, if he would conduct a party to the colonel's quarters. Accordingly the barge, well manned and armed, under the orders of Lieutenant Reynolds, with Lieutenant Butterworth and other volunteers, in all twenty-three persons, including Black Jack, our guide, landed on the main island at midnight. The party set off at quick time through the different plantations of sugar, cafloe, and cotton, and arrived in sight of the farm-house. Jack was sent in advance; and, with an acuteness so peculiar to his race, he crept softly into almost all the huts and out-houses, and discovered that the soldiers were sleeping in perfect security, and found their arms piled under a shed, evidently under the charge of a sentinel, but who, they afterwards learned, found himself more comfortable in the huts. On this information, Lieutenant Butterworth (being the best Frenchman) and a party went boldly up to the door of the house, and demanded immediate admittance to the colonel, being charged with despatches from the governor to Port Royal. They were let in by a female slave, who, seeing Black Jack in advance, whom she knew, showed the way to the colonel's sleeping room. The rest of our party, under lieutenant Reynolds, surrounded the huts and out-houses; and in ten minutes seventeen of the soldiers, with their arms, and giving them time to take their knapsacks, were made prisoners without firing a shot. The house party now joined with the colonel, also a prisoner, the whole returned to the boat, and were on board the ship by daylight. This little trick, played off on the governor of Martinique, took from him the only officer of engineers he had on the island: so the people of the Diamond heard no more intelligence respecting a mortar-battery.

From the Saturday Evening Post.

THE SUN OF RIGHTEOUSNESS.

Mankind had sunk from realms of light,
To regions of the deepest night:
The soul, where heavenly essence glowed,
Is now depravity's abode;
And glooms of death, eternal roll
Their hoary honours o'er the soul;
And not a ray of heavenly light,
To gild the gloom of spiritual night;
Till, bursting forth, his rising rays
The Sun of Righteousness displays;
And, darting deep, with force divine,
Through all the darkened soul they shine;
And then a living light diffuse,
Which fresh the germ of life renews.
The inward prospect then is fair,
And heavenly beauty centres there;
As when the sun returns to cheer
With golden beam, the rising year;
Fair Spring, her swelling bosom lays Wide open to his smiling rays;
And flowers rise in every hue,
All glittering in the morning dew.
So, when the Sun of Righteousness
Has deigned the guilty soul to bless,
That soul rejoicing in his beams,
An intellectual garden seems.
The heavenly virtues brightly shine,
Rich in the beams of Love divine;
Which fills the whole expanded mind
With Charity, for all mankind;
The soul is fit for Heaven's abode,
And man united to his God. WAINAWR.

Leisure Hours.—In what way can your leisure hours be filled up so as to turn to greater account, than in profitable reading? the study of useful books, for those trifling amusements, which insidiously lead the unwary into the paths of profligacy and vice?

Digitized by Google

THE SIAMESE TWINS.

ENG and CHANG are natives of a small village on the sea coast of Siam, called Maklong, about 60 miles from the capital. They were born in May, 1811, of Chinese parents, and are united to each other by a ligature, or band, about three and a half inches in length, and eight in circumference, formed at the extremity of the breast bone of each, and extending downwards to the abdomen. The upper part of the band is a strong cartilaginous substance; the lower part is soft and fleshy, and contains a tube or cavity, presumed to be about an inch and a half in circumference. On the lower edge of the band, exactly in its centre, is situated the umbillicus or naval; (there being but ONE in common between them;) a pressure upon the lower part of the band when they cough, laugh, or sneeze, would cause considerable pain, which would be equally felt by each. If the connecting link be touched in the centre, both are equally sensible to it; but if half an inch from the centre, it is only felt by one. There is nevertheless a considerable degree of nervous sympathy between the two bodies, but it is entirely overpowered by the operation of the mind. This was strongly proved at one time by Dr. Roget, Secretary to the Royal Society, by means of a galvanic experiment. I am clearly of opinion that there is a degree of muscular power in the band, and that strength is sometimes communicated from one to the other. The flexibility of the cartilage is so great, that they can readily turn those shoulders towards each other's which are outward when walking; indeed there probably would have been no difficulty in their walking either way, had they learned to do so when young. Their mother had a number of other children without any peculiarity, all of whom, excepting Chang and Eng, and a brother and sister, are dead.

Their father died when they were eight years of age; about the same time they were severely affected with the small pox, and shortly afterwards the measles; by both these disorders, they were equally ill, recovered at the same moment, and by the same remedies. Since that time they have never suffered by any illness excepting occasionally a slight cough. They have been several months at sea, but never were ill in consequence of it, so as to cause nausea; on the contrary, they were always remarkably well on shipboard, would frequently go aloft; and many times have expressed a wish that they might at some future day command a ship of their own.

Their parents were of the poorer class, and until the youths left their home, they were engaged in fishing, manufacturing cocoanut oil, keeping poultry, &c. for the support of their family. A visitor once asked them what was their occupation in their own country; when they facetiously answered that they were merchants having been engaged in the duck and egg trade.

They left Siam on the 1st of April, 1829, under the protection of Capt. Abel Coffin, on board the American ship Sachem, which was commanded by him, and who had obtained the consent of their parents and of the Government to their leaving the country. The mother and children were equally pleased with the voyage, as a sufficiency was left for her support, and all were aware of the respectability of those in whose charge they were placed. The youths never express any desire to return to their native country, excepting to visit their friends after which they hope to pass the remainder of their lives in Europe or America.

They are as near as possible of the same height, about five feet two inches; and finely formed in every respect, and possess a great degree of muscular power for persons of their size. I have known them to carry a person upwards of an hundred feet, whose weight was 280 pounds; and to throw others without any difficulty, whose weight much exceed theirs, which was, on the 1st of Jan. 1831, 210 pounds: having gained 40 pounds within a year. They are remarkably agile, can walk or run with great swiftness, and can swim as well as most single persons.—Their activity can readily be imagined by those who have seen them playing at battledore and shuttlecock, a game of which they are particularly fond, as combining exercise with recreation. They are very fond of hunting, are quite expert with the fowling-piece, and carry with them their shooting apparatus. Their hair, which is about four feet in length, is braided in the Chinese style. In doing this, in washing, dressing, or in any other occupation, they require no assistance, each acting for himself with as perfect ease as would an individual.

Their intellectual powers are very acute, and in this respect it has not been observed that one possesses the slightest degree of superiority over the other. The wisdom of Providence is herein strongly manifested; for did any mental superiority exist, it would necessarily lead to contentions and struggles for pre-eminence, which happily is so far from being the case, that many who have visited them have left them under the impression that they were actuated by only one mind, so simultaneous were they in all their movements. They play at chess and draughts remarkably well, but never in opposition to each other; having been asked to do it, they replied that no more pleasure would be derived from it, than by playing with the right hand against the left.

They now dress in the fashion of this country. They are so conversant with the English language, that they can understand all that is said to them and converse with tolerable fluency; they are also very desirous to make themselves generally acquainted with the manners and customs of our country.

A volume might be filled by enumerating their shrewdness and keenness of remark; and to mention one or two instances here may not be deemed improper. A visiter once came into the room, who had but one eye, upon which they observed to the doorkeeper that the gentleman should have paid only half price for admission, as he only had half the chance to see which others had. On seeing a cripple who had lost both hands and feet, they made him a present, remarking that as they had four hands and he none; it was not only a pleasure, but their duty to assist him.

Digitized by Google

The ex-king of France, Charles X. once visited them in Liverpool, and on leaving them made them a present of a piece of gold; after he was gone, they observed that they supposed the reason why he gave them gold was because he had no crown. Indeed there are few who visit them, who escape their notice, and they generally amuse themselves and friends an hour or two in the evening, by relating some of the strange observations they have heard during the day and in remarks upon those they have seen at the exhibition room.

Their feelings are warm and affectionate, and their conduct amiable and well regulated. They are very susceptible, and an act of kindness or affectionate treatment of any description is never forgotten, while an injury or insult offered to one, is equally resented by the other. They never enter into conversation or discussion with each other, because, possessing, as before observed, the same quantum of intellect, and having been placed constantly in the same circumstances, precisely the same effects have been produced upon the mind of each, therefore they have not that to communicate which two other beings would have under the common circumstances of distinct observation. It is occasionally observed that a simple remark may be made by one to the other, but I have never known them to enter into conversation with each other.—The attempt has been frequently made to engage them in separate conversations with different individuals, but without success, as they are invariably inclined to direct their attentions to the same thing at the same time.

In their movements the most perfect equanimity is observed, the one always concurring with the other so exactly, that they appear as if actuated by one common mind, and it is next to impossible, by the strictest scrutiny, to discover with which the impulse originates, whenever they arise of their own accord. In their necessary employments of life, or in their amusements, they have never been known to pass an angry word with each other; and whenever either wishes to pursue any particular course, he immediately follows the bent of his inclinations, without the least intimation by word or motion to the other, who, nevertheless, readily coincides, and without the slightest hesitation moves wherever the will of the former may direct. As the one always assents to the movements of the other, and as no words pass between them, it is curious to imagine how such assent is conveyed.

Their appetites are remarkably good, and they are now quite accustomed to, and pleased with, the general living of this country. Their usual beverage is tea, coffee, or water; wine or spirits they seldom taste. Their likings or distastes for particular food are the same precisely; whatever pleases one, gratifies also the other; and any thing unpleasant to one, has the same effect upon the mind of his brother. This remark applies not only to food, but also to persons and things with which they come in contact. They invariably feel hunger and thirst at the same time, and the quantity of food taken by them is as nearly alike as possible.

Both feel the desire to sleep simultaneously, and they always awake at the same moment. I have never yet known one to be sleeping and the other awake at the same time; indeed, when asleep, so great is the nervous sympathy which exists between them, that a touch upon the body of either will awaken both. While in bed, they are not confined to any particular position, but rest on either side as may best suit their convenience, generally, however, with their faces towards each other. They usually sleep nine or ten hours each night, and quite soundly, when they do feel restless, and desire to vary their position, the one must roll entirely over the other, and they have frequently been observed to do this without either awaking or being apparently disturbed by the change.

Upon the possibility or otherwise of separating them by surgical means, some difference appears in the opinions of scientific men; ninety-nine in an hundred believe it altogether impossible, and all that it would be an experiment of such risk as not to be warranted, unless in the event of the death of one; and that it is considered as almost an impossibility, in consequence of the strong degree of circulation which is between them. It is however, to them a very unpleasant subject, and they feel quite averse to have it spoken of. They have often remarked that they never saw any single person as happy as they are, therefore they have no reason to wish for a change.

The humidity of a northern climate did not at first agree with them; the weather, on their arrival in England, being unceasingly damp and foggy, both, in consequence were severely affected by colds and coughs, in equal degrees, from which they recovered simultaneously. During the dark and foggy days, they would sometimes take a deadened coal from the grate, and holding it up, call it the London sun; and the day after their arrival there, it being necessary to have lighted candles in the drawing room at noon in consequence of the fog and smoke, they went to bed, insisting that it was not possible it could be day time. Snow they had never seen till they went to England, and on first viewing it they were much astonished, inquiring whether it was sugar or salt.

The youths arrived in the United States from their native country, in August, 1829; remained in America eight weeks, and embarked for London, where they arrived on the 19th November following. They remained in great Britain until January, 1831, having travelled upwards of 2500 miles in the kingdom, and received the visits of about 300,000 individuals in London, Edinburgh, Dublin, Liverpool, Manchester, Bath Leeds, York, Sheffield, Bristol, Birmingham, and most of the principal cities and towns in the kingdom. They were honored by visits from her Majesty, Queen Adelaide, and others of the royal family, the foreign ambassadors, nobility, and by most of the philosophers and scientific men of the age. They have travelled in all the United States except Vermont, Missouri, and Illinois.

Having thus, in order to gratify public curiosity hastily put together a few prominent facts regarding this extraordinary variety in the works of Almighty power, it need scarcely be observed that the most fastidious female will find nothing in the exibition to wound her delicate feelings. Ladies of the first rank both in Europe and America, have visited them daily in great numbers; and of all who have honored them with their company, none have appeared more gratified than the gentler sex.

Digitized by Google

Written for the Casket.

On the Uncertainty of Worldly Enjoyments.

'Tis the heart that is pure, I most love and admire,
The countenance ever serene;
Attun'd to the thrilling of charity's lyre,
And which dissipates sorrow and spleen.

When misfortune and poverty darken the brow,
Of the virtuous and sensitive mind,
Should the bosom of sympathy comforts bestow,
The feelings, how pure and refined.

Alas! to mankind, what can riches bestow?
Can they happiness ever impart—
To soften the painful reflections of woe,
Or banish distress from the heart?

Could riches, and honours, or noble descent,
Bring comfort, wherever they fall,
Could these add a drop, to the cup of content—
I'd gladly partake of them all.

E'en the charms of the face, may occasion a sigh,
And the costly allurements of art,
May yield a short respite of joy to the eye,
But can give no delight to the heart.

On riches, for happiness, never depend,
'Tis a ball that will quickly roll by,
While riches exist, they may gain you a friend,
But from poverty, soon they will fly. AGNES.

THE SUN BRIGHT CLIME.

Have ye heard? Have ye heard? of the sun-bright clime,
Unstain'd by sorrow, unhurt by time:
Where age hath no power o'er the fadeless frame,
Where the heart is fire, and the eye is flame,
Have ye heard of that sun-bright clime?

There are rivers of water, gushing there,
And beings of beauty strangely fair,
And a thousand wings are hovering o'er
The dazzling wave, and the golden shore,
That are found in the sun-bright clime!

There are myriads of forms array'd in white,
Beings of beauty cloth'd in light;
They dwell in their own immortal powers,
'Midst the countless hues of unfading flowers,
That spring in that sun-bright clime!

And there is the city whose name is light!
With the diamond's ray, and the ruby bright;
And ensigns are waving, and banners unfurl,
Over walls of brass, and gates of pearl,
That are fixed in that sun-bright clime.

But far away is that sinless clime,
Unstain'd by sorrow, unhurt by time.
'Tis where the song of the seraph swells,
Where the radiant Lord of glory dwells,
Where, amid all things bright, is given
The home of the just, and its name is heaven,
The name of that sun-bright clime.

ESSAY

ON CRUELTY TO BRUTE CREATURES.

(Occasioned by seeing a man beat an ox unmercifully.)

I would not enter on my list of friends
(Though graced with polished manners and fine sense, Yet wanting sensibility,) the man
Who needlessly sets foot upon a worm.
An inadvertent step may crush the snail
That crawls at evening in the public path;
But he that has humanity, forwarn'd,
Will tread aside and let the reptile live.
The creeping vermin loathsome to the sight,
And charged perhaps with venom, that intrudes,
A visitor unwelcome, into scenes
Sacred to neatness and repose—the alcove,
The chamber or refectory—may die:
A necessary act incurs no blame. COWPER.

I have no fellowship for the man who "needlessly sets foot upon a worm," and he who unmercifully beats the dumb, uncomplaining creature on which perhaps he depends for half of his subsistence, can never be my accepted friend. We are bound by every obligation to treat dumb beasts with gentleness and mercy; even our interest demands it. God created them at the same time and place, and of the same clay of which man was formed, and to man was given dominion over them, not for evil but for good. I have always been of the opinion that they do not perish after death, from the circumstance of their sharing in the evils which resulted from the fall of Adam. Man had dominion at first over them all, but after he fell from his state of glorious perfection, he became a tyrant so terrible, that the greater portion fled from the scenes of his presence. Even now every reptile in the fields and woods flies at his approach, fearful of his unprovoked vengeance. The arm of almost every human being is lifted against that harmless reptile, the snake. It is proscribed by man, woman and child, and it is for this reason that I never suffer myself to molest them when I wander in the solitude of their woodland haunts. I never read that part of the story of Uncle Toby, in which he throws up the window to let a fly escape, which had pestered him, without feeling a glow of pleasure. It proves a good heart, and the language he addressed to the fly, should be familiar to every one. "Go, poor devil, there is room enough in the world for thee and me."

If the thoughtless fellow who beats his beast, could reflect for a moment, he would be convinced that he owes gratitude to the brute, instead of vengeance—and that his own interest dictates care and mild treatment. In what a helpless condition would man be without the services and use of the brute creation. Without the horse, he would be confined to a circuit of a few miles, in all inland countries, and what the horse is to our own clime, the rein-deer is to the northern countries, covered with eternal snows, and the camel to the dried and solitary desert. God has wisely adapted every thing to the convenience and benefit of men. The horse would perish in long journeys over the desert, and the camel could not survive amid the frozen scenes of the north. Divine wisdom has placed in the stomach of the camel a reservoir for water, to serve him on the parched desert, and to the eye of the rein-deer, is fitted a skin with a small aperture in the centre, which shields it from the injuries which otherwise would have been inflicted by the frozen flakes of snow. Here is seen the wisdom, as well as the goodness of God.

Digitized by Google

Man is also indebted to the patient cow, for the luxuries of the dairy, without which, the pleasures of the table would become meagre and precarious. The ox in conjunction with the horse, tills our fields, and adds not only to our luxuries, but to our coffers. It is to the cow, that we owe a preventive to one of the most dreadful of all the diseases which ever proved a scourge to the human race. I mean the small pox, which destroyed millions, till the discovery by Dr. Jenner, of the vaccine matter on the cow's udder. Millions have since been rescued from untimely tombs by the singular discovery. But not only are those creatures useful while living, for when dead, their bodies supply us with excellent food. To their hides, we are indebted for shoes, to protect our feet, to their horns for combs, and glue so useful in many of the arts. By their tallow, we are enabled to see when the sun leaves the world in darkness, and the oil obtained from their feet, is useful in many ways.

The sheep is another useful animal. Upon its meat, we subsist in the summer months, and its wool renders us comfortable when the storms are abroad in winter. But among all the dumb servants of man, there is not one so fondly attached to him, as the dog. The dog watches our habitations by night, and our flocks by day, ever ready to die in the defence of the master, he at once fears and worships. When man has fallen under the scourge and scorn of an unfeeling world, when he is deserted by his fellow man, and all else forsakes him, his faithful dog still clings to him, willing to share in his ruin as he did in its rise. Many stories are told of the undying friendship, which the dog indulges for man. It is said that, during the French Revolution, a dog saw his master fall, and followed him to the grave, from which no entreaties or kindness could tempt him, till he perished with grief. The history of the dogs, of the great St. Bernard, is an interesting picture of the fidelity and affection of that noble creature. The convent of the great St. Bernard, is instituted near the top of a mountain, of the same name, not far from one of the most terrific passes of the Alps, between Switzerland and Savoy. In this dreary spot the traveller is frequently lost in snow storms, or overwhelmed by avalanches, vast bodies of snow tumbling from the summits of the mountains. The generous, and humane monks, of the convent, whose doors are never shut against the weary traveller; for many years kept dogs, which by the delicacy of their smell could discover the traveller though buried twenty feet beneath the snow. One of those generous dogs was honored with a medal on commemoration of his having saved the lives of twenty-two persons, who but for him, must have perished. One of the dogs always carried a flask of liquor suspended under his neck, that the perishing traveller might be revived when discovered. The same dog, that had saved the lives of so many, perished himself in attempting to convey a poor traveller to his anxious family. They were both overwhelmed by an avalanche, and perished. The same fate overtook the family of the traveller, who were coming up the mountain to meet him. It is said that one of those dogs found a little boy in the solitude of the mountain, whose mother had perished beneath an avalanche. The affectionate creature induced the poor boy to get upon his back, and thus carried the little fellow asleep to the gates of the convent. The subject I have seen represented in a print.

The dog is not the only creature remarkable for his attachment to man. It is recorded, that the celebrated Edmund Burke, owned a very old horse, which had formerly belonged to his son. After the death of the son, the old horse was turned into the park to end his days, in ease and quiet. Burke having given orders, that he should be treated with the utmost kindness, in memory of his former master. Burke was a man of not only splendid talents, but of refined feelings, and the most intense affections. One day he was musing in the park, when the old horse came and stood before him, apparently sympathising in his sorrows, for his son. At length, he approached still nearer and suddenly approaching closely, rested his head on his master's bosom. The tide of memory rolled over the heart of Burke, and he threw his arms round the neck of the affectionate animal, and wept long and loudly. Such an act was worthy a generous heart.

The elephant is also distinguished for its attachment to man, especially when well treated. Captain Mundy relates an extraordinary instance, which occurred in India. A gentleman, while hunting the lion, as is customary in that country, fell from the howdah, (or saddle on the back of the elephant,) and found himself in the very clutches of a large lion. The elephant no sooner saw the dangerous situation of his master, than he seized a small tree with his trunk, under which the lion was standing, and bent it down with so great a force over the back of the lion, that he roared with agony, and released the man from his jaws of inevitable death. —Such instances of affection and gratitude in dumb beasts, are by no means rare. Almost every page of natural history abounds with them. Dumb creatures have in a thousand ways contributed to the comfort and happiness of the human race. It was the cackling of geese, that once saved Rome, and from the goose which has the least brain of all animals of its size, we obtained that mighty instrument, the pen so useful to mankind. The monkey which has the most brain of any animal, according to its size, (save man,) has ever been of service to mankind. Its mimicry has cured melancholy in many persons, and rescued others from the grave, saving them by exhilirating the mind in low nervous diseases. A man was once saved from death, by seeing a monkey drink physic. His wry faces so tickled him, that he recovered from that moment.

During dark periods of the world, when superstition and ignorance conjoined with prejudice, prevented the anatomist from obtaining human bodies, the bodies of dumb beasts have contributed to the improvement and spread of science. We are told that Dr. Hoffman discovered the pancreas in a turky, and that the salivary glands which secrete spittle were discovered in an ox, by Dr. Wharton. The thoracic duct was first found in a horse by Eustachius; and Rufus, in dissecting an ewe, found the fallopian tubes. Thus was the door opened to the discovery of the same in man.

Digitized by Google

It is to be regretted that there is no veterinary chair established in any of our American Universities, teaching the cure of diseases in domestic animals. The illustrious Dr. Rush was as much in favor of such an institution, but his philanthropic wishes were never gratified. Such institutions are common in Germany, France and England, and are evidently productive of much benefit.

The study of that part of natural history, which treats of domestic animals, is very interesting and irresistibly leads the mind "from nature up to nature's God." How interesting, how beautiful do they render a country life! Who can gaze upon the gaudy peacock, the favourite of Juno; the strutting turkey, or see the gambols of innocent lambs on the green hills, without feeling a glow of delight and acknowledging that the works of nature are indeed beautiful and rife with wisdom. Such a study like music has a tendency to harmonize the human soul, and render man more intelligent, as well as a better being. What lover of nature but must admire the wisdom that implanted the principle of instinct in the mind of the brute creation. In many respects, it appears similar to reason in man, in others quite different. The brute mind possesses the faculties of memory and understanding, the former in perfection, for the horse will remember a road long after his rider has forgotten it. But no brute has the faculty of imagination, hence they are dead to those sublime delights which the human mind and especially that of the poet enjoys. That they have the faculty of understanding is proven by the fact, that goats, dogs and hogs have been taught to read and to use arithmetic. They perhaps reason in many instances but lack the principle of judgment.

The force of education has been strongly exemplified in the associations sometimes formed between stronger and weaker animals. The dog is the natural, jealous enemy of the cat, but in many families dogs and cats are seen eating together in perfect harmony. The force of early discipline and necessity was shown some years ago by a rat catcher who gave some young rats to a cat which had lost its kittens. The creature instead of destroying them, suckled and tenderly reared them. A man not long ago kept a small menagerie in London, containing a cat, a rat, mice, guinea pigs, an owl, a hawk, a sparrow, a pigeon, and starling, all living in perfect harmony and affection. The sparrow without fear perched itsef, on the head of its natural enemy the owl, and the mice unmindful of danger played their tricks in the presence of the cat. Beautiful sight! Beautiful exemplification of the power of early discipline and habit! We here see a result worthy the imitation of human beings.

The brute creation has been held in high esteem by all refined nations and people. In Rome the raven was considered to possess the power of foretelling awful events, for we are told by historians, that on the night preceding the assassination of Cæsar in the Senate House. The ravens croaked in the air. The lamb is used as a figure for our Saviour, and the flesh of certain animals was considered peculiarly and particularly acceptable in sacrifice to God. There is a custom still in use in the Roman church of praying for all dumb creatures. Many of the constellations are represented in the form of beasts, reptiles and fishes. Alexander the great owed much of his success to his noble horse Bucephalus, and did not hesitate to express his gratitude, for he named a city in honor of the proud creature which had so often borne him to battle and to conquest.

Seeing then and knowing that we are so much indebted to the dumb creatures, what shadow of excuse has man for his tyranny to them. The very meanest of the whole creation is his benefactor. Woman adorns her lovely form with the product of the labor of a poor worm scarcely two inches long. Many an unthinking man rails at the millions of flies which infest our dwellings in summer, ignorant that they are the great scavengers which remove putrid substances from our dwellings and our bodies and thereby no doubt prevent many diseases fatal to human life.

It behoves man then to acknowledge those creatures, blessings bestowed upon him by the Author of all good, and instead of tyrannizing over them, to treat them with that gentleness and kindness which they merit. Kindness to inferior creatures always indicates a good heart and intelligent mind, for ignorance and cruelty are generally found united in the same person.

MILFORD BARD.

Written for the Casket.

AMBITION.

BY A LADY.

"Thou, like hindmost chariot wheel, art cursed, Still to be near, but ne'er to be the first."

How many, in toiling up the steep ascent on which are placed the offices, and employments of dignity, to which their ambition or their vanity has led them to aspire, feel this curse treading on their footsteps, and making even comparative success, little better than bitter disappointment: since to be first, is the supreme desire of small, as well as great ambition. Authors, whose chase is after fame, as well as those who toil after more earthly and substantial goods, are often fated to the misery of seeing their talents lagging in the rear of their ambition, and compelled, by public opinion, to occupy the second place, when self-love would fain urge them to the belief that their merits entitled them to the first.

Parnassus is of so steep and difficult an ascent, that few have mental strength to reach its summit, and of the myriads who have attempted it, many have proved that it is dangerous to stand upon its sides, and that those who stop midway, are more apt to reach the base of the mountain, than its top. Other eminences, less classical, offer the same difficulty, they prove too steep for the capacity of the aspirant, and oblige him to confess, that his talents and ambition are unequally matched.

Digitized by Google

The most elevated situations are not always or of necessity, the most happy; and it is very much to be doubted, whether those who have spent the best years of their lives, in labouring after some wished for eminence, would not gladly resign their hard earned grandeur, on condition of enjoying again the tranquility of earlier and humbler days.

It is on record, that the third Pope Adrian, after having past through so many vicissitudes of fortune, as to have been refused a menial office, in one of the English convents, and having gained the highest step in the ladder of human ambition, was heard to say, that St. Peter's chair, was the most uneasy seat he had ever sat upon, and that the papal crown, was like a burning iron bound around his head.

Since ambition, in different degrees, seems to be inherent in the human mind, it is much to be lamented that the goal to which it points is so often unworthy self-exultation, appears to be the govering principle or motive of all ranks, and employments are sought after, and offices petitioned for, not from the noble ambition of rendering these offices and employments the vehicle of usefulness to their country and their fellow men, but from the paltry pride of standing upon high places, and like the Pharisies of old, taking the uppermost seats in the synagogues.

This, indeed is ambition, with all the "illness that wait upon it." But is it worthy to be the ambition of those whose inheritance is eternity? Are the narrow views which bound this finite and inconsiderable globe of earth, fit objects for the immortal spirit to rest its labours and its hopes upon? Let the Philosopher and the Christian answer no! The action, which has no motive but the grovelling one of self-aggrandizement, has no spirit which can out-live time, and can claim no affinity with that noble ambition, which is the reward, as well as the incitement of noble minds.

The ignoble soul, makes self the centre, and self must be in all the circumference with such; self-interest is the moving spring that puts events in motion, which may involve the fate of thousands; the consequence of which may last long after the name and the fame of the original projector is forgotten in the dust of oblivion. But the Patriot, whose ambition takes a nobler flight, who makes the welfare of his country and mankind his object, spurns at the downward way, and aiming at a higher mark, obtains a higher prize.

This, we are bound to say, is the only legitimate ambition of an immortal being; how different, alas! from that which has actuated the whole race of heroes and Statesmen, (with but few exceptions,) whose actions are recorded in history, "From Macedonian's mad-man, to the Swede," the relation of whose brilliant, but useless achievements, but

"Lead to bewilder, and dazzle to blind."

Ambition, may well be said, to be the governing motive of the whole human race: the hero and Statesman, may smile at the thought of the simple and lowly, arrogating to themselves that quality which they are apt to think their own exclusive privilege, the principle on which they have achieved their own elevation, and which appears to belong of right, to that portion of mankind, who act the principal character on the world's stage, be it for weal or woe. But though the Cæsars, the Alexanders, the Napoleans, and their kindred spirits, may claim exclusively that principle which stirs within them, to make them the wonder and the dread of the world; but still there follow, far in the rear, indeed, but still in the same path, multitudes, who, though they may not attain to the distinction from the common herd, as those before them, still feel that burning, for pre-eminence over their fellows, that may be called ambition, even though the mark at which they aim, may be a raven, instead of an eagle.

If then, it seems an indispensible condition of our being, that we be ambitious of, or aspire after something, let us all take care, that the object be worthy of us; lest we be found wanting time, our most precious possession, on that which profiteth most, and lest this life, which was only lent us, as a means of preparing us for a longer and a better one, closes in upon us, and we find ourselves entering the broad ocean of eternity, with little preparation, and few stores laid in for the never ending voyage.

Long life, is a blessing only to those who make industrious and active use of it, in administering to the wants, or supplying the deficiences, whether intellectual or moral, of their fellow beings. But he, who holds his time, as his own individual property, to squander with inconsiderate follys, and vicious indulgence, has each day a record against him, of follies committed, and duties neglected, and the list of his penalties, in the amount of which he is worse than bankrupt, becomes longer as his days are increased. Let us, then, keep alive within us, the sacred flame of honourable ambition; let the fire be kept as constantly, as religiously burning, as erst it was by the Vestal Virgins of old—let no neglect of ours, suffer the flame to expire, lest, like the Holy Vestals, we be scourged for the offence, and unlike them, be unable to re-light the fire, by rays from Heaven. A. B. J.

THE WILD RED ROSE.

Thou wild red rose of the forest green;
Why growest thou here in the woods scarce seen,
In the wild hanging woods by this mossy rock,
Why hidest thou here thy briery stock?

Thy fragrance sweet rose makes glad the thrush,
As she sings on a bough of the neighbouring bush—
Thy scent makes glad the harmless wren
As she chirps on a bough of thy woody den.

Scarce seen art thou, O sweetest rose,
In the forest green where the laurel grows—
Except by the hunters who pass this way,
Or the forest wilds that around thee play.

Thou wild red rose of the forest bred,
Art worthy a cultivated bed—
That thou mightest praise thy bounteous stalk,
Thy fragrance fill some public walk. B. A.

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

The arch of Titus is situated on the eastern declivity of the Palatine mount. On approaching it from the south (being the side least injured by time) its original form is lost in ruins at each extremity; but the arch itself, a column on each side of it, with the frieze and attic, are still pretty entire. The building, in its original form, must have been nearly an exact square. It is constructed of white marble. In the space formed by the curve of the arch, there are winged figures, personifying Fame. Upon the frieze is a representation of a sacrifice, with an allegorical figure at the extremity of the procession, carried upon a litter.

Upon the attic appears the following inscription:

SENATVS
POPVLVSQVE . ROMANVS .
DIVO . TITO . DIVI . VESPASIANI . F .
VESPASIANO . AVGVSTO.

Which may be thus translated:

THE SENATE
AND PEOPLE OF ROME,
TO THE DIVINE TITUS, THE SON OF VESPASIAN
THE AUGUST.

Upon entering the arch (which is about fourteen or fifteen feet wide) on each side are oblong spaces, seven feet in height, by nearly fourteen in length, containing a representation of the triumph of Titus, when he returned to Rome, after having taken Jerusalem.

On the east side appears the emperor in a triumphal car, drawn by four horses; Victory is crowning him with laurel; Rome personified as a female figure, conducts the horses; and citizens and soldiers crowned with laurel, compose the crowd that attend him.

On the opposite side, is another and more interesting part of the procession, exhibiting the spoils taken from the temple of Jerusalem;—the golden candlestick with seven branches, the golden table, and the silver trumpets, carried and accompanied by many figures crowned with laurel, and bearing the Roman standards.

During the time these sculptures were in execution, the objects themselves must have been under the eyes of the artist, as the accidents to which their loss is attributed, happened long after the arch was completed. The same sacred vessels made under the immediate direction of Moses, did not exist in the Temple at the time it was destroyed: those brought back from Babylon having been carried off by Antiochus Epiphanes, but they were immediately replaced by persons well acquainted with their form, and it is still easy to trace the general outlines of these objects in Exodus xxv. 3—36.

The Jewish Historian, Josephus, an eye-witness of the triumph of Vespasian and Titus, distinctly mentions these objects as making a conspicuous figure in the procession. After mentioning some other particulars, he says, "But for these (spoils) that were taken in the Temple of Jerusalem, they made the greatest figure of them all; that is, the golden table of the weight of many talents; the candlestick also that was made of gold,"—"the branches were in number seven, and represented the honour in which the number seven was held among the Jews." He then adds, "and after these triumphs were over, Vespasian resolved to build a temple to Peace: he also laid up therein those golden vessels and instruments that were taken out of the Jewish temple, as ensigns of his glory. But still he gave orders that they should lay up their law and the purple veil of the holy place in the imperial palace itself, and keep them there."

Thus, although injured by time and accident, there is still standing at Rome a resemblance, taken from the objects themselves, of the holy instruments and vessels, originally formed according to divine instruction, 3323 years ago; bearing undeniable evidence to the truth of the Mosaic history.

It is probable that part of these injuries may be attributed to the antipathy which the Jews have to this moment of their final overthrow.—The lapse of eighteen centuries has not effaced the memory of that calamity from the minds of the modern Jews.

At little more than a thousand paces from this monument, there is another memorial of their subjugation. In what is called the Ghetto Ebrei (or abode for Jews), from five to six thousand of them reside, and are confined every night, from an hour after sun-set till an hour before sun-rising, in a few narrow and dirty streets that have been allotted to them.

After eighteen centuries of persecution, they remain a living monument and illustration of some of the most remarkable passages of Scripture prophecy. Moses foretold in detail, the miseries of the siege which Josephus has related, and predicted the signal punishment that awaited their unbelief; and the honours conferred upon Titus for completing their ruin, took place at the distance of no less than half a century from the time that our Saviour forwarned them of its approach. These prophecies are in our hands, and the captive nation itself has been dispersed among us to attest their accomplishment.

If the present condition of the Jews be a fact, for which we have the evidence of our senses, so the memory of those events which led to it, have been guarded by every circumstance that can give authenticity to history.

Two Roman emperors of eminent renown (Vespasian and Titus) were employed in the work of destruction, and the notice taken of it by their contemporaries proves it to have been regarded as the most prominent achievement of their reign. The exploits of Roman power were recorded and speedily published to the utmost limits of an empire that extended from the Thames to the Euphrates. Surviving the convulsions by which that mighty empire was torn in pieces, the Jews remain a distinct people, preserving with religious care the history of their crimes, and sentences of condemnation, and though in avowed enmity to Christianity, supporting by their obstinacy the evidence of its truth.

A great woman not imperious, a fair woman not vain, a woman of common talents not jealous, an accomplished woman who scorns to shine—are four wonders, just great enough to be divided among the four quarters of the globe. —Lavater.

Digitized by Google

From the Philadelphia Gazette.

BECKFORD'S ITALY,

Upon a former occasion we directed the attention of our readers to the highly attractive and deeply interesting character of this deservedly popular work. We are induced to offer them the following extract, which will be found to arrest the attention and awaken the most lively interest in the mind of the most insensible and superficial reader.

The incident, and the circumstances connected with it, are of the most thrilling character, and are delineated in that graphic and impressive language, which indicates the scholar and man of feeling.

We shall offer no apology for the length of the extract; it will amply reward the time engaged in its perusal.

"But as it is not the lot of human animals to be contented, instead of reposing in the vale, I scaled the rock, and was three parts dissolved in attaining its summit. The sun darted upon my head, I wished to avoid its immediate influence; no tree was near; the pleasant valley lay below at a considerable depth, and it was a long way to descend to it. Looking round and round, I spied something like a hut, under a crag on the edge of a dark fissure. Might I avail myself of its coverts? My conductor answered in the affirmative, and added that it was inhabited by a good old woman, who never refused a cup of milk, or slice of bread, to refresh a weary traveller.

Thirst and fatigue urged me speedily down an intervening slope of stunted myrtle. Though oppressed with heat, I could not help deviating a few steps from the direct path to notice the uncouth rocks which rose frowning on every quarter. Above the hut, their appearance was truly formidable, bristled over with sharp-spired dwarf aloes, such as Lucifer himself might be supposed to have sown. Indeed I knew not whether I was not approaching some gate that leads to his abode, as I drew near a gulf (the fissures lately mentioned) and heard the deep hollow murmurs of the gusts which were imprisoned below. The savage, my guide, shuddered as he passed by to apprise the old woman of my coming. I felt strangely, and stared around me, and but half liked my situation.

In the midst of my doubts, forth tottered the old woman. "You are welcome," said she, in a feeble voice, but a better dialect than I had heard in the neighbourhood. Her look was more humane, and she seemed of a superior race to the inhabitants of the surrounding valleys. My savage treated her with peculiar deference.—She had just given him some bread, with which he retired to a respectable distance bowing to the earth. I caught the mode, and was very obsequious, thinking myself on the point of experiencing a witch's influence, and gaining, perhaps, some insight into the volume of futurity. She smiled at my agitation and kept beckoning me into the cottage.

"Now," thought I to myself, "I am upon the verge of an adventure." I saw nothing, however, but clay walls, a straw bed, some glazed earthen bowls, and a wooden crucifix. My shoes were loaded with sand: this my hostess perceived, and immediately kindling a fire in an inner part of the hovel, brought out some warm water to refresh my feet, and set some milk and chestnuts before me. This patriarchal attention was by no means indifferent after my tiresome ramble. I sat down opposite to the door which fronted the unfathomable gulf; beyond appeared the sea, of a deep cerulean, foaming with waves. The sky also was darkening apace with storms. Sadness came over me like a cloud, and I looked up to the old woman for consolation.

"And you too are sorrowful, young stranger," said she, "that come from the gay world! how must I feel, who pass year after year in these lonely mountains?" I answered, that the weather affected me, and my spirits were exhausted by the walk.

All the while I spoke she looked at me with such a melancholy earnestness that I asked the cause, and began again to imagine myself in some fatal habitation,

Where more is meant than meets the ear.

"Your features," said she, "are wonderfully like those of an unfortunate young person, who, in this retirement . . . . ." The tears began to fall as she pronounced these words; my curiosity was fired. "Tell me," continued I, "what you mean? who was this youth for whom you are so interested? and why did he seclude himself in this wild region? Your kindness to him might no doubt have alleviated, in some measure, the horrors of the place; but may God defend me from passing the night near such a gulf! I would not trust myself in a despairing moment."

"It is," said she, "a place of horrors. I tremble to relate what has happened on this very spot; but your manner interests me, and though I am little given to narrations, for once I will unlock my lips concerning the secrets of yonder fatal chasm.

"I was born in a distant part of Italy, and have known better days. In my youth fortune smiled upon my family, but in a few years they withered away; no matter by what accident. I am not going to talk much of myself. Have patience a few moments! A series of unfortunate events reduced me to indigence, and drove me to this desert, where, from rearing goats and making their milk into cheese, by a different method than is common in the Neapolitan state, I have, for about thirty years, prolonged a sorrowful existence. My silent grief and constant retirement had made me appear to some a saint, and to others a sorceress. The slight knowledge I have of plants has been exaggerated, and some years back, the hours I gave up to prayer, and the recollection of former friends, lost to me for ever! were cruelly intruded upon by the idle and the ignorant. But soon I sank into obscurity: my little recipes were disregarded, and you are the first stranger who, for these twelve months past, has visited my abode. Ah, would to God its solitude had ever remained inviolate!

Digitized by Google

"It is now three and twenty years," and she looked upon some characters cut on the planks of the cottage, "since I was sitting by moonlight, under that cliff you view to the right, my eyes fixed on the ocean, my mind lost in the memory of my misfortunes, when I heard a step, and starting up, a figure stood before me. It was a young man, in a rich habit, with streaming hair, and looks that bespoke the utmost terror. I knew not what to think of this sudden apparition. 'Mother,' said he with faltering accents, 'let me rest under your roof; and deliver me not up to those who thirst after my blood. Take this gold; take all, all!'

"Surprise held me speechless; the purse fell to the ground; the youth stared wildly on every side: I heard many voices beyond the rocks; the wind bore them distinctly, but presently they died away. I took courage, and assured the youth my cot should shelter him. 'Oh! thank you, thank you!' answered he, and pressed my hand. He shared my scanty provision.

"Overcome with toil (for I had worked hard in the day) sleep closed my eyes for a short interval. When I awoke the moon was set, but I heard my unhappy guest sobbing in darkness. I disturbed him not. Morning dawned, and he was fallen into a slumber. The tears bubbled out of his closed eyelids, and coursed one another down his wan cheeks. I had been too wretched myself not to respect the sorrows of another; neglecting, therefore, my accustomed occupations, I drove away the flies that buzzed around his temples. His breast heaved high with sighs, and he cried loudly in his sleep for mercy.

"The beams of the sun dispelling his dream, he started up like one that had heard the voice of an avenging angel, and hid his face with his hands. I poured some milk down his parched throat. 'Oh, mother!' he exclaimed, 'I am a wretch unworthy of compassion; the cause of innumerable sufferings; a murderer! a parricide!' My blood curdled to hear a stripling utter such dreadful words, and behold such agonising sighs swell in so young a bosom; for I marked the sting of conscience urging him to disclose what I am going to relate.

"It seems he was of high extraction, nursed in the pomps and luxuries of Naples, the pride and darling of his parents, adorned with a thousand lively talents, which the keenest sensibility conspired to improve. Unable to fix any bounds to whatever became the object of his desires, he passed his first years in roving from one extravagance to another, but as yet there was no crime in his caprices.

"At length it pleased heaven to visit his family, and make their idol the slave of an unbridled passion. He had a friend, who from his birth had been devoted to his interest, and placed all his confidence in him. This friend, loved to distraction a young creature, the most graceful of her sex, (as I can witness,) and she returned his affection. In the exultation of his heart he showed her to the wretch whose tale I am about to tell. He sickened at her sight. She too caught fire at his glances. They languished—they consumed away—they conversed, and his persuasive language finished what his guilty glances had begun.

"Their flame was soon discovered, for he disdained to conceal a thought, however dishonorable. The parents warned the youth in the tenderest manner; but advice and prudent counsels were to him so loathsome, that unable to contain his rage, and infatuated with love, he menaced the life of his friend as the obstacle of his enjoyment. Coolness and moderation were opposed to violence and frenzy, and he found himself treated with a contemptuous gentleness. Stricken to the heart, he wandered about for some time like one entranced. Meanwhile the nuptials were preparing, and the lovely girl he had perverted found ways to let him know she was about to be torn from his embraces.

"He raved like a demoniac, and rousing his dire spirit, applied to a malignant wretch who sold the most inveterate poisons. These he infused into a pure cup of iced water and presented to his friend, and to his own too fond confiding father, who soon after they had drunk the fatal potion began evidently to pine away. He marked the progress of their dissolution with a horrid firmness, he let the moment pass beyond which all antidotes were vain. His friend expired; and the young criminal, though he beheld the dews of death hang on his parent's forehead, yet stretched not forth his hand. In a short space the miserable father breathed his last, whilst his son was sitting aloof in the same chamber.

"The sight overcame him. He felt, for the first time, the pangs of remorse. His agitations passed not unnoticed. He was watched: suspicions beginning to unfold, he took alarm, and one evening escaped; but not without previously informing the partner of his crimes which way he intended to flee. Several pursued; but the inscrutable will of Providence blinded their search, and I was doomed to behold the effects of celestial vengeance.

"Such are the chief circumstances of the tale I gathered from the youth. I swooned whilst he related it, and could take no sustenance. One whole day afterwards did I pray the Lord, that I might die rather than be near an incarnate demon. With what indignation did I now survey that slender form and those flowing tresses, which had interested me before so much in his behalf!

"No sooner did he perceive the change in my countenance, than sullenly retiring to yonder rock he sat careless of the sun and scorching winds; for it was now the summer solstice. He was equally heedless of the unwholesome dews. When midnight came my horrors augmented; and I meditated several times to abandon my hovel and fly to the next village; but a power more than human chained me to the spot and fortified my mind.

"I slept, and it was late next morning when some one called at the wicket of the little fold, where my goats are penned. I arose, and saw a peasant of my acquaintance leading a female strangely muffled up, and casting her eyes on the ground. My heart misgave me. I thought this was the very maid who had been the cause of such atrocious wickedness. Nor were my conjectures ill founded. Regardless of the clown who stood by in stupid astonishment, she fell to the earth and bathed my hand with tears. Her trembling lips with difficulty enquired after the youth; and, as she spoke, a glow of conscious guilt lighted up her pale countenance.

Digitized by Google

"The full recollection of her lover's crimes shot through my memory. I was incensed, and would have spurned her away; but, she clung to my garments and seemed to implore my pity with a look so full of misery, that, relenting, I led her in silence to the extremity of the cliff where the youth was seated, his feet dangling above the sea. His eye was rolling wildly around, but it soon fixed upon the object for whose sake he had doomed himself to perdition.

"Far be it from me to describe their ecstacies, or the eagerness with which they sought each other's embraces. I indignantly turned my head away; and, driving my goats to a recess amongst the rocks, sat revolving in my mind these strange events. I neglected procuring any provision for my unwelcome guests; and about midnight returned homewards by the light of the moon which shone serenely in the heavens. Almost the first object her beams discovered was the guilty maid sustaining the head of her lover, who had fainted through weakness and want of nourishment. I fetched some dry bread and dipping it in milk laid it before them. Having performed this duty I set open the door of my hut, and retiring to a neighbouring cavity, there stretched myself on a heap of leaves and offered my prayers to heaven.

"A thousand fears, till this moment unknown, thronged into my fancy. The shaddow of leaves that chequered the entrance to the grot, seemed to assume in my distempered imagination the form of ugly reptiles, and I repeatedly shook my garments. The flow of the distinct surges was deepened by my apprehensions into distant groans: in a word, I could not rest; but issuing from the cavern as hastily as my trembling knees would allow, paced along the edge of the precipice. An unaccountable impulse would have hurried my steps, yet such was my terror and shivering, that unable to advance to my hut or retreat to the cavern, I was about to shield myself from the night in a sandy crevice, when a loud shriek pierced my ear. My tears had confused me; I was in fact near my hovel and scarcely three paces from the brink of the cavern: it was thence the cries proceeded.

"Advancing in a cold shudder to its edge, part of which was newly crumbled in, I discovered the form of the young man suspended by one foot to a branch of Juniper that grew several feet down: thus dreadfully did he hang over the gulf from the branch bending with his weight. His features were distorted, his eye-balls glared with agony, and his screams became so shrill and terrible that I lost all power of affording assistance. Fixed, I stood with my eyes rivited upon the criminal, who incessently cried out, 'O God! O Father! save me if there be yet mercy! save me, or I sink into the abyss!

"I am convinced he did not see me; for not once did he implore my help. His voice grew faint, and as I gazed intent upon him, the loose thong of leather, which had entangled itself in the branches by which he hung suspended, gave way, and he fell into utter darkness. I sank to the earth in a trance; during which a sound like the rush of pennons assaulted my ear; methought the evil spirit was bearing off his soul; but when I lifted up my eyes nothing stirred; the stillness that prevailed was awful.

"The moon hanging low over the waves afforded a sickly light; by which I perceived some one coming down that white cliff you see before you; and I soon heard the voice of the young woman calling aloud on her guilty lover. She stopped. She repeated again and again her exclamation; but there was no reply.—Alarmed and frantic she hurried along the path, and now I saw her on the promontory, and now by yonder pine, devouring with her glances every crevice in the rock. At length perceiving me, she flew to where I stood, by the fatal precipice, and having noticed the fragments fresh crumbled in, pored importunately on my countenance. I continued pointing to the chasm; she trembled not; her tears could not flow; but she divined the meaning. 'He is lost!' said she; 'the earth has swallowed him! but as I have shared with him the highest joy, so will I partake his torments. I will follow: dare not to hinder me.'

"Like the phantoms I have seen in dreams, she glanced beside me; and, clasping her hands above her head, lifted a steadfast look on the hemisphere, and viewed the moon with an anxiousness that told me she was bidding it farewell for ever. Observing a silken handkerchief on the round with which she had but an hour ago bound her lover's temples, she snatched it up, and imprinting it with burning kisses, thrust it into her bosom in the last act of despair and miserable passion, she threw herself, with a furious leap, into the gulf.

"To its margin I crawled on my knees and there did I remain in the most dreadful darkness; for now the moon was sunk, the sky obscured with storms, and a tempestuous blast raging the ocean. Showers poured thick upon me, and the lightning, in clear and frequent flashes, gave me terrifying glimpses of yonder accursed chasm.

"Stranger, dost thou believe in our Redeemer? in his most holy mother? in the tenets of our faith?" I answered with reverence, but said her faith and mine were different. "Then," continued the aged woman, "I will not declare before a heretic what were the visions of that night of vengeance!" She paused! I was silent.

After a short interval, with deep and frequent sighs, she resumed her narative. "Daylight began to dawn as if with difficulty, and it was late before its radiance had tinged the watery and tempestuous clouds. I was still kneeling by the gulf in prayer when the cliffs began to brighten, and the beams of the morning sun to strike against me. Then did I rejoice. Then no longer did I think myself of all human beings the most abject and miserable. How different did I feel myself from those, fresh plunged into the abodes of torment, and driven for ever from the morning!

"Three days elapsed in total solitude; on the fourth, some grave and ancient persons arrived from Naples, who questioned me, repeatedly, about the wretched lovers, and to whom I related their fate with every dreadful particular. Soon after I learned that all discourse concerning them was expressly stopped, and that no prayers were offered up for their souls."

Digitized by Google

With these words, as well as I recollect, the old woman ended her singular narration. My blood thrilled as I walked by the gulf to call my guide, who stood aloof under the cliffs. He seemed to think, from the paleness of my countenance, that I had heard some gloomy prediction, and shook his head, when I turned round to bid my old hostess adieu! It was a melancholy evening, and I could not refrain from tears, whilst winding through the defiles of the rocks, the sad scenes which had passed amongst them had recurred to my memory.

Traversing a wild thicket, we soon regained the shore, where I rambled a few minutes whilst the peasant went for the boatmen. The last streaks of light were quivering on the waters when I stepped into the bark, and wrapping myself up in an awning, slept till we reached Puzzoli, some of whose inhabitants came forth with torches to light us home.

THE RAINBOW.

BY FELICIA HEMANS.

"I do set my bow in the cloud, and it shall be a token of a covenant between me and the earth."—Gen. ix. 13.

Soft falls the mild reviving shower,
From summer's changeful skies;
And rain drops bend each trembling flower,
They tinge with richer dyes.

Soon shall their genial influence call
A thousand buds to day,
Which, wanting but that balmy fall,
In hidden beauty lay.

E'en now full many a blossom's bell
With fragrance fills the shade;
And verdure clothes each grassy dell,
In brighter tints arrayed.

But mark, that arch of varied hue
From heaven to earth is bowed!
Haste! ere it vanish, haste to view
The rainbow in the cloud.

How bright its glory! there behold
The emerald's verdant rays;
The topaz blends its hue of gold
With the deep ruby's blaze.

Yet not alone to charm thy sight
Was given the vision fair;
Gaze on that arch of colored light,
And read God's mercy there.

It tells us that the mighty deep,
Erst by the Eternal chain'd,
No more o'er earth's domain shall sweep,
Awful and unrestrain'd.

It tells that seasons, heat and cold,
Fix'd by his sovereign will,
Shall, in their course, bid man behold
Seed-time and harvest still.

That still the flower shall deck the field,
When vernal zephyrs blow:
That still the vine its fruit shall yield,
When autumn sunbeams glow.

Then, child of that fair earth, which yet
Smiles with each charm endow'd,
Bless thou his name, whose mercy set
The rainbow in the cloud.

Written for the Casket.

REFLECTIONS

ON HUMAN GLORY, OCCASIONED BY THE DEATH OF LAFAYETTE.

Ingratitude! how many a noble name
Is doomed by thee to cold neglect and shame:
How many a patriot, from his tomb complains
Of pangs endured in dungeons and in chains.

A thousand halls are hung in mourning, a thousand bells fill the air with solemn tones, and millions of patriotic hearts are sorrowing over the tomb of one, whose name is honoured by all nations, and dear to every lover of liberty. Lafayette—the great Apostle of freedom, and the friend of man, sleeps with all the mighty dead. His illustrious spirit, freed from mortality, walks with that of Washington, in the bright halls of Heaven, while his honoured dust reposes on the pillow of eternal renown. Pass over the pages of history—roll back the splendid record of the past—there is no character, save that of the world-honoured Washington, which may compete with his, in all that was glorious and grand, in all that was virtuous and noble. Whether we view him in society or solitude, in the forum or the field—whether we see him bravely battleing in the cause of liberty at Brandywine, or standing on the fearful volcano of a French revolution, he is still the same grand and glorious character; still the same brave and benevolent hero. We find him still the same fearless and faithful friend of man, whether he was giving his gold and the glory of his achievements to the cause of freedom in the forests of America, or mourning over the miseries of his country in the dark, damp dungeons of Olmutz. How splendid must his character appear to posterity, when they behold him crowned with the brilliant honours of his own country, and receiving the homage of millions of freemen in another, whom he helped to emancipate from immutable despotism. To have been the bosom friend of Washington, was fame sufficient to immortalize the memory of any individual, but his deeds are celebrated in every language, and his name is known in every land. On every shore some gifted bard wakes the long neglected harp to the memory of the hero, and sings his brilliant career.

Though the name of Napoleon stands unrivalled in the archives of conquest, though he emancipated Europe from the dark despotism of a thousand years, freed France from a whole hecatomb of Bourbon tyrants, and made himself master of Europe, of Egypt, and the Isles, yet he dwindles into absolute insignificance when compared with that glorious patriot, and patriarch of liberty, the Marquis de Lafayette.

As different was their meed as were their motives. The one, actuated by an insatiable ambition, a reckless, restless love of conquest, sighed only for the pomp of power, and the splendid pageantry of French royalty. He thought not of his fields of carnage, of cities sacked, and the thousands who perished to perpetuate his name, when his eye was dazzled with the brilliance of a diadem, and he mused on the glories of a glittering crown, and the rich robes of royalty. He was ever ready to brave danger and death amid the burning sands of Syria, or the tumbling towers of Moscow, if his perils but pointed to the path of conquest and the pomp of power. Whether he was plundering a gallery of the arts in Italy, or a mausoleum of its mummies in Egypt—whether he was crushing a crown, imprisoning a Pope, banishing a tyrant, or delivering from a dungeon the good Lafayette, he was still the same mighty and mysterious being; still actuated by the same ambition, the same love of power and renown.

Digitized by Google

How different was the character of the philanthropic and patriotic Lafayette. Born to nobility, in the lap of luxury, and bred in the most brilliant Court in Europe, he yet imbibed in early life, the imperishable principles of justice and liberty; and at the age of eighteen left his native land, where elegance, and ease, and opulence surrounded him—left the fascinations of the French metropolis, and the Court of St. Cloud, to aid a foreign people in the glorious struggle for freedom and the rights of man. Dark was the day of that struggle, and gloomy was the prospect that that land would ever be liberated from the yoke of a distant and determined despot. Yet he not only gave his presence but his purse, to the prosecution of that holy enterprize, which eventuated in the emancipation of three millions of people, and gave to the world a glorious pattern of human perseverance and patriotism. He came, not in the moment when victory hung the bloody banner of liberty on the lofty pinnacle of the temple of peace; oh, no; but he came in the darkest day of danger, when swords were leaping to the hands of heroes, when despair, like a cloud at midnight, darkened the minds of men, and the eye of Washington alone saw in the dim distance the brilliant hues of the rainbow of hope, and a happy hereafter. Thank Heaven, the patriotic Lafayette lived to see his efforts successful, to say in the words of Cæsar,—"Veni, vidi, vici;" and in the language of the gallant Perry,—"We have met the enemy, and they are ours."

Of all the illustrious benefactors and patriots, recorded on the pages of history, perhaps none, while living, have reaped so rich a harvest of fame as Washington and Lafayette. Illustrious men do not always receive the reward of their merits; the world is given to ingratitude. Miltiades, who on the plains of Marathon, with a handful of heroes conquered the crowded legions of Persia, and bound the brow of Greece with an imperishable garland of glory; he who eclipsed the fame of Themistocles, and threw a shade over the renown of Aristides, was doomed by the multitude to immediate condemnation for a single error; and while his friends, shocked and ashamed, reminded them of Marathon, he was permitted to pine and perish in a dungeon. It is true, that his picture by the celebrated painter Polygnotus, was preserved for ages, as a remnant of his renown in the Portico, where Zeno afterwards thundered his precepts of philosophy; but while it remained a splendid memento of his immortality, it also became the monument of their ingratitude and disgrace. Thus, he who had refused the sceptre of sovereignty in Chersonesus, that he might, by his virtues and his victories, shed glory on Greece, became a martyr to the jealousy of the mercenary, and met death in the chilling precincts of a prison. The ingratitude of Greece and her greedy sons did not even stop here. With the heart of the Hyena, they denied the right of sepulture to the sacred relics of the renowned hero, and it was not till the piety of his son had paid the penalty which had been imposed, that he found a grave in the land which his glory had immortalized.

The ingratitude of Greece can never be forgotten or forgiven. The venerable Socrates, the father of philosophy, the terror of the thirty tyrants, and the glory of Athens, and the world fell a victim to the envy of meaner souls and perished, a martyr to the principles he inculcated. Charged with corrupting youth, and denying the existence of the Gods, the aged philosopher and friend of man was doomed to death, at once, a victim to his virtue and to the glorious philosophy which he taught, and would not stoop to extenuate. Truly, in the language of the elegant Rosseau, Socrates died like a philosopher, and he might have added, like a Christian; covered with eternal glory, which a thousand tyrants can never extinguish, and which has burned brighter as it descended through the long, dark midnight of ages. The temples in which he taught have fallen, their columns have crumbled to dust, and other fanes of philosophy, which rose upon their ruins, are going down to decay; yet when these, and all the proud temples of Grecian glory and learning, shall lie crushed amid the melancholy wrecks of time's revolutions, his renown shall still survive, eternal as the virtue he practised, and imperishable as the principles he promulgated. It was fame enough to have been the preceptor of Plato, the great Apostle of truth, had he never adorned a temple or taught his principles and precepts to the world.

Ungrateful Athens! what a penalty did thy envy and ingratitude impose upon thee and the world. Cicero nobly declares, that he could never read the account of the death of Socrates without shedding tears.

Never was there an instance of ingratitude more glaring, or injustice more reckless, than was exhibited towards that illustrious individual Christopher Columbus, whose services and sorrows have alike been immortalized by the pen of the poet and historian. His philosophic mind conceived the idea that there was another land beyond the vast ocean, which no keel had ever cut, and no eye had ever traversed, but he was considered a visionary and enthusiast. It is recorded that woman was the cause of the fall of man and of the fall of Troy, and it is redeeming to her character that she was instrumental to that glorious discovery, which then covered Spain with immense riches and renown, and has since given mighty nations to the world. And how did Spain reward him for all his laborious toils and brilliant triumphs? Chains, and a dungeon, were all the rewards of him who made the most splendid discoveries to be found recorded on the long catalogue of human adventure.

Nor less ungrateful has been the world in bestowing upon Americus Vespucius the renown of giving a name to the New World, when it should have born the beautiful one of its brilliant discoverer. Had fortune made Christopher Columbus a conqueror, had he lit up the streets of Europe with the torch of war, had he hurled kings from their crumbling thrones, and given away their crowns with the profusive prodigality of a Napoleon—had he deluged fields in blood, and immola'ed a million on the altar of his unholy ambition, statues would have started from the sculptor's hand in every land, and marble cenotaphs and magnificent monuments would have recorded his renown, and stood to future generations as memorials of his magnanimous career. Far different has it been with the grand and glorious character of Columbus. Oh, tell it not in Gath, publish it not in the streets of Askalon, that the great discoverer of America died in a dungeon. Yet common justice has inscribed his imperishable name on the pages of history, which must endure when the temples and tombs erected to the common conqueror shall have tumbled to dust, and his very name, shall be obliterated from the marble that commemorates it.

Digitized by Google

What is human glory? What are all the brilliant achievements of the Macedonian madman—the trophies and triumphs of the mighty Cæsar? And what the victories of the world-worshipped Napoleon, who snatched a brand from the French volcano, and lit all Europe with its lurid blaze? The marble tablets of their monuments alone remain the records of their renown, for they, with all their glory and their gold, have become the trophies of the tomb. How humiliating the thought, that he, who once governed all Greece, and fancied himself the son of Jove—that he, who made Rome the empire of the world—and that he, who crushed a hundred thrones, and exiled all Europe's kings from their country and their crowns—should, like the beggar, go down to the dust, distinguishable only by the marble temple that entombs them.

What is human glory? Go muse for a moment on the plains of Marathon and Minden—go meditate in the fields of Pharsalia, of Jena, and Austerlitz—the genius of desolation sits there brooding over the destinies of thousands who perished to perpetuate the fame of one ambitious man. The pages of history has not even preserved their naked names, and their memory and their merits, have alike been lost, in the brilliant blaze of glory that surrounded their hero. What was glory to the thousands who perished on the plains of Waterloo? They sleep, not with the mighty dead—the garland of glory decks not their triumphs, nor adorns their tomb—to them the scroll of fame has never been unrolled, nor has the emblazoning trump blown the blast of their renown. They sleep the eternal sleep of oblivion, and their bleaching bones are obtained by the farmer to fatten his fields. No wreath adorns their bleeding brows—no flowers bloom over the place of their repose—and no splendid mausoleum lifts its marble tablet covered with the history of their achievements, for the admiration of millions yet unborn. Melancholy are the memorials of their merits and their martyrdom.

How different was the glory of Lafayette, the glory of doing good! How blissful must have been his reflections on the bed of death, when he looked back on a long life spent in ameliorating the condition of mankind. No mourning mothers covered his memory with a thousand curses—and no weeping widows rejoiced in the hour of the patriarch's departure. Beloved and mourned by millions, he went down to the tomb, while nations united in paying homage to his memory and his remains. Never can his name cease to be dear to the heart of every freeman, and his fame will brighten, as our country marches on to greater glory and greatness. The history of his deeds shall stir up in the hearts of our heroes the spirit which led Lafayette to victory, and the memory of his virtues shall point them to the path of true dignity and honour.

MILFORD BARD.

THE MOTHER.

The cold winds swept the mountain height,
And pathless was the dreary wild,
And 'mid the cheerless hours of night
A mother wandered with her child—
As through the drifting snow she press'd,
The babe was sleeping on her breast.

And colder still the winds did blow,
And darker hours of night came on,
And deeper grew the drifts of snow—
Her limbs were chill'd—her strength was gone.
Oh God! she cried, in accents wild,
If I must perish, save my child.

She stript her mantle from her breast,
And bared her bosom to the storm,
And round the child she wrapt the vest,
And smil'd to think the babe was warm;
With one cold kiss, one tear she shed,
And sank upon a snowy bed.

At dawn, a traveller pass'd by,
And saw her 'neath a snowy veil—
The frost of death was on her eye,
Her cheek was cold, and hard, and pale—
He moved the robe from off the child;
It liv'd—look'd up—and sweetly smil'd.

STANZAS.

Thou little star, that, in yon purple cloud,
Hang'st like a dew-drop in a violet bed,—
First gem of evening, glittering 'mid the shroud,
'Neath whose dark folds the day lies cold and dead!
As thro' my tears my soul looks up at thee,
Loathing the clayey chains that bind it here,
There comes a fearful thought, that misery
Perhaps is found e'en in thy distant sphere.

Art thou a world of sorrow and of sin,
The Heritage of death, disease, decay—
A wilderness like that we wander in,
Where all things fairest soonest pass away?
And are there graves in thee, thou radiant world,
O'er which Affection, weeping, bows her head,—
Where Hope's bright wings in the dark dust are furl'd,
And living hearts lie buried with the dead?

Perchance they do not die that dwell in thee;
Perchance their's is a darker doom than our's:
Unmeasured toil, and endless misery,
And striving that hath neither days nor hours!
Horrible dream! Oh dark and dismal path,
Where I now weeping walk, I will not leave thee,
Earth has one boon for all her children—death:
Open thy arms, oh mother! and receive me!
Take off the bitter burthen from the slave,—
Give me my birth-right—give the grave—the grave!

F. A. K.

Digitized by Google

MY FIRST DUEL.

"This is an awkward affair, Frank."

"Why, yes," said Frank, "it is an awkward affair."

"But I suppose I must go through with it," I continued.

"No doubt," rejoined my friend; "and you may rest assured, that although the anticipation is not very agreeable, you'll find the thing a mere bagatelle when on the ground."

"You'll take care to have every thing ready, and to call me betimes; will you, Frank?"

"Certainly, my dear Ephraim, rely upon me; and now, as it is already twelve, and we have to go out at six, perhaps I had better wish you good night, that you may rest and have a steady hand in the morning. Before I go, however, there is one thing I wish to mention to you."

"And what is that?" said I.

"Why," replied Frank, hesitatingly, "it is hardly worth troubling you about; but the fact is, there is a custom—that is, people have on these occasions a sort of habit of making their—their——"

"Their exit, I presume you mean?"

"Not so, my dear fellow; nothing was farther from my thoughts, as I hope (with God's will) nothing is farther from fact than the probability of such a catastrophe to the present——"

"Farce; but come, Frank, what is this that you would require of me, or enjoin me to?"

"Briefly, then, Ephraim, might it not be as well now as at any other time, just for form's sake, to scratch down a memorandum of your wishes respecting the disposal of your property?"

"Oh Lord!" said I, "is that the mouse your mountain laboured with? My property! God forgive you, Frank! Well, as Tom Moore says—

"I give thee all; I can no more."

I will bequeath you my debts, with a proviso that you don't pay interest; but seriously, I'll think of what you say; and now, good night; and for Heaven's sake be punctual in the morning!"

"Never fear that. Good night," said Frank; "and do you hear, Ephraim? you may take a pint of Madeira, if you have an inclination to it, to-night; but not a drop of port, sherry or brandy. I must have you placed with a cool head, clear eye, and a steady fist."

"Very well," said I, "I promise you to be observant of your orders;" and after once more exchanging greetings, the door closed, and I was left to myself.

"Well," said I, when I found myself alone, "this is a very delightful sort of dilemma to be placed in. If I loved the girl, there would be some satisfaction in standing up to be shot at for her; but to be blazed away at for a wench that I don't care a curse for—to be compelled to fight for mere flirtation—is certainly, at the least, very disagreeable. However, I suppose I must let the fellow have a brush at me, and so there's no more to be said on that head. By-the-by, Frank, hinted (with prophetic foresight, I presume) at the necessity of my disposing in writing of my moveables. Allons donc, let me see.—First, there is my linen and my clothes; let poor Betty have them, to recompense her in part for the colds she has caught in letting me in many a morning; the chances are, she'll catch no more on that errand. My coins and medals may be given to C. Then there are my books, and chief of them all, sinner as I am, my Bible, if I dare name it with the purpose of blood upon my mind. I charge you, Frank, deliver it yourself to my dear and widowed mother; tell her I revered its precepts, although I lacked the strength of mind that should have made me hold them fast and follow them; and, above all, never, never crush her bowed, and bruised, and lowly spirit with the truth of all the weakness, the folly, the impiety, that will mingle in my end! Tell her I fell by sword, plague, pestilence, or famine; but tell her not I fell at a task my common sense—my heart—my soul, which owns its divine origin—revolts from!—tell her not I fell as a duellist—Down, down my heart! the world must be worshipped. My other books may be divided between —— and —— and ——, except my series of Ana, my Hogarth, and Viel's and Bachaumont's and La Chapelle's and Langle's Journies, and my Bigarrures; reserve them, with my Meerschaum, to yourself, and over them remember the happy hours that you have spent before with them and him who thanks you now for all your warm-hearted kindness. In the drawer of my desk will be found a portrait and some letters; I need not say whose they are, but I entreat you, my dear Frank, I conjure you, to take them into your own hands—to let no other look upon them, and to deliver them to her! Gloss the circumstances of my death, and let the tidings fall gently on her; but tell her, amid all my sins and all my follies, I remembered her, and loved her, and her only, and more earnestly in the last moments of my life than when I held her on my bosom. Tell her ——"

I had written thus far when I was interrupted by a tapping at my door, and when I opened it Frank was there.

"Is it time then already?" said I.

"Yes," said he. "I am glad to see you ready. Come, we have few moments to lose."

"The hours have flown with strange rapidity," I said; "but I am prepared. You spoke to me last night of a will; doubtless it was a necessary precaution, and I thank you for the hint. I have attended to it, and have noted down my wishes; here is a memorandum of them, and I confide the execution of them to you; I know you will not refuse the task."

"God forbid," said Frank, taking my hand, "that I should; but God forbid there should be occasion for my offices."

"I also hope, my dear friend," I replied, "that there may be no such necessity; but I have a presentment (and my presentments have seldom boded me falsely) that this morning's work will be my last."

"Don't say that, Ephraim," said Frank; "if I thought that—but, good God! how can I get you out of it?"

"Out of it!" I exclaimed; "you mistake me. I cannot prevent my conviction; but if I saw my grave dug at my feet, I would not retrace the steps I have taken. Come, come, I am ready;" and, taking him by the arm, I drew him from the room, and we quitted the house silently, and in a few minutes were on the ground.

Digitized by Google

On arriving there, I found that my adversary (whom I had never seen before) was beforehand with us; he was a tall, raw, gaunt, muscular fellow, with an enormous pair of mustachios, and having very much the appearance of one of Napoleon's old sabreurs. We saluted each other coldly, and then turned away, while the seconds retired to settle the preliminaries; their conference lasted some time, and appeared to bear grievously upon my adversary's patience, for he seemed eager to despatch me.

At last he addressed them. "Gentlemen," he said, "I beg pardon, but I think we may arrange in a breath all that is to be arranged.—"First then," he said, speaking to Frank, "do you choose fifteen or twenty paces?"

Frank unhesitatingly replied the latter, out of regard to my safety.

"Bon," said the fellow, as he made a scratch in the turf with his heel, and prepared to take the distance.

I confess I was rejoiced at the thought of his measuring it, for I thought I perceived an omen of salvation in the length of his legs; in this, however, I was disappointed, for the vagabond stepped the ground as mincingly as a lady in pattens.

"And now," when he had finished that part of the business, "and now," said he, with a coolness that matched that of the morning, and bespoke him terribly au fait to the business, "whose weapons are we to use? Your's? They are only a common holster pair; mine are rifle-barrelled and hair triggered, and in every way superior to those machines; what say you to using mine? they'll make shorter work of the business."

"No doubt," thought I.

"What say you, Ephraim?" said Frank.

"O, by all means; what is good for the goose is good for the gander," I answered, with an attempt to smile; Frank therefore assented.

"Bon," said the fellow again; "and now, for the first fire; has any body a piece of money about them? Oh, here, I have one;" and he handed it to his second, who flung it up, and the result was in his favour.

Frank then came up to me, and, seizing my hand with passionate interest, said to me, in a tone of agitation, "Ephraim, my dear boy, be of good cheer; that hulking blackguard is evidently trying to bully you, but be of good cheer; let me place you; you are but a lath, give him your side; you know it is disputed whether on these occasions it is most prudent to give the front or the side; but let me govern you here; you are but a lath, give him your side, and the devil himself can't hit you. God bless you, and keep you!" And so saying, and again pressing my hand, he withdrew. Immediately after which we placed ourselves, and the next instant the signal was given. As soon as I heard it, I looked straight at my adversary, and saw him raise his pistol and steady it; I saw him eye me with the keenness of a hawk and the precision of a master; it was but the fair half-second, but I knew and was certain he had covered me. The next instant I felt a blow, as it were, on the outside of my right elbow, and a something like ice stealing along the arm as it dropped nerveless and with the weight of lead by my side, and I heard the report of his weapon. I was winged clean as a whistle.

Frank perceived how it was with me, and was by my side in a twinkling, bandaging my arm with the handkerchief he tore from his neck. "Are you faint, Ephraim?"

"Not at all," I said; "but make haste, I long for my revenge."

"Is the gentleman hurt?" inquired my adversary, with a half-stifled sardonic grin.

"Not a whit," said I; and he bowed.

"Can you give him his charge?" inquired Frank.

"O never fear," I answered; "let me have the pistol." He handed it to me; I grasped it, but I essayed in vain to raise it; my right arm was more disabled than I had thought.

"Try him with the left," said Frank.

I did so, but found the pistol far heavier than I had conceived, and much heavier than I knew my own to be; it was impossible to level it with my left. I looked at my adversary and saw his features relax into a damnable Mephistopholic grin. I maddened with unspeakable rage.—"Hell and the devil!" I exclaimed, "is there no having a slap at the long-legged rascal?"

"I fear not," said Frank; "but," he added, with affectionate warmth, "stand back, and I'll fight his second for you."

"That's out of the question," I replied; "let me try my left again." I did so, and felt convinced the pistol was more than usually heavy. I held it by the barrel, and then I felt assured the butt was plugged heavily with lead. The thought of treachery immediately came across me. The fire won at his own call on the toss of a floria from his own purse probably, and a piece contrived for these occasions, with the same impression on both sides. My right arm shattered certainly by aim, and his pistol of a weight that prevented all possibility of its being levelled with the left hand; all concurred to assure me I was the victim of a scoundrel.

"But it shall not go thus," I said, as I thrust Frank on one side, and advanced towards the villain with the cool purpose of blowing his brains out; "it shall not go thus!" And as I neared him, I poised the butt of the pistol with my left hand against my chest, and put my finger on the trigger to draw in his face. Fortunately, Frank, who was ignorant of my suspicions, closed on me at the very critical instant, and wrenched the weapon from my grasp, exclaiming, at the same time, "Would you commit murder?"

"With pleasure," I answered, "upon such a murderous villain as this!" But he was now secure from my fire, and seeing himself so, and safe in his superior physical strength, he sneered at me with such mean demoniacal insult, that unable to withold myself any longer, I rushed on him and grappled with him; but I was weak from pain and loss of blood, and I fainted.

Suddenly I was aroused by some one shaking me violently. I looked up; it was Frank. "Up, up, man," he cried.

Digitized by Google

"Up," I said, "for what?"

"For what," he replied, "to save my character and your own, if you have any care about either. Why, it wants but a quarter of six, and at six we must be on the ground."

"What, have not I been shot then?" I said,

"Shot!" he exclaimed, "who the devil has been here to shoot you? Why you have been dreaming."

It was true; I had drawn my table to my bedside to make my will, and had fallen back asleep, and dreamed what I have related.

"Then I suppose I must be shot again?"

"There's little fear of that, thank Heaven," said Frank, "for I have just learnt that your adversary, in alarm at your prowess, has bolted."

"Indeed," said I, as cooly as I could; but inwardly thanking God heartily for deliverance from jeopardy.

"Yes," continued Frank, "so it is; but come, we must take our ground, and give the vagabond an hour's law."

"With all my heart," said I; and in five minutes I was dressed and on my way to the spot, with a lighted cheroot in my mouth, and truth to say, entre nous, a lighter heart under my waistcoat than I think I should else have carried to the field.

On the ground we found Captain M., the fellow's second, who informed us he understood his principal had taken flight, and vowed summary vengeance on him when and wherever he should meet him, for the insult he had offered him by his pusillanimous conduct. To be brief, we waited one hour, and my antagonist did not appear. Frank thus addressed himself to his second:—

"Captain M.," he said, "you will do my friend the justice to say he has behaved as becomes a brave and an honourable man?"

"Most certainly," said the Captain; and we quitted the ground, and I proceeded to post the recreant; after which the Captain, Frank, and I together took steaks and claret for breakfast. And thus ended "the first duel" of a half-bearded boy.

EPHRAIM TWIGG.

THE GRATEFUL TURK.

Topal Osman, who had received his education in Seraglio, was in the year 1698, about the age of twenty-five, sent with the Sultan's orders, to the bashaw of Cairo. He travelled by land to Said; and being afraid of the Arabs, who roved about plundering passengers and caravans, he embarked on board a Turkish vessel bound to Damietta, a city on the Nile. In this short passage they were attacked by a Spanish privateer, and a very bloody action ensued. Topal Osman here gave the first proofs of that intrepidity by which he was so often signalized afterwards.—The crew animated by his example, fought with great bravery; but superior numbers at last prevailed, and Osman was taken prisoner, after being dangerously wounded in the arm and thigh.

Osman's gallantry induced the Spanish captain to pay him particular regard; but his wounds were still in a bad way when he was carried to Malta, where the privateer went to refit. The wound in his thigh was the most dangerous; and he was lame of it ever after; for which he had the name of Topal or cripple.

At that time Vincent Arnaud, a native of Marseilles, was commander of the port at Malta; who, as his business required, went on board the privateer as soon as she came to anchor.—Osman no sooner saw Arnaud, than he said to him, "Can you do a generous and gallant action? Ransom me: and take my word you shall lose nothing by it." Such a request from a slave in chains was uncommon; but the manner in which it was delivered made an impression upon the Frenchman, who, turning to the captain of the privateer, asked what he demanded for his ransom. He answered 1000 sequins (near 500l.)—Arnaud turning to the Turk, said, "I know nothing of you; and would you have me risk 1000 sequins on your word?" "Each of us act in this," replied the Turk, "with consistency.—I am in chains, and therefore try every method to recover my liberty; and you may have reason to distrust the word of a stranger. I have nothing at present but my bare word to give you; nor do I pretend to assign any reason why you should trust to it. I can only say, that if you incline to act a generous part, you shall have no reason to repent." The commander upon this went to make his report to the grand master, Don Perellos. The air with which Osman delivered himself wrought so upon Arnaud, that he returned immediately on board the Spanish vessel, and agreed with the captain for 600 sequins, which he paid as the price of Osman's liberty. He put him on board a vessel of his own, and provided him a surgeon, with every thing necessary for his entertainment and cure.

Osman had mentioned to his benefactor, that he might write to Constantinople for the money he had advanced; but finding himself in the hands of a man who had trusted so much to his honour, he was emboldened to ask another favour; which was, to leave the payment of the ransom entirely to him. Arnaud discerned, that in such a case things were not to be done by halves. He agreed to the proposal with a good grace; and showed him every other mark of generosity and friendship. Accordingly, Osman, as soon as he was in a condition, set out again upon his voyage.

The French colours now protected him from the privateers. In a short time he reached Damietta, and sailed up the Nile to Cairo. No sooner was he arrived there than he delivered 1000 sequins to the master of the vessel, to be paid to his benefactor Arnaud, together with some rich furs; and he gave to the master himself 500 crowns as a present. He executed the orders of the sultan his master, with the bashaw of Cairo; and setting out for Constantinople was the first who brought the news of his slavery.

The favour received from Arnaud in such circumstances made an impression upon a generous mind too deep ever to be eradicated. During the whole course of his life he did not cease, by letters and other acknowledgments, to testify his gratitude.

In 1715 war was declared between the Vene-

Digitized by Google

tians and Turks. The grand Vizir, who had projected the invasion of the Morea, assembled the Ottoman army near the ishmus of Corinth, the only pass by which this peninsula can be attacked by land. Topal Osman was charged with the command to force the pass; which he not only executed successfully, but afterwards took the city of Corinth by assault. For this service he was rewarded by being made a bashaw of two tails. The next year he served as a lieutenant-general under the grand Vizir at the siege of Corfu, which the Turks were obliged to abandon. Osman staid three days before the place, to secure and conduct the retreat of the Ottoman troops.

In 1722 he was appointed Seraskier (general in chief) and had the command of the army in the Morea. When the counsels of the different nations came to pay their respects to him in this quality, he distinguished the French by peculiar marks of kindness and protection. "Inform Vincent Arnaud (says he) that I am the happier in my new dignity as it enables me to serve him. Let me have his son in pledge of our friendship, and I will charge myself with making his fortune."—Accordingly Arnaud's son went into the Morea; and the Seraskier not only made him presents, but granted him privileges and advantages in trade, which soon put him in a way of acquiring an estate.

Topal Osman's parts and abilities soon raised him to a greater command. He was made a bashaw of three tails, and Beglerbeg of Romania, one of the greatest governments in the empire, and of the greatest importance from its vicinity to Hungary.

His residence during his government was at Nyssa. In the year 1727, Vincent Arnaud and his son waited upon him there, and were received with the utmost tenderness. Laying aside the bashaw and governor, he embraced them, caused them to be served with sherbet and perfumes, and made them sit upon the same sofa with himself; an honor but rarely bestowed by a bashaw of the first order, and hardly ever to a Christian. After these marks of distinction, he sent them away loaded with presents.

In the great revolution that happened at Constantinople, anno. 1730, the grand vizir Ibraham perished. The times were so tumultuary, that one and the same year had seen no fewer than three successive vizirs. In September, 1731, Topal Osman was called from his government to fill this place; which being the highest in the Ottoman empire, and perhaps the highest that any subject in the world enjoys, is always dangerous, and was then greatly so. He no sooner arrived at Constantinople, to take possession of his new dignity, than he desired the French ambassador to inform his old benefactor of his advancement; and that he should hasten to Constantinople while things remained in their present situation; adding that a grand vizir seldom kept long in his station.

In the month of January, 1732, Arnaud, with his son, arrived at Constantinople from Malta, bringing with him a variety of presents, and twelve Turks whom he had ransomed from slavery. These, by command of the Vizir, were ranged in order before him. Vincent Arnaud, now seventy-two years of age, with his son, was brought before Topal Osman, Grand Vizir of the Ottoman empire. He received them in the presence of the great officers of state with the utmost marks of affection. Then turning to those about him, and pointing to the ransomed Turks, "Behold (says he) these your brethren, now enjoying the sweets of liberty, after having groaned in slavery: this Frenchman is their deliverer. I was myself a slave, loaded with chains, streaming with blood, and covered with wounds; this is the man who redeemed and saved me; this is my master and benefactor; to him I am indebted for life, liberty, fortune, and every thing I enjoy. Without knowing me, he paid for me a large ransom, sent me away upon my bare word, and gave me a ship to carry me. Where is there a mussulman capable of such generosity?

While Osman was speaking, all eyes were fixed upon Arnaud, who held the Grand Vizir's hands closely locked between his own. The Vizir then asked both father and son many questions conberning their situation and fortune; heard their answers with kindness and attention, and then ended with an Arabic sentence, ALLAH KERIM! (the providence of God is great!) He made before them a distribution of the presents they had brought: the greatest part of which he sent to the Sultan, the Sultana mother, and the Kisler Aga, (chief of the black enuchs) upon which the two Frenchmen made their obeisance and retired.

After this ceremony was over, the son of the Grand Vizir took them to his apartments, where he treated them with great kindness. Sometime before they left Constantinople, they had a conference in private with the Vizir, who divested himself of all state and ceremony. He let them understand, that the nature of his situation would not permit him to do as he desired, since a minister ever appears in the eyes of many to do nothing without a view to his own particular interest; adding, that a bashaw was lord and master of his own province; but that the Grand Vizir at Constantinople had a master greater than himself.

He caused them to be amply paid for the ransom of the Turks, and likewise procured them payment of a debt which they looked on as desperate. He also made them large presents in money, and gave them an order for taking a load of corn at Salonica; which was likely to be very profitable, as the exportation of corn from that part had been for a long time prohibited.

As his gratitude was without bounds, his liberality was the same. His behaviour to his benefactor demonstrated that greatness of soul which displayed itself in every action of his life. And this behaviour must appear the more generous, when it is considered what contempt and aversion the prejudices of education create in a Turk against Christians.

A man who does not possess a particular talent, satisfies himself by despising it; he removes this obstacle which stands between him and merit, and by this means he finds himself on a level with him whose labours he is afraid of.—Montesquieu.

Digitized by Google

NIGHT-MARE.

In every instance that we transgress the bounds of temperance and moderation, Nature has her revenge. Diseases are frequently only the penalties we pay for improper indulgence enjoyed either by our ancestors or by ourselves. Gout is produced by intemperance, and the stomach when deranged by the excessive drinking of spirituous liquors, influences the imagination so far as to conjure up before the eyes all kinds of horrible phantoms. Nature's revenge in the case of repletion is perhaps still more distressing. Over-feeding, or even moderate eating when the digestive functions are previously impaired by some other excess, is punished by the infliction of what is called night-mare, or incubus. The nature of this torment of the eaters of heavy suppers, is thus described by Mr. M'Nish in his interesting work, "The Philosophy of Sleep."—"Night mare may be defined a painful dream, accompanied with painful respiratory action, and torpor in the powers of volition. The reflecting organs are generally more or less awake; and, in this respect, night-mare differs from simple dreaming where they are mostly quiescent.

This affection is one of the most distressing to which human nature is subject. Imagination cannot conceive the horrors it frequently gives rise to, or language describe them in adequate terms. They are a thousand times more frightful than the visions conjured up by necromancy or diablerie, and far transcend every thing in history or romance, from the fable of the writhing and asp-encircled Laocoon to Dante's appalling picture of Ugolino and his famished offspring, or the hidden tortures of the Spanish Inquisition. The whole mind, during the paroxysm, is wrought up to a pitch of unutterable despair; a spell is laid upon the faculties, which freezes them into inaction; and the wretched victim feels as if bent alive in his coffin, or overpowered by resistless and immitigable pressure.

The modifications which night-mare assumes are infinite; but one passion is almost never absent—that of utter and incomprehensible dread. Sometimes the sufferer is buried beneath overwhelming rocks, which crush him on all sides, but still leave him with a miserable consciousness of his situation. Sometimes he is involved in the coils of a horrid slimy monster, whose eyes have the phosphorescent glare of the sepulchre, and whose breath is poisonous as the marsh of Lerna. Every thing horrible, disgusting, or terrific in the moral or physical world is brought before him in fearful array; he is hissed at by serpents, tortured by demons, stunned by the hollow voices and cold touch of apparitions. A mighty stone is laid upon his breast, and crushes him to the ground in helpless agony; mad bulls and tigers pursue his palsied footsteps; the unearthly shrieks and gibberish of hags, witches, and fiends, float around him. In whatever situation he may be placed, he feels superlatively wretched; he is Ixion working for ages at his wheel; he is Sisyphus rolling his eternal stone; he is stretched upon the iron bed of Procrustes; he is prostrated by inevitable destiny beneath the approaching wheels of the car of Juggernaut. At one moment he may have the consciousness of a malignant demon being at his side; then, to shun the sight of so appaling an object, he will close his eyes; but still the fearful being will make its presence known, for its icy breath is felt diffusing itself over his image, and he knows that he is face to face with a fiend. Then, if he looks up he beholds horrid eyes glaring upon him, and an aspect of hell grinning at him with even more than hellish malice. Or he may have the idea of a monstrous hag squatted upon his breast—mute, motionless, and malignant—an incarnation of the evil spirit, whose intolerable weight crushes the breath out of his body, and whose fixed, deadly, incessant stare, petrifies him with horror, and makes his very existence insufferable.

In every instance, there is a sense of oppression and helplessness, and the extent to which these are carried, varies according to the violence of the paroxysm. The individual never feels himself a free agent; on the contrary, he is spell-bound by some enchantment, and remains an unresisting victim for malice to work its will upon. He can neither breathe, nor walk, nor run, with his wonted facility. If pursued by an imminent danger, he can hardly drag one limb after another; if engaged in combat, his blows are utterly ineffective; if involved in the fangs of any animal, or in the grasp of an enemy, extrication is impossible. He struggles, he pants, he toils, but it is all vain; his muscles are rebels to the will, and refuse to obey its calls. In no case is there a sense of complete freedom; the benumbing stupor never departs from him, and his whole being is locked up in one mighty spasm. Sometimes he is forcing himself through an aperture too small for the reception of his body, and is there arrested and tortured by the pangs of suffocation produced by the pressure to which he is exposed; or he loses his way in a narrow labyrinth, and gets involved in its contracted and inexplicable mazes; or he is entombed alive in a sepulchre beside the mouldering dead. There is in most cases an intense reality in all that he sees, or hears, or feels. The aspect of the hideous phantoms which harass his imagination, are bold and defined; the sounds which greet his ear appallingly distinct; and when any dimness or confusion of imagery does prevail, it is of the most fearful kind, leaving nothing but dreary and miserable impressions behind it.

In general, during an attack, the person has the consciousness of an utter inability to express his horror by cries. He feels that his voice is half choked by impending suffocation, and that any exertion of it, farther than a deep sigh or groan, is impossible. Sometimes, however, he conceives that it is bellowing with prodigious energy, and wonders that the household are not alarmed by his noise. But this is an illusion. Those outcries which he fancied himself uttering are merely obscure moans, forced with difficulty and pain from the stifled penetralia of his bosom.

At one time, night-mare melts into unbroken sleep, or pleasing dreams; and we awake in the morning with merely the remembrance of having had one of its attacks; at another, it arouses us by its violence, and we start out of it with a convulsive shudder. At the moment of throwing off the fit, we seem to turn round upon the side with a mighty effort, as if from beneath the pressure of a superincumbent weight; and the more thoroughly to awake ourselves, we generally kick violently, beat the breast, rise up in bed, and cry out once or twice. As soon as we are able to exercise the voice or voluntary muscles with freedom, the paroxysm is at an end; but, for some time after, we experience extreme terror, and often cold shivering, while the heart throbs violently, and the respiration is hurried.

An opinion prevails, that, during the incubus, the person is always upon his back; and the circumstance of his usually feeling as if in that posture, together with the relief which he experiences on turning round upon his side, are certainly strong presumptions in favour of its accuracy. The sensations, however, which occur in this state are fallacious in the highest degree. We have seldom any evidence either that he was on his back, or that he turned at all. The fact that he supposed himself in the above position during the fit, and the other fact, that on recovering from it, he was lying on his side, may have produced the illusion; and, where he never moved a single muscle, he may conceive that he turned round after a prodigious effort. I have had an attack of this disorder while siting in an arm-chair, or with my head leaning against a table. In fact, these are the most likely positions to bring it on, the lungs being then more completely compressed than in almost any other posture. I have also had it most distinctly while lying on the side, and I know many cases of a similar description in others. Although, therefore, night-mare may take place more frequently upon the back than upon the side, the opinion that it occurs only in the former of these postures is altogether incorrect; and whose we are much addicted to its attacks, no posture whatever will protect us.

Digitized by Google

Persons not particularly subject to incubus, feel no inconvenience, save temporary terror or fatigue, from any occasional attack which they may have; but those with whom it is habitual are apt to experience a certain degree of giddiness, ringing in the ears, tension of the forehead, flashing of light before the eyes, and other symptoms of cerebral congestion. A bad taste in the mouth, and more or less fulness about the pit of the stomach, are sometimes experienced after an attack.

The illusions which occur are perhaps the most extraordinary phenomena of night-mare; and so strongly are they often impressed upon the mind, that, even on awaking, we find it impossible not to believe them real. We may, for example, be sensible of knockings at the door of our apartment, hear familiar voices calling upon us, and see individuals passing through the chamber. In many cases, no arguments, no efforts of the understanding, will convince us that these are merely the chimeras of sleep. We regard them as events of actual occurrence, and will not be persuaded to the contrary. With some, such a belief has gone down to the grave; and others have maintained it strenuously for years, till a recurrence of the illusions, under circumstances which rendered their real existence impossible, has shown them that the whole was a dream.

Some people are much more prone to incubus than others. Those whose digestion is healthy, whose minds are at ease, and who go supperless to bed, will seldom be troubled with it. Those again, who keep late hours, study hard, eat heavy suppers, and are subject to bile, acid, and hypochrondria, are almost sure to be more or less its victims. There are particular kinds of food which pretty constantly lead to the same result, such as cheese, cucumbers, almonds, and whatever is hard to be digested.

Night-mare is sometimes attended with danger, when it becomes habitual. It may then give rise to apoplexy, and destroy life; or, in nervous subjects, may occasion epileptic and hysterical affections, which prove extremely harassing. According to Coelus Aurelianus, many people die of this complaint. Probably, some of those who are found dead in bed have lost their lives in a fit of incubus, the circumstance being imputed to some other cause. Night-mare is thus, in some cases, dangerous; and all, when it becomes habitual, is such a source of misery, that sleep, instead of being courted as a period of blissful repose, is looked upon with horror, as the appointed season of inexpressible suffering and dread. It becomes, on this account, a matter of importance to contrive some method for preventing the attacks of so distressful a malady. The cause, whatever it may be, must, if practicable, be removed, and the symptoms thence arising will naturally disappear. If the disorder proceeds from heavy suppers or indigestible food, these things ought to be given up, and the person should either go supperless to bed, or with such a light meal as will not hurt his digestion. Salted provisions of all kinds must be abandoned, nor should he taste any thing which will lie heavily upon the stomach, or run into fermentation. For this reason, nuts, cucumbers, cheese, ham, and fruits, are all prejudicial. If he be subject to heartburn, flatulence, and other dyspeptic symptoms, he should make use of occasional doses of magnesia, or carbonate of potash or soda. I have known a tea spoonful of either of the two latter, or three times that quantity of the former, taken before stepping into bed, prevent an attack, where, from the previous state of the stomach, I am convinced it would have taken place had those medicines not been used. Great attention must also be paid to the state of the bowels."

CONNUBIALITIES.

Love is the epitome of our whole duty; and all the endearments of society, so long as they are lawful and honest, are not only consistent with, but parts and expressions of it.

Marriage enlarges the scene of our happiness or misery; the marriage of love is pleasant, the marriage of interest easy, and a marriage where both meet, happy.

Women go further in love than men, but men outstrip them in friendship.

As some women lose their reputation rather for want of discretion than want of virtue, so others preserve theirs by their discretion only.

Women are pleased with courtship, and the most disdainful cannot but be complaisant to those that tell them of their attractions.

Some men say that it is hard to determine which is the more troublesome, a maid's reserve, or a wife's forwardness.

A woman that has but one lover, thinks herself to be no coquet; she that has several concludes herself no more than a coquet.

Reciprocal love is justice; constant love is fortitude; secret love is prudence.

It is the hardest thing in love to feign it where it is not, or hide it where it is; but it is easier counterfeited than concealed.

The face of her we love is the fairest of sights, and her voice the sweetest harmony in the world.

A man is more reserved in his friend's concerns than his own; a woman, on the contrary, keeps her own secret better than another's.

A woman will think herself slighted if she is not courted, yet pretends to know herself too well to believe your flattery.

Absence is to love what fasting is to the body; a little stimulates it, but a long abstinence is fatal.

The greatest pleasure of life is love; the greatest treasure, contentment; the greatest possession, health; the greatest ease, is sleep; and the greatest medicine, a true friend.

Alcibiades being astonished at Socrates' patience, asked him how he could endure the perpetual scolding of his wife? "Why," said he, "as they do who are accustomed to the ordinary noise of wheels to draw water."

TO-MORROW.

Whate'er the grief that dims the eye,
Whate'er the cause of sorrow,
We turn us to the weeping sky,
And say, "We'll smile to-morrow."
And when from those we love, we part,
From hope we comfort borrow,
And whisper to our aching heart,
We'll meet again to-morrow.

But when to-morrow comes, 'tis still
An image of to-day,
Still tears our heavy eyelids fill,
Still mourn we those away.
And when that morrow too is past—
(A yesterday of sorrow)—
Hope, smiling, cheats us to the last,
With visions of to-morrow!

Digitized by Google

From the Lady's Magazine.

ACCOMPLISHMENTS.

In the whole range of common expressions there is none so indefinite as the term accomplishment—"Miss M. has just returned from a fashionable boarding school." Is she handsome?" "I have never seen her—of course I am unable to answer your inquiry; but report says she is highly accomplished, and how can it be otherwise? The three years that she has been absent having been devoted wholly to accomplishments." And what meaning should we attach to the term? Why, precisely that which our own mode of life, habits of thought, or those with whom we associate, choose to give it. If we have moved only in the world of fashion, we have adopted its ideas with its phraseology; and imagine the young lady who has endured two or three years' tuition, accomplished in mind, and she who has passed through the same term of fashionable dissipation—accomplished in manners. Let us analyze these acquirements. In what do they consist? She plays and sings, but so mechanically that we in vain watch to see the voice accompanied by an answering feeling from the heart. She paints, or rather colors, setting at defiance all rules of shade and proportion. She understands the French and Italian, but will look at you with vacant surprise, if called upon to give the derivation of a word, or a single rule connected with the grammatical construction of a language she feels so much pride in exhibiting. And what has been her progress, if we advance into the higher branches of intellectual culture—into those which demand persevering application and patient industry? These have never been thought of at all; deemed wholly subordinate to those which were to procure for her the envied distinction. The grand aim for which masters have been provided, and money lavished, was to make her accomplished.

I have been too often led to hope for elevation of feeling, purity of taste, and cultivation of mind, in those who have been termed accomplished, and too often been cruelly disappointed, not to turn from such eulogies with suspicion, and with a sickening feeling to regard those showy branches of education which are so highly valued, to the exclusion of all which tends to raise the female mind above the mere trifles of a day.

What is the meaning which the well informed and cultivated attach to the term accomplished? With them it implies the whole range of female acquirements, thoroughly, but modestly understood; nor is this all; with them mental culture alone is not sufficient. The conversation may be classically elegant, the memory stored with the treasures of ancient and modern literature; and the mind enriched by reflection, may be clear in its views, and vigorous in its decisions; and yet a void may be felt, a painful void, which the highest intellectual attainments alone can never fill. And from what source can this knowledge be obtained? What can purify and perfect the character, complete the work, and give a finish to the fabric which has been constructed with so much beauty and proportion? Mental culture has failed in its highest object, reflection has but half completed its work, if it has never been employed in raising the mind to the source from whence the intellectual spark at first proceeded; if it has never dwelt with feelings of the deepest interest of religion, as woman's peculiar province; the truths of which she should make her dearest study, the practice of its duties her constant aim. Religion has done more to elevate woman in the scale of being, than every other circumstance combined. To be sensible of this, we need only dwell upon the situation of the female sex, as universally exhibited eighteen centuries ago; or, are now seen among the degraded females of Asia, who occupied with childish sports, and ignorant of any higher source of pleasure, are valued only as they may furnish the amusement of a trifling hour; while their thoughts can never rise even to assimilate with those of their effeminate lord, who, while priding himself on his high prerogative, and his acknowledged superiority, declares, "that Allah who but denied to woman the possession of a soul has recompensed the defect by bestowing upon her an angels' form." Let us turn from such degrading scenes—turn from the favorites of an hour, whose influence is powerful only while their beauty is dazzling, to the enlightened, refined, and pious females, who have claimed the homage of the heart, and the understanding. Look, then, at a woman in the scenes of domestic life, mingling in the social circle, kneeling at the domestic altar, ardent in the pursuit of knowledge and scrupulous in the performance of duty, and say if mere accomplishments can give her that moral grandeur, can procure for her that high respect which she now attracts.

Shall we wonder that men of sense, so often deceived by finding a vacant head, an unfeeling heart, or a disgusting pedantry, where common report had prepared them for all that was estimable in the female character, shall we wonder they turn with an incredulous smile, from the accomplished female; and while they admire at a distance the few gifted minds, whose talents, as displayed in their writings, have charmed, and whose reputation has borne even the ordeal of criticism, believe them a sort of intellectual phenomena, rather as the exceptions, than as what their sex in general may approach? Shall we wonder that they at last turn to the simple, unpretending being, whom they at least imagine will not wound by pretension, disgust by pedantry, or call forth the smile of derision, by her far-famed accomplishments and real ignorance? But is it to those whose highest praise is the mere absence of evil that we are to look for the guides of the youthful mind? Is it from such that we are to expect a beneficial influence to be exerted on society? Will their families be illuminated spots on the intellectual map of the world? If it is the mother who gives the first impressions of the heart, how great is her responsibility, how sacred her duty to be all that nature and Providence designed her!

I would not lessen the value of those lighter acquirements, which render the well-educated woman still more attractive; I would not take from her a single resource which might serve to divert the attention in moments of weariness; or to unbend the mind after severe application. I would say that these are valuable, but only so long as they retain their proper place, as secondary to higher attainments, and more important duties. Not until accomplishments are weighed in the balance of reason, not until this hackneyed word, so comprehensive, and yet so indefinite, shall be understood to express the highest degree of mental and moral superiority; not till the education of a woman renders her unwavering in the performance of duty, elevates her mind from the trifles of the passing moment, places it on permanent objects of interest, and animates her heart with the pure sentiments of devotion, not until then, can she assume the higher station she was destined to occupy, and not till then will it be a boast to say of a lady that she is accomplished.

SUPERSTITION.—An elderly dame, sometime ago ran breathlessly towards a gentleman riding near a town on a white horse, eagerly asking him for a remedy for her child, who had the whooping cough. The silly creature was referred to a medical gentleman as the proper person for such an appeal, but the old woman insisted on it that he would not do, no prescription being of the least use unless given by the "first person she met on a white horse."

Digitized by Google

ON THE MANNERS OF THE COMMON RAT.

A correspondent of the Genesee Farmer, communicates a number of interesting facts in relation to the manners and habits of the common rat, and furnishes an extract from the Journal of Latude, who, while in prison, succeeded in domesticating several of the species. Latude was imprisoned in the reigns of Louis XV and XVI for the term of 35 years, in the Bastile and other dungeons, and while thus a victim of the most execrable tyranny, he resorted to the following method to relieve the tediousness of solitary confinement.

"For a long time I had enumerated amongst my greatest annoyances, the presence of a crowd of rats, who came continually hunting for food, and lodging in my straw. Sometimes when I was asleep, they ran across my face; and more than once by biting me severely, occasioned the most acute suffering. Unable to get rid of them, and forced to live in their society, I conceived the idea of forming a friendship with them. They soon condescended to receive me; and I owe to them the only agreeable relaxation I have experienced during the thirty-five years of my captivity. Let me describe the progress of this interesting friendship.

"The dungeons of the Bastile were octagonal; the one where I was confined had a loop hole two feet and a half above the floor. On the inide it was two feet long, and about eighteen inches wide; but it gradually diminished towards the exterior, so that on the outside of the wall, it scarcely exceeded three inches in size. From this loop hole alone I derived the only light and air I was permitted to enjoy. The stone which formed the base of it served me also for chair, and table. When tired of reclining on a foul and infected pallet, I dragged myself to the loop hole to imbibe a little of the fresh air; and to lighten the weight of my chains, I rested my elbows and arms on this horizontal stone. Being one day in this attitude, I saw a large rat appear at the other extremity of the loop hole. I called him to me; he looked at me without showing any fear, and I gently threw him a piece of bread, taking care not to frighten him away by a violent action. He approached—took the bread—went to a little distance to eat it, and appeared to ask for a second piece. I flung him another, but at less distance; a third nearer still, and so on by degrees. This continued as long as I had bread to give him; for after satisfying his appetite, he carried off to a hole the fragments he had not devoured. The following day he came again. I treated him with the same generosity, and added even a morsel of meat, which he appeared to find more palatable than the bread. For this time he ate in my presence, which before he had not done. The third day, he became sufficiently familiar to take what I offered him from my fingers.

"I had no idea where his dwelling place was before, but he appeared inclined to change it, to approach nearer to me. He discovered on each side of the window, a hole sufficiently large for his purpose. He examined them both and fixed his abode in the one to the right, which appeared to him the most convenient. On the fifth day he came to sleep there for the first time. The following morning, he paid me a very early visit. I gave him his breakfast. When he had eaten heartily, he left me, and I saw him no more till the next day, when he came according to custom. I saw as soon as he issued from his hole, that he was not alone. I observed a female rat peeping from it, and apparently watching our proceedings. I tried to entice her out, by throwing her bread and meat. She seemed more timid than the other, and for some time refused to take them; however at last she ventured out of the hole by degrees, and seized what I threw half way towards her. Sometimes she quarrelled with the male; and when she proved either stronger or more skillful, ran back to the hole carrying with her what she had taken. When this happened the male rat crept close up to me for consolation; and to revenge himself on the other, ate what I gave him too far from the hole for her to venture to dispute it with him, but always pretending to exhibit his prize as if in bravado. He would then seat himself on his haunches, holding the bread or meat between his fore paws like a monkey, and nibbling it with an air of defiance.

"One day the pride of the female conquered her shyness. She sprang out and seized between her teeth the morsel, which the other was beginning to munch. Neither would let go—and they rolled over each other to the hole, into which the female who was nearest to it, dragged the male after her. This extraordinary spectacle relieved by contrast, the monotony of my ordinary sufferings and recollections. In the battle of the world, it is difficult to conceive the pleasures I derived from such a trifling source, but there are sensitive minds who will readily understand it.

"When my dinner was brought in, I called my companions. The male ran to me directly; the female according to custom, came slowly and timidly, but at length approached close to me, and ventured to take what I offered her from my hand. Some time after, a third appeared, who was much less ceremonious than my first acquaintances. After his second visit, he constituted himself one of the family; and made himself so perfectly at home that he resolved to introduce his comrades. The next day he came accompanied by two others, who in the course of the week brought five more; and thus in less than a fortnight, our family circle consisted of ten large rats and myself. I gave each of them names which they learned to distinguish. When I called them, they came to eat with me from the dish, or off the same plate; but I found this unpleasant, and was forced to find them a dish for themselves, on account of their slovenly habits. They became so tame, that they allowed me to scratch their necks, and appeared pleased when I did so; but they would never permit me to touch them on the back. Sometimes I amused myself with making them play, and joining in their gambols. Occasionally I threw them a piece of meat scalding hot: the most eager ran to seize it, burnt themselves, cried out and left it; while the less greedy who had waited patiently, took it when it was cool, and escaped into a corner where they divided their prize. Sometimes I made them jump up, by holding a piece of bread or meat suspended in the air.

"There was among them, a female whom I had named Rapine Hyrondelle, on account of her agility. I took great pleasure in making her jump; and so confident was she of her superiority over all the others that she never condescended to take what I held up for them. She placed herself in the attitude of a dog pointing at game,—allowed one of the rats to spring at the morsel offered to him, and at the moment when he had seized it, would dart forward, and snatch it out of his mouth. It was unluckly for him if she missed her spring, for then she invariably seized him by the neck with her teeth as sharp as needles: the other yelling with pain, would leave his prey at her mercy, and creep into a corner to cure the wounds she had inflicted on him.

"With these simple and innocent occupations I continued for two years to divert my mind from constantly brooding over my miseries. I found myself in the midst of a family who loved and interested me. In less than a year it amounted to twenty-six. It was certain there were no strangers amongst them. Those who attempted to obtain admittance, were received with hostility, and compelled to fight with the first who encountered them. These battles afforded me a most amusing spectacle. As soon as the two champions placed themselves in position, they appeared at once to estimate their respective force before a blow was struck. The stronger gnashed his teeth while the weaker uttered cries, and retreated slowly without turning his back, as fearful lest his adversary would spring upon and devour him. On the other hand, the stronger never attacks in front, which would expose him to the danger of having his eyes torn out. The method he adopts is ingenious and amusing: he places his head between his fore paws, and rolls head over heels two or three times until the middle of his back comes in contact with his enemy's nose. The latter attempts to fly: the former selects that moment to seize him—he grasps him at once, and sometimes they fight most furiously. If any other rats are present, they remain passive spectators of the combat, and never join two against one."

Digitized by Google

HOW D'YE DO AND GOOD BYE.

One day Good bye met How d'ye do,
Too close to shun saluting;
But soon the rival sisters flew
From kissing to disputing.

"Away!' says How d'e do—'your mein
Appals my cheerful nature;
No name so sad as yours is seen
In sorrow's nomenclature.

"Where'er I give one sunshine hour,
Your cloud comes in to shade it;
Where'er I plant one bosom's flower,
Your mildew drops to fade it.

"Ere How d'ye do has tuned his tongue,
To "Hope's delightful measure,"
Good bye in Friendship's ear has rung
The knell of parting pleasure!

"From sorrows past my chemic skill
Draws smiles of consolation;
While you, from present joys distil
The tears of separation.'

Good bye replied, 'Your statement's true,
And well your case you've pleaded;
But pray, who'd think of How d'ye do,
Unless Good bye preceded?

"Without my prior influence,
Could your's have ever flourished?
And can your hands one flower dispense,
But those my tears have nourish'd?

"How oft—if at the court of Love
Concealment is the fashion—
When How d'ye do has fail'd to move,
Good bye reveals the passion?

"How oft, when Cupid's fires decline,
(As every heart remembers,)
One sight of mine, and only mine,
Revives the dying embers.

"Go bid the timid lover choose,
And I'll resign my charter,
If he for ten kind How d'ye do's,'
One kind good bye would barter.

"From Love and Friendship's kindred source,
We both derive existence;
And they would both lose half their force,
Without our joint assistance.

"Tis well the world our merit knows,
Since time (there's no denying)
One half in How d'e doing goes,
The other in Good byeing.'

ZIITO, THE SORCERER.

Very extraordinary things are related of Ziito, a sorcerer, in the court of Wenceslaus, king of Bohemia, and afterwards Emperor of Germany, in the latter part of the fourteenth century. This is perhaps, all things considered, the most wonderful specimen of magical power any where to be found. It is gravely recorded by Dubravius, Bishop of Olmutz, in his history of Bohemia. It was publicly exhibited on occasion of the marriage of Wenceslaus with Sophia, daughter of the elector Palatine of Bavaria, before a vast assembled multitude.

The father-in-law of the king, well aware of the bridegroom's known predilection for theatrical exhibitions and magical illusions, brought with him to Prague, the capital of Wenceslaus, a whole waggon-load of morrice-dancers and jugglers, who made their appearance among the royal retinue. Meanwhile Ziito, the favourite magician of the king, took his place obscurely among the ordinary spectators. He, however, immediately arrested the attention of the strangers, being remarked for his extraordinary deformity, and a mouth that stretched completely from ear to ear. Ziito was for some time engaged in quietly observing the tricks and sleights that were exhibited. At length, while the chief magician of the elector Palatine, was still busily employed in showing some of the most admired specimens of his art, the Bohemian, indignant at what appeared to him the bungling exhibitions of his brother-artist, came forward, and reproached him with the unskillfulness of his performances. The two professors presently fell into a warm debate. Ziito, provoked at the insolence of his rival, made no more ado but swallowed him whole before the multitude, attired as he was, all but his shoes, which he objected to, because they were dirty. He then retired for a short while to a closet, and presently returned, leading the magician along with him.

Having thus disposed of his rival, Ziito proceeded to exhibit the wonders of his art. He showed himself first in his proper shape, and then in those of different persons successively, with countenances and a stature totally dissimilar to his own; at one time splendidly attired in robes of purple and silk, and then in a twinkling of an eye in coarse linen and a clownish coat of frize. He would proceed along the field with a smooth and undulating motion without changing the posture of a limb, for all the world as if he were carried along in a ship. He would keep pace with the king's chariot, in a car drawn by barn-door fowls. He also amused the king's guests as they sat at table, by causing, when they stretched out their hands to the different dishes, sometimes their hands to turn into the cloven feet of an ox, and at other times into the hoofs of a horse. He would clap on them the antlers of a deer, so that, when they put their heads out at a window to see some sight that was going by, they could by no means draw them back again; while he in the mean time feasted on the savoury cates that had been spread before them, at his leisure.

At one time he pretended to be in want of money, and to task his wits to devise the means to procure it. On such an occasion he took up a handful of grains of corn, and presently gave them the form and appearance of thirty hogs, well-fatted for the market. He drove these hogs to the residence of one Michæl, a rich dealer, but who was remarkable for being penurious and thrifty in his bargains. He offered them to Michæl for whatever price he should judge reasonable. The bargain was presently struck, Ziito at the same time warning the purchaser, that he should on no account drive them to the river to drink. Michæl, however, paid no attention to this advice; and the hogs no sooner arrived at the river, than they turned into grains of corn as before. The dealer, greatly enraged at this trick, sought high and low for the seller, that he might be revenged on him. At length he found him in a vintner's shop seemingly in a gloomy and absent frame of mind, reposing himself, with his legs stretched out on a form. The dealer called out to him, but he seemed not to hear. Finally he seized Ziito by one foot, plucking at it with all his might. The foot came away with the leg and thigh; and Ziito screamed out apparently in great agony. He seized Michael by the nape of the neck, and dragged him before a judge. Here the two set up their seperate complaints, Michael for the fraud that had been committed on him, and Ziito for the irreparable injury he had suffered in his person. From this adventure came the proverb, frequently used in the days of the historian, speaking of a person who had made an improvident bargain. "He has made just such a purchase as Michael did with his hogs."

Digitized by Google

Washington's Rules.

WASHINGTON lived by rule. Some of his rules of action he has left behind him in writing; they are published in Mr. Sparks' collection of his papers. It is interesting to know by what rules so perfect a character was formed; we subjoin a few.

Associate yourself with men of [illegible]ty if you esteem your own reputation, for it [illegible] to be alone than in bad company.

Let your conversation be without malice or envy, for it is a sign of a tractable and commendable nature, and in all causes of passion admit reason to govern.

Utter not base and frivolous things amongst grown and learned men; nor very difficult questions or subjects among the ignorant, nor things hard to be believed.

Speak not of doleful things in time of mirth, nor at the table; speak not of melancholy things, as death and wounds, and if others mention them, change, if you can, the discourse. Tell not your dreams but to your intimate friends.

Break not a jest where none take pleasure in mirth. Laugh not aloud nor at all without occasion. Deride no man's misfortune, though there seem to be some cause.

Speak not injurious words, neither in jest or earnest. Scoff at none, although they give occasion.

Be not forward, but friendly and courteous; the first to salute, hear, and answer, and be not pensive when it is a time to converse.

Detract not from others, but neither be excessive in commending.

If two contend together, take not part of either unconstrained; and be not obstinate in your opinion; in things indifferent be of the major side.

Reprehend not the imperfections of others, for that belongs to parents, masters and superiors.

Gaze not on the marks of blemishes of others, and ask not how they came.

What you may speak in secret to your friend, deliver not before others.

When another speaks, be attentive yourself and disturb not the audience. If any hesitate in his words, help him not, nor prompt without being desired; interrupt him not nor answer him till his speech be ended.

Make no comparisons; and if any of the company be commended for any brave act of virtue, commend not another for the same.

Be not apt to relate news; if you do not know the truth thereof. In discouraing of things you have heard, name not your author always. A secret discover not.

Undertake not what you cannot perform; but be careful to keep your promise.

When your superiors talk to any body, hear them, nor neither speak nor laugh.

In dispute be not so desirous to overcome as not to give liberty to each one to deliver his opinion, and submit to the judgment of the major part, especially if they are judges of the dispute.

SPEAK NO EVIL OF THE ABSENT FOR IT IS UNJUST.

Make no show of taking great delight in your victuals, feed not with greediness, cut your bread with a knife, lean not on the table, neither find fault with what you eat.

Be not angry at table whatever happens, and if you have reason to be so, show it not, put on a cheerful countenance, especially if there be strangers, for good humour makes one dish a feast.

Set not yourself at the upper end of the table, but if it be your due, or the master of the house will have it so contend not lest you should trouble the company.

When you speak of God or his attributes, let it be seriously in reference and honor, and obey your natural parents although they be poor.

Let your recreations be manful not sinful.

Labor to keep alive in your breast that little spark of celestial fire called conscience.

WASHING DAY.

Monday comes! and with it brings,
(What the damsels all will say,
As they tie their apron strings,)
"This is the dreaded Washing Day."

Sunday night its woes begin—
Lovers late then must not stay;
Girls will hint, "It is a sin,
And to-morrow's Washing Day."

Up at day-light then they leap—
Soiled clothes together lay—
Sadly view the monstrous heap—
Work enough for Washing Day.

Now around the tubs they stand,
Like the graces in array;
Soap and dipper close at hand—
Useful things on Washing Day.

Short-sleeved gowns, and bosom bare,
They their beauteous forms display—
Unadorn'd—more winning fair—
(Choose a wife on Washing Day.)

If by chance acquaintance knocks,
Sally cries, "Send all away;
Looking thus, I'd Satan shock—
Not at home a Washing Day."

Should one heedless through them go,
Of the suds he gets a spray,
"There's no passing here below—
Learn the rules of Washing Day."

Then at noon the table's spread—
Eat or famish then you may—
Dish of potluck soon is made,
But dainties none on Washing Day.

COLERIDGE'S EPITAPH.—Mr. Coleridge wrote a month or two ago his own humble and affectionate epitaph:

Stop, Christian passer-by! Stop, child of God,
And read with gentle breast. Beneath this sod
A poet lies, or that which once seemed he—
O, lift a thought in prayer for S. T. C.!
That he who many a year with toil of breath
Found death in life, may here find life in death!
Mercy for praise—to be forgiven for fame
He asked, and hoped through CHRIST. Do thou the same.—Quarterly Review.

Digitized by Google

A CHAPTER ON FLOGGING.

About eighteen months subsequently, I was appointed one of his majesty's officers, with the very important rank of midshipman. I was now destined to witness my greatest abomination in all its horrors. I had not been many days on board before I heard a hollow sound reverberating round the frigate's decks, and which seemed to bring a shade of gloom over all the faces arround me. Again the words were repeated, "All hands, a-hoy!" I eagerly inquired the meaning of this mystery, and was answered by a lad about sixteen years old, "It is all hands to punishment, my boy; you are going to see a man flogged."

The idea of a man being flogged at all, or under any possible circumstance, had never before entered my brain. I had as yet no notion that such a degree of brutality could exist; I had indeed known that boys were flogged, but how they could horse a man was to me a mystery. My reflections were broken in upon by observing all my mess-mates busily engaged in putting on their cocked-hats, swords, dirks, &c. And as this was the first time I had sported my new dirk, except in play, when I put it on at home to surprise my sister, and to dazzle the brightest eyes in the world, whose owner's name was Caroline, I felt very strange and mingled sensations as I strutted forth on the quarter-deck. The marines were drawn out on the larboard side of the deck, with their bayonets fixed, and their officer with his sword drawn, resting against his shoulder. On the main-deck the seamen had all assembled in a dense crowd about the hatchway, and the said hatchway was ornamented with several gratings fixed up on one end, evidently for some purpose, which I had never yet seen accomplished. The officers in their full uniforms, with swords and cocked hats, were pacing the deck in great numbers: but all was still and solemn silence. At length the captain, a stern, but yet good-looking man came forth from his cabin; the marines carrying their arms at the first appearance of his head above the ladder, which led from the cabin-door to the quarter-deck. The first lieutenant, taking off his hat, approached the captain, and reported that "all was ready."

As the captain came up to the gangway he removed his hat; which was followed by all the men and officers becoming uncovered; and, then, taking from his pocket a printed copy of the articles of war, he read aloud a few lines, which denounced the judgment of a court-martial on any person who should be guilty of some particular offence, the nature of which I did not understand. This done, he ordered Edward Williams to strip; adding, "You have been guilty of neglect of duty, sir, in not laying in on the foretop-sail yard, when the first lieutenant ordered you; and I will give you a d—d good flogging." By this time the poor fellow had taken off his jacket and shirt, which was thrown over his shoulder by the master-at-arms, while two quarter-masters lashed the poor fellow's elbows to the gratings, so that he could not stir beyond an inch or two either way. It was in vain that he begged and besought the captain and first lieutenant to forgive him; protesting that he did not hear himself called, in consequence of having had a bad cold, which rendered him almost deaf. His entreaties were unheeded; and as the words, "Boat-swain's mate, give him a dozen," a tall, strong fellow came forward with a cat-o-nine-tails, and having taken off his own jacket, and carefully measured his distance, so as to be able to strike with the full swing of his arm, he fling the tails of the cat round his head, and with all the energy of his body, brought them down upon the fair, white plump back of poor Williams. A sudden jerk of the poor fellow almost tore the gratings away from their position; he gave a scream of agony, and again begged the captain, for the sake of Jesus Christ, to let him off. I was horror struck on seeing nine large welts, as big as my fingers, raised on his back, spreading from his shoulder blades nearly to his loins; but my feelings were doomed to be still more harrassed. For as soon as the tall boatswain's mate had completed the task of running his fingers through the cords to clear them, and prevent the change of a single lash being spared the wretched sufferer, he again flung them round his head to repeat the blow. Another slashing sound upon the naked flesh, another shriek and struggle to get free succeeded,—and then another and another, till the compliment of twelve agonizing lashes were complete. The back was, by this time, nearly covered with deep red gashes; the skin roughed up and curled in many parts, as it does when a violent blow on the skin causes an extensive abrasion. The poor man looked up with an imploring eye towards the first lieutenant, and groaned out, "Indeed, sir, as I hope to be saved, I did not hear you call me." The only reply was, on the part of the captain, who gave the word, "another, boatswain's mate!" "Oh, God, sir, have mercy on me." "Boatswain's mate, go on; and mind you do your duty!"

The effect of one hundred and eight cuts upon his back had rendered it a fearful sight, but when these had been repeated with all the vigour of a fresh and untried arm, the poor fellow exhibited a sad spectacle. The dark red of the wounds had assumed a livid purple, the flesh stood up in ridges, and the blood trickled here and there like the breaking out of an old wound. The pipes of the boatswain and his mates now sounded, and they called "all hands up anchor!" The gratings were quickly removed, and of all the human beings who had witnessed the cruel torture on the body of poor Edward Williams, not one seemed in the least degree affected. All was bustle and activity and apparent merriment as they went to work to prepare for quitting old England. As for myself I was sad enough, and heartily wished that I had joined the camp of the gypsies, instead of the service of his majesty. A fair wind, however, compelled us again to anchor; and before we set sail for the Mediterranean, which we did in about a week after flogging, our captain exchanged into another ship, and we were joined by a very brave and excellent officer, who abominated flogging. For four years I served under his orders, and witnessed no more of the inhuman practice. The men were allowed to go on shore at Malta and other places, sometimes sixty or seventy at a time; and so kindly were they treated, that there was only one instance of desertion during all that period. The captain made a point of visiting the whole crew while at dinner, to see himself that they had every thing they required to make them comfortable. This he did every day. The sick were always fed from his own table. The result of this was that our ship was the smartest frigate on the station, and fought the most decidedly glorious action which ever graced the annals of the English navy.

WEDDING RINGS.—The singular custom of wearing wedding rings, appears to have taken its rise among the Romans. Before the celebration of their nuptials, there was a meeting of friends at the house of the lady's father, to settle the articles of the marriage contract, when it was agreed that the dowry should be paid down on the wedding day, or soon after. On this occasion there was commonly a feast, at the conclusion of which, the man gave to the woman a ring as a pledge, which she put on the fourth finger of her left hand, because it was believed that a nerve reached from thence to the heart, and a day was then fixed for the marriage.

In marriage, prefer the person before wealth, virtue before beauty, and the mind before the body; then you have a wife, a friend and a companion.

Digitized by Google

MARRIAGE AIRS.

By E. Enown, Esq.

Andantino.

Digitized by Google

2.

I'll go to operas, balls and plays,
Or where I will, I won't be check'd;
But keep it up both nights and days,
Until he treats me with respect:
And, if he romps with——I know who,
Perhaps he'll meet with tit for tat;
For I can show, and will so too,
That I can beat him, Sirs, at that.

3.

But this I vow, if he'll be good,
And sometimes let me have my will,
(Young wives, you know, most surely should,) I'll duly every right fulfil;
And never—O, no, never rove,
But stay at home with him and chat—
And prove by kindest deeds of love,
That I can beat him, Sirs, at that.

Digitized by Google

WIT AND SENTIMENT.

LOVE.—At three years, we love our mothers; at six, our fathers; at ten, holidays; at sixteen, dress; at twenty, our sweethearts; at twenty-five, our wives; at forty, our children; at sixty, ourselves.

A SAILOR'S WEDDING.—A tar just returned from sea met one of his female acquaintances. He was so overjoyed that he determined to marry her; but at the altar the parson demurred, as there was not cash enough between them to pay the fees: upon which Jack offered a few shillings, saying, "never mind, brother, marry us as far as it will go."

THE WAY TO TRY METAL.—Mr. Bagenal provoked Harvey to challenge him. They met. Harvey fired and missed. "You young rascal," cried Bagenal, "do you know that you had like to killed your godfather? Go back to Dunlickry, you dog, and have a good breakfast got ready for us. I only wanted to see if you were stout."

WITTY REMARK.—A young clergyman, who possessed every requisite for the pulpit but a good voice, having occasion to preach a probation sermon for a lectureship, a friend congratulated him, as he descended from the pulpit, observing that "he would certainly carry the election: he had nobody's voice against him but his own."

SUICIDE.—Dr. Johnson, having expressed a decided opinion against suicide, Mr. Boswell said, "suppose a man is absolutely sure, that if he lives a few days longer, he shall be detected in a fraud, the consequence of which would be, utter disgrace and expulsion from society." 'Then,' said Johnson, let him go to some place where he is not known; don't let him go to the devil, where he is known."

PRECEDENCY.—Two little girls of the city of Norwich, one the daughter of a wealthy brewer, the other the daughter of a gentleman of small fortune, disputing for precedency,—"You are to consider, miss," said the brewer's daughter, "that my papa keeps a coach." "Very true, miss," said the other, "and you are to consider that he likewise keeps a dray."

George Stevens used to relate a story of a man that married a woman so much taller than himself, that if he wished to salute her, he was obliged to climb upon a table. "This woman," added George, "if her husband was ever out of humor and complained, would look down as if from a two story window, and ask, "Who it was that kept grumbling there below?"

A PUBLIC DANGER.—A glutton of a fellow was dining at a hotel, who, in the course of the "battle of knives and forks," accidentally cut his mouth, which was observed by a Yankee joker, sitting near by, who bawled out, "I say, friend, don't make that are hole in your countenance any larger for God's sake, for the rest on us will starve to death."

Small Game.—A Mr. Turner, well known in Vermont for his witty sayings at the bar, was one day pleading a cause before Chief Justice Tyler, when he made use of some keen but playful satire, which was evidently aimed at the bench. The Judge winced a little and endeavored to call the speaker to order by saying, "None of your small shots here, Mr. Turner."

"May it please your honor," replied the advocate, "we always proportion our shot to the nature of our game."

French Politeness.—The following compliment was lately paid by a Parisian dentist to a lady. He had made several ineffectual attempts to draw out her decayed tooth, and finding at last that he must give it up, he apologized by saying—"The fact is, madam, it is impossible for anything bad to come out of your mouth."

SINGULAR GOOD LUCK.—An Irishman at Limerick, named Tuomy, on his way down to the ship James, for America, which was recently lost, met a widow, who, inquiring where he was going, told him he might perhaps do better at home." He took the hint, and forthwith courted and married her, forfeiting his passage money. What is singular, two men are now in jail for an attempted abduction of the same woman. We should call this a curious concatenation of romantic incidents.

ASTONISHING DEFICIENCY.—A man once wished to buy a good 'coon dog, for which he would pay a liberal price. He was soon offered one, which the owner said was first rate—excellent. The price was paid, and on trial the purchaser found that the dog would neither hunt 'coons nor any thing else. Returning to the seller, he accused him of deception. "Why, aint he a good dog for 'coons?" said the seller. "No, not worth a cent." "Well, that beats all natur," said the seller, "I tried the 'tarnal critter for every thing else, and he would do no good, so I thought he must be good for 'coons."

Worse than Wooden Nutmegs.—We have (says the North Carolina Watchman) in our office a specimen of Yankee Soap, the constituent of which is yellow clay; it looks well—smells well, but will not wash at all—at least, it washes any other way than clean.

Simile Matrimonial.—The following picture of matrimonial felicity is from the "Kings Own." It is one of the best comparisons we have seen; ingenious and just, as those who have studied scenes of domestic life in families, where the principal parties were "paired not matched," can testify:

"Mr. and Mrs. Rainscourt were joined, but they were not one. Like many others in this world of error the marriage might be typified by a vial of which one half has been filled with oil, and the other with water, having a cork in its mouth, which confined them, and forced them to remain in contact, although they refused to unite."

HOW TO SELL NEWSPAPERS.—A small lad, who sells penny papers near the Fulton Ferry, has an excellent faculty—(according to the advice of St. Paul) of making himself "all things to all men, that he may gain some"—pennies.

1st Stranger.—Is that a Whig paper, boy?

Boy.—Yes, sir—it's Whig to the backbone.

1st Stranger.—Well, I'll take it then.

Boy.—Thank you, sir.

2d Stranger.—Have you got a Jackson paper there, my son?

Boy.—Yes, sir—it's whole hog Jackson.

2d Stranger.—Give me two, then.

Boy.—Thank you twice, sir.

3d Stranger.—Is that a political paper you've got there?

Boy.—O no, sir,—it don't have nothing to say to politics.

3d Stranger.—That's the paper for me then.

The strangers get aboard of the boat; and the Jackson, the anti-Jackson, and neutral, find their papers to be all one and the same—a no-party paper. So much for a seven year old lad's dexterity in doing business.

Digitized by Google

A Marriage Certificate.—An Irish soldier once waited upon his commanding officer, with what he termed a very serious complaint. 'Another man,' he said, 'upbraided him that he was not married to his own wife, whom he accused of being no better than she should be, and called her many names besides, which he would be ashamed to mention to his honor.' 'Well my good fellow,' answered the officer, 'have you any proof that you are legally married?' 'Faith, your honor, I have the best proof in the world.' Here the soldier took off his hat, and exhibited a cut skull, saying, 'Does your honor think I'd be after taking the same abuse from any body but a wife.'

Origin of "Walking the Plank."—Plutarch says—"But the most contemptuous circumstance of all was, that when they (the Cilician pirates) had taken a prisoner, and he cried out that he was a Roman, and told them his name, they pretended to be struck with terror, smote their thighs, and fell upon their knees to ask pardon;—the poor man seeing them thus humble themselves before him, thought them in earnest, and said he would forgive them, for some were so officious as to put on his shoes, and others to help him on with his gown, that his quality might be no more mistaken: When they had caused on this farce, and enjoyed it for some time, they let a ladder down into the sea, and bade him go in peace; if he refused to do so, they pushed him off the deck and drowned him."

Original Anecdote.—At a late Temperance convention in one of our towns, the hotels being somewhat crowded, a couple of gentlemen called at a private dwelling to get accommodated for the night. The man of the house coming in soon after they had departed, inquired of his active and bustling helpmate the cause of so much unusual preparation and bustle. 'Why, la,' replied she, don't you think we're going to have a couple of total absent alligators here to supper, and ——' 'Alligators!' exclaimed the old man, 'why you mean delegates, don't you?' 'O, yes, 'tis delegates,' replied she, 'but no matter—it all magnifies the same meaning, you know.'—Bulletin.

Charming a Snake.—In the morning the 3d of December we awoke early, when I was much surprised by my friend, Lieut. Baillie, calling out, "A snake! a snake! look at the snake!" We all stared at him, lying in his hammock, and, to our astonishment, beheld a monstrous serpent twisted round the rope which supported his hammock, with his head some distance above my friend's darting out his forked tongue, and examining him as he lay stretched below. "Lie still," cried the fiscal, "he wont hurt you;" and calling in two or three of the natives, he pointed it out to them. One of these men advancing towards it caught its eye with his own; the animal now appeared to move its whole body with fear or pleasure. The native stepped backwards, without turning the sight of his eye from the fierce orbit of his enemy; and, as he kept backing, the snake, with his head steadily advancing, gradually uncoiled his body from the rope round which it was twined. At length its whole body, trailing on the ground moved slowly along after this coloured man—eye fixed upon eye—until a youth, making a dash from behind a bush, in an instant flattened the head of this dangerous monster with one blow of his club; and although the body still undulated like the waves of the sea, it was now perfectly harmless, not being able to seize with its mouth. They immediately hauled him up to the branch of a tree, and, as our cooks in Europe serve an eel, they skinned him whilst the poor animal was writhing in the agonies of pain. This snake was called the Labare, and measured 19 ft. and a half in length.—Colonel St. Clair's Residence in the West Indies.

A Lucky Dream.—A correspondent of the United States' Gazette gives the following curious account of the manner in which the mode of making round shot was originally discovered. We believe it will be new to many of our readers:—My father was a plumber in this city, and for a long time could think of nothing but how to make round shot. Round shot was the burthen of the night as well as the day. One night he was awakened by a blow in the back from my mother, who exclaimed, I have found out how to make round shot. I dreamed I was going in to a shop to buy the child (myself) a hat, when, on hearing a hissing noise proceed from an inner room, I was informed that they were making round shot; on going in, I looked up, and saw a man pouring melted lead through a sieve at the top of the building, which fell into a tub of water on the floor, and on taking some of the shot in my hand, I found they were perfectly round! My father exclaimed in ecstasy, "You have found it out." Immediately he set the melting-pot to work, and on pouring some of the lead from the top of the stairs he found the shot much rounder than any which he had before made. At daylight he poured some from the top of the leaning tower in the city, succeeding much better; and on pouring some from the shaft of the mine he found that he had obtained "round shot."

The fancy of the lower Irish for a fight is illustrated in the following not too strongly coloured passage in Curry's just published "Tales of Ireland":—"Blur-an' agurs!" exclaimed Neal (a pugnacious tailor) one day when half tipsy at the fair, "am I never to get a bit of fightin! Is there no cowardly spalpeen to stand afore Neal Malone? Be this an' be that I'm bluemould-ed for want of a batin! I'm disgracin' my relations by the life I'm ladin'! Will none o'yees fight me either for love, money, or whisky—frind or inimy, an' bad luck to yees? I don't care a trunecn which, only out of pure frindship, let us have a morsel of a rale kick-up 'tany rate. Frind or inimy, I say again, if you regard me; sure that makes no differ, only let us have the fight."

A certain gentleman of the law, in the State of N. York, built him an office in the form of a hexagon, or six square. The novelty of the structure attracted the attention of some Irishmen who were passing by; they made a full stop and viewed the building very critically; the lawyer somewhat disgusted at their curiosity, lifted up the window, put his head out, and addressed them: "What do you stand there for like a pack of saucy blockheads, gazing at my office? do you take it to be a church?" One of them replied: "Why indeed I was thinking so, till I saw the devil put his head out of the window."

Refusing a Stump.—A clergyman, a while since in speaking of the future condition of his hearers, according as their lives should happen to be pure or otherwise, made the usual division of them into sheep and goats. He dwelt upon the condition of each. He especially enlarged upon the miseries of the latter, and upon the presumptuous conduct of those whose sins were likely in the end to place them in that division; and then exclaimed, "Who dare be a goat?"

"I dare," roared a sailor, from the gallery.

"How!" said the preacher in astonishment—"you dare to—"

"Ay, master," interrupted the sailor, "'cause you see I won't take a stump from any body.

A country schoolmaster having been employed a few days ago to draw up a petition to the chief magistrate of the borough, whose circumference could not be less than five or six feet in girth, headed it, by mistake, thus—"To the More and boddy corpulent."

Digitized by Google

A Country Ball on the Almack's Plan.

BY HAYNES BAYLY.

Oh! joy to her who first began
A country Ball on the Almack's plan!
Hogsnorton's Queen she walks erect,
The Ball exclusive and select;—
Four Ladies Patronesses sit
From morn to night arranging it;
And when you hear the names of all,
You'll guess the merits of the ball.
Plebeian persons they reject,
Hogsnorton balls are so select!

The Squire's own lady, Mistress Pearl,
Her sister (quite a stylish girl),
And then the wife of Mr. Flaw,
(Churchwarden and a man of law,)
And Mistress Pitts, the Doctor's bride, Related on the mother's side
To Mr. Biggs, (who was, you know, Lord Mayor of London long ago!)
By these, all upstart claims are check'd,
Hogsnorton balls are so select!

They've quite excluded Mr. Squills,
Who makes the antibilious pills;
Not 'cause he makes 'em, but they say
He sells 'em in a retail way;
But Mr. Squills declares his wife
Has seen a deal of stylish life,
And votes Hogsnorton people low,
So if she could, she wouldn't go—
A strange remark, when you reflect
Hogsnorton balls are so select!

And then you know the rich Mr. Flinn,
The rich old Mercer, can't get in;
And Sweet the Grocer has applied!
But Sweet the Grocer was denied;
And both appear to think it hard
That Slush the Brewer has a card;
And say, "Why should a brewer be
One bit more fit for hops than we?"
But Slush of course is quite correct,
Hogsnorton balls are so select!

Of course all those they won't admit,
Discuss the ball, and censure it;
And strange opinions they express
About each Lady Patroness;
Says Mrs. Flinn to Mrs. Sweet,
"I wash my hands of the elite;"
Says Mrs. Sweet to Mrs. Flinn,
"For all the world I'd not go in!"
Here envious feelings we detect,
Hogsnorton balls are so select!

Says Mrs. Squills, "There's Mrs. Pearl,
You'd think her father was an Earl!
So high and mighty! bless your heart,
I recollect her much less smart,
Before she married; and I knew
That people said ('tis entre nous)
She was a leetle indiscreet!
So much, my dear, for the elite!
"Dear me! don't say she's incorrect,
Hogsnorton balls are so select."

Woe, woe to her who first began
A country ball on the Almack's plan!
Grim war is raging in the town,
The men are raving up and down;
And what may lead to worse mishaps,
The ladies all are pulling caps;
Indeed we hear, from one and all,
As much of bullets as the ball!
Why was Hogsnorton's comfort wreak'd?
Because her balls were so select.

[From the Cincinnati Journal.]

THE DRUNKARD AND HIS BOTTLE.

Sober. Touch thee! No. Viper of vengeance!
I'll break thy head against the wall.
Did you not promise?—ay—
To make me strong as Sampson—
And rich—rich as Croesus—
(I'll wring thy villainous neck,)
And wise—wise as Solomon,
And happier than the happiest!

But instead of this—villain!
You've stript me of my locks—
Left my pocket empty as a cuckoo's nest
In March; fooled me out of my senses;
Made me ragged—made me wretched,
And then laid me in a ditch!

Touch thee! sure as there's vengeance
In this fist, I'll scatter the moon
With thy broken skull!

But—one embrace before thou die;
(tasting)
'Tis best to pardon friendship.

Feeling good Ah! thou hast some virtues yet:
I always thought 'twas best
To give the devil his due:
And—(tasting) though devil thou art,

Feeling better Thou hast a pleasant face—
A sparkling eye—a ruby lip—
A blushing cheek—and thy breath—
(tasting)
'Tis swe-e-ter than the
Bre-e-ess that ev-er gambol
Till the break of day,
A-a-mong the beds of ros-es.

Feeling best My ho-honey (tasting) thou shalt not die.
I'll stand by thee, day and night,
And fi-ight like He (hic) cu-les.
I'll tea-e-each the parson (hic) a little wisdom.
I'll preach [hic] tem-per-ance too.
I'll live on mil- [hic] k and 'oney.
And—[falling] be the ha-hap-pi-est man on earth. [hic]

MY BREAKFAST.

Good Cook, all ceremony waive,
And, ere I'm famished, let me have,
What 'bove all other things, I crave,
My Breakfast.

Two dozen eggs, and some smoked fish,
Of butter'd toast a mod'rate dish,
And some good tea is all I wish
For Breakfast.

Since I'm so mod'rate then, make haste,
Else, honest cook, you'll be disgraced;
For really, I long to taste
My Breakfast.

Consider, cook, a day and night
Have passed, since I, half famish'd wight,
Have eat, (sole source of my delight,)
My Breakfast.

'Tis ready, say you? joyful news,
Your pardon, then, my gentle muse,
Spite of your charms I can't but choose
My Breakfast.

Digitized by Google

GENERAL INDEX

TO

ATKINSON'S CASKET,

FOR 1834.

EMBELLISHMENTS.

A Vignette Title Page for the Volume.

January No.—Fashions, (coloured) -French House of Peers—Harbour and Custom-house of Dublin, &c.

February.—Medallion of Napoleon and Maria Louisa—The Pantheon at Rome—City of Oporto, Portugal, &c.

March.—The Dead Soldier—Views of Plinia na, Italy—and the Birth-place of Shakspeare.

April.—Portrait of Lord Byron—Gallery of Algaby—Remains of the Temple of Concord, Rome, &c.

May.—Views of the Girard College—Pulpit Rocks—Viaduct across the Sankey Valley—Easter Custom, Bamboo, &c.

June—The Fairy Isle, (engraved on Steel)—York Minster, (Eng.)—Rock of Gibraltar, &c.

July—The Lute, (a Steel engraving)—Views of the Colosseum at Rome, Stirling Castle, &c.

August.—Portrait of Thomas Jefferson—Views of St. Sophia, Constantinople; the Rialto, Venice; Gate of Luxor, Thebes, &c.

September.—Third Street Hall, Philadelphia; Leaning Tower of Pisa—St. Paul's Church, New York, &c.

October.—Childhood, (a Steel Plate)—Views of Cumberland Terrace, London; Allentown, Pennsylvania, &c.

November.—Portrait of Ali Bey, the Traveller—Views of the St. Mark's Place, Venice, and the Thames, at London.

December.—The Escape, a beautiful Engraving on Steel—Views of the Church of St. Martin's, Cologne, and of the Arch of Titus, Rome.

CONTENTS.

A

Apparitions, - - 24
Argalya, a Tale, - 58
Affections of the Moors, 91
Allan McTavish, - 146
Abyssinian Zoology, - 150
Aurae Sententiae, - 162
Anger, - - - 168
Adventurous Boy, - 184
American Painters, - 224
Aunts, my two, - - 273
Allentown, Penn.—(view) 457
Album, the—by Miss Leslie, 459
Ali Bey, the Traveller—with a Portrait, - 481
Ambition—by a Lady, - 551
Arch of Titus, Rome, the with an engraving, - 553
Accomplishments, - 567

B

Brothers, the, - - 2
Braddock, Sketches of Gen. 57
Bachelor, the Last, - 85
Birth-place of Shakspeare, with a view, - - 121
Birth of Christ, - - 133
Byron, Lord—(portrait) - 145
Ball on board Frigate U. S. 155
Byron, on the Immortality of the Soul, - - 216
Buck-Horn Tavern—a Scene in the West. - 229
Bamboo, the—engraving, 235
Baronet's Bride, from the Diary of a late Physician, 242
Battle of Nickajack, - 330
Burying alive, - - 379
Beggar, the - - 421
Boone, Colonel, the Backwoodsman, - - 494

Digitized by Google

Battle of Monmouth, - 471
Baptism of Fire, - - 507
Beckford's Italy, - 555

C

Chasseur Ant of the West Indies, - - - 23
Chase, the—a tale, - 26
Carey, Autobiography of, 30, 75, 118, 173, 217, 265
Courage and Fidelity of a dog, - - - 168
Counsellor Costello, - 177
Childhood, - - 186
Colosseum at Rome (view) 325
Cyrus Lindsay and Ella Moore, by Mark Bancroft, 341
Coward, a - - 359
Cumberland Terrace, with a view, - - - 457
Cruise of the Midge, - 522
Cruelty to Brute Creatures, 549
Church of St. Martin, Cologne, with an engraving, 553
Connubialities, - - 566

D

Dublin Harbour and Custom-house, - - 25
Dick Doleful, - - 35
Death of Cicero, - 165
Drop Scene, the, - 311
Death of Chastelar, - 329
Dreams, Prophetic Power of - - - 414
Dangerous Situation, - 479
Diamond Rock, the, - 545
Duel, my First, - - 561

E

Earthquake at Lisbon, - 42
Electricity, - - 103
Early Poetry, - - 215
Easter Custom, - - 227
English Belles-Lettres, - 232
Extraordinary Murder, - 444
Escape, an—engraving, - 529

F

Fashions—(with col. eng.) 1
French House of Peers, 25
French Privateer, the - 82
Fables of the Ancients, - 167
Fight of Hell Kettle, - 178
Family Devotion, - 215
Females, on Education of, 505
Flogging, a Chapter on, - 571

G

Gold Watch, the - - 91
Gambling, - - 98
Gallery of Algaby (Simplon)—with a view, - 169
Girard College—(view,) 193
Guillotine, Escape from the 271
Gibraltar, Rock of—(view) 278
Gold, the Bag of - - 281
Graves, the Unknown, - 290
German Pie, the - 466
Grateful Turk, the, 563

H

Honour and Integrity, - 214
Human Nature and Knowledge, Conversation on, 221
Haydn, Biog. Sketch of, 225
Husband, Requisites for a, 235
Hope, - - - 356
Hindoo Temple, - - 455
Human Life, - - 473
Human Glory, Reflections on, - - - 558

I

Insanity, - - - 153
Importance of Religion to Society, - - - 324
Intemperate, the - - 445
Isabel L——, - - 499

J

Jefferson, Biog. Sketch of, 337
Jacob Faithful, - - 369
Julia Gray, by Mark Bancroft, - - - 386
Jugglers, - - - 426

K

Kean, Anecdote of, - 42
Kentucky Sports, - 130
Klaus, Peter, German tale, 185

L

Legend of Buck Island, - 4
Lettre-de-Cachet, the, - 79
Lunatic, the—a prize tale, 112
Lawrence, James, - 136
Love, Luck and Horsemanship, - - - 195
Laura Lovel, - - 199
Love and Prudence, - 313
Lion Hunting in South Africa, - - - 469
Leaning Tower of Pisa—with a view, - - 309
London and River Thames, with a view, - - 517

M

Marshall (Chief Justice) 42
Miscellaneous Extracts, 43
Marriages in Abyssinia, 87
Mohammed, Death of 166
Mexican Life, a Tale of, 170
Miseries of a new Member, 181
Matrimony, - - 215
More, Hannah, - - 216
Munchausen, - - 216
Mark Lee's Narrative, by Mark Bancroft, - 301
Miniature, the - - 351
Mosque of Saint Sophia, Constantinople—(view) 373
Maria Hammond, - 434
Miseries of Artificial Teeth, 451
Murderer's Fate, the, - 469
Misadventures of a Lover, 488
Manners of the Common Rat, on the, - - 568

N

Nelsoniana, - - 37
Napoleon and Maria Louisa, with Medallion Heads, 49
Ney, Marshal, - - 165
Note Book of a deceased Lawyer, - - 295
Notes on Periodicals, - 410
Night-mare, - - 565

O

Oporto, City of—(view) - 73
Old Maids, by Miss Sedgwick, - - - 137
O'Connell, Anecdotes of 226
Old Maid's Early Dream, 530

P

Pantheon at Rome—(view) 73
Politeness, Code of - 88
Pliniana—with a view, - 121
Parting and Return, - 123
Paganini's Fiddle, - 157
Peculiarities of Authors, 198
Pulpit Rocks—with a view, 217
Parrots, Anecdotes of - 228
Petition of the Nerves, - 366
Purgatory, the Soul in, - 422
Passage in the Life of Teddy O'Donohu, - - 493
Paradise of Spring, - 497
Pirate, Adventures with a 538

Q

Queen Easter's Rock, - 105

R

Revenge, an African's, - 38
Receipt to make a Good wife unhappy, - 40
Rejected one, the - 41
Reflections in the Pillory, 152
Reward of Justice, - 280
Religion and Poetry, - 331
Reverses, a Fragment, - 367
Rialto, Venice—with view, 374
Rearing Plants in Glasses, 456
Reminiscences, - - 474
Ruse de Guerre, - - 479
Rosalie Vane, - - 483
Roulette, - - 536
Reminiscences of the West, 541

S

Scott, Marriage of Sir Walter, - - - - 89
Sheridan, - - - 226
Sexagenarian, Sketch of a, 267
Singular Providential Escape, - - - 275
Stonington, Bombardment of, - - - 293
Stair, Story of the Countess of, - - - 300
Stirling Castle, Scotland, with a view, - - 395
Soiree at Lady N's, - 396
Sicilian Facts, - - 406
St. Paul's Church, New York—with a view, - 409
Schwein-General, the, - 419
Soiree Musicale, - 510
St. Mark's Place, Venice, with a view, - - 517

Digitized by Google

Sister's Love and Courage, 520
Siamese Twins, the, - 547

T

Travels of Captain Hall, 100
Temple of Concord, (view) 169
Temple of Butterflies, with a view, - - - 168
Tale of Blood, - - 323
Thebes—with engraving, 367
Trout Fishing, - - 377
Third Street Hall—(view) 385
Tale of Error—prize tale, 438
Thompson, the Poet, - 472
The Tigers' Cave, - 502

U

Unpublished Letters of Robert Burns, - - 156 Universe, and its Author, 160

V

Venitian Conspiracy, 127
Viaduct across the Sankey Valley, - - 217
Voyage on the Upper Mississippi, - - 371
Virginia, a Scene in, - 426

W

Wit and Sentiment, 46, 94, 142 190, 238, 286, 334, 386, 430, 478, 526, 574
Wishes, the three, - - 50
Washington, - - 186
Warrior, the - - 215
Waterloo, - - 276
Widow, the - - 375
West, the Great—by Mark Bancroft, - - 397
Washington's Rules of Action, - - - 570

Y

York Minster, with a view, 277

Z

Ziito, the Sorcerer, - 569

POETRY.

A

Adam, the Fall of, - 232
Album, Lines for a Lady's, 450
Absence, Days of, - 468

B

Banian Tree, - - 2
Byron's Prayer, - 97
Beauty, how evanescent, 355
Brothers, the, - - 358
Byron, Sketch of, - 396
Better Land, - - 422
Blessed Land, the, - 437
Birth, Land of my, - 455
Billet-doux, - - 480
Breakfast, my, - - 567

C

Clyde and Tweed, - 225
Christ in the Tempest, - 313
Conjectures, - - 432
Country Ball, on the Almack's Plan, - 567

D

Death of Sir Walter Scott, 104
Death of the Sagamore, - 126
Deep Blue Sea, - - 167
Deluge, the, - - 283
Death of La Fayette, - 355
Drum, the Muffled one, - 375
Death, - - - 468
Departed, the, - - 472
Dew-Drops, the Prophetic, 516
Degrees of Drunkenness, 528
Drunkard and his Bottle, 567

E

Earth's Weary ones, - 99

F

Friendship, Art of Cultivating, - - - 30
Field Flowers, - - 111
Fair Querist, - - 142
Flood, the, - - 218
Fate of Thomas Brown, - 240
Fairy Isle, - - 241
Features, the - - 336
Flower, the Brightest, - 363
Farewell to Home, - 458
Flowers, - - 507
Father's Lament for his First-Born, a, - - 535

G

Grimes, Miss Polly, - 96
Grave, the Seaman's - 150
Goings forth of God, - 264
Groves of Blarney, - 288
Guatamosin, - - 396
Girls, on a Group of, - 418
Grumblings, - - 480
Grave, on an Infant's, - 487

H

Hymn to the Stars, - 331
Heaven and Earth, - 473
Hebrew Requiem, the, . 501
How d'ye do and Good-bye, 568

I

Inquisition, Destruction of, 3
Influences, Love's, - 48
Invocation, - - 268
I'm not a Single Man, - 432
Infancy, - - - 433
Idle Words, - - 509

J

June, Address to, - 350

L

Life Boat, - - 34
Land, the, - - 40
Lover, the Bashful, - 48
Lady, to a, - - 132
Lay of a Lazy Punster, - 144
Love Me! - - 172
Love never Sleeps, - 220
Love's Alas! - - 288
The Lute, - - 288
Love's Last Request, - 340
Lines to Ellen, - - 350
Lafayette, Lines on the Death of, - - 408
Love—exemplified, - 450
Land of my Birth, - 455
Lover's Song, - - 470
Love, - - - 480
Love and Death, - 492
Lines, - - - 501
Love's Last Request, - 528
Language of Love, the, - 540

M

Marriage Hymn, - 3
Meteoric Phenomenon, 96
Miniature, the - - 132
March of Refinement, - 192
Matrimony, - - 192
March to Moscow, - 240
Monarch's Wish, a - 289
Miss Wirt's Letter, verses on it, - - - 310
My Sister Dear, - 332
My Mother, - - 405
Millenium, - - 413
Man ever Restless, - 458
Mad House, Scene in a Private, - - 470
Mediterranean, the, - 504
Minstrel's Lament, the, - 540
Mother, the, - - 560

N

Night, by J. Montgomery, 139

O

Orphan's Hymn, - 38
Old Bachelors, - - 117
Ocean, the - - 122
Old Grimes's Son, - 144
Over the Way, - - 587

P

Palmer's Hymn, - 111
Paul before the Areopagus, 120
Pretty Kate, - - 144
Prosperity, Signs of - 273
Plants, Loves of the, - 288
Pleasure, - - 350
Puffing—a Fable, - 384
Pledge, the - - 468
Poem, Lines from an unpublished, - - 509
Peter Pindarics, - 228

R

Reputation, Hard to Regain, - - - 96
Remembrances of an Old Man, - - - 164
Ross, Lines in Memory of James, by Milford Bard, 495
Records of Passing Tho'ts, 516
Righteousness, the Sun of, 546
Rainbow, the, - - 558

S

Shetland Widow, - 23
Soldier, the Dead—engra. 97
Sailor's Song, - - 120

Digitized by Google

Snow, - - - 122
Stageman's Horn, - 132
Short Soliloquy, - - 144
Shepherd's Resolution, - 162
Song, - - - 214
Scripture Anthology, - 276
Summer Months, - 336
Singular old Sonnet, - 336
Summer Evening, - 340
Sabbath Scene, - 366
Sky Lark, the, - - 368
School and School-Fellows, 384
Spiritual Worship, - 385
Sketch of Byron, - 396
Stanzas, - - - 425
Scots Love Song, - 432
Stanzas, by Mrs. Sigourney, 433
Song, by Mrs. Hemans, 437
Scotch Rose, - - 472
Sleep, - - - 482
Scar of Lexington, - 492
Stanzas, - - 497, 502
Seeing the Sun, after cloudy weather, on, - 529
Sun-bright Clime, - 549

T

Thunder, the Voice of, - 24
Twilight Fancies, - 465
Twilight's Hour, - 487
Twilight Thoughts, - 544
To-morrow, - - 560
Thou Little Star, that in yon Purple Cloud. - 560

U

Uncertainty of Worldly Enjoyments, - - 549

V

Veteran and the Child, - 25
Violet in January, - 294
Virtue, - - 350
Vision, the - - 408
Vision of Liberty, - 465

W

Washington, - - 118
Water Lily, - - 129
Where now are those Dark Eyes, - - 137
What I'd be, - - 153
Wishing Gate, - - 159
Woman, - - 169
We have Lived and Loved together, - 180
Worship, Spiritual, - 185
Whilst my poor Barque, 425
Wish, the - - 468
Wild Red Rose, the, - 552
Washing-day, - - 570

Y

Yo Heave—Song, - 40
You say I Love the Moon, 322
Young Lady's admission to Communion, - - 456

Z

Zion, the Trumpeter of 176

MUSIC.

1. The Minstrel Boy to War is gone, - 44
2. The Proud Lover, - 92
3. O Deem not that I love her less, - - 140
4. Take Heed! Whisper Low! - - 188
5. The Gascon Vespers, 236
6. O Saw ye my Mary, - 284
7. My Sister Dear, - 332
8. The Minstrel Bi rque, 380
9. Her Eyes the Glow-Worm lend thee, - 428
10. The Moon-lit Bower, 476
11. I Love the Shepherd's Artless Rhymes, - 524
12. Marriage Airs, - 572

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google

Bernard Barton 365

= B. B.

Digitized by Google

AP2
.G8
1851

Digitized by Google

3 2000 000 684 094

Digitized by Google

bees and upon going out to see, she was attacked by them and before she could be rescued she was fatally injured, and died August 15, 1859, at a very advanced age. She was borne to rest at the side of her noble husband, and thus passed away one of whom it was testified by many that she was one of the "best old ladies that ever lived in her neighborhood."

The writer cordially agrees with that sentiment, when he remembers how kind, and even affectionate, she was toward him while he was a mere youth. "Keep on trying to do right, Billy,—there will be better times for you some day." These words he fondly treasures in his memory, and for fifty years has seen and felt how wise and useful such words are.

BENJAMIN ARBOGAST.

This paper is composed of fragmentary notices of one of the early settlers of the Glade Hill neighborhood. Benjamin Arbogast, Senior, the progenitor of a well known branch of the Arbogast relationship, settled early in the century near Glade Hill, on the lands now in possession of Cornelius Bussard, Clark Dilley, and others. In his home were five sons and three daughters: Henry, Solomon, John, Adam, Benjamin, Carlotta, Sally, and Delilah.

Carlotta became Mrs Jonathn aPotts, and lived in Upshur County.

Sally became the second wife of Ralph Wanless, near Mt Tabor.

Delilah was first married to Joseph Wooddell, near Green Bank. Her second marriage was with Frederick Pugh, of same vicinity.

Digitized by Google

In reference to the sons, we have the following particulars, gathered from a variety of sources:

Henry Arbogast married Anna Warwick, on Deer Creek, and settled on a part of the homestead. Their sons Warwick and Newton died while young. Jamieson married Sarah Grimes, and settled on Elk.

Marshall Arbogast married Rachel Nottingham, and lives in Randolph County.

Sally Arbogast became the wife of George Arbogast and lives near Glade Hill.

Margaret was married to Martin Clark Dilley, and lives on part of the homestead.

Minta became Mrs Bud Stalnaker, and lives in Randolph County.

Henry Arbogast was a person of high natural endowments; was widely known in our county, and was greatly respected for many good qualities. He was a local preacher in the pale of the Methodist Episcopal church, and "cried aloud and spared not" when denouncing the fashionable foibles of his times. The writer once heard him preach a sermon from the text: "Pray without ceasing." The sermon was largely taken up in a description of the Magic Carpet, we read about in the Arabian Nights Entertainment, and then used it as an illustration, showing that the prayerful soul has in prayer something far more to the purpose than the magic carpet ever was or could be. He was an enthusiast in his religious views. To him Methodism was the chief of all the prevailing "isms,"—the one "ism" that was "altogether lovely,"—and he made no secret of it.

Digitized by Google

During the war between the States he was a sincere, decided, but harmless sympathizer with the Union cause. When last seen alive he and his neighbor Eli Buzzard were in charge of a squad of persons claiming to be Confederate Scouts. A few days afterwards these two civilians were found dead near the roadside, about half way from their homes towards Frost. From the attitude in which his body was found it is inferred that he died in the act of prayer, heeding the text referred to above.

Solomon Arbogast married Nancy Nottingham, and lived on part of the homestead. In reference to his family the following particulars are noted:

Allen first married a Miss Curry; his second marriage was with a Miss Gillespie.

George married Sallie Arbogast.

Charles was a Union soldier and died in the war.

Lizzie married Gilmer Sharp and lives near Frost.

Mary married William Cooper, near Green Bank.

Rachel became Mrs Samuel Sutton and lives beyond Green Bank.

Caroline first married the late James Ruckman; her second marriage was to Michael Scales, and lived near Mill Point.

John Arbogast, son of Benjamin, Sr., married Margaret Yeager and lived near Glade Hill. He was killed by a falling tree, leaving a widow and three sons.

Adam Arbogast married Clarissa Sutton, and lived near Green Bank. They were the parents of five sons and three daughters: John, Brown, Christopher, Benjamin, Reed, Dorinda, now Mrs David Shears; Eliza, who became Mrs James Sutton; and Emma, now Mrs J. Trace, all three near Green Bank.

Digitized by Google

When a little girl, Mrs Clarissa Arbogast had her arm crushed in a cider mill. She was given up to die by the physician sent for from an adjoining county. The late Captain John McElwee, ancestor of the McElwee relationship in our county, had the nerve to take his joint saw and razor and amputate the arm above the mortified part. The patient recovered and lived to rear the five sons and three daughters just named. What Mrs Arbogast could not do with her good left arm in housekeeping was not worth doing. She died quite recently.

Benjamin Arbogast, of Benjamin, Senior, married Miss Gibbons, a sister of the gallant Colonel S. B. Gibbons, Tenth Virginia Infantry, who died May 6th, 1862, on the McDowell battle field,—shot through the head the moment he reached the line of fire, leading his men into action.

Benjamin Arbogast, Junior, was one of the most remarkable persons that ever lived in our county. Upon attaining his majority he was appointed constable, and he magnified his office and worked it for all it was worth. He frequented the courts, and seemed to have been infatuated with the lawyers of loose habits and alcoholic propensities, and proficient in the history of the four kings. He aspired to the distinction of beating them at their own game, for they seemed to be what a gentleman should be. He soon acquired his coveted distinction of being the fastest young man in the county.

Digitized by Google

When about twenty-five years of age he came under the influence of Charles See, who taught in the family of Colonel Paul McNeel, and there was kindled in our young friend's mind an irresistible desire for a college education. He learned the rudiments of Latin and algebra from Mr See, went a session or two at Academy and then away to Dickinson College, in Pennsylvania, and was graduated among the best in his class. In the meantime he had professed piety, entered the ministry, and became a noted pulpit orator, and one of the most distinguished teachers of the high schools under the auspices of the Methodist Episcopal church, South. He died a few years since at Winchester; leaving a reputation long to be remembered by his denomination. Recently one of his surviving children, an accomplished daughter visited Marlinton.

The writer tenderly cherishes the memory of this remarkable Pocahontas man, for he often manifested special friendship for me, and we have had many good talks together. We last met in Winchester, in October, 1874. He introduced me to Norval Wilson, father of Bishop Wilson.

JOHN McNEEL.

John McNeel, the ancestor of the McNeel relationship in our county, appears to have been the first to occupy the Little Levels by permanent settlement. He was a native of Frederick County, Virginia, but passed much of his early life in or near Cumberland, Mary-

Digitized by Google

Greenbrier Independent.

THURSDAY, JULY 27TH, 1893.

LOCAL MATTERS.

RAILROAD SCHEDULE.—Trains arrive at Ronceverte as follows, Washington time: Eastbound—No. 4, at 5.47, a. m.; No. 14, at 4.03 p. m.; No. 2, at 8.27 p. m.; and No. 6, at 10.30 a. m. Westbound—No. 3, at 8.45 a. m.; No. 13, at 11.32 a. m.; No. 1, at 10.35 p. m.; and No. 5, at 5.03 p. m. Nos. 5 and 6 do not run on Sunday.

ALL the teachers are invited to call on J. E. Bell for dry

THE Monroe Wa
2-year-old colt owne
Kelly, near Sweet Sp went mad recently dangerous to every t
it, both man and of the symptoms
after lingering in three days died.

An U

On Monday ni of Blue Sulphur was lodged in ja shooting James are completed and accepted by the architect and the County Court. The bid of Murray Bros., Wheeling, was $32,000.

Fatal Accident to Benj. Herold, Esq.

From the Parkersburg Sentinel of the 20th inst. we clip the following:

Last evening on the arrival here of No. 4 on the B. & O. among the passengers that alighted from the train was an old man, gray headed and feeble, and poorly clad. Several parties noticed him, as he acted rather strangely. Just before the train started he walked upon the front platform of the sleeper, crossed over and got off on the opposite side. He was told to get aboard, as the train was about to start, but paid no heed and walked up along the train, and as it pulled out past him he made no effort to get on.

When it had pulled out he asked some one whether that was his train, and they told him it was. Without making any further inquiries he started out through the B. & O. yards on a slow walk. He was seen and spoken to by several parties in the yards, but gave unintelligable answers. Conductor Bailey was one of these persons, and warned him to be careful and get off the tracks. He continued on out through walk. He was seen and spoken to by several parties in the yards, but gave unintelligable answers. Conductor Bailey was one of these persons, and warned him to be careful and get off the tracks. He continued on out through the yards, however, and had reached the east end of the Red bridge, just east of the city. The West bound freight was pulling in, and as it rounded the curve engineer Scott Philips saw the old man. He blew the whistle and reversed his engine and made every attempt to stop the train. The old man paid no heed, whatever to the warning whistle and continued on the track until he was struck by the engine and thrown down over the embankment, where he alighted on a pile of rock. The train was stopped and the injured man was placed aboard the train and taken to S. Y., in the yards, and Drs. M. Campbell and Henry Campbell were summoned.

It was found upon examination that the man was terribly injured. The left arm was broken in two places, several ribs were broken, his nose was cleft in twain and there was an ugly cut on the forward. No money was found on his

the man was terribly injured. The left arm was broken in two places, several ribs were broken, his nose was cleft in twain and there was an ugly cut on the forward. No money was found on his person. Among the papers found in his possession was was a ticket from the chief of Police of Chicago and also a charity ticket made out in the name of Benjamin Herald, from Indinapolis to Grafton. An order for a small amount of money from the Mayor of Pocahontas and the following note was found in his pocket-book :

GRAFTON, W. VA., Aug. 1st, '92.

WHEREAS, Benjamin Herold has this day given me a note for $15,000.00, payable upon the performance of certain services, I hereby agree to give the said Herold from one to two years to make the said payment.

JOHN T. MCGRAW,
by John L. Heckmer.

Witness—B. M. Yeager.

Some other papers were found on him from which it was seen that the injured man was a resident of Huntersville, Pocahontas county, and that he owned considerable land in that section.

Only once did he regain consciousness, but only for a moment. He said his name was Benjamin Herold, but before he could tell where he lived he again became unconscious.

from which it was seen that the injured man was a resident of Huntersville, Pocahontas county, and that he owned considerable land in that section.

Only once did he regain consciousness, but only for a moment. He said his name was Benjamin Herold, but before he could tell where he lived he again became unconscious.

The injured man was fully identified as Benj. Herold, of Pocahontas county, by Mr. B. M. Hamilton. It is supposed that he was on his way to Grafton at the time of the accident.

A letter was afterwards received from John T. McGraw, in which the $15,000 contract is explained and the residence of Herold's relatives are given. Mr. McGraw says that Herold owned large tracts of wild lands in Pocahontas county, which were forfeited to the State for non-payment of taxes, and that he was employed by Herold to begin proceedings to recover the property, and if successful the amount named in the note was agreed upon for his services.

WANTED by responsible parties in Ronceverte a loan of $1,000 or $500, for six or twelve months, at 8 per cent. interest a year, satisfactorily secured by

by Mr. B. M. Hamilton. It is supposed that he was on his way to Grafton at the time of the accident.

A letter was afterwards received from John T. McGraw, in which the $15,000 contract is explained and the residence of Herold's relatives are given. Mr. McGraw says that Herold owned large tracts of wild lands in Pocahontas county, which were forfeited to the State for non-payment of taxes, and that he was employed by Herold to begin proceedings to recover the property, and if successful the amount named in the note was agreed upon for his services.

WANTED by responsible parties in Greenbrier Independent.

THURSDAY, JULY 27TH, 1893.

LOCAL MATTERS.

RAILROAD SCHEDULE.—Trains arrive at Ronceverte as follows, Washington time: Eastbound—No. 4, at 5.47, a. m.; No. 14, at 4.03 p. m.; No. 2, at 8.27 p. m.; and No. 6, at 10.30 a. m. Westbound—No. 3, at 8.45 a. m.; No. 13, at 11.32 a. m.; No. 1, at 10.35 p. m.; and No. 5, at 5.03 p. m. Nos. 5 and 6 do not run on Sunday.

ALL the teachers are invited to call on J. E. Bell for dry goods, etc.

THE levy for county

THE Monroe Watchm
2-year-old colt owned b
Kelly, near Sweet Spring went mad recently, an dangerous to every thing it, both man and beast of the symptoms of h
after lingering in grea
three days died.

An Ugly A

On Monday night la
of Blue Sulphur distr was lodged in jail he shooting James Wind occurred on Sunday,
under the following

tect and the County Court. The bid of Murray Bros., Wheeling, was $32,000.

Fatal Accident to Benj. Herold, Esq.

From the Parkersburg Sentinel of the 20th inst. we clip the following:

Last evening on the arrival here of No. 4 on the B. & O. among the passengers that alighted from the train was an old man, gray headed and feeble, and poorly clad. Several parties noticed him, as he acted rather strangely. Just before the train started he walked upon the front platform of the sleeper, crossed over and got off on the opposite side. He was told to get aboard, as the train was about to start, but paid no heed and walked up along the train, and as it pulled out past him he made no effort to get on.

When it had pulled out he asked some one whether that was his train, and they told him it was. Without making any further inquiries he started out through the B. & O. yards on a slow walk. He was seen and spoken to by several parties in the yards, but gave unintelligable answers. Conductor Bailey was one of these persons, and several parties in the yards, but gave unintelligable answers. Conductor Bailey was one of these persons, and warned him to be careful and get off the tracks. He continued on out through the yards, however, and had reached the east end of the Red bridge, just east of the city. The West bound freight was pulling in, and as it rounded the curve engineer Scott Philips saw the old man. He blew the whistle and reversed his engine and made every attempt to stop the train. The old man paid no heed, whatever to the warning whistle and continued on the track until he was struck by the engine and thrown down over the embankment, where he alighted on a pile of rock. The train was stopped and the injured man was placed aboard the train and taken to S. Y., in the yards, and Drs. M. Campbell and Henry Campbell were summoned.

It was found upon examination that the man was terribly injured. The left arm was broken in two places, several ribs were broken, his nose was cleft in twain and there was an ugly cut on the forward. No money was found on his person. Among the papers found in his possession was was a ticket from the chief of Police of Chicago and also person. Among the papers found in his possession was was a ticket from the chief of Police of Chicago and also a charity ticket made out in the name of Benjamin Herald, from Indinapolis to Grafton. An order for a small amount of money from the Mayor of Pocahontas and the following note was found in his pocket-book :

GRAFTON, W. VA., Aug. 1st, '92.

WHEREAS, Benjamin Herold has this day given me a note for $15,000.00, payable upon the performance of certain services, I hereby agree to give the said Herold from one to two years to make the said payment.

JOHN T. MCGRAW,
by John L. Heckmer.

Witness—B. M. Yeager.

Some other papers were found on him from which it was seen that the injured man was a resident of Huntersville, Pocahontas county, and that he owned considerable land in that section.

Only once did he regain consciousness, but only for a moment. He said his name was Benjamin Herold, but before he could tell where he lived he again became unconscious.

Only once did he regain consciousness, but only for a moment. He said his name was Benjamin Herold, but before he could tell where he lived he again became unconscious.

The injured man was fully identified as Benj. Herold, of Pocahontas county, by Mr. B. M. Hamilton. It is supposed that he was on his way to Grafton at the time of the accident.

A letter was afterwards received from John T. McGraw, in which the $15,000 contract is explained and the residence of Herold's relatives are given. Mr. McGraw says that Herold owned large tracts of wild lands in Pocahontas county, which were forfeited to the State for non-payment of taxes, and that he was employed by Herold to begin proceedings to recover the property, and if successful the amount named in the note was agreed upon for his services.

WANTED by responsible parties in Ronceverte a loan of $1,000 or $500, for six or twelve months, at 8 per cent. interest a year, satisfactorily secured by negotiable note well endorsed and by deed of trust on desirable and valuable real estate in said town. Address P.

INTERESTING FACTS CONCERNING THE BEVERAGE FAMILY

W. T. Price Reocrds the History of another of the Pioneer Families of Pocahontas County.

There is a relationship in our county, while not pioneers in the usual sense of the word, yet performed a very important part in material improvement of our mountain lands. Before the Beverage's came to our county and for years since there was a type of mountain land not much valued and was held comparatively cheap. It was a common remark about such land that like self righteousness the more a person had of such land the worse it would be with him. The Beverages utilized such land and prospered.

The Beverage's trace their ancestery to David Beverage, of Highland County, a native of Scotland, who came to Crabbottom previous to the war of 1812, it is believed. His wife was Catherine Shineberry. Their children were Jacob, Peter and William. The ancestral David Beverage died, leaving a widow and three small children. Mrs. Beverage with industry and good management succeeded in rearing her sons to industrious, economical and self reliant manhood.

About the year of 1840, Jacob Beverage came to Pocahontas, bought land and settled in the woods near Clover Lick and opened up a homestead now occupied by John Beverage. Jacob Beverage's wife was Susan Snyder, daughter of Adam Snyder, of Crabbottom. Their children were Lewis, Levi, William, Joseph, Woods, Jacob, Hannah, Margaret, Naomi, Jennie, six sons and three daughters.

Levi Beverage's first marriage was with Clarissa Waugh, daughter of the late John Waugh, Indian Draft. His second marriage was with Jane Hudson, daughter of the late Eligah Hudson, of Louise, and settled im part of the homestead and is a minister of the German Baptist church; William Beverage was never married; John Beverage married Mary, daughter of Squire J. B. Hannah, of Elk and lives at the old homestead. Harper Beverage is their only child; Joseph Beverage married Elizabeth, daughter of John Beverage, of Highland, and settled there. He is a German Baptist Minister; Woods, he died in youth; Jacob Beverage married Rachel Ann, daughter of the late William and Nancy McLaughlin, near Dunmore and lives on Elk; Hannah Beverage became the third wife of the late Wm. D. Moore on Elk. She lives near Poage's Lane with her daughter, Mrs. Page Gay; Margaret Beverage became Mrs. Townsend and lives on Back Allaghany. Her daughter Margaret is now Mrs. Uriah Beverage; Naomi, Jennie and Lewis all died young, and within a period of three weeks of each other, ailing with diptheria. Their sister, Mrs. Margaret Townsend came to help nurse them, she was seized with the disease herself and never returned home, dying soon after the others.

In 1845 William Beverage moved to Pocahontas from Highland, and settled in the woods, head waters of Stony Creek, on the place now occupied by Jacob Beverage. His wife Delena Peak, of Highland. In reference to their sons and daughters we have the following particulars:

Catherine became a Mrs. Arbogast of Highland County; Caroline is Mrs. Pleasant Smith, near Edray; Mary became Mrs. Benjamin R. Doyle and lives on Spruce Flat; Lovie is Mrs. George Miller on Spruce Flat; Susan became Mrs. George Rodgers and lives near Buckeye; Uriah Beverage married Jennie Townsend and lives on the head of Stony Creek; Jacob Beverage married Nancy Kellison and lives on the homestead settled by his father.

In 1850, Peter Beverage, the third of the Beverage brothers came to our county and settled virtually in the woods on the Dry Branch of Swago, at the place now occupied by John Beverage. Peter married Margaret Snyder, sister of Mrs. Jacob Beverage, who is so widely and favorably known throughout the Clover Lick section as Aunt Susan Beverage, and is now passing her nineties serenely and peacefully. In reference to Peter Beverage's family we are able to give the following items with the assistance of his daughter, Mrs. Aaron Moore:

Harriett died in youth; Susan Catherine became Mrs. Aaron Moore and lives a mile from Marlinton; Andrew Beverage was a Confederate soldier, died in service and was buried with a soldier's honors at Staunton; Peter Beverage's second marriage was with Susan, daughter of George White of Highland County.

In reference to the second family we are informed that Washington Beverage married Lydia, daughter of John E. Adkison, near Buckeye, and settled on the head of Dry Branch, where he now resides; Margaret Beverage became Mrs. Nathan Barlow near Edray, where she recently died; Julia Ann Beverage became Mrs. Jacod Simmons, and lived on Spruce Flats. To write all that might be told of her would require a book. Her sad story has been read throughout the world and will not be forgotten for all time to come for the moral it illustrates and emphasizes; Eliza Jane Beverage became Mrs. Nathaniel Arthur, and lives in Webster County; Frances Beverage became Mrs. Andree Wooddell, and was living near Edray when her husband was killed two or three years ago while logging on the hills near the Duffield mill on Stony Creek; Hannah Beverage became Mrs. James McNeill, a son of the venerable Jonathan McNeill, near Buckeye, and now lives at the head of Swago; John Beverage married Lucy, daughter of the late Jeremiah Sharp, and lives on the Dry Branch homestead; Amanda Beverage became Mrs. David Sharp and lives near Marlinton; Mrs, Beverage, the venerable widowed progenitor of the Beverage relationship, died at the Peter Beverage homestead about twenty five years since, aged eighty-three years.

W.T.P.

****

Nathaniel Barnett Arthur and Eliza Jane Beverage were united in matrimony, January 18, 1871, in Kentucky

Nathaniel Barnett Arthur died September 4, 1937 on Saturday morning at 7:00, at the age of 93 years. He was born June 30, 1844.

Eliza Jane Arthur died July 15, 1929, on Monday morning at 7:55, at the age of 75 years. She was born March 13, 1854.

Bishop Francis Asbury in West Virginia*

By Lawrence Sherwood

Introduction

"Whither am I going? To the New World. What to do? To gain honor? No, if I know my own heart. To get money? No: I am going to live to God, and to bring others so to do."

So Francis Asbury (1745-1816) wrote in his Journal on September 12, 1771 as he was starting from England to America. In the next forty-five years he not only was to be the dominant force in the shaping of American Methodism as its pioneer Bishop; he also was to become one of the greatest explorers of the American frontier.

His Journal

Asbury's part in the life of pioneer America and his observations of people and places have been in large measure hidden to recent generations. Asbury kept a daily diary or Journal from August 7, 1771 until December 7, 1815. Portions of this Journal were published during his life. The entire Journal was published in 1821. It was reprinted in 1852, and again reprinted about two years later. It had, thus, by 1958 been out of print for more than a hundred years, and copies had become increasingly difficult to obtain. Little wonder that present-day persons had scant knowledge of his life and importance.

Certain scholars in America knew of his Journal and of its meaning not only as a commentary on the beginnings of The Methodist Church, but also as a first-hand record of men and movements in the early days of the United States. Thus, when the National Historical Publications Commission of the United States Government chose sixty-six great Americans whose works should be edited and published, Asbury's name was included. The recommendation that this Commission made in 1961 was accepted by two Presidents and both Houses of Congress.

Through the recommendation and cooperation of the World Methodist Council, the Journal and Letters of Francis Asbury were published by the Association of Methodist Historical Societies in the United States in 1958. The Editor-in-Chief is Dr. Elmer T. Clark; the present writer is one of the Regional Research Editors. The three-volume set of Asbury's works in this standard annotated edition is available for $21.00 from The Methodist Publishing House, 642 Smithfield Street, Pittsburgh 30, Pennsylvania.

* A paper presented by the writer at the annual meeting of the West Virginia Historical Society, Charleston, West Virginia, October 10, 1969.

On the Frontier in West Virginia

Asbury traveled where the people were. As the people moved westward, so did Asbury. In the earliest parts of the Journal one finds Asbury concentrating on the seaboard of what was to become the United States. Toward the end of his life his interest and travels extended as far west as Indiana.

The epitome of Asbury's constant interest in the edge of civilization can be no better shown than by the shift of emphasis in his travels in what is now West Virginia. Notice how his visits begin in the Eastern Panhandle and then move westward through rather definite phases.

Asbury's first visit to what is now West Virginia was in 1776; in July of this year he visited Berkeley Springs. This was the very year that this town was established, under the name of "Bath."

Asbury was again in West Virginia in 1781, 1782, 1783, and 1784. Each of these visits was in the Eastern Panhandle, westwardly including the present counties of Grant and Mineral. Thus, during the first eight years of Asbury's visits to West Virginia he did not get across the mountains to westward flowing water.

Asbury's first visit in West Virginia that took him across the Alleghany summit was in 1785 when he visited Morgantown. This crossing of the mountains was made, however, through Maryland rather than by a frontal attack over the West Virginia hills.

In 1786 Asbury's tour took him not only to the frontier in West Virginia but also to the frontier of the United States. In this year he visited Coxe's Fort in Brooke County in the Northern Panhandle, and from there he crossed the Ohio River. In his Journal Asbury wrote: "We are now going to the frontiers, and may take a peep into the Indian land." This visit to the Northern Panhandle was an early scouting tour; he did not start regular visits to this area until after the lapse of seventeen years.

In 1788 Asbury began his assault on the mountains, south to north, as he traveled through the "devious lonely wilds." A look at a map of West Virginia shows that this south-north tour was the edge of civilization, west of the mountains that divide the waters of the Atlantic from the waters of the Mississippi. Asbury records that these tours from Monroe County in southeastern West Virginia via Morgantown to Pennsylvania were among the most difficult travels that he ever experienced in the whole of America. He drove himself and his horse over this rough terrain not only in 1788 but also in 1790, 1792, and 1796. In May 1796 he wrote: "I doubt whether I shall ever request any person . . . to accompany me across these mountains again." Asbury kept this resolve, not only because of the difficulties on this frontier, but also because the frontiers had shifted. Between 1796 and 1803 Asbury simply touched the hems of West Virginia (in Monroe and Jefferson Counties) as he toured to meet new problems and situations.

In 1803 Asbury began his long series of visits in the Northern Panhandle of West Virginia. In the thirteen years between 1803 and 1815, Asbury made eleven tours in the Northern Panhandle. One discovers that these tours were not only because of their importance to advancing Methodism in this area; Asbury was also in this section often as he crossed to Ohio and the further advancing frontier.

The only other area visited by Asbury in what is now West Virginia was Parkersburg, in 1810. The occasion of this visit was a Camp Meeting on the Little Kanawha. Although Wood County was now far removed from being the edge of civilization, nonetheless, pioneer conditions are reflected in Asbury's comment about his "toiling through bad roads and accidents at the ferry." His supplication tells much: "Lord, prepare me by Thy grace for the patient endurance of hunger, heat, labour, the clownishness of ignorant piety, the impudence of the impious, unreasonable preachers, and more unreasonable heretics and heresy!"

West Virginia Counties Visited

Asbury made thirty-four tours in West Virginia, starting with his visit at Bath in 1776 and ending with his stay at "John Beck's, West Liberty" in early August, 1815. In these thirty-nine years Asbury visited at least twenty-two of the present counties of West Virginia. Thus, persons interested in ecclesiastical or secular history in these counties may well find comments of interest in the Journal.

It is possible that Asbury was in the edge of two more counties; however, the following alphabetical list of counties is practically exhaustive, and is taken from Asbury's own records: Barbour, Berkeley, Brooke, Grant, Greenbrier, Hampshire, Hancock, Hardy, Harrison, Jefferson, Marion, Mineral, Monongalia, Monroe, Morgan, Ohio, Pendleton, Pocahontas, Preston, Randolph, Taylor and Wood.

Places

What is your area of interest in West Virginia history? Chances are that you will find source material in Asbury's documents.

Is your hobby West Virginia Springs? You will find rich material on this subject in Asbury. There is much comment on Berkeley Springs and a lesser amount on Sweet Springs.

If your interest centers about natural curiosities, you will find a common interest with the man Asbury. In his Journal you will find the first written description (1781) of Hanging Rocks in Hampshire County; you will find an early description of Iman's Spring in Grant County, now the site of the Spring Run Fish Hatchery near Petersburg, of which Asbury says: "The quantity of water it discharges (is) sufficient for a mill within two hundred yards from the source"; you will find descriptions of caves that are among the earliest published descriptions of this type of natural curiosity in West Virginia.

The descriptions of early towns in West Virginia can not but arouse interest in their present-day inhabitants. Of course, many of Asbury's visits were before towns had any names at all; other visits were during times that present towns had other names; other visits were in private homes on spots that since have become towns. Thus, this listing does not include all of the present West Virginia towns; nonetheless, the following will perhaps show the wideness of Asbury's travels and interest.

In July 1790 Asbury was riding in Greenbrier and Pocahontas Counties; in his Journal he recorded: "On my way I premeditated the sending of a preacher to a newly-settled place in the Kenhaway county." This "newly-settled place" is more commonly called Charleston.

When Asbury visited Lewisburg in July 1790 he called it "Green Brier court house"—and further mentioned that "here some sat as critics and judges." In his quaint way, he mentions Lewisburg in his visit of May 1792 as follows: "We rode through Greenbrier by the town."

As is well known to all students of West Virginia history, the Town of Fort Ashby in Mineral County has had many official names. Asbury adds two more names for this community; in his visit of June 1781 he calls it "Dutch settlement"; in subsequent visits he calls it "Jones"—after the name of the family with whom he visited.

When Asbury visited the present site of Philippi, Barbour County, in July 1788, there was but one cabin there—that of William Anglin's. Asbury's visit in this home was not the most welcome that he ever received: "Near midnight we stopped at William Anglin's, who hissed his dogs at us; but the women were determined to get to quarterly meeting, so we went in. Our supper was tea. . . . I lay on the floor on a few deer skins with the fleas. That night our poor horses got no corn. . . ."

Asbury mentions his visit to Parkersburg, which he calls "Wood's Court House." He had many things to say about Berkeley Springs, among which was a "seat of sin." When he visited Harper's Ferry in May 1796, he wrote: "The impending rocks impress the mind of the traveller with terror; and should they fall would crush him to pieces: this scene is truly awful and romantic." When he was again in Harper's Ferry in August 1801 he noted that he "beheld with satisfaction the good plain buildings erected there by the United States."

And on he goes—visiting towns and often giving his impressions of them—to Martinsburg, Shepherdstown, Clarksburg

Morgantown, Charles Town, Wellsburg, West Liberty, Wheeling. In West Virginia, as in the nation, he "printed the map of his ministry with the hoofs of his horse."

People

Asbury had a great interest in people. He spent all of his life in the homes of others. He was at home with persons of high and low estate. In the section now known as West Virginia he found himself as guest in homes of both those who were famous and those who had been infamous.

Since Asbury's early visits occurred while Indians were still in West Virginia, he came into contact with persons who had been involved with the savages. He came to know Richard Williams, in 1781, who then lived near Romney; in the Journal (Volume I, page 464ff) he tells the thrilling story of the capture of Williams by the Indians. In 1788 Asbury visited Clover Lick in Pocahontas County and made reference to the work of Jacob Warwick who had built a fort there and had "made a small estate by keeping cattle, horses, &c., on the range." Asbury visited Coxe's Fort in Brooke County, in 1786, at which time the inhabitants could look across the Ohio River and see Indian lands. He visited in the home of Thomas Drinnon, in Pocahontas County, "whose wife was killed, and his son taken prisoner by the Indians." Asbury was a welcomed visitor at Cook's Fort in Monroe County—for two of the sons of the builder of this fort had become Methodist preachers.

Among the interesting references to the Indian incursions in West Virginia is his comment about the Kinnan massacre in Randolph County. The full story of this massacre may be found in Volume I, Number 1 of West Virginia History, A Quarterly Magazine, Charleston, October, 1939; in this publication there is an extensive article by Boyd B. Stutler as well as a reprint of the True Narrative of the Sufferings of Mary Kinnan. Asbury was on the spot in May 1792. He writes: "We stopped at Capt. S_____'s, where there were several families crowded together for fear of the Indians. The upper end of the valley has been depopulated, one family has been destroyed since I was last here. . . ."

In addition to his contacts with those who were in the midst of Indian activity, Asbury visited in homes of men who were leaders in their day. Perhaps this can be no better shown than through Asbury's relationship with men who were members of the Virginia Convention which met in Richmond in June 1788 to ratify or reject the Federal Constitution. As has been often told, there were sixteen members from what is now West Virginia; the fifteen of these who voted to ratify more than made the majority of ten by which Virginia ratified the Constitution. It has been noted that it was the votes from "beyond the mountains" that aided not only Virginia but also other states to accept the Federal Constitution.

Among the sixteen men from West Virginia were the following: Isaac VanMeter from Hardy County, Abel Seymour from Hardy County, Col. George Jackson from Harrison County, Ebenezer Zane from Ohio County, and John Wilson from Randolph County. It is amazing to realize that Francis Asbury was a visitor in the homes and with the families of each of these five men!

Random comments of Asbury concerning the "famous five" include: "I had an attentive, well-behaved congregation at Squire VanMeter's." . . . He rode to Seymour's "as welcome as snow in harvest." . . . "I lodged with Col. Jackson." . . . "At Colonel Zane's, where I lodged, the aged people were kind indeed. . . . I contemplate two chapels; one of forty feet square, and the other of fifty feet; the first in Charlestown (Wellsburg), Alexander Wells to give the lot; and the other in Wheeling, the ground to be bestowed for its erection by Colonel Zane." "I preached at Wilson's. Here many careless people do not hear a sermon more than once in one or two years. . . ."

Asbury was a frequent visitor in many other homes of pioneers and patriots. He was in the home of the Hite family in the Eastern Panhandle from 1781 and after. He preached in the barn of Captain James Stroud near Martinsburg. He preached and baptized at Peter Dewit's in Mineral County—and doubtless heard of Dewit's experiences in the Revolution. He was a welcomed visitor at the home of John Jeremiah Jacob in Hampshire County—little knowing that a son of his host would later be Governor of the State of West Virginia. (See: West Virginia History, A Quarterly Magazine, Charleston, 1956, Vol. XVII, No. 2, January, pp. 117-137 for a biography of Jacob.) He found rest and opportunity at the home and church built by Col. Charles Martin on the West Virginia-Pennsylvania line. He enjoyed his visits with John McNeel at the present site of Hillsboro—and probably thrilled to know that McNeel had come to this fertile area because he thought that he had killed a man "back in civilization," and had stayed in this lovely spot even after he learned that the man had not died. He looked forward to his visits with "Father" Calder Haymond, at the present site of Fairmont; he must have been overjoyed when Calder's son, Thomas, became a Methodist Circuit Rider.

Asbury entered a life-long friendship with Dr. Edward Tiffin while Tiffin lived in Charles Town in a house that is still extant. This friendship continued after Tiffin moved to Ohio and became the first Governor of that State.

Time would fail were we to attempt to tell the persons of interest with whom Asbury was friend—John Davenport, a Revolutionary soldier who lived in Jefferson County; John Beck, at whose home near West Liberty Asbury preached his last sermon in West Virginia; John McCullough, sheriff of Ohio County in 1776 and brother of Samuel who gained fame by his leap to escape from the Indians; Joseph Perkins, Asbury's old "friend and neighbor," who was the superintendent of the U. S. Armory at Harper's Ferry; and other names by the score.

In Asbury's Journal there is an almost inexhaustible mine of material for biographical and historical research. The new edition has the greatest amount of identifications and notations that space permitted. In addition to those printed in the Journal, the author of this paper has prepared extensive notes on West Virginia persons and places. A copy of this material may be found at the archives of the American Association of Methodist Historical Societies at Lake Junaluska, North Carolina; the author of this paper has another copy.

Conclusion

Asbury speaks to our day not only in the context of religion. He has much information and insight on the places and people of the early days of West Virginia. He lived and labored in a day when the pioneers were "but one remove from the Indians in the comforts of civilized society." His writings will be of benefit to the local historian or to the person interested in the many facets of life in America between 1771 and 1815. The pioneer Bishop has blazed a long trail.

Editor's Corner

The Bruffey Family

BORN-POCAhontasian, now living in Virginia, Rae Dowdy has submitted material on Bruffey Family history for your present reading and for the editor's possible gleaning for the encyclopedia. The material comes as clippings from the pen and hand-set type of the late and great Cal Price and time of printing is 1933.

THE BRUFFEYS

The Bruffeys held their family reunion on Bruffeys Creek on August 26, 1933. A goodly number of the relationship was present and the occasion was greatly enjoyed by all.

John Bruffey was born in the north of Ireland in 1752. He married Nellie MacDonald, of Scotland, and they moved to America prior to the Revolution. In this war he served as a soldier under General Anthony Wayne. He was killed in the year 1807 by being thrown from a horse. The horse scared at a deer at the stone trough on the lands of M. J. McNeel. He was buried in the McNeel graveyard. His grave is marked by a stone lettered by his son John.

John and Nellie MacDonald Bruffey were the parents of three sons, Mark, John and Patrick.

Mark married a Miss Lewis and lived in Monroe county. They had a son, Rev. George; his sons were Fletcher and Samuel; the latter was the father of Mrs. George B. Minter, of Warren, Ohio, who was a missionary in China for a number of years; returning home to care for her sister's children.

John Jr. married Elizabeth Hill and settled on Bruffeys Creek. They were the parents of three sons and seven daughters — Murry, Bradford and John.

Murry married Elizabeth Craig of Nicholas county. They were the parents of three sons and three daughters. William, Robert, Richard. Elizabeth became the wife of Wesley Hill; Nancy, wife of Henry Boggs, and Margaret, wife of Haggi Denison. Deputy Sheriff R. M. Bruffey and A. W. Hill are grandsons of Murry Bruffey.

Bradford married Mary Watts of Greenbrier county. They had three sons and four daughters. Newton, late of Renick; Frank, deceased; Squire T. A. Bruffey, of Bruffeys Creek; Elizabeth Whiting; Serene Grimes, Bird Shisler, Ida Sarver.

John Bruffey III, married Margaret Hill and went west.

The daughters of John 2nd were Eliza Moore, of Edray; George P. Moore was her son. Harriet, wife of Wesley Cruikshanks, of Nicholas. Levina, wife of Clayborne Blair; went west. Mrs. Jennie Lynch of Neola, Mrs. Annie Dotson and Culbison, of the west are her children. Julia become the wife of a McClure; the late Mathew was her only son. Margaret become the wife of Morgan Anderson. They had three children. Elizabeth became the wife of Samuel McCarty, and moved to Vermont; C. J. McCarty was her son. Tho Anderson became Mrs. Shannon Clutter; Eric Clutter is their son. Dickson Anderson married Sarah McCoy. Mrs. P. C. Curry is their daughter.

Nancy Bruffey became the wife of Levi Hooker, clockmaker, and Martha Bruffey become the wife of James Ewing. Both families went to Nicholas county.

Patrick Bruffey was born May 2, 1785, and died February 3, 1853. His wife was Annie Slaven, daughter of John Slaven, head of Greenbrier River. He was a skilled workman in wood, iron and stone. He was a miller, too, and owned the mill near Greenbank. His family consisted of six daughters and two sons. Polly Mathews was born January 29, 1813, and died November 1, 1849. She became the wife of John H. Ruckman, February 7, 1833. Her children were Caroline, wife of William J. Cackley, of Stamping Creek; Sidney, who married Almira Campbell; their son Charles teaches Indians in Oklahoma. Nancy Catherine born April 6, 1814, died October 1, 1888; wife of Ben Ervine, and was the mother of eleven children. One son James was a Confederate soldier and was killed in the presence of his mother.

James, born January 28, 1816, married Margaret Ann Hartman and went to Lewis county.

Elizabeth Slaven Bruffey, born March 24, 1818, became the wife of Addison Ervine and went west.

Priscilla Bruffey became the wife of Lorenson Pugh and went to Webster county.

Caroline Margaret Bruffey, born September 18, 1822, died August 14, 1853; became the wife of James Watts Ruckman October 14, 1852. Her child was William Wallace Ruckman, who lived on Stamping Creek, where his children, D. E. and Maggie, now reside.

Sarah Ann Bruffey, born November 7, 1824, died November 6, 1895, became the wife of James G. Hamilton, October 9, 1851. A daughter, Hester, became the wife of Robert Brown, County Surveyor. R. W. Brown is their son.

William Slaven Bruffey, born December 2, 1826, married Mary J. Hamilton, went to Missouri. He died March 14, 1873.

M. R.

THE BRUFFEYS

John Bruffey was born in the north of Ireland in 1752. He married Nellie MacDonald, of Scotland, an ancestral kinsman of Ramsay McDonald, prime minister of the British Empire.. John and Nellie MacDonald Bruffey moved to America prior to the Revolution. In this war he served as a soldier under General Anthony Wayne. He was killed in the year of 1807 by being thrown from a horse. The horse scared at a deer at the stone through on the lands of M.J. McNeel. He was buried in the McNeel graveyard. His grave is marked by a stone lettered by his son, John.

To the marriage of John and Nellie MacDonald Bruffey were born three sons, Mark, John and Patrick.

Mark married a Miss Lewis and lived in Monroe County. They had a son, Rev. George Bruffey; his sons were Fletcher and Samuel; the latter was the father of Mrs. George B. Minter of Warren, Ohio, who was a missionary in China for a number of years; returning home to care for her sister's children

John, Jr., married Elizabeth Hill and settled on Bruffeys Creek. They were the parents of three sons and three daughters - William, Robert, Richard. Elizabeth became the wife of Wesley Hill; Nancy, the wife of Henry Boggs; and Margaret the wife of Haggai Denison. Deputy Sheriff R.M. Bruffey and A.W. Hill were grandsons of Murray Bruffey.

Bradford married Mary Watts, of Greenbrier County. They had three sons and four daughters, Newton, late of Renick; Frank, deceased; Squire T.A. Bruffey, of Bruffeys Creek; Elizabeth Whiting; Serene Grimes; Bird Shisler; and Ida Sarver.

John Bruffey, III, married Margaret Hill and went west.

The daughters of John, 2nd, were Eliza Moore, of Edray; George P. Moore was her son. Harriet, wife of Wesley Cruikshanks, of Nicholas. Levina, wife of Clayborne Blair; went west, Mrs. Jennie Lynch of Neola, Mrs. Annie Dotson and Culbinson, of the west are her children. Julia became the wife of a McClure; the late Mathew was her only son. Margaret became the wife of Morgan Anderson. They had three children. Elizabeth became the wife of Samuel McCarty and moved to Vermont. C.J. McCarty was her son. Thomas Anderson became Mrs. Shannon Clutter; Eric Clutter is their son. Dickson Anderson married Sarah McCoy; Mrs. P.C. Curry is their daughter.

Nancy Burffey became the wife of Levi Hooker, clockmaker and Martha Bruffey became the wife of James Ewing. Both families went to Nicholas County.

Patrick Bruffey was born 2 May 1785 and died 3 Feb. 1863. His wife was Annie Slaven, daughter of John Slaven, head of Greenbrier River. He was a skilled workman in wood, iron and stone. He was a miller, too, and owned the mill near Greenbank. His family consisted of six dauthters and two sons. Polly Mathews was born 29 Jan. 1813 and died 1 Nov. 1849. She became the wife of John H. Ruckman 7 Feb 1833. Her children were caroline, wife of William J. Cackley, of Stamping Creek; Sidney, who married Almira Campbell; their son Charles taught school for the Indians in Oklahoma.

Nancy Catherine born 6 April 1814 died 1 Oct 1888; wife of Ben Ervine, and was the mother of eleven children. One son, James was a Confederate soldier and was killed in the presence of his mother.

James, born 28 Jan. 1816 married Margaret Ann Hartmen and went to Lewis County.

Elizabeth Slaven Bruffey, born 24 March 1818, became the wife of Addison Ervine and went west.

Priscilla Bruffey became the wife of Lorenson Pugh and went to Webster County.

Caroline Margaret Bruffey, born 18 Sept. 1822, died 14 Aug 1853; became the wife of James Watts Ruckman 14 Oct. 1852. Her child was William Wallace Ruckman, who lived on Stamping Creek where his children D. W. and Maggie Ruckman now reside.

Sarah Ann Bruffey, born 7 Nov. 1824, died 6 Nov. 1895, became the wife of James G. Hamilton, 9 Oct. 1851. A daughter, Hester became the wife of Robert Brown; County surveyor R. W. Brown was their son.

William Slaven Bruffey, born 2 Dec. 1826, married Mary J. Hamilton and went to Missouri. He died 14 March 1873.

The Bruffeys were of an inventive turn of mind. One of the Pocahontas family worked for many years on the unsolved problem of "perpetual motion." The inventor developed a machine so finely poised that a grain of wheat would start a large wheel turning, but it could not be controlled and the longer it ran the greater became the speed, until it would finally tear itself to pieces. Bruffey's last effort was to start the wheel and watch it fling itself into fragments as it dashed off into space.

There are no millionaires among the Bruffeys, but there might have been, for it was a Bruffey who invented the hillside plow, the instrument that has probably done more to draw wealth from the soil than any other one farm implement. An unscrupulous lawyer of Washington stole the patent and thus the Bruffeys lived quietly on, content to hew wppd and draw water. They are pastoral people and agricultural people and have never aspired to positions of honor and trust in the affairs of state.

If you would get a correct measure of such as Tom Bruffey from old Pocahontas, pull down your Bobby Burns and read again Cotter's Saturday Night. It will be like a fresh breeze in the twilight on a summer's night, and your heart will feel/warm glow as you touch the soil afresh on Scotland's sunny braes.

Note: From the tombstone in the McNeel graveyard, Hillsboro, West Virginia:

JOHN BRUFFEY

Native of Ireland and Revolutionist under General Wayne, U.S.A.

Died in 1807 - aged 55 which would make his birth date 1752. This tombstone was made by his son John Bruffey and inscribed as that was his business. His wife was Nellie McDonald, English, who came before the Revolution. Children: Patrick was as far as I can find out a carpenter and contractor, Mark, was a preacher and went to Monroe Co., W.Va. John lived in Pocahontas County, buried in the Hill Cemetery, Lobelia, West Virginai

THE BRUFFEYS

The BRUFFEYS held their reunion of the family on Bruffeys Creek on Aug[illegible] 1933
A goodly number of the relationship was present and the occasion was gre[illegible]ogred by a all.

John Bruffey was born in the north of Ireland in 1752. He married Nellie Mac[illegible] Scotland, and they moved to Americaa prior to the Revolution. In this war he se[illegible] a soldier under General Anthony Wayne. He was killedain the year of 1807 by being from a horse. The horse scared at a deer at the stone trough on the lands of M. J.
McNeel. He was buried in the McNeel graveyard. His grave is marked by a stone letter[illegible] by his son, John.

John and Nellie MacDonald Bruffey were the parents of three sons, Mark, John and Patrick.

Mark married a Miss Lewis and lived in Monroe County. They had a son, Rev. George Bruffey; his sons were Fletcher and Samuel; the latter was the father of Mrs. George B. Minter of Warren, Ohio, who was a missionary in China for a number of years; returning home to care for her sister's children.

John, Jr., married Elizabeth Hill and settled on Bruffeys Creek. They were the parents of three sons and seven daughters---Murray, Bradford and John.

Murray married Elizabeth Craig of Nicholas County. They were the parents of three sons and three daughters---William. Robert, Richard. Elizabeth became the wife of Wesley Hill; Nancy, wife of Henry Boggs; and Margaret the wife of Haggai Denison. Deputy Sheriff R. M. Bruffey and A. W. Hill are grandsons of Murray Bruffey.

Bradford married Mary Watts, of Greenbrier County. They had three sons and four daughters
Newton, late of Renick; Frank, deceased; Squire T. A. Bruffey, of Bruffeys Creek; Elizabeth Whiting; Serene Grimes; Bird Shisler; and Ida Sarver.

John Bruffey, III, married Margaret Hill and went west.

The daughters of John, 2nd, were Eliza Moore, of Edray; George P. Moore was her son.
Harriet, wife of Wesley Cruikshanks, of Nicholas. Levina, wife of Clayborne Blair; went west, Mrs. Jennie Lynch of Neola, Mrs. Annie Dotson and Culbinson, of the west are her children. Julia became the wife of a McClure; the late Mathew was her only son.
Margaret became the wife of Morgan Anderson. They had three children. Elizabeth became the wife of Samuel McCarty and moved to Vermont. C. J. McCarty was her son. Tho.
Anderson became Mrs. Shannon Clutter; Eric Clutter is their son. Dickson Anderson married Sarah McCoy; Mrs. P. C. Curry is their daughter.

Nancy Bruffey became the wife of Levi Hooker, clockmaker, and Martha Bruffey became the wife of James Ewing. Both families went to Nicholas County.

Patrick Bruffey was born 2 May 1785 and died 3 Feb. 1853. His wife was Annie Slaven, daughter of John Slaven, head of Greenbrier River. He was a skilled workman in wood, iron and stone. He was a miller, too, and owned the mill near Greenbank. His family consisted of six daughters and two sons. Polly Mathews was born 29 Jan. 1813 and died 1 Nov. 1849. She became the wife of John H. Ruckman 7 Feb. 1833. Her children were Caroline, wife of William J. Cackley, of Stamping Creek; Sidney, who married Almira
Campbell; their son Charles teaches Indians in Oklahoma.

Nancy Catherine born 6 Apr. 1814 died 1 Oct. 1888; wife of Ben Ervine, and was the mother of eleven children. One son, James was a Confederate soldier and was killed in the presence of his mother.

[illegible] County.

[illegible] Elizabeth Eleven Bruf[illegible] born 2[illegible] became [illegible]

This is the latest picture of Mrs. Mollie Bruffy, who died Monday. She is pictured here with a doll that was given her when she was a child at Calvin.

Mollie Bruffy, 61, Dies

Funeral services were to have been conducted at 2:30 today for Mrs. Mollie Bruffy, 61, wife of George Bruffy of La Frank, who died Monday morning, October 29, in the Sacred Heart Hospital.

Rev. J. E. Brown, pastor of La Frank's New Prospect Baptist Church, was to officiate, and burial was to follow in the Little Union Cemetery at Calvin with the White and Coleman Funeral Home in charge.

Mrs. Bruffy, a member of the New Prospect Baptist Church and of the Rebecca Lodge, was born at Calvin June 7, 1895, the daughter of the late Hamilton and Amanda Bredon.

Survivors besides her husband include one daughter, Mrs. Beulah Tonry of Cincinnati, Ohio; one brother, Ervin Bredon, also of Cincinnati; one half-brother, Justus Bredon of Morgantown; one half-sister, Mrs. Ruth Curry of Calvin.

Priscilla Bruffey became the wife of Lorenson Pugh and went to Webster County.

Caroline Margaret Bruffey, born 18 Sept. 1822, died 14 Aug. 1853; became the wife of James Watts Ruckman 14 Oct. 1852. Her child was William Wallace Ruckman, who lived on Stamping Creek where his cildren D. E. and Maggie Ruckman now reside.

Sarah Ann Bruffey, born 7 Nov. 1824, died 6 Nov. 1895, became the wife of James C. Hamilton, 9 Oct. 1851. A daughter Hester became the wife of Robert Brown; County surveyor R. W. Brown is their son.

William Slaven Bruffey, born 2 Dec. 1826, married Mary J. Hamilton and went to Missouri. He died 14 Mar. 1873.

Maggie Ruckman

Bruffey Reunion

On August 25 the Bruffey family of West Virginia held a largely attended and worth while reunion at Webster Springs. The following comments on the occasion are from the Webster Springs Republican.

With the arrival of the chairman of the program committee in the afternoon an hour of reminiscence was introduced by Tom Bruffey, in the course of which a brief history of the family in America was given. From this historical account we gathered a few interesting facts and likewise gathered many more from private conservations with some of the Pocahontas visitors.

Miss Maggie Ruckman seems to be the recognized historian of this family. It was revealed that a certain John Bruffey of Scotch-Irish descent came from Ireland prior to the Revolution and settled in the neighborhood of Hillsboro, about fifteen miles from Marlinton on the Greenbrier River. He brought an attractive bride from among the Shamrocks of his native heath when he came to America, whose name was Nellie McDonald, and an ancestral kinsman of Ramsay McDonald, prime minister of the British Empire. The Bruffeys have studiously avoided public statement concerning the relationship with such royal personages, but it is no discredit in West Virginia to know that Tom Bruffey, who opened this reminiscent hour is a cousin of England's great prime minister.

We learned that Bruffeys were an inventive turn of mind. One of the Pocahontas family worked for many years on the unsolved problem of "perpetual motion". The inventor developed a machine so finely poised that a grain of wheat would start a large wheel turning, but it could not be controlled and the longer it ran the greater became the speed until it would finally tear itsel to pieces. Bruffey's last effort was to start the wheel and watch it fling itself into fragments as it dashed off into space.

There are no millionaires among the Bruffeys, but there might have been, for it was a Bruffey who invented the hillside plow, the instrument that has probably done more to draw wealth from the soil than any other one farm implement. An unscrupulous lawyer of Washington stole the patent and thus the Bruffeys lived quietly on, content to hew wood and draw water. They are pastoral people and agricultural peolple and have never aspired to positions of honor and trust in the affairs of the state.

If you would get a correct measure of such men as Tom Bruffey from old Poca, pull down your Bobby Burns and read again Cotter's Saturday Night. It will be like a fresh breeze in the twilight on a summer's night, and your heart will feel a warm glow as you touch the soil afresh on Scotland's sunny braes.

Decatur, Illinois.
March 7th 1957

Dr. John O. McNeel,
1127 Pine Street,
St. Louis 1, Mo.

Dear Dr. McNeel:

Your letter of the 27nd inst. arrived this A.M., in re - the Postoffice of Millpoint W. Va., originally "Cackleytown", and some inquiry concerning the "Cackley Family".

You seem to have settled at least the time that "Millpoint, Virg." (now W. Va.) became a "U. S. Post office" - however, the name of the town could have been changed earlier than the date the P.O. was established.

I have a copy of a letter written on Feb. 6 1893 by "Dr. Stephen Hackley, Maysville, Ky. to "Wm. H. Cackley" of Kanawha, W. Va. (This W. Va. the son of (3) Valentine Cackley Jr. - not the "W. Bot. Co." of near Millpoint), in which he was seeking info. about the Virg. Cackleys) - and his letter contained the following paragraph = "I have a list of battle skirmishes in Va. I find the name "Cackleytown". I could not find such a "Postoffice" - where is it? I think Wm Cackley spoke of the place when at Father's."=

Of course, this has reference to "Civil War Skirmishes", and this would be thirty years after the date the P.O. Dept. Records show that the town was Millpoint. (1865 - less 1835 = 30 years) However, between 1861 and 1865 the residents and the Civil War Soldiers and correspondents, still still called the little village "Cackleytown". The above listed 1893 letter was where I conceived the idea that "Cackleytown" did not become "Millpoint" until the latter part of the Civil War, or later.

The above named "Dr. Stephen Hackley" was of the 5th Generation, a Son of (4) "Joseph (none) and Elizabeth (Turner) Hackley", and he a son of (3) "Elias (none) Hackley Sr.", a son of "Jacob Hackley Sr. (1701-1788), in our Gen. No 1.

You ask the privilege to look over my "Cackley" data at some time - and that "Bill" Cackley may have given me much of this material. "Bill" had sent me no data, until a letter came on March 27nd - in which he sent "Info." for his Branch, his parents, grandparents, and great grd parents (Gen no. 3) - of Levi (none) Sr. and Nancy (none) (Bradshaw) Cackley. He sent no data, not even names, for his grandfathers (4) Wm. Jones Co.) 3 Brothers and 2 Sisters.

I note that you are compiling a "History of the "McNeel Family". However, I am wondering how far back you may know about the original "Cackley Ancestors" who came to the "Colonies" - and if you have known the true spellings of the original Family name of "HACKLEY", namely = "Hackney - Hackney & Hackley?

Oh yes I forgot - you are welcome to come look over my (over)

Decatur, Illinois.
March 7th 1957

Dr. John O. McNeel,
1127 Pine Street,
St. Louis 1, Mo.

Dear Dr. McNeel:

Your letter of the 27nd inst. arrived this A.M., in re - the Postoffice of Millpoint, W. Va., originally "Cackleytown", and some inquiry concerning the "Cackley Family".

You seem to have settled at least the time that "Millpoint, Virg." (now W. Va.) became a "U. S. Post office" - however, the name of the town could have been changed earlier than the date the P.O. was established.

I have a copy of a letter written on Feb. 6 1893 by "Dr. Stephen Yackley", Maysville, Ky. to "Wm. H. Cackley" of Rowlesburg, W. Va., (This Wm H. Cackley the son of (8) Valentine Cackley Jr. - not the "Wm H. Cackley" of near Millpoint), in which he was seeking info. about the Virg. Cackleys - and his letter contained the following paragraph = "I have a list of battle skirmishes in Va. I find the name "Cackleytown". I could not find such a "Postoffice" - where is it? I think Wm Cackley a son of the place when at Father's." =

Of course, this has reference to "Civil War Skirmishes", and this would be thirty years after the date the P.O. Dept. Records show that the town was Millpoint. (1865 - less 1835 = 30 years) However, between 1861 and 1865 the residents and the Civil War Soldiers and correspondents, still/ still called the little village "Cackleytown". The above listed 1893 letter was where I received the idea that "Cackleytown" did not become "Millpoint" until the latter part of the Civil War, or later.

The above named "Dr. Stephen Yackley" was of the 4th Generation, a son of (4) "Joseph (none) and Elizabeth (Turner) Yackley", and he a son of (3) "Elias (none) Yackley Sr.", a son of "Jacob Yeckley Sr. (1701-1788), or our Gen. No 1.

You ask the privilege to look over my "Cackley" data at some time - and that "Bill" Cackley may have given me much of this material. "Bill" had sent me no data, until a letter came on March 27nd - in which he sent "Info." for his Branch, his parents, grandparents, and great grd parents (Gen no. 3) - of Levi (none) Sr. and Nancy (none) (Bradshaw) Cackley. He sent no data, not even names, for his grandfathers (8) Wm. James Ca.) 3 Brothers and 2 Sisters.

I note that you are compiling a History of the "McNeel family". Therefore, I am wondering how far back you may know about the original Yeckley Ancestors" who came to the "Colonies" - and if you have found the "true spellings of the original Family name of "YECKLEY", namely - "Yeckley - Yeckley & Yackley".

Oh yes I forgot - you are welcome to come look over my (over)

"Keckley Family History Data", at anytime it may suit your convenience - however - I wish to state that my "Cackley & Branches" data is limited, as I personally have contacted none of the "Cackley Branches" - I drew onto "Bill" in a rather peculiar manner. I wrote the "Asst of Commerce at Millpoint, Pa." then knowing it was such a small Village - my letter was sent to the "Prison Camp" - then relayed to "W.H. Cackley" of the "Twin Oaks Farm" - and he replied - My inquiry concerned the date that "Cackleytown" became "Millpoint" P.O. and - "Bill" did not know.

I will explain a little more about the "Keckley F. History" "processing" of data - It looks like me will not be "compiling" for 20 or 30 years yet. There are at present 3 Historians, and a General Genealogist - so engaged - I have been working on this "History" for only about 5½ years. The "Genl. Genealogist," about 8 years - at present we have "catalogued" probably over 9,000 families & descendants - I alone - have added over 4,000 in my 5½ years, or almost ½ of our total.

I put in about 3 years on the "KECKLEY" Beds Only, and while doing so - ran into a "Keckley Bed." out in Nebraska, who - in 1865 went into "Court" in Attimosa, Iowa, and Legally changed his last name to "KECKLEY" - and at that time he had 8 children, ranging in age from 6 to 22 years - and they all became "KECKLEY(S)" Without any legal procedure except his oldest Son who applied with his father. This instance - threw me into "processing" "Keckley" Branches - before - I was ready to do so - therefore, for the past 2½ yrs + - I have been "processing" "Keckley" Branches.

Our "Genl. Genealogist" - Mr. Finley B. Campbell of Clermont City, Ohio - has been "processing" mostly - "Cackley" Families, therefore, he has MORE "CACKLEY" detail data than we other 3 "Historians" - though - We all do know about what more each of us have are doing.

I hope, I would roughly say - probably 300 "Cackley" homes beginning with Gen No 1. of "Valentine and Mary (Bryan) Cackley" and then 6 sons + 4 daughters - names only - no dates - on the 2nd Gen. - I have a few dates - but from the 3rd Gen. onward on Pages of the Beds I do have both names and dates. Mr Campbell, I am sure has much more "Cackley data" than he has sent to me. Mr Jones "Historian" searched for some 8 years to finally PROVE that the ORIGINAL name here in the "Colonies" was "Keckley", but - we still can not locate the landing record of the 1st Germ.

and died [illegible] in 1827

[illegible] Ohio. In life the [illegible]

Ohio" on "Drums of [illegible]

town

"Keckley Family History Data", at any time it may suit your convenience - however - I wish to state that my "Cackley & Branches" data is LIMITED, as I personally have contacted none of the "Cackley Branches" - I drew onto "Bill" in a rather peculiar manner. I wrote the "Assn of Commerce at Millpoint, Wva" then knowing it was such a small Village - my letter was sent to the "Prison Camp" - then relayed to "W.H. Cackley" of the "Iron eared Farm" - and he replied - My inquiry concerned the date that "Cackleytown" became "Millpoint" P.O. and - "Bill" did not know.

I will explain a little more about the "Keckley F. History" "processing" of data - It looks like We will not be "compiling" for 20 or 30 years yet. There are at present 3 Historians, and a General Genealogist - So engaged - I have been working on this "History" for only about 5½ years. The "Genl. Genealogist," about 8 years - at present we have "catalogued" probably over 9,000 Ancestors & descendants - I alone - have added over 4,000 in my 5½ years, or almost ½ of ours total.

I put in about 3 years on the "KECKLEY" Bchs. ONLY, and while doing so - ran into a "Kackley Bch." out in Nebraska, who - in 1865 went into "Court" in Ottumwa, Iowa, and Legally changed his last name to "KECKLEY" - and at that time he had 8 children, ranging in age from 6 to 22 years - and they all became "KECKLEY(S)" Without any legal procedure EXCEPT his eldest Son who applied with his father. This instance - threw me into "processing" "Keckley" Branches - before - I was ready to do so - therefore, for the past 2½ yrs + - I have been "processing" "Kackley" Branches.

Our "Genl. Genealogist" - "Mr. Finley B. Campbell" of Vienna City, Ohio - has been "processing" mainly - "Cackley" Branches, therefore, he has MORE "CACKLEY" detail data than we other 3 "Historians" - though - We all do know about what more each of us four are doing.

I have, I would roughly say - probably 300 "Cackley" names beginning with Gen No 2. of "Valentine and Mary (Vega) Cackley" and their 6 Sons & 4 daughters - names only - no dates - on the 3rd Gen. - I have a few dates - but from the 4th Gen. onward on Some of the Bchs I do have both names and dates. Mr Campbell, I am sure has much more "Cackley data" than he has sent to me. Mr Jones "Historian" searched for some 8 years to finally PROVE that the ORIGINAL name here in the "Colonies" was "Keckley", but - we still can not locate the landing record of the 12 Germ.

[illegible] and died [illegible] in 1827
[illegible] Ohio. In the [illegible]
[illegible] on "Drums of [illegible]

of "Jacob Keckley Sr." - He evidently came here in the late 1720's or early 1730's. Which I'd too early for the first "Ship Leading Records" at Phila. Penn., shown in "Rupp's Thirty Thousand Names", which includes the "Immigrants in Penn" from 1727 to 1776, or 50 years.

Possibly you have, or have heard of the "article" entitled - "THE CACKLEYS", published by the "Hon. Charles B. Johnson" of Clarksburg, W.Virg. In the "Marlinton Pocahontas Times" of Feb. 28-1946. If you do have it - "throw it into the waste-basket", as it is the most "in-information" buch of "Info." ever leaked to the many - "Cackley, Kackley and Keckley Cousins" that We know of. It is practically All based on "THEORY". And that "Article" was "clipped" by many of our Virg. cousins, and "circulated" all over the various States. We "Historians" now call this "Honorable Chas. B. Johnson" the "HONKEY" C.B.J.

He is a descendant from the (6) "John Kackley Sr. Bch.", thru his daughter (6) Rachel (Ka) YOE - now "YOST", 8) Hannah (Ka) Johnson; (7) John Ka. Johnson; (?) Wm James Johnson - then "is (?) Hon Chas B. Johnson Gen No 6, of Clarksburg Va. (an Attorney).

In his article "The Cackleys" - he Sets up the "French Family" of "SEBASTIAN CADUELLE" AS our ORIGINAL ANCESTOR - this French name is pronounced in French as if Spelled "CACKELIE". They Sailed from Rotterdam, Holland in the "Princess Augusta", with Samuel Merchant as "Master", PALATINES with their families, in all 330 persons, they touched Cowes, England for clearance, and docked at Phila, Penn. as Vessell No 47 - on Sep. 16-1736. At that time - the "Shiplists" only Showed the "Male passengers" from 16yrs. upward. The women were carried as "FREIGHTS", the children as "HALF-FREIGHTS". At that time - three "Shiplists" were made - two of the Males 16 & upwards Signed, one to Swear allegiance to the "King of England" - the other to take oaths to the "Penn Colonial British Government" - If you intended to live in that British Colony of Penn. The "third Shiplist" was prepared by the Ships "Master", in this case "Samuel Merchant" - He - or Some sub. officer - made this list in their own hand-writing - Spelling the names as they understood the pronunciations. And on this Master's Ship list these "CADUELLE" names were Spelled "CACKELIE." - on the two lists they Signed - they plainly Spelled their names "CADUELLE" - A true Spelling of their names can be deciphered - I have "Photostats" of all three of these "Ship-lists". Knew Mrs [illegible] Children in the family. But -

[illegible] years - and died [illegible] records is 1727)
[illegible] years are "Drains of [illegible]

of "Jacob Keckley Sr." - He evidently came here in the late 1720's or early 1730's. Which is too early for the first "Ship leading records" at Phila. Penn., shown in "Rupp's Thirty Thousand Names", which includes the "Immigrants in Penn" from 1727 to 1776, or 50 years.

Possibly you have, or have heard of the "article" entitled - "THE CACKLEYS", published by the "Hon. Charles B. Johnson" of Clarksburg, W.Virg. In the "Marlinton Pocahontas Times" of Feb. 28-1946. If you do have it - "throw it into the waste-basket", as it is the most "in-information" bunch of "Info." ever loaded to the many - "Cackley, Kackley and Keckley Cousins" that We know of. It is practically All based on "THEORY". And that "Article" was "clipped" by many of our Virg. cousins, and "circulated" all over the various States. We "Historians" now call this "Honorable Chas. B. Johnson" the "HONKEY" C.B.J.

He is a descendant from the (6) "John Kackley Sr. Bch.," thru his daughter (6) Rachel (Ka) YOE - now "YOST". (8) Hannah (Ka) Johnson; (7) John Ka. Johnson; (?) Wm James Johnson -- then (?) Hon. Chas B. Johnson Gen No. 6, of Clarksburg, Va. (an Attorney).

In his article "The Cackleys" - he Setup the "French Family" of "SEBASTIAN CADUELLE" AS our ORIGINAL ANCESTOR - this French name is pronounced in French as if Spelled "CACKELIE". They Sailed from Rotterdam, Holland in the "Princess Augusta", with Samuel Merchant as "Master", PALATINES with their families, in all 330 persons, they touched Cowes, England for clearance, and docked at Phila., Penn. as Vessell No 47 - on Sep. 16-1736. At that time - the "Shiplists" only Showed the "Male passengers" from 16 yrs. upward. The women were carried as "FREIGHTS", the children as "HALF-FREIGHTS". At that time - three "Shiplists" were made - two of the Males 16 & upwards Signed, one to Swear Allegience to the "King of England" - the other to take oaths to the "Penn Colonial British Government" - If you intended to live in that British Colony of Penn. The "third Shiplist" was prepared by the Ships "Master", in this case "Samuel Merchant" - He - or some sub. officer - made this list in their own hand-writing - Spelling the names as they understood the pronunciations. And on this Master's Ship list these "CADUELLE" names were Spelled "CACKELIE" - on the two lists they Signed - they plainly Spelled their names "CADUELLE" - A true Spelling of their names can be deciphered - From "Photostats" of all three of these "Ship-lists". Then were 7 Children in the family. But - only the Father and 2 Sons signed, namely, Sebastian, Diedrich (Signed as DIDDY) and Jean. Sebastian Jr. died en route.

[illegible] 177 acres. [illegible] out did Land in 1727 [illegible] In 1814 the [illegible] acres are "Drains of [illegible]

The "Masters" list showed them as follows:-

No. 70 - SEBASTIAN CACKLEY, age 50 yrs; No. 71 - SEBASTIAN CACKLEY, age 17 yrs. (DIED); No. 72 DIDERICK CACKLEY, age 20 yrs; and No. 73 - Hance (actually Jean) CACKLEY, age 17 yrs. One other male died enroute, namely, HANS JONER.

The "Masters" list showed 120 males, 167 upwards - Less 2 deaths leaves 118 - but only 117 signed the other two lists - So 6 evidently went to other colonies to settle.

A visiting relative of "Chas B. Johnson" - "Mrs. W. E. Collins" (Dau 6) Johnka Sec. dtr. 6) Rachel (Ka) (Coe) now Yost, and others = She Gen. No. 6 - was 6 B. Johnson's "Friend" for he to use his "THROAY" - and she actually believed the "Cagnelins" WERE our original ancestors. I will relate more of "Mrs W. E. Collins" later on.

I could not see these "Cagnelins" as our original ancestors for three reasons - FIRST - because I felt sure in mine NOT FRENCH; Secondly - None of the names of "SEBASTIAN, DIDERICH OR JEAN" ever appeared in the "Jacob Keagy Sr. Records", or any of his Children, or grand Children Books.; THIRDLY - his surname "Jacob Sr." Spelled his name "KEAGLEY", as did his 5 Children.

Therefore, when I had a little spare time in 1953, I began a search in Penn to either PROVE or DISAPPROVE these "Cagnelin's" as our original Ancestors. In about 4 months time, by correspondence, I PROVED (thru the Cagnelin Family Gen. Analyzist Mr. Henry S. Cacklin, Hillsboro, Penn) that the Cagnelins were NOT even a "LINEAGE" by any of Sebastian SRS. 7 Children marrying into either a "KE-KA or COCKLEY" Family. If I could have emitted this "HENRY S. COCKLIN" at first - 10 days or all I would have needed to PROVE them not even a "Lineage".

The "British Anglicising Law" of 1718 in the "Colony of Penn". Finally caught up with the Cagnelin Family in its third generation in Penn., arriving about 1760, when they became - "COCKLEY - COCKLEY & COCKLIN (s)".

Now, about "Mrs. W. E. Collins" - She was not what I would call a "Historian" - but - She was searching for an ancestor who was a "Rev War Soldier" - So - She could become a "D.A.R.". She traced down - "Keagley - Whitsman - Tribby - Yost - Parmer (2 Dtrs) and Collins". She knew that (6) John Keagley Sr - was a "Rev War Soldier" - BUT She could not only the Father and 2 sons signed, namely, Sebastian, Diedrich (signed as DIODY) and Jean. Sebastian Jr. died en route.

The "Masters" list showed them as follows:=

No. 70 - SEBASTIAN CACKENE, age 50 yrs; No. 71 - SEBASTIAN CACKENE, age 22 yrs. (DIED); No. 72 DIDERICK CACKENE, age 20 yrs; and No. 73 - Hance (actually Jean) CACKENE, age 17 yrs. One other male died enroute, namely, HANS JONER.

The "Masters" list showed 120 males, 16 Redemds - Lists 2 females Leaves 118 - but - only 117 signed the other two lists - So 6 evidently went to other Colonies to Settle.

A distant relative of "Chas B. Johnson" - "Mrs. W. E. Collins" (Thru 6) Johnka Sec. dtr. 6) Rachel (Ka) (Coe) nee YOST, and others = The Gen. No. 6 - was 6 B. Johnson's "French" for he to use his "THROAY" - and She actually believed the "Cagueline" WERE our original ancestors. I will relate more of "Mrs W. E. Collins" later on.

I could not see these "Cagueline's" as our original ancestors for three reasons = FIRST - because I felt sure in mine NOT FRENCH; SECONDLY - None of the names of "SEBASTIAN, DIDERICH OR JEAN" ever appeared in the "Jacob Keckley Sr. Records", or any of his Children, or grand Children Bchs.; THIRDLY - his surname "Jacob Jr." Spelled his name "KECKLEY", as did his 5 Children.

Therefore, when I had a little Spare time in 1953, I began a search in Penn. to either PROVE or DISAPPROVE these "Cagueline's" as our original Ancestors. In about 4 mos time, by correspondence, I PROVED (thru the Cagueline Family Gen. Genealogist Mr. Henry S. Cocklin, Hillsboro, Penn.) that the Cagueline's were NOT even a "LINEAGE" by any of Sebastian SRS. 7 Children marrying into either a "KE-KA or COCKLEY" Family. If I could have emitted this "HENRY S. COCKLIN" at first - 10 days mos all I would have needed to PROVE them not even a "Lineage".

The "British Anglicising Law" of 1718 in the "Colony of Penn". Finally Caught up with the Cagueline Family in its third generation in Penn., arriv about 1760, when they became - "COCKLEY" - COCKLEY & COCKLIN (s)".

Now, about "Mrs. W. E. Collins" - She was not what I would call a "Historian" - but - She was Searching for an Ancestor who was a "Rev War Soldier" - So - She could become a "D.A.R". She traced from - "Keckley - Whitman - Tribby - Yost - Barnes (2 Wives) and Collins". She knew that 6) John Keckley Sr - was a "Rev War Soldier" - BUT She could not find his record in either Frederick or Hampshire Counties — for, as she believed the Caquelins were our Original Ancestors — and that in the 1700's boundary lines were quite indefinate — She went up into Lancaster & Cumberland Cos. Penn., and took a "John COCKLEY" (actually Jean Caquelin) Who was shown as a = "Private in Cumberland Co. Pa. Militia, 3rd Battalion in 1781," and she added - "and Lancaster Co. Penn". He - probably never fired a gun at any body in the Rev. War - as the peace treaty was signed in 1781.

The "engineered" her Lineage this way:- Emma Barnes Collins, dtr of Sarah M. Tribby Collins, dtr. of Frances Yost Tribby, dtr of Rachel Cockley (actually Kackley - D.E.K.) Yost, dtr. of John Cockley, and the said John Kackley a son of Jacob Kackley (actually Keckley D.E.K). To support this "John Cockley" under "Ancestors Service" She brought in: An Archivist, Penn. State Library; French Huguenots; Sebastian Caquelin, his Son Sebastian (settled + never reached Penn - D.E.K), Dietrich and Jean; Anne Mary Gegley - a member Penn. Huguenot Soc. from "Jean"; John Cockley owner of Grist mills near Winchester Va; who was one of four brothers who operated Mills near Capon Springs Va; about 1812 (was 1807 D.E.K) John Kackley (KECKLEY - COCKLEY - CACKLEY) came to Guernsey Co. Ohio. Jean near Winchester. Va. The name is also spelled "COGLEY - KEGLEY - KUECHELE - KOCHLEIK & COCKLEY". =

This was sure a "Master-piece-of-deceit" - But She became a "D.A.R".

After - 3 yrs. Searching - I secured her "Old Stell Metal Box" full of letters, papers, notes, Etc - which She accumulated in about 35 years searching - it was at my home for about 2½ years - (just picked up - 2 mos. ago). A copy of the 1893 letter (two of them) by Dr. Ephus Kackley - was found in that "Old Metal Box". I also copied in long hand, two copies each of over 50 letters, which I felt had "possibilities". The two "Dr Ephus Ka." letters were worth more than all the others located.

He was a descendant of (4) Elias Ka. Sr., now commonly known as "ELLIS", through his Son (3) Joseph & Elizabeth (Turner) Ka., then (2) Dr. Ephus Kackley (Son No. 4). Through these two letters of Dr. Ephus Ka's, in the past 2 years we have contacted descendants of about all of (4) Elias Ka Srs. (12 Children, whereas, before that we had only contacted about 5 of them.

Probably I better give you the data, as we now have it for Generation No. 1 of "Jacob Keckley Sr.", who migrated from Lancaster Co. Penn. in 1749 to the "Valley of Virg." (from the (now) find his record in either Frederick or Hampshire Counties — So, as she believed the Caquelins were our Original Ancestors — and that in the 1700's boundry lines were quite indefinate — She went up into Lancaster & Cumberland Cos. Penn., and took a "John COCKLEY" (actually Jean Caquelin) Who was shown as a = "Private in Cumberland Co. Pa. Militia, 3rd Battalion in 1781," and She added - "and Lancaster Co. Penn". Ha - probably never fired a gun at any-body in the Rev. War - as the peace treaty was signed in 1781.

This "engineered" her Lineage this way:- Emma Barnes Collins, dtr of Sarah M. Tribby Collins, dtr. of Frances Yost Tribby, dtr of Rachel Cackley (actually Kackley - D.E.K.) Yost, dtr. of John Cockley, and the Said John Kackley a son of Jacob Kackley (actually Keckley D.E.K). To Support this "John Cockley" under "Ancestors Service" She brought in: An Archivist, Penn. State Library; French Huguenots; Sebastian Caquelin, his Sons Sebastian (settled + never reached Penn - D.E.K), Dietrich and Jean; Anne Mary Gagley - a member Penn. Huguenot Soc. from "Jean"; John Cockley owner of Grist mills near Winchester Va; Who was one of four brothers who operated Mills near Capon Springs Va; about 1812 (was 1807 D.E.K) John Kackley (KEOKLEY - COCKLEY - CACKLEY) came to Guernsey Co. Ohio. Lower near Winchester, Va. The name is also spelled "GOGLEY - KEELEY - KUECHELE - KOCHLEIN & GOCKLEY". =

This was sure a "Master-piece-of-deceit" - but She became a "D.A.R".

After - 3 yrs. Searching - I secured her "Old Stell Metal Box" full of letters, papers, notes, Etc - which She accumulated in about 35 Years Searching - it was at my home for about 2½ years - (just picked up - 2 mos. ago). A Copy of the 1893 letter (two of them) by Dr. Cephas Kackley - was found in that "Old Metal Box". I also copied in long hand, two copies each of over 50 letters, which I felt had "possibilities". The two "Dr Cephas Ka." letters were worth more than all the others located.

He was a descendant of (4) Elias Ka. Sr., now commonly known as "ELLIS", through his Son (4) Joseph & Elizabeth (Turner) Ka., then (3) Dr. Cephas Kackley (Gen No. 4). Through these two letters of Dr. Cephas Ka's, in the past 2 years we have contacted descendants of about all of (4) Elias Ka. Srs. (12 Children, whereas, before that we had only contacts about 5 of them.

Probably I better give you the data, as we now have it for Generation No. 1 of "Jacob Keckley Sr.", who migrated from Lancaster Co. Penn. in 1749 to the "Valley of Virg." (from the town)

Shenandoah Valley) and settled in what is now Frederick County. Here he secured approx. 2,000 acres of land and operated a "Plantation" for about 47 years, or until his death in 1768. Have you ever learned where this plantation was located?

= GEN. NO. 1 = KECKLEY FAMILY HISTORY =

JACOB (NMN) KECKLEY SR. — B- ____ 1701 OR 1700 IN STAMHEIM, WURTTEMBERG, GERMANY. D- FEB 15TH OR 16TH - 1788 IN FREDERICK COUNTY, VIRG. BRO. FEB. 18-1788 IN OLD FURNACE CEMETERY, NOW ST. JOHN'S CHURCH AND CEMETERY, LOCATED ABOUT 2 MILES WEST OF MOUNT WILLIAMS, ON STATE ROUTE NO. 600. MARR. - ABOUT 1740 IN LANCASTER CO. PENN., NAME BELONG — TO -

ANCE ____ ____ — B- ____ -1717; D- ____ -1805 IN FREDERICK CO., VIRG. BRO. IN ST. JOHN'S CEMETERY.

=CHILDREN=

(1) JOHN (NMN) KACKLEY SR. — B- 7-30-1744, LANCASTER CO. PENN. D- 4-23-1823, GUERNSEY CO., OHIO - NEE IN NOBLE CO., 2½ MILES SO. EAST OF PLEASANT CITY, GUERNSEY CO. OHIO. HE HAD 3 SONS & 5 DTRS. - MOST OF THEM LIVED IN GUERNSEY CO. OHIO. HE WAS A REVOLUTIONARY SOLDIER. BURD. IN C.G. RICH CEMETERY S.E. OF PLEASANT CITY, OHIO.
MRG — REBECCA WEISMAN.

(2) JACOB (NMN) KECKLEY JR. — NO BIRTH OR DEATH DATA. MARR. MARGARET ____ - HAD 2 SONS & 3 DTRS. INHERITED THE HOME PLANTATION IN 1788, DIED INTESTATE ONLY A FEW YEARS LATER. ESTATE EVIDENTLY HELD INTACT BY WIFE MARGARET, AS NO RECORDS CAN BE FOUND.

(3) VALENTINE (NMN) CACKLEY SR. — NO BIRTH OR DEATH DATES - MARR. "MARY (NMN) FRYE" OF BASOR SPRINGS, VA., EVIDENTLY A DTR. OF THE EARLY PIONEERS "ABRAHAM & AGNES FRYE" OF FREDERICK CO. VIRG., AND GRD. DTR. OF BENJAMIN FRYE (DIED IN FREDK. CO. 1752). THIS "FRYE" FAMILY CAME FROM MONTGOMERY CO. PENN. IN ABOUT 1738 AND SETTLED ON "CEDAR CREEK". IN ABOUT 1788 "VALENTINE CA. SR." MIGRATED TO WHAT IS NOW POCAHONTAS CO. W. VA., AT THIS TIME WAS GREENBRIER CO., HE SETTLED AT WHAT IS NOW "MILLPOINT, W. VA.", WHICH HE ESTABLISHED AS "CACKLEY TOWN". HERE HE BUILT A MODERN "MILL" FOR THAT TIME; PROJECTED A "TANNERY"; STARTED A "MILL-HARDWARE" AND A "GENERAL STORE". HE ALSO PROMOTED & ENDOURAGED OTHER USEFUL INDUSTRIES IN THAT SECTION. HE ACQUIRED A VERY LARGE LANDED ESTATE. HE HAD 6 SONS & 4 DTRS.

(4) HENRY GEORGE, K(C)ECKLEY SR. — NO BIRTH DATA; D- ABOUT 1816 IN FREDERICK CO. VIRG., WHERE HE LIVED HIS ENTIRE LIFE. MARR. "CATHERINE ____", EVIDENTLY IN FREDERICK CO. VA. THEY HAD 5 SONS & 4 DTRS., ONE SON "BENJAMIN" DIED IN AN INFANCY. THEIR FIRST DTR. REMAINED IN VIRG. ONE (1) SON (HENRY JR.) WAS BORN & DIED AT A FAIRLY YOUNG AGE. THE OTHER CHILDREN MOVED TO GUERNSEY CO. OHIO TO RESIDE, & (1) JACOB & SAMUEL STAYED TO NEAR TOWNSEND IN KNOX CO. OHIO (NEAR VINEYARD).

Assessment Records and many of [illegible]

Shenandoah Valley) and settled in what is now Frederick County. Here he secured approx. 2000 acres of land and operated a "Plantation" for about 47 years, or until his death in 1788. Have you ever learned where this plantation was located?

= GEN. NO. 1 = KECKLEY FAMILY HISTORY =

JACOB (NMN) KECKLEY SR. — B- ____ 1701 OR 1700 IN STARKHEIM, WURTTEMBERG, GERMANY.
D- FEB 15TH OR 16 - 1788 IN FREDERICK COUNTY, VIRG.
BRO. FEB. 18-1788 IN OLD FURNACE CEMETERY, NOW ST. JOHN'S CHURCH AND CEMETERY, LOCATED ABOUT 2 MI. WEST OF MOUNT WILLIAMS, ON STATE ROUTE NO. 600.
MAR'D - ABOUT 1740 IN LANCASTER CO. PENN., WE BELIEVE — TO —

ANCE ____ ____ — B- ____ -1717; D- ____ -1805 IN FREDERICK CO., VIRG.
BRO. IN ST. JOHN'S CEMETERY.

=CHILDREN=

(1) JOHN (NMN) KACKLEY SR. = WIFE — REBECCA WHITEMAN. — B- 7-30-1744, LANCASTER CO. PENN. D- 4-23-1823, GUERNSEY CO. OHIO - NOW IN NOBLE CO., 7½ MILES SO. EAST OF PLEASANT CITY, GUERNSEY CO. OHIO. HE HAD 3 SONS & 5 DTRS. - MOST OF THEM LIVED IN GUERNSEY CO. OHIO. HE WAS A REVOLUTIONARY SOLDIER. BRO. IN C.C. RICH CEMETERY S.E. OF PLEASANT CITY, OHIO.

(2) JACOB (NMN) KECKLEY JR. = — NO BIRTH OR DEATH DATA. MAR'D. MARGARET SECRIST - HAD 2 SONS & 3 DTRS. INHERITED THE HOME PLANTATION IN 1788, DIED INTESTATE ONLY A FEW YEARS LATER. ESTATE EVIDENTLY HELD ENTIRELY BY WIFE MARGARET, AS NO RECORDS CAN BE FOUND.

(3) VALENTINE (NMN) CACKLEY SR. = — NO BIRTH OR DEATH DATES - MAR'D "MARY (NMN) FRYE" OF BAYOR SPRINGS, VA., EVIDENTLY A DTR. OF THE EARLY PIONEERS "ADRIAN & AGNES FRYE" OF FREDERICK CO. VIRG., AND GRD. DTR. OF BENJAMIN FRYE (DIED IN FREDK. CO. IN 1752). THIS "FRYE" FAMILY CAME FROM MONTGOMERY CO. PENN. IN ABOUT 1738 AND SETTLED ON "CEDAR CREEK". IN ABOUT 1788 "VALENTINE CA. SR." MIGRATED TO WHAT IS NOW POCAHONTAS CO. W. VA., AT THIS TIME WAS GREENBRIER CO., HE SETTLED AT WHAT IS NOW "MILLPOINT, W. VA.", WHICH HE ESTABLISHED AS "CACKLEY TOWN". HERE HE BUILT A MODERN "MILL" FOR THAT TIME; PROJECTED A "TANNERY"; STARTED A "TILT-HAMMER" AND A "GENERAL STORE". HE ALSO PROMOTED & ENDOURAGED OTHER USEFUL INDUSTRIES IN THAT SECTION. AND ACQUIRED A VERY LARGE LANDED ESTATE. HE HAD 6 SONS & 4 DTRS.

(4) [illegible] KACKLEY SR. = — NO BIRTH DATA; D - ABOUT 1816 IN FREDERICK CO. VIRG., WHERE HE LIVED HIS ENTIRE LIFE. MAR'D. "CATHERINE ____ ____", EVIDENTLY IN FREDERICK CO. VA. THEY HAD 5 SONS & 4 DTRS., ONE SON "BENJAMIN" DIED AT AN EARLY AGE. THEIR FIRST DESCENDANTS REMAINED IN VIRG., ONE (1) KNOWN SON WAS MAR'D. & DIED AT A FAIRLY YOUNG AGE. THE OTHER CHILDREN SOME TO GUERNSEY CO. OHIO TO ROSCOE, & (?) JACOB & SAMUEL SWOPE TO KNOX CO. IND. (NEAR VINCENNES).

assessment records and census of [illegible]

Page No. 7=

(6) Elizabeth & (6) Mary = { These Two Dtrs. We Still Know NOTHING About - So, Do Not Know How They Spelled Their Last Names, or Whom They Married.

(7) Benjamin (Hons) Keckley - Evidently Died In Dec. 1780, As His Estate Was Appraised On Jan. 8, 1781, Valuation of 5454 Pounds, (About $30,000.00 Then - Dec.), The Sale Held On Jan. 16-1781, Estate Settled On Oct. 5-1781. Only Heir, Wife "Catherine", Who Became "Mrs. Henry Ricards" Before The Estate Was Settled. He One Of The "Appraisers". The Above Data Shows Clearly Why "Benjamin" was NOT Mentioned In His Father's Will - made on Aug 1st-1781. He Had Died About 8+ Months Prior, And Left "No Heirs" - Except - His Wife Catherine. Srs. Will Probated on Oct. 6-1781, In Book 5 Pp 277, Winchester, Virg. Executors Were His Dec. Wife (Not Named) & Son "Elias". The Settlement Of His Estate Was Delayed, Evidently Because "Mrs. Alice Keckley" (His Wife) Did Not "Qualify".

He Was A Revolutionary Soldier In - "Benjamin Cackley" - A Member Of "Daniel Morgan's Co. Of Vira Rifle-men (96). He Was Mustered On Dec 30-1775 At The Battle For Quebec, Canada".

"Note" - More Than Possible Both Last Name On The Rolls From Winchester, Va. To Quebec, Canada, In 1775-1776, Or Any Area, Of The Miles Both Ways. (Only 16 Days Time)

This will give you a good generalidea of Gen No. 1 - and the Three different Spellings of the Original Family Name, which the "Historians" are Sure was not Intentional - but due to "Circumstances". Caused by their "German Boys" pronunciation of their last name. A German always pronounces an "E." as if it was a long or broad "A" in English, therefore, they pronounced their names "Kackley". If a German wrote it down they would spell it "Keckley", but others would spell it either "Kackley" or "Cackley" - both pronounced the same. Therefore - as these German Boys eventually owned "tangible property", the documents were frequently made out Wrongly, and when they disposed of that property they were compelled to use these Wrong Spelled names - which fastened these Wrong Spelled names. In the middle 1700's it was more important to "till the Soil" to make a living - than it was - to worry about the "Spelling of your Name" - therefore - 2 Sons (a) John & (b) Elias) became "Kackley", 1 Son (a) Valentine) became "Cackley", and 2 Sons remained "Keckley" (a) Jacob Jr & (b) Benjamin), Although "Benjamin" was frequently called a "Cackley".

Now, you are probably wondering How I fit into this "Picture" - Well, I am, so to speak - a "Lost Keckley, who can Not "Find His Flock". After 5 Years searching, I am unable to trace my Ancestors further back than my Gt. Gd. Father, Namely, "John Keckley" (1767-?) who was born "Someplace" in Virginia - His parents Names Still Unknown to Me at Writing. He migrated to Jessamine Co. Ky. where he married the name "Christina (Teeter) Lough" (1805-1892) - Sometime they migrated to "Lawrence" Co. Mo. Settled, Farming Co. Seat, where he owned 111 Acres of Land - built a Log cabin and began clearing the land & raising his family of 6 Sons & Daughters - "Jesse Landon (Leon) Ke." was my Father (Cont)

Page No. 2=

(6) Kaleneth B (6) Barly — { Where The Dtrs. We Still Know NOTHING About — So, Do Not Know How They Spelled Their Last Names, Or Whom They Married.

(7) Benjamin (Note) Keckley — Evidently Died In Dec. 1780, As His Estate Was Appraised On Jan. 8, 1781, Valuation of 5454 Pounds, (About $30,000.00 Then - D.E.K.), The Sale Held On Jan. 16-1781, Estate Settled On Oct. 5-1781. Only Heir, Wife "Catherine", Who Became "Mrs. Henry Ricards" Before The Estate Was Settled. He One Of The "Appraisors". The Above Data Shows Clearly Why "Benjamin" was Not Mentioned In His Father's Will - Made On Aug 1st-1781. He Had Died About 8 + Months Prior, And Left "No Heirs" - Except - His Wife Catherine. Srs. Will Probated On Oct. 6-1789, In Book 5 Pp 277, Winchester, Virg. Executors Were His Dear Wife (Not Named) & Son "Elias". The Settlement Of His Estate Was Delayed, Evidently Because "Mrs. Alce Keckley" (His Wife) Did Not "Qualify".

He Was A Rev. War Soldier In - "Benjamin Caokley" - A Member Of "Daniel Morgan's Co. Of Vira Rifle-men (96). He Was Wounded On Dec 30-1775 At The Battle For Quebec, Canada".

"Note" "Note This" Famous Bee-Line Route" Of The Miles From Winchester, Va. To Boston, Mass. In 25 Days, Or An Avge. Of 24 Miles Per Day. (Day In & Day Out)

This will give you a good generalidea of Gen No. 1 - and the three different Spellings of the Original Family Name, which the "Historians" are Sure was not Intentional - but due to "Circumstances". Caused by their "German Boys" pronunciation of their last name. A German Always pronounces an "E." as if it was a long or Broad "A" in English, therefore, they pronounced their names "Kackley". If a German wrote it down They would Spell it "Keckley", but others would Spell it either "Kackley" or "Caokley" - both pronounced the Same. Therefore - as these German Boys eventually owned "tangible property", the documents were frequently Made out WRONGLY, and when they disposed of that property they were compelled to use the Wrong Spelled names - which Furnished the Wrong Spelled names. In the middle 1700's it was more important to "till the Soil" to make a living - than it was - to worry about the "Spelling of your name" - therefore - 2 Sons (4) John & (5) Elias) became "Kackley", 1 Son (6) Valentine) became "Caokley", and 2 Sons remained "Keckley 6)" (6) Jacob Jr & (7) Benjamin), Although "Benjamin" was frequently called a "Caokley."

Now, you are probably wondering How I fit into this "Picture" - Well, I am, So to speak - a "Lost Keckley, who can Not "Find His Flock". After 5 Years searching, I am unable to trace my Ancestors Further back than my Great Grandfather, Namely, "John Keckley" (1803-72) who was born "Someplace" in Virginia - His parents Name Still Unknown to me at Writing. He migrated to Greene Co. Ohio, where he married Miss Mary "Caroline (Green Bough)" (1801-1892) - Later they migrated to "Cornland" & near Utica, Licking Co. Ohio, where he bought 111 Acres of Unimproved Land - built a Log cabin and began clearing the land & raising his family of 6 Sons & 5 Daughters - "Jesse Randolph Keckley" was my Grandfather (cont)

(1837-1900) in 1856, Fielding to Ohio, he mrd. "Amy (nane) Hancock" (1839-1900) that fall they migrated Via "Covered Wagon", with a team of 6) Wm. Solomon Ke. & wife to near Bloomington Ills, McLean Co. Ills, where they settled on a farm - they had 7 sons & 2 dtrs - 6) John Wesley Ke. my father - (1860-1919) mrd. 1884 - "CYNTHIA FREDERICA WHITE" (beat that name - if you can) in McLean Co. Ills. (1866- Still living has birthday, Age - past 91 years) - they had 1 Son & 1 dtr - 6) DAVID HAROLD KEARNEY, the writer - b 1-18-1886 (Millikin U. Grad) mrd. 6-16-1917 Winchester, Ills, "Amy Helen Sims" b- 8-13-1890 Jasper Co. Ills - both living - No Children. The wife a "Stroke victim" - blood clot Nov. 1949 - Left Side effected - Still in a "Wheel-chair", and will be the balance of her days here.

"Public Records" in the Virginias are scarce articles - done to the ravages of three wars - "Tenth, 1812 and Civil". First marriage records in Frederick Co. Va in 1787 - too late to "Catch" any of the 7 Children of Gen. No. 1 of Jacob Ke. S.R. Deaths 178? or 86 yrs. later - Births 1896 or 114 yrs later than marriage.

I am wondering if you have heard about the two books on W. Va. Land Grants, assessments etc. that has recently been published by the State Auditor "Edgar B. Sims". one the "Making of a State" 9"x12" printed in 12 pt type, bound in blue rayed Buckram - 713 pages - covering items from 1731 to 1955. Copies of Land Grants to Geo. Washington a few of his officers and soldiers, and other individuals by the "Crown of England" and the Commonwealth of Virginia, and parts thereof - price $5.00 per copy.

The other book is the "Sims index to Land Grants in W. Virginia", of 864 pages of 50,000 names of persons to whom grants were made in the territory now W. Va, some of which date back to 1746. "Price $20.00 per copy.

I learned of the above books when I bought a modern detail map of "Hampshire & Pocahontas Co's, W. Va." from the "Dept. of Highways" at Charleston, W. Va. - and on Mch. 7th received a nice letter from State Auditor "Edgar B. Sims". In my letter I asked if any "Ke-Kea or Caceley(s)" lived in Charleston, and that I was interested in some way of finding out about Land Grants and assessment lists of these persons in Hampshire Co. from about 1760 onward - As it seems that Counties Public Records were all destroyed during the Civil War. Mr Sims advised that he had made a brief count of the assessment Records and Grants of Hampshire Co. (their earliest record is 1787) We did not find any Grants in these names - but did find in 1801 the name of "Abraham KERKLEY" 177 acres. In 1816 the name is taken as "Abra Lam Kearney" 177 acres on "Drains of Mill Branch". No other to secure detail data for the 2 Visits

(1837-1900) in 1856, Fielding to Ohio, he mrd. Amey (nane) Hancock (1839-1900) that fall they migrated Via "Covered Wagon", with a brother & Wm. Palmer Ke & wife to near Bloomington, McLean Co. Ills, where they settled on a farm - they had 7 sons & 2 dtrs - (1) John Wesley Ke. my father - (1860-1914) mrd. 1884 - "CYNTHIA FREDERICA WHITE" (beat that name - if you can) in McLean Co. Ills. (1866- Still living has birthday, age - past 91 years) - they had 1 Son & 1 dtr - (1) DEWITT KERKLEY, the writer - b 1-18-1886 (Nelson Co. Ky.) mard. 6-16-1917 Winchester, Ills, "Amy Helen Sims" b. 8-13-1890 Jasper Co. Ills. - both living - No Children. The wife a "Stroke victim" - blood clot Nov. 1949 - Left side effected - Still in a "Wheel-chair", and will be the balance of her days here.

"Public Records" in the Virginias are scarce articles - Some due to the ravages of three wars - "Revolu. 1812 and Civil". First marriage records in Frederick Co. Va in 1787 - too late to "Catch" any of the 7 Children of Gen No. 1 of Jacob Ke. SR. Deaths 178? or 86 yrs. later - Births 1896 or 114 yrs later than marriage.

I am wondering if you have heard about the two books on W. Va. Land Grants, assessments etc. that has recently been published by the State Auditor "Edgar B. Sims". one the "Making of a State" 9"x12" printed in 12 pt type, bound in blue & gold Buckram - 713 page - covering items from 1739 to 1955. Copies of Land Grants to Geo. Washington a few of his officers and Soldiers, and other individuals by the "Crown of England" and the Commonwealth of Virginia, and parts thereof - Price $5.00 per copy.

The other book is the "Sims index to Land Grants in W. Virginia", of 864 pages of 50,000 names of persons to whom grants were made in the territory now W. Va, some of which date back to 1746. Price $20.00 per copy.

I learned of the above books when I bought a modern detail map of "Hampshire & Pocahontas Co's, W. Va." from the "Dept. of Highways" at Charleston, W. Va. - and on Mch. 7th received a nice letter from State Auditor "Edgar B. Sims". In my letter I asked if any "Ke-Kar-Carkley(s)" lived in Charleston, and that I was interested in some way of finding out about Land Grants and Assessment lists of these persons in Hampshire Co. from about 1760 onward - As it seems that Counties Public Records were all destroyed during the Civil War. Mr Sims advised that he had made a brief search of the assessment Records and Grants of Hampshire Co. (their earliest records is 1787) We did not find any Grants in those names - but did find in 1821 the name of "Abraham KERKLEY" 177 acres. In 1816 the name is taken as "Abra Kerr Kerkley" 177 acres on "Drains of Mill Branch". No where in person detail data for the 2 Kirk-on the "Assessment Records" of Hampshire County earlier than 1809 do we find the names you list.

In searching our Index on Grants we find that Valentine Keckley obtained a Grant in Bath County, Va. in 1797 on Knapp's Creek. This area went into Pocahontas Co., which was formed in 1821. A search of Pocahontas Co. land assessment book of 1822 (our earliest) reveals a number of "Cackley(s)" Viz:= Valentine, William, Levi, Benjamin & Joseph. (These were all Sons of Valentine Sr. - DEC'D). Pocahontas Co. was formed from Bath, Pendleton & Randolph Co's. in 1821, but the area in which these persons appear to have owned land would be the part from Bath Co. Bath was formed from Augusta Co. in 1790. We do not find any of the names you mentioned in our City or Telephone Directories. A copy of the "Valentine Keckley" Land Grant can be made for you at a price of $1.50. Signed - Edgar B. Sims - State Auditor.

The above info. about the land assessed to "Abraham Ka" was exactly what I was seeking - and - that Info. took me NORTH of Co. I had understood (from the 1893 letter of Dr. Caples Ka.) that "Abraham" Ka. died on his farm which adjoined Dr. C. Ka's father's (Joseph Ka) at near Capon Bridge, Va. (now W.Va) - this death was on 6-15-1849. The main reason for my present interest in "Abraham Ka's Family" IS - that I've now Suspicion our "John Keckley (1801-72)" of Licking Co., Ohio May BE a Son of this (1) "Abraham Kackley", the one of (2) Celias Ka. Sr."

On my detail Co. Map of Hampshire Co., I locate the Streams - "Drains of Mill Branch", just to the N.E. of Capon Bridge, and on the west slopes of "Timber Ridge" - a continuation of the "Big or Great North Mountain Range."

Next - our "Chore" IS to secure a "Times" in Charleston W.Va. to search the U.S. Census Records of "Bloomery Township" near the "Drains of Mill Creek Branch" for the years of 1810 and 1820 of the "Abraham & Christina (whitsell) Keckley Family" to secure all the names of their Children, which will show their nearest aged on these two Census Years. Both Census Lists are necessary, because some shown in the 1810 Census Records by 1820 will be married, and listed elsewhere, and some shown in the 1820 Census would not be born by the time the 1810 Census was taken. If "Abraham Ka." had a Son "John", whose age shown he would be born in 1802 - our "problem" will seem to be "John".

Of course, you know how difficult it is to secure info. by remote control (correspondence), especially 200 years back, as only a few "Census" will give the exact Name of the Adult Male Head to Census detail data for the 2 Visits - And - if you must buy these "Documents" at $1.00 per, they soon run into many Hundreds (over) on the "Assessment Records" of Hampshire County earlier than 1809 do we find the names you list.

In searching our Index on Grants we find that Valentine Keckley obtained a Grant in Bath County, Va. in 1797 on Knapp's Creek. This area went into Pocahontas Co. which was formed in 1821. A search of Pocahontas Co. land assessment book of 1822 (our earliest) reveals a number of "Cackley(s)" viz:= Valentine, William, Levi, Benjamin & Joseph. (These were all Sons of Valentine SR. - DEC'D). Pocahontas Co. was formed from Bath, Pendleton & Randolph Co's. in 1821, but the area in which these persons appear to have owned land would be the part from Bath Co. Bath was formed from Augusta Co. in 1790. We do not find any of the names you mentioned in our City or Telephone Directories. A copy of the "Valentine Keckley" Land Grant can be made for you at a price of $1.50. Signed - Edgar B. Sims - State Auditor.

The above info. about the land assessed to "Abraham Ka" was exactly what I was seeking - and - that Info. took me NORTH of G. I had understood (from the 1893 letter of Dr. Cephas Ka.) that "Abraham" Ka. died on his farm which adjoined Dr. C. Ka's father's (Joseph Ka) at near Capon Bridge, Va. (now W.Va) - this death was on 6-15-1849. The main reason for my present interest in "Abraham Ka's Family" IS - that I've now Suspicion that "John Keckley (1801-72)" of Licking Co., Ohio may BE a Son of this (1) "Abraham Kackley", the one of (2) "Celias Ka. SR."

On my detail Co. Map of Hampshire Co., I locate the Stream - "Drains of Mill Branch", just to the N.E. of Capon Bridge, and on the west slopes of "Timber Ridge" - a continuation of the "Big or Great North Mountain Range."

Now - our "Chore" IS to secure a "Times" in Charleston W.Va. to search the U.S. Census Records of "Bloomery Township" near the "Drains of Mill Creek Branch" for the years of 1810 and 1820 of the "Abraham & Christina (whitsell) Kackley Family" to secure all the names of their children which will show their nearest ages on these two Census years. Both Census Records are necessary, because some shown in the 1810 Census Records by 1820 will be married and listed elsewhere, and some shown in the 1820 Census would not be born by the time the 1810 census was taken.

If "Abraham Ka." had a Son "John" whose age shows he would be born in 1802 - our "problem" will seem to be "Solved".

Of course, you know how difficult it is to secure info. by remote control (correspondence), especially 200 years back, as only a few "Census" will take the Court House or the State Dept. of Health to Census detail data for the P. History - And - if you must buy these "Documents" at $1.00 per, they soon run into many Hundreds (over) of dollars - but if you try to make too many "personal calls" you may, like many former Historians, become a "Public Charge". "Public Genealogists" at from $4.00 to $6.00 per hour also soon become quite expensive.

Mr. Campbell's last "Mr. Willard H. Kackley" of Byesville, Ohio invested $8.00 in one, which produced the following item taken from "Rev. Christian Streit's" DIARY:= "FEB. 18-1788 - BURIED AT OLD FURNACE, JACOB KECKLEY, AGED 86 YEARS, FROM STAMHEIM, WORTTEMBERG. TEXT REV. 14:13".=

We have Record of this "Rev. C. Streit" the Lutheran Church Minister at Winchester From July 19- 1785 to 1814 - as his name appears on many of the Keckley & Kackley Boys & Girls Marriage Records of that Era, and we had utmost confidence in Re and his records, therefore, we feel the above "Diary Entry" is as authentic as any "Public Record". All of Jacob Ke Sr's Sons, except Benjamin - and his Wife "Alce" WERE living when he was buried on Feb. 18-1788- therefore, he secured the above Info. for his Sermons and "Diary" - direct from the Family, So, it MUST BE AUTHENTIC.

The above item is one entitled Hitems for "Jacob Ke. Sr.", Namely, his approx. Birthyear, Death date, Nationality - and above all that his original home here in the "Colonies" WAS "KECKLEY", which I have contended for the past 5 years, although in his Will the "Maker" spelled it "Kackley" - which "Jacob" signed with "his mark". If he could NOT SIGN his own name - then - he evidently could not read either, so, he could not determine that his name WAS INCORRECTLY SPELLED.

In re - your Original Ancestor's name - I imagine that you may have discovered by now that it was "Mc KIEK" - German - and pronounced as "Mc KEEK or Mc KEIK". And the spelling became changed by the pronunciation, the same as the "KECKLEY form".

In further reference to the "Rev. Streit Diary Entry" - I felt that this "Diary" would disclose many items that the Dieterich & Hampshire County Public Records did not yet show - and that it would be foolish to pay this "Profit Genealogist" $8.00 every time my Suspicions on "Item" might be found in it - So - Why not try to locate that "Diary".

So, I wrote the present Minister of the Winchester Lutheran Church, and learned that the Church Trustees had published in 1954 a book entitled "This Heritage", which included the "Rev. Streit Diary" (Complete), obtainable at $4.00 per copy. So, I sent check and had a copy within a week. The "Diary" comes 49 pages - but - began of dollars - but - if you try to make too many "personal calls" you may, like many former Westerners, become a "Public Charge". "Public Genealogists" at from $4.00 to $6.00 per hour also soon become quite expensive.

Mr. Campbell's asst. "Mr. Willard H. Kackley" of Byesville, Ohio invested $8.00 in one, which produced the following item taken from "Rev. Christian Streit's" DIARY:= "FEB. 18-1788 - BURIED AT OLD FURNACE, JACOB KECKLEY, AGED 86 YEARS, FROM STAMHEIM, WORTTEMBERG. TEXT REV. 14:13".=

We have knowledge of this "Rev. C. Streit" the Lutheran Church Minister at Winchester from July 19- 1785 to 1814 - as his name appears on many of the Keckley & Kackley Boys & Girls Marriage Records of that Era, and we had utmost confidence in Re and his records, therefore, We feel the above "Diary Entry" is as authentic as any "Public Record". All of Jacob Ke Sr's Sons, except Benjamin - and his Wife "Alce" WERE living when he was buried on Feb. 18-1788- therefore, he secured the above Info. for his Sermon and "Diary" - direct from the Family, So, it MUST BE AUTHENTIC.

The above item to me settled 4 items for "Jacob Ke. Sr.", namely, his approx. Birthyear, Death date, Nationality - and above all that his original home Here in the "Colonies" WAS "KECKLEY", which I have contended for the past 5 years, although in his Will the "Maker" spelled it "Kackley" - which "Jacob" signed with "his mark". If he could NOT SPELL his own name - then - he evidently could not read either, so, he could not determine that his name WAS INCORRECTLY SPELLED.

In re - your Original Ancestor's name - I imagine that you may have discovered by now that it was "Mc. KIEL" - German - and pronounced as "Mc. KEEL or Mc KEEN." And the spelling became changed by the pronunciation, the same as the "KECKLEY from".

In further reference to the "Rev. Streit Diary Entry" - I feel that this "Diary" would disclose many items that the Frederick & Hampshire County Public Records did not yet show - and that it would be foolish to pay this "Profit Genealogist" $8.00 every time we suspicioned an "item" might be found in it - So - Why not try to locate that "Diary".

So, I wrote the present Minister of the Winchester Lutheran Church, and learned that the Church Trustees had published in 1954 a book entitled "This Harrison", which included the "Rev. Streit Diary" (Complete), obtainable at $4.00 per copy. So, I sent check and had a copy within a week. The "Diary" covers 43 Pages - but - began on July 19-1783, and ended abruptly on Nov. 28-1786 - Not even Completing the year 1788 - a coverage of about 3 1/3 years ONLY. Very disappointing, as I anticipated "Diaries" covering possibly 40 or 50 years. Only two "Keckley" items appeared, namely, the burial of Jacob Sr., and the election on Dec. 15-1787 of "Ellis Keckley" as a Reformed Deacon of the "Old Furnace Church". Two other "Keckley" names appeared in the 391 page Book, namely "Harry B." as Elder 1922-25 and Financial Secy. 1915- at Winchester, and "Frank" as a confirmed member in the Dec 31-1953 listing.

And during the 3 1/3 years of the "Diary" Rev. Streit gave 386 Sermons, 129 baptisms, 163 Confirmations, had 157 Marriage Ceremonies & 43 Funerals. but not a Single Marriage of a "Keckley or a Kackley". He also preached at many other Lutheran Churches in that Section - Also 3 times at Phila, Penn., one at Lancaster, Penn., Hagerstown, Md. & Jonestown. These trips were all made on "horseback" - took one week to ride to Phila., or two weeks per sermon. He came to Lancaster, Penn. "Rev. G. Streit" died in Winchester on 3-10-1817. Served there 1785-1794 & 1804-1812 = 18 years, and at Middletown New Woodstock 1795-1803 or 9 years - a total of 27 years in "The Valley of Virginia". He died at age of 67 years 9 mos. & 3 days. If you are a "Lutheran" - the book "This Heritage" would be very interesting to you, as it covers the founding of the Lutheran Churches in Virginia.

If you are interested in W. Virg., write "Edgar B. Sims" State Auditor W. Virg., Charleston, W. Va., for a copy of his circular on his "Bonds" - and copies of the "Map of present W. Va. as of 1938 - and as of 1780", which will give you an excellent idea of the Section you were born in, and for 25¢ you may obtain a very detail Map of Pocahontas Co. W. Va., which even shows all farm residences.

Since Auditor Sims last name is the same as my wife's "Maiden" name - I am "playing a few cards" with he - for some additional info in "Hampshire County", because, the records at Romney now date back to only 1865 - Fire ones destroyed during "Civil War". He seems very accommodating - So - to further the Sales of his "Bonds" - I may get some "extra favors".

I have not yet asked "Bill" to pinpoint the two "Mills" built by Valentine Keckley Sr. - are they on the Small Stream that flows thru Millpoint and empties into the "Green Brier River" about 1 1/2 Miles away, or on the Green Brier? I have assumed that neither are now being operated. The detail Co. Map published by the State shows "Saw Mills", but No "Grist Mills". A "Seasonal Industry" is shown at "Millpoint", Have a Church, Building, 2 Store Houses, and one Home Owner - and nearby 2 Farm Homes and one Home Owner. "Bill" tells me the population is 15 persons.

(over)

on July 9-1782, and ended abruptly on Nov. 28-1786 - Not even Completing the year 1788 - a coverage of about 3 1/3 years ONLY. Very disappointing, as I anticipated "Diaries" covering possibly 40 or 50 years. Only two "Keckley" items appeared, namely, the burial of Jacob Sr., and the election on Dec. 15-1787 of "Ellis Keckley" as a Reformed Deacon of the "Old Furnace Church". Two other "Keckley" names appeared in the 391 page Book, namely "Harry B." as Elder 1922-25 and Financial Secy. 1915- at Winchester, and "Frank" as a confirmed member in the Dec 31-1953 listing.

And during the 3 1/3 years of the "Diary" Rev. Streit gave 386 Sermons, 129 baptisms, 163 Confirmations, had 157 Marriage Ceremonies & 43 Funerals. but not a Single Marriage of a "Keckley or a Kackley". He also preached at many other Lutheran Churches in that Section - also 3 times at Phila, Penn., one at Lancaster, Penn., Hagerstown, Md. & Jonestown. These trips were all made on "horseback" - took one week to ride to Phila., or two weeks per sermon. He came to Lancaster, Penn. "Rev. G. Streit" died in Winchester on 3-10-1817. Served there 1785-1794 & 1804-1817 = 18 years, and at Middletown Now Woodstock 1795-1803 or 9 years - a total of 27 years in "The Valley of Virginia". He died at age of 67 years 9 mos. & 3 days. If you are a "Lutheran" - the book "This Heritage" would be very interesting to you, as it covers the founding of the Lutheran Churches in Virginia.

If you are interested in W. Virg., write "Edgar B. Sims" State Auditor W. Virg., Charleston, W. Va., for a copy of his circular on his "Books" - and copies of the "Map of present W. Va. as of 1778 - and as of 1780", which will give you an excellent idea of the Section you were born in, and for 25¢ you may obtain a very detail Map of Pocahontas Co. W. Va., which even shows all farm residences.

Since Auditor Sims last name is the same as my wife's "Maiden" name - I am "playing a few cards" with he - for some additional info in "Hampshire County", because, the records at Romney now date back to only 1865 - prior ones destroyed during "Civil War". - He seems very accomodating - so - to further the Sales of his "Books" - I may get some "extra favors".

I have not yet asked "Bill" to pinpoint the two "Mills" built by Valentine Keckley Sr. - are they on the Small Stream that flows thru Millpoint and empties into the "Green Brier River" about 1/2 Mile away, or on the Green Brier? I have assumed that neither are now being operated. The detail Co. Map published by the State shows "Saw Mills", but No "Grist Mills" - a "Seasonal Industry" as shown at "Millpoint", like a Canning Building, a Few Homes, and one Home Large - and nearby 2 Farm Homes and one Home Large. "Bill" tells me the population is 15 persons.

(over)

For the past 18 months I have been "processing" a Branch of the "Abraham Kaceley's" from "(13) Hamilton Jefferson ("Jeff") and Margaret ("Peggy" Parish) Kaceley" who came from Hampshire Co. Va, in 1855 to "Coles County, Ills.", they never wrote to any of their Virg. Relatives, So, they were LOST for 100 years, or until I located a descendent's Branch at Charleston, Ills, through a death notice published in our local Newspaper in Sep. 1955. There were 10 Children in this "Jeff & Peggy Ka" family, however, the ones I contacted only knew of 6 - and I had come to Coles Co. with their Parents - or rather I and one knew these later ones. No one knew these Childrens parents names, when or where they died. But, from this meger beginning I have now Contacted all 8 Ills. Bchs., except one dtr. who may have died "Single" - None knew of her. I have not had time to answer "Leads" - but I believe these Bchs. now total more than 600 descendants. They are now scattered over, Ills, Ind., Ohio, Fla., Mo., Kans., Iowa, Colo., and Calif.

The "original Charleston Ills. Story" was that the parents both died Suddenly of "Cholera" leaving these 6 orphans - their "John" then only 2 years old - this was supposed to be Shortly after they came to Coles Co. Ills. - No one knew where any of the other Bchs. descendants were now living - or very little of Anywhere. I then got busy and procured the 1850 U.S. Census of the family in Hampshire Co. Va., then later on the 1860 " " " " " " then Cumberland Co. Ills - the two Census Reports gave me the names of all 10 Childrens, and their nearest ages on those two years, which both checked "O.K." - I learned, eventually that one Geo. (5) "John Sims Ka." served in the "Civil War", So, I secured his data from the "Archivist of Ills. State Library," Spfld. Ills. and learned he was enlisted as "Joab or Jacob CRACKLEY", and that in the Same Co & Regiment there was an "Elias J. CRACKLEY", whom they stated Shared the same in all respects, except for name.

After I secured the two "Census Reports" - it was easy to "Suppose" that "Elias J Crackley" - was "(5) Elias James Kaceley". Now evidence of carelessness in listing "Civil War Soldiers" - Fully 50% more WRONGLY listed. I then secured his record from Springfield, and it was NOT the Same as his brother "John Sims's", while served all thru the War - and Elias J. died of a disease at Nashville, Tenn on Feb 27 1864 - and is buried in the "National Century" at Nearby Madison, Tenn - A request is now in Work Dept. for what actual date they have - as to exact to date, and his Marital Status. So, I am "hoping" on this item.

For the past 18 months I have been "processing" a Branch of "Abraham Kaceley's" son "(13) Hamilton Jefferson ("Jeff") and Margaret ("Peggy" Parish) Kaceley" who came from Hampshire Co. Va, in 1855 to "Coles County, Ills.", they never wrote to any of their living Relatives, So, they were LOST for 100 years, or until I located a descendent's Branch at Charleston, Ills, through a death notice published in our local Newspaper in Sep. 1955. There were 10 Children in this "Jeff & Peggy Ka" family, however, the ones I contacted only knew of 6 - and 4 had come to Coles Co. with their Parents - or rather 3 and one born there later on. No one knew these Childrens parents names, when or where they died. But, from this meger beginning I have now Contacted all 8 Ills Brhs., except one dtr. who may have died "Single" - none knew of her. I have not had time to answer "Leads" - but I believe these Brhs. now total more than 600 descendants. They are now scattered over, Ills, Ind., Ohio, Fla., Mo., Kans., Iowa, Colo., and Calif.

The "original Charleston Ills. Story" was that the parents both died Suddenly of "Cholera" leaving these 6 orphans - their "John" then only 2 years old - this was supposed to be Shortly after they came to Coles Co. Ills. - No one knew where any of the other Brhs. descendants were now living - or very little of Anywhere. I then got busy and procured the 1850 U.S. Census of the family in Hampshire Co. Va., then later on the 1860 " " " " " " then Cumberland Co. Ills - the two Census Reports gave me the names of all 10 Childrens, and their nearest ages on those two years, which both Checked "O.K." - I learned, eventually that one Son (5) "John Sims Ka." served in the "Civil War", So, procured his data from the "Archivist of Ills. State Library," Spfld. Ills. and learned he was entered as "Joab or Jacob CRACKLEY", and that in the Same Co & Regiment there was an "Elias J. CRACKLEY", whom they stated Shown the same in all respects, except for name.

After I received the two "Census Reports" - it was easy to "Suppose" that "Elias J Crackley" - was "(5) Elias James Kaceley". Now evidence of carelessness in listing "Civil War Soldiers" - Surely So as was HENCEY Lists. I then secured his record from Springfield, and it was NOT the Same as his brother "John Sims's", and he served all thru the War - and Elias J. died of a disease at Nashville, Tenn on Sept 27, 1864 - and is buried in the "Nat'l. Century" at Nearby Madison, Tenn - A request is now in Work, D.C. for what detail data they may have - as to exact dates, and his Marital Status. So, I am "hoping" on this item.

Research - on a Fch. of 10 Children - there are a few that "have" giving their Occ. Date - and - when other Bks can NOT give them Date - you are forced to seek "Public Records" - and if not convenient to "View", you must buy them, which soon runs into many dollars extra expense.

To save expense, I plan to soon go to Charleston, Ills, and have them "dig out" the dusty Birth & Death record books for me to peruse, begining with No 1 - and on the Marg. Books - from about 1860 onward. This will involve probably two or three days time - but will cost about $100.00 in "fees" for Certified Records. Before the trip - I plan to go to Springfield, and search the "1865 State Census" "micro-film-records" (with a good magnifing glass), to help determine if the parents were then Still Living - if not - then I will know they died Sometime between Aug 4 - 1860 (Census taking date), and the date the State Census taken in 1865 - I must search in both Counties of "Coles & Cumberland" to determine this. Then Someway I must learn their approx. death dates, and try to find their burial place in Some rural Cemetery - a tough jit.

Most "Historians" take what is sent them, and leave the "Stubborn" branch go - but that makes a very poor "F. History" - So, I make every effort possible to complete every Branch 100% - If they do not take too much money to complete.

By the way - can you furnish me the names and address of any of the descendants of - (a) "Joseph & Susan (McClure) Ca". and b) "Benjamin & Fanny (McKeever) Caseley" who migrated to Jackson Co. Ohio? - We have been unable to locate any of these Branches.

I also note you quote "Thomas Hill's" wife as Ann Cackley - We have her recorded as "Hyde". Are we WRONG?

I also have the name & adr. of "Willa Belle Cackley", 1315 East 62nd Terrace, Kans. City, Mo. - have never written her - Where does She "fit in the Cackley Bks.?

The answers to the above 3 Questions, I would like to "relay" to "Mr. Finley B. Campbell", who Is processing the "Cackley Branches".

Mike, I must confess that this letter has run into a "book", whereas, I only intended to write 2 or 3 pages - So - I must beg your pardon. Probably much of this "Keckley & Kacaley" data will Not interest you too much - but - while I was writing, I thought you would be interested in the "Irish Connection", so as to build up to your Ancestor "Ann Valentine (nee) Cackley SR."

Mr. Campbell Is a former "Justice of the Peace", and still (over)

Research - on a Fch. of 10 Children - there are a few that "Leave" giving their Bths. Data - and - when other Bths can NOT give their Data - you are forced to seek "Public Records" - and if not convenient to "View", you must buy them, which soon runs into many dollars extra expense.

To save expense, I plan to soon go to Charleston, Ills, and have them "dig out" the dusty Birth & Death record books for me to peruse, begining with No. 1 - and on the Marg. Books - from about 1860 onward. This will involve probably two or three days time - but will save about $100.00 in "fees" for Certified Records. Before the trip - I plan to go to Springfield, and search the "1865 State Census" "micro-film-records" (with a good magnifing glass), to help determine if the parents were then Still Living - if not - then I will know they died Sometime between Aug 4-1860 (Census taking date), and the date the State Census taken in 1865 - I must search in both Counties of "Coles & Cumberland" to determine this. Then Someway I must learn their approx. death dates, and try to find their burial place in Some rural Cemetery - a tough jit.

Most "Historians" take what is sent them, and leave the "Stubborn" branch go - but that makes a very poor "F. History" - So, I make every effort possible to complete every Branch 100% - IF they do not take too much money to complete.

By the way - can you furnish me the names and address of any of the descendants of - (a) "Joseph & Susan (McClure) Ca". and (b) "Benjamin & Fanny (McKeever) Cackley" who migrated to Jackson Co. Ohio? - We have been unable to locate any of these Branches.

I also note you quote "Thomas Hill's" wife as Ann Cackley - We have her recorded as "Hyde". Are we WRONG?

I also have the name & adds. of "Willa Belle Cackley", 1315 East 62nd Terrace, Kans. City, Mo. - have never written her - Where does She "fit in the Cackley Bks.?

The answers to the above 3 Questions, I would like to "relay" to "Mr. Finley B Campbell", who Is processing the "Cackley Branches".

Mike, I must confess that this "letter" has run into a "book", whereas, I only intended to write 2 or 3 pages - So - I must beg your pardon. Probably much of this "Keckley & Kackley" data will Not interest you too much - but - while I was writing, I thought you would be interested in the "Irish Connection", so as to build up to your Ancestor "Ann Valentine (nee) Cackley SR."

Mr. Campbell Is a former "Justice of the Peace", and still (over) does considerable "Forest and Ohio State Income Tax work" at his home - and now is his busy season, So, if you write him it might be a little time before you hear from him - So - do not despair. And, in the meantime - if you would like to look over my data - almost any time will be suitable - as I put in about 10 hours daily on this I. History work - letters come in almost daily from the hundreds of contacts I am making - but - you better give me a few days advance notice, as once in a great while we are away from home. Our over-night accomodations are usually not too good, as we rent out all spare rooms to male roomers, but, of course, now and then we do hav a "Vacancy", when we can accomodate you - be sure and bring the "Mrs.", as She and the wife can "canfab" while you & I do the History work.

So, with this, I will bring this lengthy letter to a close, write when it may be convenient - and if you hav any questions - fire them to me - and I will do my best to answer them.

Very truly yours,

H. Earl Keckley,
938 - West Wood St.,
Decatur, Illinois

(Letter No. 1632)
(Reading time 1 hr.)

P.S. -

When you reply - the "Questions" are marked ×× in left margin, So as to save rereading the whole letter.

HEK

does considerable "Federal and Ohio State Income Tax work" at his home - and now is his busy season, So, if you write him it might be a little time before you hear from him - So - do not despair. And, in the meantime - if you would like to look over my data - almost any time will be suitable - as I put in about 10 hours daily on this F. History work - letters come in almost daily from the hundreds of contacts I am making - but - you better give me a few days advance notice, as once in a great while we are away from home. Our over-night accomodations are usually not too good, as we rent out all spare rooms to male roomers, but, of course, now and then we do have a "Vacancy", when we can accomodate you - be sure and bring the "Mrs.", as She and the wife can "canfab" while you & I do the History work.

So, with this, I will bring this lengthy letter to a close, write when it may be convenient - and if you have any questions - fire them to me - and I will do my best to answer them.

Very truly yours,

A. Earl Keckley,
938 - West Wood St.,
Decatur, Illinois

(Letter No. 1632.)
(Reading time 1 hr.)

P.S. -

When you reply - the "Questions" are marked xx in left margin, so as to save rereading the whole letter.

E.E.K.

Decatur, Illinois
March 24, 1957

Dr. John O. McNeel
1127 Pine Street
St. Louis 1, Missouri

Dear Dr. McNeel:

Your letter of the 22nd inst. arrived this a. m., in re: the postoffice of Millpoint, W. Va., originally Cackleytown, and same inquiry concerning the Cackley Family.

You seem to have settled at least the time that Millpoint, Virg., (now W. Va.) became a U. S. Post Office, however, the name of the town could have been changed earlier than the date the P. O. was established.

I have a copy of a letter written on Feb. 6, 1893 by Dr. Cephus Kackley Maysville, Ky., to Wm. H. Cackley, of Ronceverte, W. Va., (this Wm. H. C. the son (8) Valentine Cackley, Jr., not the Wm. H. Ca of near Millpoint) in which he was seeking info. about the Virg. Cackleys - and his letter contained the following paragraph - "In a list of battle skirmishes in Va. I find the name Cackleytown. I could not find such a postoffice. Where is it? I think Wm. Cackley spoke of the place when at father's."

Of course this has reference to Civil War skirmishes and this would be thirty years after the date the P. O. Dept. Records show that the town was Millpoint. (1865 less 1835=30 years). However between 1862 and 1865 the residents and the Civil War soldiers and correspondents evi ently still called the little village Cackleytown. The above listed 1893 letter was where I conceived the idea that Cackleytown did not become Millpoint until the latter part of the Civil War, or later. The above named Dr. Cephus Kackley was of the 4th generation, a son of (4) Joseph (none) and Elizabeth (Turner) Ka., and he a son of (4) Elias (none) Kackley, Sr., a son of Jacob Keckley, Sr. (1701-1788), or Gen. No. 1.

You ask the privilidge to look over my Cackley data at some time and that Bill Cackley may have given me much of this material. Bill had sent no data, until a letter came on Mch. 22nd, in which he sent Info. for his branch, his parents, grandparents, and grat grd. parents (Gen. No. 3) of Levi (none), Sr., and Nancy (none) Bradshaw Cackley. He sent no data, not even names for his gradfather (5 Wm. James Ca.), 3 brothers and two sisters,

I note that you are compiling a History of the McNeel Family, therefore, I am wondering how far back you may know about the original Keckley ancestors, who came to the colonies and if you know about the three spellings of the original family name of - Keckley -- namely - Keckley, Kackley & Cackley.

Before I forget it - you are welcome to come look over my Keckley FAmily History Data, at any time it may suit your convienence - however - I wish to state that my "Cackley Branches" data IS LIMITED, as I personally have contacted none of the "Cackley Branches" - I ran onto Bill in a rather peculiar manner. I wrote the Assoc. of Commerce at Millpoint not then knowing it was such a small village - my letter was sent to the Prison Camp - then relayed to Wm. H. Cackley of the Twin Oakes Farm - and he replied - my inquiry concerned the date that Cackleytown became Millpoint - and Bill did not know.

I will explain a little more about the Keckley F. History, processiong of data It looks like we will not be compiling for 20 or 30 years yet. There are at present 3 Historians and a General Geneologist - so engaged. I have been working on this history for only about 5½ years. The Gen'l Geneologist about 8 years - at present we have catalogued probably over 9,000 ancestors and descendants. I alone - have added over 4,000 in my 5½ years, or almost ½ of our total. I put in about 3 years on the Keckley Bohn. ONLY, and while doing so - ran into a Kackley Boh. out in Nebraska, who changed his last name to Keckley - and at that time he had 8 children, ranging in age from 6 to 22 years - and they all became Keckley(s) without any legal procedure EXCEPT HIS oldest s on who applied

Decatur, Illinois
March 24, 1957

Dr. John O. McNeel
1127 Pine Street
St. Louis 1, Missouri

Dear Dr. McNeel:

Your letter of the 22nd inst. arrived this a. m., in re: the postoffice of Millpoint, W. Va., originally Cackleytown, and same inquiry concerning the Cackley Family.

You seem to have settled at least the time that Millpoint, Virg., (now W. Va.) became a U. S. Post Office, however, the name of the town could have been changed earlier than the date the P. O. was established.

I have a copy of a letter written on Feb. 6, 1893 by Dr. Cephus Kackley Maysville, Ky., to Wm. H. Cackley, of Ronceverte, W. Va., (this Wm. H. C. the son (8) Valentine Cackley, Jr., not the Wm. H. Ca of near Millpoint) in which he was seeking info. about the Virg. Cackleys - and his letter contained the following paragraph - "In a list of battle skirmishes in Va. I find the name Cackleytown. I could not find such a postoffice. Where is it? I think Wm. Cackley spoke of the place when at father's."

Of course this has reference to Civil War skirmishes and this would be thirty years after the date the P. O. Dept. Records show that the town was Millpoint. (1865 less 1835=30 years). However between 1862 and 1865 the residents and the Civil War soldiers and correspondents evi ently still called the little village Cackleytown. The above listed 1893 letter was where I conceived the idea that Cackleytown did not become Millpoint until the latter part of the Civil War, or later. The above named Dr. Cephus Kackley was of the 4th generation, a son of (4) Joseph (none) and Elizabeth (Turner) Ka., and he a son of (4) Elias (none) Kackley, Sr., a son of Jacob Keckley, Sr. (1701-1788), or Gen. No. 1.

You ask the privilidge to look over my Cackley data at some time and that Bill Cackley may have given me much of this material. Bill had sent no data, until a letter came on Mch. 22nd, in which he sent Info. for his branch, his parents, grandparents, and grat grd. parents (Gen. No. 3) of Levi (none), Sr., and Nancy (none) Bradshaw Cackley. He sent no data, not even names for his gradfather (5 Wm. James Ca.), 3 brothers and two sisters,

I note that you are compiling a History of the McNeel Family, therefore, I am wondering how far back you may know about the original Keckley ancestors, who came to the colonies and if you know about the three spellings of the original family name of - Keckley -- namely - Keckley, Kackley & Cackley.

Before I forget it - you are welcome to come look over my Keckley FAmily History Data, at any time it may suit your convienence - however - I wish to state that my "Cackley Branches" data IS LIMITED, as I personally have contacted none of the "Cackley Branches" - I ran onto Bill in a rather peculiar manner. I wrote the Assoc. of Commerce at Millpoint not then knowing it was such a small village - my letter was sent to the Prison Camp - then relayed to Wm. H. Cackley of the Twin Oakes Farm - and he replied - my inquiry concerned the date that Cackleytown became Millpoint - and Bill did not know.

I will explain a little more about the Keckley F. History, processiong of data It looks like we will not be compiling for 20 or 30 years yet. There are at present 3 Historians and a General Genealogist - so engaged. I have been working on this history for only about 5½ years. The Gen'l Genealogist about 8 years - at present we have catalogued probably over 9,000 ancestors and descendants. I alone - have added over 4,000 in my 5½ years, or almost ½ of our total. I put in about 3 years on the Keckley Bchs. ONLY, and while doing so - ran into a Kackley Bch. out in Nebraska, who changed his last name to Keckley - and at that time he had 8 children, ranging in age from 6 to 22 years - and they all became Keckley(s) without any legal procedure EXCEPT his oldest s on who applied with his father. This instance threw me into processing "Kackley" Branches - before - I was ready to do so - therefore, for the pasy 2½ years + - I have been "processing" Kackley" Branches.

Our "Gen'l Genealogist" - "Mr. Finley B. Campbell" of Pleasant City, Ohio - has been "processing" mostly - "Cackley" Branches, therefore, he has MORE "CACKLEY" detail data than we other 3 "Historians" - though - we all do know about what work each of we four are doing.

I have, I would roughly say - probably 300 "Cackley" names, beginning with Gen. No. 2 of "Valentine and Mary (Frye) Cackley" and their 6 sons and 4 daughters - names only - no dates - on the 3rd Gen"s - I have a few dates - but from the 4th Gen. onward on some of the Bchs. I do have both names and dates. Mr. Campbell, I am sure has much more "Cackley data" than he has sent me.

We four "Historians" searched for some 8 years to finally PROVE that the ORIGINAL name here in the "Colonies" was "Keckley" but - we still can Not locate the leading record of the 1st Gen'rn. of "Jacob Keckley, Sr." - He evidently came here in the late 1720's or early 1730's. Which IS too early for the first "ship loading recors" at Phila., Penn., shown in " Rupp"s Thirty Thousand names", which includes the Immigrants in Penn." from 1727 to 1776, or 50 years.

Possibly you have, or have heard of the "article" entitled - "The Cackleys" published by the "Hon. Charles B. Johnson" of Clarksburg, W/ Virg. In the "Marlinton Pocahontas Times" of Feb. 28, 1946. If you do have it - "throw it into the waste-basket" as it is the most "in-informative bunch of 'Info.'" lore handed to the many - "Cackley, Kackley and Keckley Cousins" that we know of. It is practically ALL based on "Theory." And that "Article" was "clipped" by many of our Virg. Cousins and "circulated" all over the various states. We Historians now call this "Honorable Chas. B. Johnson" the "Honery" C. B. J.

He is a descendantx from the 1) "John Kackley, Sr, Bch.," thru his daughter (8) Hannah (ka) Johnson; (1) John Ka. Johnson; (?) Wm. James Johnson - then the ?) Hon. Chas. B. Johnson, Gen. No. 6, of Clarksburg (an attorney).

In his article "The Cackleys" - he sets up the French Family" of "Sebastian Caquelin" As our originial ancestor - this French name is pronounced in French as if spelled Cackelie. They sailed from Rotterdam, Holland, in the "Princess Augusta" with Samuel Marchant as "Master", PALATINES with their families, in all 330 persons, they touched Cowes, England, for clearance, and docked at Phila., Penn., as vessel No. A-2, on Sept. 16, 1736. At that time the "Ship-lists" only showed the "male passengers" from 16 yrs. upward. The women were carried as "Freights", the children as "Half-Freights." At that time - three "ship-lists" were made - two, the males 16 & upward signed, one to foresware alligiance to the "King of England" - the other to take oaths to the "Penn. Colonial British Government" - If - you intendéd to live in that British Colony of Penn. The "third ship-list" was prepared by the ship's "Master", in this case "Samuel Marchant" - he - or some sub-officer - made this list in their own hand-writing - spelling the names as they understood the pronunciations. And on this Master's Ship-lists these "Caquelin" names were spelled "Caekelie" - on the two lists they signed - they plainly spelled their names "Caquelin" - a very few of these names can be deciphered. I have "photostats" of all three of these "ship-lists." There were 7 children in this family. But only the father and 2 sons signed, Sebastian, Diedrich (signed as DIDDY) and Jean. Sebastian Jr., died en route.

The "Master's" list showed them as follows:
No. 70 - Sebastian Caeklie, aged 50 yrs.; No. 71 - Sebastian Caekelie, age 22 yrs. (DIED). No. 72 Diderick Caekelie, age 20 yrs.; and No. 73 - Hance (actually Jean) Caekelie, age 17 yrs. One other male died en route, namely, Hans Joner.

with his father. This instance threw me into processing "Kackley" Branches - before - I was ready to do so - therefore, for the pasy 2½ years + - I have been "processing" Kackley" Branches.

Our "Gen'l Genealogist" - "Mr. Finley B. Campbell" of Pleasant City, Ohio - has been "processing" mostly - "Cackley" Branches, therefore, he has MORE "CACKLEY" detail data than we other 3 "Historians" - though - we all do know about what work each of we four are doing.

I have, I would roughly say - probably 300 "Cackley" names, beginning with Gen. No. 2 of "Valentine and Mary (Frye) Cackley" and their 6 sons and 4 daughters - names only - no dates - on the 3rd Gen"s - I have a few dates - but from the 4th Gen. onward on some of the Bchs. I do have both names and dates. Mr. Campbell, I am sure has much more "Cackley data" than he has sent me.

We four "Historians" searched for some 8 years to finally PROVE that the ORIGINAL name here in the "Colonies" was "Keckley" but - we still can Not locate the leading record of the 1st Gen'rn. of "Jacob Keckley, Sr." - He evidently came here in the late 1720's or early 1730's. Which IS too early for the first "ship loading recors" at Phila., Penn., shown in " Rupp"s Thirty Thousand names", which includes the Immigrants in Penn." from 1727 to 1776, or 50 years.

Possibly you have, or have heard of the "article" entitled - "The Cackleys" published by the "Hon. Charles B. Johnson" of Clarksburg, W/ Virg. In the "Marlinton Pocahontas Times" of Feb. 28, 1946. If you do have it - "throw it into the waste-basket" as it is the most "in-informative bunch of 'Info.'" lore handed to the many - "Cackley, Kackley and Keckley Cousins" that we know of. It is practically ALL based on "Theory." And that "Article" was "clipped" by many of our Virg. Cousins and "circulated" all over the various states. We Historians now call this "Honorable Chas. B. Johnson" the "Honery" C. B. J.

He is a descendantx from the 1) "John Kackley, Sr, Bch.," thru his daughter (8) Hannah (ka) Johnson; (1) John Ka. Johnson; (?) Wm. James Johnson - then the ?) Hon. Chas. B. Johnson, Gen. No. 6, of Clarksburg (an attorney).

In his article "The Cackleys" - he sets up the French Family" of "Sebastian Caquelin" As our originial ancestor - this French name is pronounced in French as if spelled Cackelie. They sailed from Rotterdam, Holland, in the "Princess Augusta" with Samuel Marchant as "Master", PALATINES with their families, in all 330 persons, they touched Cowes, England, for clearance, and docked at Phila., Penn., as vessel No. A-2, on Sept. 16, 1736. At that time the "Ship-lists" only showed the "male passengers" from 16 yrs. upward. The women were carried as "Freights", the children as "Half-Freights." At that time - three "ship-lists" were made - two, the males 16 & upward signed, one to foresware alligiance to the "King of England" - the other to take oaths to the "Penn. Colonial British Government" - If - you intendd to live in that British Colony of Penn. The "third ship-list" was prepared by the ship's "Master", in this case "Samuel Marchant" - he - or some sub-officer - made this list in their own hand-writing - spelling the names as they understood the pronunciations. And on this Master's Ship-lists these "Caquelin" names were spelled "Caekelie" - on the two lists they signed - they plainly spelled their names "Caquelin" - a very few of these names can be deciphered. I have "photostats" of all three of these "ship-lists." There were 7 children in this family. But only the father and 2 sons signed, Sebastian, Diedrich (signed as DIDDY) and Jean. Sebastian Jr., died en route.

The "Master's" list showed them as follows:
No. 70 - Sebastian Caeklie, aged 50 yrs.; No. 71 - Sebastian Caekelie, age 22 yrs. (DIED); No. 72 Diderick Caekelie, age 20 yrs.; and No. 73 - Hance (actually Jean) Caekelie, age 17 yrs. One other male died en route, namely, Hans Joner.

The "Master's" list showed 120 males, xthm 16 & upwards - less 2 deceased - leaves 118 - but - only 112 signed the other two lists - so 6 evidently went to other colonies to settle.

A distant relative of "Chas. B. Johnson" - "Mrs. W. E. Collins" thru (1) John Ka., Sr. dtr. (1) Rachel (Ka) (Yoe) now Yost, and others= She Gen. No. 6* was C. B. Johnson "source"for kkx he to use his "theory" = and she actually believed the "Caquelins" were our originial ancestors. I will relate more of "Mrs. W. E. Collins" later on.

I could not see these "Caquelins" as our originial ancestors for three reasons= FIRST - because I felt sure we were NOT FRENCH; SECOND - none of the names of "Sebastian", Diderich or Jean ever appeared in the Jacob Keckley, Sr., Branch, or any of his children, or grand children"s Bchs.; THIRDLY - his namesake, Jacob, Jr., spelled his name KECKLEY , as did his 5 children.

Therefore, when I had a little spare time in 1953, I began a search in Penn. to either PROVE or DISAPPROVE these "Caquelins" as our ancestors (originial). In about 4 mos. time by correspondence, I PROVED (thru the Caquelin Family Gen. Geneaologist, Mr. Henry S. Cacklin, Dillsburg, Penn.) that the Caquelin's were not even a "LINEAGE" by any of Sebastian"s Sr. 7 children marrying into either a "Ke - Ka or Cackley" Family. If I could have contacted this "Henry S. ~~Cacklin~~ Cocklin" at first - 10 days was all I would have needed to PROVE them not even a "Lineage."

The "British Anglicising Law" of 1718 in the "Colony of Penn." finally caught up with the Caquelin Family in its third generation in Penn. or in about 1760, when they became = Cockley - Gockley & Cocklin (s)."

Now, about "Mrs. W. E. Collins" - she was not what I would call a "Historian" - but - she was searching for an ancestor who was a Rev. War Soldier" - so - she could become a "D. A. R." She traced down - "Kackley - Whiteman - Tribby - Yost - Barnes (2 Bchs.) and Collins." She knew that (1) John KAckley, sr WAS a Rev. War Soldier" - But she could not find his record in either Frederick or Hampshire Counties - so, as she believed the Caquelins were an original ancestors - and that in the 1700"s boundry lines were quite indefinite - she went up into Lancaster and Cumberland Co"s., Penn., and took a John COCKLEY (actually Jean Caquelin) who was shown as. a= "Private in Cumberland Co. Militia, 3rd Batallion in 1781" and she added - "and Lancaster Co., Penn". He - probably never fired a gun at any-body in the Rev. War - as the peace treaty was signed in 1781.

She engineered" her lineage this way: Emma Barnes Collins, dtr. of Sarah M. Tribley Collins, dtr. of Frances Yost Tribley, dtr. of Rachel Cackley (actually Kackley - D. E. K.) Yost, dtr. of John Cockley and the said John Kackley a son of Jacob Kackley (actually Keckley - D. E. K.) To support this "John Cockley" under "ancestor"s services" she brought in: an archivist, Penn. State Library; French Huguenots; Sebastian Coquelin, his sons Sebastian (he died and never reached Penn. - D. E. K.), Dietrich and Jean; Anna May Cogley - a member Penn. Huguenot Soc., from "Jean"; John Cooley, owner of grist mills near Winchester, Va.; who was one of four brothers who operated mills near Capon Springs, Va.; about 1812 (was 1817 - D. E. K.) John Kackley (Keckley- Cooley - Cackley) came to Guernsey Co., Ohio from Winchester, Va. The name is also spelled "Cogley - Keeley - Kuechele - Kechlein - Cockley."

This was sure a "master-piece of-deceit" - but she became a "D. A. R."

The "Master's" list showed 120 males, xthe 16 & upwards - less 2 deceased - leaves 118 - but - only 112 signed the other two lists - so 6 evidently went to other colonies to settle.

A distant relative of "Chas. B. Johnson" - "Mrs. W. E. Collins" thru (1) John Ka., Sr. dtr. (1) Rachel (Ka) (Yoe) now Yost, and others= She Gen. No. 6* was C. B. Johnson "source"for kix he to use his "theory" = and she actually believed the "Caquelins" were our originial ancestors. I will relate more of "Mrs. W. E. Collins" later on.

I could not see these "Caquelins" as our originial ancestors for three reasons= FIRST - because I felt sure we were NOT FRENCH; SECOND - none of the names of "Sebastian", Diderich or Jean ever appeared in the Jacob Keckley, Sr., Branch, or any of his children, or grand children"s Bchs.; THIRDLY - his namesake, Jacob, Jr., spelled his name KECKLEY , as did his 5 children.

Therefore, when I had a little spare time in 1953, I began a search in Penn. to either PROVE or DISAPPROVE these "Caquelins" as our ancestors (originial). In about 4 mos. time by correspondence, I PROVED (thru the Caquelin Family Gen. Geneaologist, Mr. Henry S. Cacklin, Dillsburg, Penn.) that the Caquelin's were not even a "LINEAGE" by any of Sebastian"s Sr. 7 children marrying into either a "Ke - Ka or Cackley" Family. If I could have contacted this "Henry S. Cackley Cocklin" at first - 10 days was all I would have needed to PROVE them not even a "Lineage."

The "British Anglicising Law" of 1718 in the "Colony of Penn." finally caught up with the Caquelin Family in its third generation in Penn. or in about 1760, when they became = Cockley - Gockley & Cocklin (s)."

Now, about "Mrs. W. E. Collins" - she was not what I would call a "Historian" - but - she was searching for an ancestor who was a Rev. War Soldier" - so - she could become a "D. A. R." She traced down - "Kackley - Whiteman - Tribby - Yost - Barnes (2 Bchs.) and Collins." She knew that (1) John KAckley, sr WAS a Rev. War Soldier" - But she could not find his record in either Frederick or Hampshire Counties - so, as she believed the Caquelins were an original ancestors - and that in the 1700"s boundry lines were quite indefinite - she went up into Lancaster and Cumberland Co"s., Penn., and took a John COCKLEY (actually Jean Caquelin) who was shown as. a= "Private in Cumberland Co. Militia, 3rd Batallion in 1781" and she added - "and Lancaster Co., Penn". He - probably never fired a gun at any-body in the Rev. War - as the peace treaty was signed in 1781.

She engineered" her lineage this way: Emma Barnes Collins, dtr. of Sarah M. Tribley Collins, dtr. of Frances Yost Tribley, dtr. of Rachel Cackley (actually Kackley - D. E. K.) Yost, dtr. of John Cockley and the said John Kackley a son of Jacob Kackley (actually Keckley - D. E. K.) To support this "John Cockley" under "ancestor"s services" she brought in: an archivist, Penn. State Library; French Huguenots; Sebastian Coquelin, his sons Sebastian (he died and never reached Penn. - D. E. K.), Dietrich and Jean; Anna May Cogley - a member Penn. Huguenot Soc., from "Jean"; John Cooley, owner of grist mills near Winchester, Va.; who was one of four brothers who operated mills near Capon Springs, Va.; about 1812 (was 1817 - D. E. K.) John Kackley (Keckley- Cooley - Cackley) came to Guernsey Co., Ohio from Winchester, Va. The name is also spelled "Cogley - Keeley - Kuechele - Kechlein - Cockley."

This was sure a "master-piece of-deceit" - but she became a "D. A. R."

After - 3 yrs. searching - I secured her "Old Stell Bread Box" full of letters, papers, notes, etc. - which she accumulated in about 35 years searching - it was at my home about 2½ years - (just picked up - 2 mos. ago). A copy of the 1893 letter (two of them) by Dr. Cephus Kackley - was found in that "Old Bread Box". I also copied in long hand, two copies each of over 50 letters which I felt had "possibilities". The two "Dr. Cephus Ka." letters were worth more than all the others located.

He was a descendant of (4) Elias Ka., Sr., more commonly known as "Ellis", through his son (4) Joseph & Elizabeth (Turner) Ka., then (3) Dr. Cephus Kackley (Gen. No. 4). Through these two letters of Dr. Cephus Ka's. in the past 2 years we have contacted descendants of about all of (4) Elias Ka. Sr's. 12 children, whereas before that we had only contacted about 5 of them.

Probably I better give you the data, as we now have it for Generation No. 1, of Jacob Keckley, Sr., whp migrated from Lancaster Co., Penn., in 1741 to the Valley of Virg." (now the Shenandoah Valley) and settled in what is now Frederick County. Here he secured approx. 2,000 acres of land and operated a "Plantation" for about 47 years or until his death in 1788. Have you ever learned where this plantation was located?

Gen. No. 1 = Keckley Family History

Jacob (none) Keckley, Sr. B_____ 1701 or 1702 In Stanheim, Wurttemberg, Germany
D. Feb. 15 or 16, 1788 In Frederick County, Virg.
Brd. Feb. 18, 1788 in Old Furnace Cemetery, now St. Johns Church and Cemetery, located aboutcx 2 mi. west of Mount Williams, on State Route No. 600.
Mar'd about 1740 in Lancaster, Penn., we believe - to

Alice _____ B._____, 1717; D. _____, 1805, in Frederick Co. Virg.
Brd. St. Johns Cemetery.

CHILDREN

(1) John (none) Kackley, Sr, B. 7-30-1741, Lancaster Co., Penn. D. 4-23-1823 Guerbsey Co., Ohio, now in Noble Co., 2½ miles so. east of Pleasant City, Guernsey Co, Ohio.
wife Elizabeth Whiteman
He has 3 sons & 5 dtrs. - Most of them lived in Guernsey Co., Ohio. He was a Rev. War Soldier. Bdr'd in C. S. Rich Cemetery, S. E. of Pleasant City, Ohio

(2) Jacob (none) Keckley, Jr. No birth or death data. Mar'd Margaret Secrist. Has 2 sons & 3 dtrs. Inherited the home plantation. In 1788, died intestate only a few years later. Estate evidently held intact by wife, Margaret, as no records can be found.

(3) Valentine (none) Cackley Sr. No birth or death dates.- Mar'd. Mary (none) Frye of Capon Springs, Va. Evidently a dtr. of the early pioneers, Abraham and Agnes Frye, of Frederick Co., Virg., and grd.dtr. of Benjamin Frye (died in Fredk. Co. in 1753). This Frye family came from Montgomery Co., Penn., in about 1738 and settled on Cedar Creek. In about 1788 Valentine Ca., Sr., migrated to what is now Pocahontas Co., W. Va. At that

After - 3 yrs. searching - I secured her "Old Stell Bread Box" full of letters, papers, notes, etc. - which she accumulated in about 35 years searching - it was at my home about 2½ years - (just picked up - 2 mos. ago). A copy of the 1893 letter (two of them) by Dr. Cephus Kackley - was found in that "Old Bread Box". I also copied in long hand, two copies each of over 50 letters which I felt had "possibilities". The two "Dr. Cephus Ka." letters were worth more than all the others located.

He was a descendant of (4) Elias Ka., Sr., more commonly known as "Ellis", through his son (4) Joseph & Elizabeth (Turner) Ka., then (3) Dr. Cephus Kackley (Gen. No. 4). Through these two letters of Dr. Cephus Ka's. in the past 2 years we have contacted descendants of about all of (4) Elias Ka. Sr's. 12 children, whereas before that we had only contacted about 5 of them.

Probably I better give you the data, as we now have it for Generation No. 1, of Jacob Keckley, Sr., whp migrated from Lancaster Co., Penn., in 1741 to the Valley of Virg." (now the Shenandoah Valley) and settled in what is now Frederick County. Here he secured approx. 2,000 acres of land and operated a "Plantation" for about 47 years or until his death in 1788. Have you ever learned where this plantation was located?

Gen. No. 1 = Keckley Family History

Jacob (none) Keckley, Sr. B_____ 1701 or 1702 In Stanheim, Wurttemberg, Germany
D. Feb. 15 or 16, 1788 In Frederick County, Virg.
Brd. Feb. 18, 1788 in Old Furnace Cemetery, now St. Johns Church and Cemetery, located aboutcx 2 mi. west of Mount Williams, on State Route No. 600.
Mar'd about 1740 in Lancaster, Penn., we believe - to

Alice _____ B._____, 1717; D. _____, 1805, in Frederick Co. Virg.
Brd. St. Johns Cemetery.

CHILDREN

(1) John (none) Kackley, Sr, B. 7-30-1741, Lancaster Co., Penn. D. 4-23-1823 wife
Elizabeth Whiteman
Guernsey Co., Ohio, now in Noble Co., 2½ miles so. east of Pleasant City, Guernsey Co, Ohio. He has 3 sons & 5 dtrs. - Most of them lived in Guernsey Co., Ohio. He was a Rev. War Soldier. Bdr'd in C. S. Rich Cemetery, S. E. of Pleasant City, Ohio

(2) Jacob (none) Keckley, Jr. No birth or death data. Mar'd Margaret Secrist. Has 2 sons & 3 dtrs. Inherited the home plantation. In 1788, died intestate only a few years later. Estate evidently held intact by wife, Margaret, as no records can be found.

(3) Valentine (none) Cackley Sr. No birth or death dates.- Mar'd. Mary (none) Frye of Capon Springs, Va. Evidently a dtr. of the early pioneers, Abraham and Agnes Frye, of Frederick Co., Virg., and grd.dtr. of Benjamin Frye (died in Fredk. Co. in 1753). This Frye family came from Montgomery Co., Penn., in about 1738 and settled on Cedar Creek. In about 1788 Valentine Ca., Sr., migrated to what is now Pocahontas Co., W. Va. At that time was Greenbrier Co., He settled at what is now Millpoint, W. Va., which he established as Cackleytown. Here he built a modern mill for that time; projected a tannery, started a tilt-hammer and a general store. He also promoted & encouraged other useful industries in that section. And accrued a vast landed estate. He had 6 sons & 4 dtrs.

(4) Elias (none) Kackley, Sr. He was more commonly known as "Ellis" Kackley. — No birth date; d - about 1818 in Frederick Co., Virg., where he lived his entire life. Mr'd Catherine _____, evidently in Frederick Co., Va. They had 8 sons & 8 dtrs., one son, Benjamin, died at an early age. Their first 5 chilđn. remained in Virg. Also (8) Elias, Jr., who mar'd & died at a fairly young age. The other children came to Gurnsey Co., Ohio to reside, & (7) Jacob & Sarah Snapp to Ky. - then to Knox Co., Ind. (near Vincennes).

(5) Elizabeth & (6) Mary — These two dtrs. we still know nothing about - so, do not know how they spelled their last names, or whom they married.

(7) Benjamin (none) KEckley — Evidently died in Dec. 1780, as his estate was appraised on Jan. 8, 1781, valuation 5954 pounds (about $30,000.00 then - D. E. K.). The sale held on the 16 Jan. 1781, estate settled on Oct. 5, 1781. Only heir, wife, Catherine, who became Mrs. Henry Richards, before the estate was settled. He was one of the Appraisors. The above data shows clearly why Benjamin was not mentioned in his father's will - made on Aug. 1, 1781. He had died about 8+ months prior, and left no heirs, except his wife, Catherine. Srs. will probated on Oct. 6, 1789, in book 5, pp. 228, Winchester, Virg. Executors were his dear wife (not named) & son, Elias. The settlement of his estate was delayed, evidently because, Mrs. Alice Keckley (his wife), did not qualify.

This will give you a good general idea of Gen. No. 1 - and the three different spellings of the originial family name, which we "Historians" are SURE was not intentional - but due to "circumstances" - caused by these "German Boys" pronunciation of their last name. A German always pronounces an "E" as if it was a long or broad "A" in English, therefore, they pronounced their names "Kackley." If a German wrote it down they would spell it "Keckley", but others would spell it either "Kackley" or "Cackley" - both pronounced the same. Therefore - as these German Boys eventually owned "tangible property", the documents were frequently made out WRONGLY, and when they disposed of that property they were compelled to use these wrong spelled names - which furthered these wrong spelled names. In the middle 1700's it was more important to "till the soil" to make a living - than it was - to worry about the "spelling of your name" - therefore - 2 sons ((1) John & (4) Elias) became "Kackley", 1 son (3) Valentine became "Cackley", and 2 sons remained "Keckley" (s) ((2) Jacob, Jr & (7) Benjamin), although "Benjamin" was frequently called a "Cackley".

Now, you are probably wondering How I fit into this "Picture" - Well, I am, so to speak - a "Lost Keckley, who can not find his flock". After 5½ years searching, I am unable to trace my ancestors farther back than my grt. grd. father, namely, "John Keckley" (1802-75) who was born "someplace" in Virginia - his parents names still unknown to we 4 H storians. He migrated to Greene Co., Ohio, where on 8-21-1821 he mar'd "Christina Beckenbaugh" (1805-1893). In 1830., they migrated on "horseback" to near Utica, Licking Co..

time was Greenbrier Co., He settled at what is now Millpoint, W. Va., which he established as Cackleytown. Here he built a modern mill for that time; projected a tannery, started a tilt-hammer and a general store. He also promoted & encouraged other useful industries in that section. And accrued a vast landed estate. He had 6 sons & 4 dtrs.

(4) Elias (none) Kackley, Sr. He was more commonly known as "Ellis" Kackley. — No birth date; d - about 1818 in Frederick Co., Virg., where he lived his entire life. Mr'd Catherine _____, evidently in Frederick Co., Va. They had 8 sons & 8 dtrs., one son, Benjamin, died at an early age. Their first 5 chilđn. remained in Virg. Also (8) Elias, Jr., who mar'd & died at a fairly young age. The other children came to Gurnsey Co., Ohio to reside, & (7) Jacob & Sarah Snapp to Ky. - then to Knox Co., Ind. (near Vincennes).

(5) Elizabeth & (6) Mary — These two dtrs. we still know nothing about - so, do not know how they spelled their last names, or whom they married.

(7) Benjamin (none) KEckley — Evidently died in Dec. 1780, as his estate was appraised on Jan. 8, 1781, valuation 5954 pounds (about $30,000.00 then - D. E. K.). The sale held on the 16 Jan. 1781, estate settled on Oct. 5, 1781. Only heir, wife, Catherine, who became Mrs. Henry Richaros, before the estate was settled. He was one of the Appraisors. The above data shows clearly why Benjamin was not mentioned in his father's will - made on Aug. 1, 1781. He had died about 8+ months prior, and left no heirs, except his wife, Catherine. Srs. will probated on Oct. 6, 1789, in book 5, pp. 227, Winchester, Virg. Executors were his dear wife (not named) & son, Elias. The settlement of his estate was delayed, evidently because, Mrs. Alice Keckley (his wife), did not qualify.

This will give you a good general idea of Gen. No. 1 - and the three different spellings of the originial family name, which we "Historians" are SURE was not intentional - but due to "circumstances" - caused by these "German Boys" pronunciation of their last name. A German always pronounces an "E" as if it was a long or broad "A" in English, therefore, they pronounced their names "Kackley." If a German wrote it down they would spell it "Keckley", but others would spell it either "Kackley" or "Cackley" - both pronounced the same. Therefore - as these German Boys eventually owned "tangible property", the documents were frequently made out WRONGLY, and when they disposed of that property they were compelled to use these wrong spelled names - which furthered these wrong spelled names. In the middle 1700's it was more important to "till the soil" to make a living - than it was - to worry about the "spelling of your name" - therefore - 2 sons ((1) John & (4) Elias) became "Kackley", 1 son (3) Valentine became "Cackley", and 2 sons remained "Keckley" (s) ((2) Jacob, jr & (7) Benjamin), although "Benjamin" was frequently called a "Cackley".

Now, you are probably wondering How I fit into this "Picture" - Well, I am, so to speak - a "Lost Keckley, who can not find his flock". After 5½ years searching, I am unable to trace my ancestors farther back than my grt. grd. father, namely, "John Keckley" (1802-75) who was born "someplace" in Virginia - his parents names still unknown to we 4 H storians. He migrated to Greene Co., Penn., where on 8-21-1821 he mar'd "Christina Beckenbaugh" (1805-1893). In 1830, they migrated on "horseback" to near Utica, Licking Co., Ohio, where he bought 111 acres of timberland - built a "log-abin" and began clearing the land & raising his family of 6 sons & 2 dtrs. (7) James Leander ("Lee") Ke. was my grd. father., (1837-1904) in 1856, Licking Co., Ohio, he mrd. Amy (none) Hauck (1839-1900), that fall they migrated via "covered wagon" with a brother (4) Wm. Columbus Ke. & wife to near Bloomington, McLean Co., Ill., where they settled on a farm - they had - 2 sons & 2 dtrs. (1) John Wesley Ke., my father, (1860-1919) mrd. 1884 - Cymsea Frederica White (beat that name - if you can) in McLean Co., Ill. (1866 - still living here in Decatur, age - past 91 years) - they had 1 son & 1 dtr. - (1) David Earl Keckley, the writer - b. 1-18-1886, mrd. 6-16-1917, Winchester, Ill., Amy Helen Sims, b. 8-13-1890 in Jasper Co., Ill., (they married McLean Co., Ill) - both living - no children. The wife a "stroke victim" - blood clot, Nov. 1949 - left side affected - still in a "wheel-chair" and will be the balance of her days here.

"Public Records" in the Virginia are scarce articles - some due to the ravages of three wars - Revlu., 1812 and Civil." First Mar'ge records in Frederick Co., Va., in 1782 - too late to "catch" any of the 7 children of Gen. No. 1 of Jacob Ke., Sr. Deaths 1782 or 88 years later - Births 1896 or 114 yrs. later than Mar' ages.

I am wondering if you have heard about the two books on W. Va., "Land Grants, Assessments, etc., that has recently been published by the State Auditor, Edgar B. Sims. One the "Making of a State, 9x12, printed in 12 pt. type, bound in blue & gold Buckram - 213 pages - covering items from 1738 to 1955. Copies of Land Grants to Geo. Washington, a few of his officers and soldiers, and other individuals by the "Crown of England" and the Commonwealth of Virginia, and parts thereof - price $5.00 per copy.

The other book id the "Sims index of Land Grants in W. Virginia, of 864 pages of 50,000 names of persons to whom grants were made in the territory now W. Va., some of which date back to 1746 - price $20.00 per copy.

I learned of the above books when I bought a modern detail map of "Hampshire & Pocahontas Counties, W. Va." from the Dept. of Highways at Charleston, W. Va. - and on Mch. 7th received a nice letter from State Audito, Edgar B. Sims. In my letter I asked if any "Ke.= Ka. or Cackley (s) lived in Charleston, and that I was interested in some way of finding out about Land Grants and Assessors lists of these persons in Hampshire Co., from about 1760 onward - as it seems that Counties Public Records were all destroyed during the Civil War. Mr. Sims advised that he had made a breif search of the assessment records and Grants of Hampshire Co. (their earlier records in 1782). He did not find any grants in these names - but did find in 1809 the name "Abraham Kerkley," 127 acres. In 1816 the name is entered as "Abraham Kackley" 127 acres on "Drains of Mill Branch." No where on the "Assessment Records" of Hampshire County earlier than 1809 do we find the names you list.

In searching our Index on grants we find that Valentine Keckley obtained a grant in Bath County, Va., in 1797 on Knapps Creek. This area went into Pocahontas Co., which was formed in 1821. A search of Pocahontas Co., land assessment books of 1822 (our earliest) reveals a number of "Cackley(s), viz., Valentine, William, Levi, Benjamin & Joseph. (These were all sons of Valentine, Sr. - D. E. K.). Pocahontas Co., was formed from Bath, Pendleton & Randolph Cos., in 1821, but the area in which these persons appear to have owned land would be the part from Bath Co. Bath was formed from Augusta Co., in 1790. We do not find any of the names you mentioned in our City or Telephone Directories. A copy of the "Valentine Keckley" land grant can be made for you at a price of $1.50. Signed - Edgar B. Sims, State Auditor.

bought 111 acres of timberland - built a "log-abin" and began clearing the land & raising his family of 6 sons & 2 dtrs. (7) James Leander ("Lee") Ke. was my grd. father., (1837-1904) in 1856, Licking Co., Ohio, he mrd. Amy (none) Hauck (1839-1900), that fall they migrated via "covered wagon" with a brother (4) Wm. Columbus Ke. & wife to near Bloomington, McLean Co., Ill., where they settled on a farm - they had - 2 sons & 2 dtrs. (1) John Wesley Ke., my father, (1860-1919) mrd. 1884 - Cymsea Frederica White (beat that name - if you can) in McLean Co., Ill. (1866 - still living here in Decatur, age - past 91 years) - they had 1 son & 1 dtr. - (1) David Earl Keckley, the writer - b. 1-18-1886, mrd. 6-16-1917, Winchester, Ill., Amy Helen Sims, b. 8-13-1890 in Jasper Co., Ill., (they married McLean Co., Ill) - both living - no children. The wife a "stroke victim" - blood clot, Nov. 1949 - left side affected - still in a "wheel-chair" and will be the balance of her days here.

"Public Records" in the Virginia are scarce articles - some due to the ravages of three wars - Revlu., 1812 and Civil." First Mar'ge records in Frederick Co., Va., in 1782 - too late to "catch" any of the 7 children of Gen. No. 1 of Jacob Ke., Sr. Deaths 1782 or 88 years later - Births 1896 or 114 yrs. later than Mar' ages.

I am wondering if you have heard about the two books on W. Va., "Land Grants, Assessments, etc., that has recently been published by the State Auditor, Edgar B. Sims. One the "Making of a State, 9x12, printed in 12 pt. type, bound in blue & gold Buckram - 213 pages - covering items from 1738 to 1955. Copies of Land Grants to Geo. Washington, a few of his officers and soldiers, and other individuals by the "Crown of England" and the Commonwealth of Virginia, and parts thereof - price $5.00 per copy.

The other book is the "Sims index of Land Grants in W. Virginia, of 864 pages of 50,000 names of persons to whom grants were made in the territory now W. Va., some of which date back to 1746 - price $20.00 per copy.

I learned of the above books when I bought a modern detail map of "Hampshire & Pocahontas Counties, W. Va." from the Dept. of Highways at Charleston, W. Va. - and on Mch. 7th received a nice letter from State Audito, Edgar B. Sims. In my letter I asked if any "Ke.= Ka. or Cackley (s) lived in Charleston, and that I was interested in some way of finding out about Land Grants and Assessors lists of these persons in Hampshire Co., from about 1760 onward - as it seems that Counties Public Records were all destroyed during the Civil War. Mr. Sims advised that he had made a breif search of the assessment records and Grants of Hampshire Co. (their earlier records in 1782). He did not find any grants in these names - but did find in 1809 the name "Abraham Kerkley," 127 acres. In 1816 the name is entered as "Abraham Kackley" 127 acres on "Drains of Mill Branch." No where on the "Assessment Records" of Hampshire County earlier than 1809 do we find the names you list.

In searching our Index on grants we find that Valentine Keckley obtained a grant in Bath County, Va., in 1797 on Knapps Creek. This area went into Pocahontas Co., which was formed in 1821. A search of Pocahontas Co., land assessment books of 1822 (our earliest) reveals a number of "Cackley(s), viz., Valentine, William, Levi, Benjamin & Joseph. (These were all sons of Valentine, Sr. - D. E. K.). Pocahontas Co., was formed from Bath, Pendleton & Randolph Cos., in 1821, but the area in which these persons appear to have owned land would be the part from Bath Co. Bath was formed from Augusta Co., in 1790. We do not find any of the names you mentioned in our City or Telephone Directories. A copy of the "Valentine Keckley" land grant can be made for you at a price of $1.50. Signed - Edgar B. Sims, State Auditor.

The above info. about the land assessed to "Abraham Ka." was exactly what I was seeking - and - that Info. cost me nothing. I had understood (from the 1893 letter of Dr. Cephus Ka.) that "Abraham" Ka. died on his farm which adjoined Dr. C. Ka's father's (Joseph Ka.) at near Capon Bridge, Va. (now W. Va.) - this death was on 6-15 1849. The main reason for my present interest in "Abraham Ka's family" IS - that we now suspicion our "John Keckley (1802-75) of Licking Co., Ohio MAY BE a son of this (1) "Abraham Kackley," the son of (4) Elias Ka., Sr.

On my detail Co. map of Hampshire Co., I locate the stream "Drains of Mill Branch," just to the N. E. of Capon Bridge, and on the west slopes of "Timber Ridge" - a continuation of the Big or Great North Mountain Range?

Now our "chore" IS to secure a "Source" in Charleston, W. Va., to search the U. S. Census Records of "Bloomery Township" near the "Drains of Mill Branch" for the years of 1810 and 1820 of the "Abraham & Christina (Whissen) Kackley Family" to secure all the names of the children, which will show their nearest ages on these two census years. Both census records are necessary, because some shown in the 1810 census record by 1820 will be mar'd and listed elsewhere, and some shown in the 1820 census would not be born by the time the 1810 census was taken.

IF "Abraham Ka." had a son "John" whose age shows he would be born in 1802 - our "problem" will seem to be "SOLVED."

Of course, you know how difficult it is to secure Info. by remote control (Correspondence), especially 200 years back, as only a few "cousins" will go to the court house or the State Depts. of Health to secure detail data for the F. History - and - if you must buy these "Documents" at $1.00 per, they soon run into many hundreds of dollars - but if you try to make too many "personal calls" you may, like many former Historians, become a "Public Charge." "Public Genealogists" at from $4.00 to $6.00 per hour also soon become quite expensive.

Mr. Campbell's asst. "Mr. Willard H. Kackley" of Byesville, Ohio, invested $8.00 in one, which produced the following item taken from "Rev. Christian Streit's" Diary:= "Feb. 18, 1788 - Buried AT OLD FURNACE, JACOB KECKLEY, AGED 86 YEARS, FROM STAMHEIM, WORTTEMBERG. TEXT REV. 14:13."=

We have known of this "Rev. C. Streit" the Lutheran Church Minister at Winchester from July 19, 1785 to 1812 - as his name appears on many of the Keckley & Kackley boys & girls marriage records of that exm era, and we had utmost confidence in he and his records, therefore, we feel the above "Diary Entry" is as authentic as any "Public Record". All of Jacob Ke. Sr.'s sons, except Benjamin - and his wife "Alce" WERE living when he was buried on Feb. 18, 1788 - therefore, he secured the Info. for his sermon and Diary" - direct from the family, so, it MUST BE AUTHENTIC.

The above item to me settled 4 items for "Jacob Ke. Sr.", namely, his Approx. birthyear, death date, nationality - and above all that his original name here in the "Colonies" WAS "KECKLEY", which I have contended for the past 5 years although in his will the "saker" spelled it "Kackley" - which "Jacob" signed with "his mark". If he could NOT SIGN his own name - then - he evidently could not read either, so, he could not determine that his name WAS INCORRECTLY SPELLED.

In re - your original ancestor's name - I imagine that you may have discovered by now that it was "McNIEL" - German - and pronounced as "McNeel or McNeal" and the spelling became changed by the prommnciation, the same as the Keckley name.

In further reference to the Rev. Streit Diary Entry - I felt that this "Diary" would disclose many items that the Frederick & Hampshire County Public Records did not yet show - and that it would be foolish tp pay this "Prof'l Genealogist"

— sons.,

The above info. about the land assessed to "Abraham Ka." was exactly what I was seeking - and - that Info. cost me nothing. I had understood (from the 1893 letter of Dr. Cephus Ka.) that "Abraham" Ka. died on his farm which adjoined Dr. C. Ka's father's (Joseph Ka.) at near Capon Bridge, Va. (now W. Va.) - this death was on 6-15 1849. The main reason for my present interest in "Abraham Ka's family" IS - that we now suspicion our "John Keckley (1802-75) of Licking Co., Ohio MAY BE a son of this (1) "Abraham Kackley," the son of (4) Elias Ka., Sr.

On my detail Co. map of Hampshire Co., I locate the stream "Drains of Mill Branch," just to the N. E. of Capon Bridge, and on the west slopes of "Timber Ridge" - a continuation of the Big or Great North Mountain Range?

Now our "chore" IS to secure a "Source" in Charleston, W. Va., to search the U. S. Census Records of "Bloomery Township" near the "Drains of Mill Branch" for the years of 1810 and 1820 of the "Abraham & Christina (Whissen) Kackley Family" to secure all the names of the children, which will show their nearest ages on these two census years. Both census records are necessary, because some shown in the 1810 census record by 1820 will be mar'd and listed elsewhere, and some shown in the 1820 census would not be born by the time the 1810 census was taken.

IF "Abraham Ka." had a son "John" whose age shows he would be born in 1802 - our "problem" will seem to be "SOLVED."

Of course, you know how difficult it is to secure Info. by remote control (Correspondence), especially 200 years back, as only a few "cousins" will go to the court house or the State Depts. of Health to secure detail data for the F. History - and - if you must buy these "Documents" at $1.00 per, they soon run into many hundreds of dollars - but if you try to make too many "personal calls" you may, like many former Historians, become a "Public Charge." "Public Genealogists" at from $4.00 to $6.00 per hour also soon become quite expensive.

Mr. Campbell's asst. "Mr. Willard H. Kackley" of Byesville, Ohio, invested $8.00 in one, which produced the following item taken from "Rev. Christian Streit's" Diary:= "Feb. 18, 1788 - Buried AT OLD FURNACE, JACOB KECKLEY, AGED 86 YEARS, FROM STAMHEIM, WORTTEMBERG. TEXT REV. 14:13."=

We have known of this "Rev. C. Streit" the Lutheran Church Minister at Winchester from July 19, 1785 to 1812 - as his name appears on many of the Keckley & Kackley boys & girls marriage records of that era, and we had utmost confidence in he and his records, therefore, we feel the above "Diary Entry" is as authentic as any "Public Record". All of Jacob Ke. Sr.'s sons, except Benjamin - and his wife "Alce" WERE living when he was buried on Feb. 18, 1788 - therefore, he secured the Info. for his sermon and Diary" - direct from the family, so, it MUST BE AUTHENTIC.

The above item to me settled 4 items for "Jacob Ke. Sr.", namely, his Approx. birthyear, death date, nationality - and above all that his original name here in the "Colonies" WAS "KECKLEY", which I have contended for the past 5 years although in his will the "maker" spelled it "Kackley" - which "Jacob" signed with "his mark". If he could NOT SIGN his own name - then - he evidently could not read either, so, he could not determine that his name WAS INCORRECTLY SPELLED.

In re - your original ancestor's name - I imagine that you may have discovered by now that it was "McNIEL" - German - and pronounced as "McNeel or McNeal" and the spelling became changed by the pronunciation, the same as the Keckley name.

In further reference to the Rev. Streit Diary Entry - I felt that this "Diary" would disclose many items that the Frederick & Hampshire County Public Records did not yet show - and that it would be foolish to pay this "Prof'l Genealogist"

— sons.,

$8.00 every time we suspicioned an item might be found in it - so - why not try to locate that "Diary."

So, I wrote the present minister of the Winchester Lutheran Church and learned that the church Trustees had published in 1954 a book obtainable at $4.00 per copy. So, I sent check and had a copy within a week. The "Diary" covered 43 pages - but - began on July 19, 1785, and ended abruptly on Nov. 28, 1788 - not - even completing the year 1788 - a coverage of about 3 1/3 years ONLY. Very disappointing as I anticipated "Diaries" covering possibly 40 or so years. Only two "Keckley" items appeared, namely, the burial of Jacob, Sr., and the election on Dec. 15, 1787 of "Elias Keckley" as a Reformed Deacon of the "Old Furnace Church". Two other "Keckley" names appeared in the 396 paged Book, namely, "Harry B." as Elder 1922-25 and Finiancial Sec'y. 1915 at Winchester and "Frank" as a confirmed member in the Dec. 31, 1953 listing.

And during the 3 1/3 years of the "Diary" Rev. Streit gave 386 sermons, 429 baptisms, 163 confirmations, had 157 marriage ceremonies & 43 funerals, but not a single marriage of a "Keckley or a Kackley." He also preached at many other Lutheran Churches in that section - also 3 times at Phila., Penn., one at Lancaster, Penn., Hagerstown, Md., & Funkstown. These trips were all made on "horseback" - took one week to ride to Phila., or two weeks per sermon. The same to Lancaster, Penn. "Rev. C. Streit" died in Winchester on 3=10-1812. Served there 1785-1794 & 1804-1812 = 18 years, and at Millerstown, NOW Woodstock 1795-1803 or 9 years - a total of 27 years in the " Valley of Virginia". He died at age 62 years, 9 months & 3 days. If you are a "Lutheran" - the book "This Heritage" would be very interesting to you, as it covers the founding of the Lutheran Churches in Virginia.

If you are interested in W. Virg., write "Edgar B. Sims" State Auditor W. Virg., Charleston, W. Va., for a copy of his circular on his "Books - and copies of the "Map of present W. Va. as of 1738 - and as of 1780," which will give you an excellent idea of the section you were born in, and for .25¢ you may obtain a very detail map of Pocahontas Co., W. Va., which even shows all farm residences.

Since Auditor Sims last name is the same as my wife's "maiden" name - I am "playing a few cards" with he - for some additional info. in "Hampshire County", because the records at Romney now date back only to 1865 - prior one's destroyed during "Civil War" - he seems very accomodating - so - to further the sales of his "Books" - I may get some "Extra favors."

I have not yet asked "Bill" to pin-point the two "mills" built by Valentine Cackley, Sr. - are they on the small stream that flows thru Millpoint and empties into the "Greenbrier River" about 1½ miles away or on the Greenbrier? I have assumed that neither are now being operated. The detail Co. Map published by the state shows "saw mills", but no "grist mills" - A "seasonal industry" is shown at "Millpoint", also a Business Building, 6 farm homes, and one home house -x and nearby 2 farm homes and one home house. "Bill" tells me the population IS 15 persons.

For the past 18 months I have been "processing" a Branch of (1) Abraham Kackley's son "(8T) Hamilton Jefferson ("Jeff") and Margaret ("Peggy" - Parish) Kackley" who came from Hampshire Co., Va. in 1855 to Coles County, Ill., they never wrote to any of their Virg. Relatives, so, they were LOST for 100 years, or until I located a descendent's Branch at Charleston, Ill., through a death notice published in our local newspaper in Sept. 1955. There were 10 children in this "Jeff and Peggy Ka" family, however, the ones I contacted only knew of 6 - and 8 had come to Coles Co. with their parents - or rather ? and one born there later on. No one knew these childrens parents names when or where they died. But, from this meager beginning I have contacted all 8 Ill. Bchs., except one dtr. who may have died "single" - none knew of her. I have not had

$8.00 every time we suspicioned an item might be found in it - so - why not try to locate that "Diary."

So, I wrote the present minister of the Winchester Lutheran Church and learned that the church Trustees had published in 1954 a book obtainable at $4.00 per copy. So, I sent check and had a copy within a week. The "Diary" covered 43 pages - but - began on July 19, 1785, and ended abruptly on Nov. 28, 1788 - not - even completing the year 1788 - a coverage of about 3 1/3 years ONLY. Very disappointing as I anticipated "Diaries" covering possibly 40 or so years. Only two "Keckley" items appeared, namely, the burial of Jacob, Sr., and the election on Dec. 15, 1787 of "Elias Keckley" as a Reformed Deacon of the "Old Furnace Church". Two other "Keckley" names appeared in the 396 paged Book, namely, "Harry B." as Elder 1922-25 and Finiancial Sec'y. 1915 at Winchester and "Frank" as a confirmed member in the Dec. 31, 1953 listing.

And during the 3 1/3 years of the "Diary" Rev. Streit gave 386 sermons, 429 baptisms, 163 confirmations, had 157 marriage ceremonies & 43 funerals, but not a single marriage of a "Keckley or a Kackley." He also preached at many other Lutheran Churches in that section - also 3 times at Phila., Penn., one at Lancaster, Penn., Hagerstown, Md., & Funkstown. These trips were all made on "horseback" - took one week to ride to Phila., or two weeks per sermon. The same to Lancaster, Penn. "Rev. C. Streit" died in Winchester on 3=10-1812. Served there 1785-1794 & 1804-1812 = 18 years, and at Millerstown, NOW Woodstock 1795-1803 or 9 years - a total of 27 years in the " Valley of Virginia". He died at age 62 years, 9 months & 3 days. If you are a "Lutheran" - the book "This Heritage" would be very interesting to you, as it covers the founding of the Lutheran Churches in Virginia.

If you are interested in W. Virg., write "Edgar B. Sims" State Auditor W. Virg., Charleston, W. Va., for a copy of his circular on his "Books - and copies of the "Map of present W. Va. as of 1738 - and as of 1780," which will give you an excellent idea of the section you were born in, and for .25¢ you may obtain a very detail map of Pocahontas Co., W. Va., which even shows all farm residences.

Since Auditor Sims last name is the same as my wife's "maiden" name - I am "playing a few cards" with he - for some additional info. in "Hampshire County", because the records at Romney now date back only to 1865 - prior one's destroyed during "Civil War" - he seems very accomodating - so - to further the sales of his "Books" - I may get some "Extra favors."

I have not yet asked "Bill" to pin-point the two "mills" built by Valentine Cackley, Sr. - are they on the small stream that flows thru Millpoint and empties into the "Greenbrier River" about 1½ miles away or on the Greenbrier? I have assumed that neither are now being operated. The detail Co. Map published by the state shows "saw mills", but no "grist mills" - A "seasonal industry" is shown at "Millpoint", also a Business Building, 6 farm homes, and one home house - and nearby 2 farm homes and one home house. "Bill" tells me the population IS 15 persons.

For the past 18 months I have been "processing" a Branch of (1) Abraham Kackley's son "(8?) Hamilton Jefferson ("Jeff") and Margaret ("Peggy" - Parish) Kackley" who came from Hampshire Co., Va. in 1855 to Coles County, Ill., they never wrote to any of their Virg. Relatives, so, they were LOST for 100 years, or until I located a descendent's Branch at Charleston, Ill., through a death notice published in our local newspaper in Sept. 1955. There were 10 children in this "Jeff and Peggy Ka" family, however, the ones I contacted only knew of 6 - and 8 had come to Coles Co. with their parents - or rather 7 and one born there later on. No one knew these childrens parents names when or where they died. But, from this meager beginning I have contacted all 8 Ill. Bchs., except one dtr. who may have died "single" - none knew of her. I have not had ime to count "heads" - but I believe these Bchs. now total more than 00 descendants. They are now scattered over Ill., Ind., Ohio, Fla.,

o., Kans., Iowa, Colo. and Calif.

The "originial Charleston, Ill., Story" was that the parents both died uddenly of "cholera" leaving these 6 orphans - their "John" then only 2 years old - this was supposed to be shortly after they came to Coles Co., Ill. No one knew where any of the other Bchs. descendants were now living - or very little of ANYTHING. I then got busy and processed the 1850 U. S. Census of the family in Hampshire Co., Va., then later on the 1860 " " " " ", then Cumberland Co., ~~Mar~~ Ill. - the two Census Reports gave me the names of all 10 children, and their nearest ages on those years, which both checked "o. k." I learned eventuallly that one son (5)" Jobe Sine Ka." served in the "Civil War", so, secured his data from the "Archivist of Ill. State Library", Spfld., Ill. and learned he was entered as "Joab or Jacob Crackley", and that in the same Co. & Regiment there was an "Elias J. Crackley", whom they stated showed the same in all respects except for names.

After I secured the two "Census Reports" - it was easy to "dope out" that Elias J. Crackley" - Was "(4) Elias James Kackley." More evidence of carelessness in listing "Civil War Soldiers" - fully 50% were WRONGLY listed. I then secured his record from Springfield and it was NOT the SAME as his brother
"Jobe Sine's", as he served all through the war - and Elias J. died of a disease at Nashville, Tenn., on Feb'y 12, 1864 - and is buried in the Nat'l.
Cem'tyr." at nearby Madison, Tenn. A request is now in Wash., D. C., for what detail data they may have - as to exact b. date, and his marital status.
So, I am "hoping" on this item.

As usual - On a Bch. of 10 children - there are a few that "buck" giving their Bch. data - and - when other Bchs. can NOT give their data - you are faced to seek "Public Records" - and if not convienent to "View" you must buy them, which soon runs into many dollars extra expense.

To save expenses, I plan to soon go to Charleston, Ills., and have them "dig out" the dusty birth & death record books for me to peruse, beginning with No. 1 - and on the Mar'ge books - from about 1860 onward. This will involve probably two or three days time - but will save about $100.00 in "fees" for certified records. Before this trip - I plan to go to Springfield, and search the "1865 State Census" "micro-film - records" (with a good magnifying glass), to help determine if the parents were then still living - if not - then I will know they died sometime between Aug. 4, 1860 (census taking date), and the date of the state census taken in 1865. I must search in both counties of "Coles & Cumberland" to determine this. Then some way I must learn their approx. death dates and try to find their burial place in some rural cemetery - a tough job.

Most "Historians" take what is sent them, and leave the "stubborn" branch go - but that makes a very poor "F. History" - so, I make every effort possible to complete every branch 100% - IF they do not take too much money to complete.

By the way - can you furnish me the names and addresses of any of the descendants of - (6) "Joseph & Susan (McClure) Ca." and (7) "Benjamin & Fanny (McKeever) Cackley" who migrated to Jackson Co., Ohio ? We h ave been unable to locate any of these branches.

I also note that you quote "Thomas Hill's" wife as Ann Cackley. We have her recorded as "Anne". Are we wrong?

ime to count "heads" - but I believe these Bchs. now total more than 00 descendants. They are now scattered over Ill., Ind., Ohio, Fla.,
o., Kans., Iowa, Colo. and Calif.

The "originial Charleston, Ill., Story" was that the parents both died suddenly of "cholera" leaving these 6 orphans - their "John" then only 2 years old - this was supposed to be shortly after they came to Coles Co., Ill. No one knew where any of the other Bchs. descendants were now living - or very little of ANYTHING. I then got busy and processed the 1850 U. S. Census of the family in Hampshire Co., Va., then later on the 1860 " " " " ", then Cumberland Co., ~~Ill~~ Ill. - the two Census Reports gave me the names of all 10 children, and their nearest ages on those years, which both checked "o. k." I learned eventuallly that one son (5)" Jobe Sine Ka." served in the "Civil War", so, secured his data from the "Archivist of Ill. State Library", Spfld., Ill. and learned he was entered as "Joab or Jacob Crackley", and that in the same Co. & Regiment there was an "Elias J. Crackley", whom they stated showed the same in all respects except for names.

After I secured the two "Census Reports" - it was easy to "dope out" that Elias J. Crackley" - Was "(4) Elias James Kackley." More evidence of carelessness in listing "Civil War Soldiers" - fully 50% were WRONGLY listed. I then secured his record from Springfield and it was NOT the SAME as his brother "Jobe Sine's", as he served all through the war - and Elias J. died of a disease at Nashville, Tenn., on Feb'y 12, 1864 - and is buried in the Nat'l. Cem'tyr." at nearby Madison, Tenn. A request is now in Wash., D. C., for what detail data they may have - as to exact b. date, and his marital status. So, I am "hoping" on this item.

As usual - On a Bch. of 10 children - there are a few that "buck" giving their Bch. data - and - when other Bchs. can NOT give their data - you are faced to seek "Public Records" - and if not convienent to "View" you must buy them, which soon runs into many dollars extra expense.

To save expenses, I plan to soon go to Charleston, Ills., and have them "dig out" the dusty birth & death record books for me to peruse, beginning with No. 1 - and on the Mar'ge books - from about 1860 onward. This will involve probably two or three days time - but will save about $100.00 in "fees" for certified records. Before this trip - I plan to go to Springfield, and search the "1865 State Census" "micro-film - records" (with a good magnifying glass), to help determine if the parents were then still living - if not - then I will know they died sometime between Aug. 4, 1860 (census taking date), and the date of the state census taken in 1865. I must search in both counties of "Coles & Cumberland" to determine this. Then some way I must learn their approx. death dates and try to find their burial place in some rural cemetery - a tough job.

Most "Historians" take what is sent them, and leave the "stubborn" branch go - but that makes a very poor "F. History" - so, I make every effort possible to complete every branch 100% - IF they do not take too much money to complete.

By the way - can you furnish me the names and addresses of any of the descendants of - (6) "Joseph & Susan (McClure) Ca." and (7) "Benjamin & Fanny (McKeever) Cackley" who migrated to Jackson Co., Ohio ? We h ave been unable to locate any of these branches.

I also note that you quote "Thomas Hill's" wife as Ann Cackley. We have her recorded as "Anne". Are we wrong?

I also have the name & ads. of "Willa Belle Cackley", 1315 East 6240 Terrace, Kansas City, Mo., - have never written her - where does she fit in the Cackley Bchs.?

The answers to the above 3 questions, I would like to "relay" to "Mr. Finley B. Campbell" who is processing the Cackley Branches.

Well, I must confess that this letter has ran into a "book", whereas, I only intended to write 2 or 3 pages - so - I must beg your pardon. Probably much of this "Keckley & Kackley" data will not interest you too much. - but - while I was writing, I thought you would be interested in the First Generation, so as to build up to your answer "(3) Valentine (none) Cackley, Sr."

Mr. Campbell IS a farmer "Justice of the Peace," and still does considerable "Federal and Ohio State Income Tax Work" at his home - and now is his busy season, so, if you write him it might be a little time before you hear from him - so - do not dispair. And, in the meantime - if you would like to come t o look over my data - almost any time will be suitable - as I put in about 10 hours daily on this F. History work - letters come in almost daily from the hundreds of contacts I am making -but - you better give me a few days advance notice, as once in a great while We are away from home. Our over-night accomodations are usually not too good, as we rent out all spare rooms to male roomers but of course, now and then we do have a "vacancy" where we can accomodate you - be sure and bring the "Mrs.", as she and the wife can "confab" while you & I do the History work.

So, with this, I will bring this lengthy lette r to a close, write when it may be convenient - and if you have any questions - fire them to me - and I will do my best to answer them.

Yours very truly,
s/ D. Earl Keckley
938 West Wood St.
Decatur, Illinois

Letter No. 1632
(Reading time 1 hr.)

P. S.;-
When you reply - the "questions" are marked  in left margin, so as to save re= reading the whole letter.

DEK

I also have the name & ads. of "Willa Belle Cackley", 1315 East 6240 Terrace, Kansas City, Mo., - have never written her - where does she fit in the Cackley Bchs.?

The answers to the above 3 questions, I would like to "relay" to "Mr. Finley B. Campbell" who is processing the Cackley Branches.

Well, I must confess that this letter has ran into a "book", whereas, I only intended to write 2 or 3 pages - so - I must beg your pardon. Probably much of this "Keckley & Kackley" data will not interest you too much. - but - while I was writing, I thought you would be interested in the First Generation, so as to build up to your answer "(3) Valentine (none) Cackley, Sr."

Mr. Campbell IS a farmer "Justice of the Peace," and still does considerable "Federal and Ohio State Income Tax Work" at his home - and now is his busy season, so, if you write him it might be a little time before you hear from him - so - do not dispair. And, in the meantime - if you would like to come t o look over my data - almost any time will be suitable - as I put in about 10 hours daily on this F. History work - letters come in almost daily from the hundreds of contacts I am making -but - you better give me a few days advance notice, as once in a great while We are away from home. Our over-night accomodations are usually not too good, as we rent out all spare rooms to male roomers but of course, now and then we do have a "vacancy" where we can accomodate you - be sure and bring the "Mrs.", as she and the wife can "confab" while you & I do the History work.

So, with this, I will bring this lengthy lette r to a close, write when it may be convenient - and if you have any questions - fire them to me - and I will do my best to answer them.

Yours very truly,
s/ D. Earl Keckley
938 West Wood St.
Decatur, Illinois

Letter No. 1632
(Reading time 1 hr.)

P. S.;-
When you reply - the "questions" are marked  in left margin, so as to save re= reading the whole letter.

DEK

CALVIN W. PRICE.

Calvin W. Price, 76, editor and publisher of the Pocahontas Times, and one of West Virginia's most-widely known newspapermen, died unexpectedly at his home in Marlinton Friday, June 14, 1957. He was born in Rockingham County, Va., a son of the late Dr. and Mrs. William T. Price. His father was a Presbyterian minister, who moved to Pocahontas County when this son was a mere lad. At the age of 15, he became an apprentice on the Pocahontas Times, and four years later a partner, and became the sole owner in 1906. Besides being one of this state's most widely known editors, an honorary doctorate was conferred on him several years ago by West Virginia University, and in recognition of his great zeal for nature, wildlife and censervation, a State Forest in Pocahontas and Greenbrier counties was named for him. Services were held Sunday in the Marlinton Presbyterian Church, conducted by his pastor, the Rev. Ernest H. Flaniken, and burial followed in Mountain View cemetery. Surviving are his widow, Mrs. Mabel Milligan Price; four daughters, Mrs. John Branch Green of Richmond, Va., Mrs. Isaac McNeel of Charleston, Mrs. J. D. Hubard of Virginia Beach, Va., and Mrs. Basil Sharp of Marlinton; a brother, Dr. Norman Price of Marlinton, and a sister, Mrs. Frank R. Hunter of Marlinton; also 10 grandchildren.

This paper is undertaken to discuss with you the identity of Lincoln's maternal grandfather. Under ordinary circumstances this might be considered a delicate question, but so much harm has been done by the number of books that have been published on the subject, and the scandal that has covered the nation that I am sure that I cannot add to the sorrow of two good women. It is my sincere desire to place them in a better light before a hundred million people everyone of whom is deeply indebted to them for the saver of the nation, Abraham Lincoln. The women I refer to are Lucy Hanks and her daughter Nancy Hanks.

Each passing year adds new luster to the name of Abraham Lincoln. Devoted as I have been to the neglected history of West Virginia, so long at the mercy of the mercenaries among historians, I had not considered Lincoln as a study demanding my attention any further than his actions as a statesman were responsible for the formation of the State of West Virginia and the movements of the Civil War within this State.

Every drop of blood in me is Confederate. I was born since the war but I can remember the days when Lincoln was not revered universally either in the North nor in the South. When it is remembered that his Gettysburg speech, now considered the supreme voicing of thought, was ridiculed and derided by Northern editors, some idea can be obtained of what Lincoln had to endure in his lifetime before the second sober thought of his countrymen set him on the highest place in history ever known in the troubled story of the world.

The Lincolns belonged to Rockingham County, Virginia. That was the county filled with what we call parfists in this day. It was the breed of Quakers, Mennonites and Dunkards. High class, level headed people who had a clear understanding of the horrors of war where the winner is also a loser. And as for the almighty dollar, they were experts in that game, and money was highly important to them. That was the county that suffered more than any other county in the United States per capita, and while Lincoln was president and commander in chief of the army. My earliest impression then were from men who had suffered from the burning and raiding of the Valley of Virginia, and "Old Abe" was about the best name that they called him. If it had not been for my father who was a historian and a Confederate soldier and who appreciated the greatness of Lincoln long before some of the men of disappointed ambitions in the North, I might have grown up in the belief that the war president had cloven hoofs.

Later on when we had moved from Rockingham county to the mountains of West Virginia and I had the opportunity of hearing men discuss for endless hours in conversation the history of the Civil War, I began to see how the existence of the Union depended upon the unfaltering purpose of one man, just as the success of the Revolution was due to the steadfast nature and good judgment of George Washington. I have come to regard Abraham Lincoln as one of the men that the Lord provides from time to time to preserve mankind from destruction through their own mad passions and prejudices.

Perhaps the most engrossing problem ever presented to the psychologist was how Lincoln the wise man and the man without the benefit of even a most primitive school, could have been evolved from the Lincolns and the Hankses, as the sole representative of two prolific families that ever showed any scholastic ability or who ever reached an eminent position upon his own merit. If there ever was a case of a man who burst his birth's invidious bar, it was he.

Ever since I can remember the searchers after truth who delighted in unsavory subjects were divided in two schools, one which advanced the theory that Lincoln was the son of John C. Calhoun, and the other that Lincoln was the half brother of Jefferson Davis. Something like forty years ago I was able to combat both theories for I had found out that if there ever was a pure and virturous woman on the face of the earth it was Nancy Hanks Lincoln, the mother of Abraham Lincoln. Therefore there could not be any truth in those rumors. Never was there a more undeserved case of the fell work of the livid wing of scandal.

But when it comes to the question of Lucy Hanks, the grandmother, who atoned for what some might consider a mistake of her girlhood, by a long life of good works as a noble Christian woman, the wife of a good man, and the mother of nine children, we have to accept the fact that Nancy Hanks was a base born child, and we have to look to the circumstances surrounding that fact.

There can be little doubt that the Hanks family knew who was the father of Nancy Hanks and there can be no doubt that they regarded it as a secret so profound that it could not be divulged. I believe that Abraham Lincoln knew who his grandfather was and that his lips were tightly sealed. All that he said about it that has been preserved was that his grandfather was a Virginia planter and that he believed that whatever talent that he had was inherited from his unnamed grandfather This is one of the strongest evidences to me that the gentleman that I am about to name was the grandfather of Abraham Lincoln.

One of Lincoln's great aunts, a sister of Lucy, had a child before marriage by a man by the name of Charles Friend. It did not suit to marry for some reason or other but there was no great concealment for they named the baby Dennis Friend Hanks, and he was adopted along with little Nancy by Elizabeth Sparrow, aunt to both of them, and brought up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. This was the Dennis Hanks, a sort of fireside philosopher, who was an earlier counselor of his cousin Abe. This Dennis Hanks took the view that he should perjure himself like a gentleman and prove that Nancy Hanks was named Nancy Sparrow and born in lawful wedlock after Lucy married the other Sparrow. This he failed to accomplish. I suppose that these matters last test to be discussed as a general thing, but when the fate of nations depend upon the vagaries of human beings, there is nothing much we can do but reaffirm our faith and dependence in Providence, and admit that we are helpless and dependent mortals.

A woman said the other day that what was the rightest thing in the world could be the wrongest thing in the world under different circumstances.

Physically Lincoln took after the Lincolns. They were given to tall ungainly forms. One of my earliest recollections was one of the clan that was six feet seven inches tall and thin and raw boned.

Lincoln was a cousin of R. E. Lee. The name of Lee is one of the proudest in Virginia and China. Some of the rest of us decayed aristocrats may whisper around that the Lees are a comparatively modern family, dating back to a mere two hundred years or so, but the Lees sail grandly on nevertheless and number many great and important names on the list. They ought to agree on the spelling however for away back there a distinguished Virginia jurist spelled his name Leigh. It looks like there may have been an ancestor phonetically inclined, like the branch that were apt to spell their name Linkhorn.

Dr. Barton of Foxboro, Massachusetts, has become the most famous of the biographers of Lincoln, though Emil Ludwig is making a pass at the subject at this time and he seems to be a man of parts, capable of felicity in expression and discernment. West Virginia at this great intellectual feast takes the place of the poor man at a frolic. We furnished a tottering democracy with the immortal Nancy and you cannot laugh that off. I have had many kind letters from Dr. Barton lately and he has accepted my help in the spirit in which it was offered. After the home of the Hanks had been found to be in Mineral County, I was able to locate the missing title papers. In that I functioned as an attorney-at-law, rather than a historian. It is a matter of considerable satisfaction to me that the title and survey have passed the critical inspection of David C. Martin. I noticed in Dr. Barton's late book that he has the picture of the ruins of a house with a cellar as one of the possible sites of the Hanks homestead. This to an antiquarian is an anachronism, as the pioneers on the headwaters did not have cellars in 1784.

I feel that the best evidence of the identity of the mysterious grandfather is to be gathered from Lincoln's talk with his law partner, William H. Herndon, who has recorded it in his history, and his account should be carefully considered. Herndon said:

"It was about 1850, when he and I were driving in his one horse buggy to the court in Menard County, Illinois, ... he spoke, for the first time in my hearing, of his mother, dwelling on her characteristics, and mentioning or enumerating what qualities, he inherited from her. He said, among other things, that she was the illegitimate daughter of Lucy Hanks and a well bred Virginia farmer or planter; and he argued that from this last source came his power of analysis his mental activity, his ambition, and all the qualities that distinguished him from the other members and descendants of the Hanks family . . . . . The revelation—painful as it was—called up the recollection of his mother, and as the buggy jolted over the road, he added ruefully, 'God bless my mother; all that I am or ever hope to be I owe to her.' "

In the Virginias the word planter is never used to describe a farmer in the Valley or in the Mountains. It is confined to the tobacco and cotton regions and that is what was meant in this case. It is apparent that Lincoln knew who the grandfather was and that there was a powerful reason for not disclosing the name. It would have been fatal to his political life. It would have invoked a storm of ridicule. Lincoln up to the hour of his death was subjected to abuse and adverse criticism. Kind words were few and far between.

Joseph Hanks was a native of Richmond county a county in the Northern Neck where it narrows down to the few miles that separate the tidal rivers, the Potomac and the Rappahannock. The space here is taken up largely by Richmond County and Westmoreland County, and this spot has been the birthplace of many eminent men, among them being Washington, Monroe, the Lees, and other prominent personages.

Hanks signed by mark. He married Ann Lee. He was in the Fairfax grant and decided to go to the extreme western part of the Fairfax lands. This was about 1782, as fixed by Barton, from certain records that he examined in Richmond County. The way at that time lay by Alexandria by Leesburg through Snickers Gap of the Blue Ridge, and by Winchester, and Romney, to Patterson Creek.

Fairfax had set aside as manor lands 9000 acres of the bottoms along Patterson Creek but there was good land to be taken up outside the reservation.

When he moved he had nine children, five boys and four girls and all must have been with him as they were listed in the census of 1782 as living in Hampshire County.

Reaching back towards the Allegheny Front was Mikes Run a stream about ten miles long. In this neighhood, Hanks saw George Terry who had settled there. He looked at a choice spot in a hollow in the hills on the head drains of Mikes Run which Peter Hartman had bought of Fairfax in 1781. Hartman had gone back to Washington County, Maryland, beyond the danger of Indian raids and had left George Terry a title bond for the tract It was 216 acres and just filled the little hollow. It had limestones to insure its fertility. There were sugar trees. Good springs Shelter from the storms. Protection from the Indians. It had even a good deer lick. Terry agreed with Hanks that the latter should have the northern end. The tract was something over a mile long and about a third of a mile broad and lay parallel with the mountain ranges. Hanks built his home here. Barton says that Hanks may have come in the latter part of the year 1782. That is not at all probable. Whoever heard of a settler like Hanks who had no money coming to the mountains in the fall of the year. It would be as unnatural as for geese to fly north at that time. It was absolutely necessary to raise enough corn to see the family through the winter. And when it is proven that Hanks wintered there with nine children, we know full well that he raised a patch of corn by hand the summer of 1782.

COPY

He must have been there two years. From the spring of 1782 to the spring of 1784. He had improved the land by clearing and building a house of one room which had no floor, no window, and not much of a chimney.

Hanks was a good citizen and a typical pioneer no doubt. There was a strong religious streak in the breed. I like to quote that verse about the pioneer families and how they trained their youths: "He raised them rough, but he raised them well, when their feet took hold of the paths of hell, he filled them full of the wrath of God, and tanned their hides with an old ramrod."

To this household came trouble and disaster. Their fine daughter, Lucy, unmarried, was found to be pregnant That put the household on the move. Hanks was poor. He managed to raise about a hundred dollars from a money lender by giving a lien on his land. It does not state that this was gold. Anything but that. And considering the state of the national and state currency it must have been a pitiful sum. Hardly enough to flag a bread wagon in this day and time. But on it the family turned their faces to the setting sun and their place knew them no more.

It was only by real work that Barton was able to locate them from year to year from the Atlantic coast to the western part of Kentucky. And there is an hiatus in his record from 1784 to 1787. It would be well for search to be made in the records of Monongalia and Ohio counties, West Virginia, and the original counties of the Virginia part of Pennsylvania, for it is more than likely that the Hanks raised corn for a season or two on the waters of the Monongahela. The year 1784, was a specially dangerous year for immigrants to float down the Ohio, and I hardly think it possible that they got through the Indian lines that year.

Hanks died in Kentucky nine years after leaving Mikes Run a rich and substantial farmer. He mentions every child he has in the will and leaves each something, except no mention is made of his daughter Lucy. Conjecture is that Lucy has been well provided for in worldly goods Conjecture is that Hanks has prospered exceedingly in the lean years between 1784 and 1793. What is the explanation? The Virginia planter.

In Kentucky Lucy has a few more troubled years but by 1790, she has agreed to marry Henry Sparrow and she writes a letter to the clerk saying that she is of age and for him to issue a Lisons for her and Henry Sparrow. Lucy had one error marked against her in a way on November 24, 1790, when a grandjury of hes returned an indictment against her for fornication. Scribes and Pharisees! Henry Sparrow comes into court and executes a marriage bond that he will marry Lucy and the fornication case is thrown out of court. Lincoln's mother died when he was a small boy but his grandmother Lucy lived until Lincoln was a man grown, and Lincoln was a serious, deep, and discerning man. Does anyone believe that he did not know who his grandfather was?

The clue we have is that Lucy Hanks was betrayed in the year 1783 in Hampshire county. The question naturally arises from the known facts whether there was any Virginia planter running loose in that county during the summer of 1783? It appears that there was. That he was rich, and powerful, of an amazing personal perfection, in the dangerous fifties, devoted to hunting and to woods life, and who had been born and raised with Joseph Hanks, Hanks being about seven years older than the planter. History places this planter in that Eastern Panhandle the summer of 1783. In fact he had a summer home there. That particular year he was the employer of and the financial backer of a man who was trying to build a boat that would float up stream without sails or oars.

That is the fatal opportunity. The summer of the next year we can imagine that same planter coming back to his summer home and finding a deserted cabin in the woods and the Hanks family in exile. The neighbors tell him perhaps that Lucy had been ruined and the family to hide their shame have gone to Kentucky. Then the planter gets up an expedition to Kentucky under the plea of looking after his real estate holdings on the Ohio river. History says that after getting to the navigable waters of the Ohio, he finds the Indians are up and that it would not be safe to descend the river in a boat. He spends some weeks around the headwaters of the Monongahela River and returns. One night he sits under a tree all night in the rain

The Joseph Hanks family in its migration travelled from the coast to near the Mississippi River. They went from the banks of the Rappahannock to the headwaters of the Potomac and from there to Rough Creek or Rough River as it is now called a branch of the Green River in Kentucky. The planter had lands in each of the regions. It is significant that the only land that he owned in Kentucky was in the pennyroyal on Rough Creek where he had seven thousand acres.

Breed is stronger than pasture. No proof has been adduced that would be accepted after a plea in bar. But ill it seems to me that we know man. We sense it as it were. haps I had better not be more ite concerning a man who was in war, first in peace, and first hearts of his countrymen.

moves in a mysterious way and eople of the United States never cease to be grateful for e Washington, Nancy Hanks, braham Lincoln. And the time come when Nancy Hanks will au fame with Miriam and Joan

LAW OFFICES OF CHRISTY & WHARTON
PATENTS AND PATENT LITIGATION
FARMERS BANK BUILDING, PITTSBURGH, PA.

ROOM 2203
CABLE ADDRESS
"PATENT PITTSBURGH"

O H CHRISTY
N B WHARTON
M GUTHRIE
A ENGLISH

May 5, 1937

Mr. Calvin W. Price,
Marlinton, West Virginia

Dear Mr. Price:

[illegible] me in my search for data concerning the Golden Eagle. It was very kind of you, and very useful to me. I am sorry that I did not see you either on Saturday or Sunday to speak of these things.

I append a list of birds casually noted in running about Pocahontas County. As a typical list it is imperfect, chiefly because the time is one when migrants are returning in daily increasing numbers, and the possibilities of seeing particular species necessarily exceeds any such casual experience.

With kindest wishes,

Yours very truly,

Bayard H. Christy

BHC/ALR

STATE OF WEST VIRGINIA
EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT
CHARLESTON 5

OKEY L. PATTESON
GOVERNOR

November 21, 1949

Honorable Calvin Price
Editor, Pocahontas Times
Marlinton, West Virginia

Dear Calvin:

I appreciate very much your thoughtfulness in sending me letter from James E. Banks, which he wrote to you under date of November 8.

However, I believe the matter has been worked out at least to the satisfaction of my Negro friends. For your information, I am herewith enclosing a Statement of Policy with reference to Negro Troops in West Virginia National Guard, together with a copy of my letter and General Fox's letter to General Cramer who is Chief of the National Guard Bureau.

In view of this Statement of Policy, I do not believe that even the Republicans could construe anything detrimental from the views therein expressed.

Also, I am returning your letter from Mr. Banks, and again sinderely thank you for your spirit of cooperation in this matter.

With kindest regards, I am

Sincerely yours,

Okey L. Patteson

OKEY L. PATTESON,
Governor.

OLP:rc
Enclosures (4)

STATE OF WEST VIRGINIA
EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT
CHARLESTON

L. PATTESON
GOVERNOR

ROOM 2203
CABLE ADDRESS
ENT PITTSBURGH

November 14, 1949

Major General Kenneth F. Cramer
Chief, National Guard Bureau
Department of the Army
Washington 25, D. C.

Dear General Cramer:

Under date of November 9, 1949, our State Adjutant General, Brigadier General Charles R. Fox, wrote you in regard to additional units for colored troops in West Virginia.

I wish to take this opportunity to advise that I concur in General Fox's request one hundred percent, and sincerely trust that you will use your good office to aid in this very important matter. If I can be of any service in this connection, I will be most happy to make a trip to Washington with General Fox if such would expedite the granting of this request in any manner.

Thanking you for your courtesy in this matter, and with kindest personal regards, I am

Sincerely yours,

OKEY L. PATTESON,
Governor.

OLP:rc

COPY

Concord Presbyterian Church
Organized 1775
Loray, North Carolina

E. V. WILEY
MINISTER

OCTOBER 21, 1953

MR. C. W. PRICE
MARLINTON, W. VA.

DEAR MR. PRICE:

CONGRATULATIONS OF THE HONOR OF THE 11,000 ACRES OF TREES FOR A NAMESAKE. AND YET I SHOULD CONGRATULATE THE FORESTRY DEPT. ON THEIR GOOD JUDGEMENT.

IT WOULD BE AN HONOR AND A JOY TO ME TO GO WITH YOU ON ONE OF YOUR EXPLORATIONS THROUGH THE FOREST. I STILL HAVE SUCH LONGINGS, EVEN IF I DON'T GET TO CARRY OUT MY HEART'S DESIRE.

AT THIS WRITING, WE ARE ALL WELL. THE WIFE AND I ARE AT HOME, KEEPING THINGS HUMMING. DORA LEE IS IN W. C. U. N. C. AT GREENSBORO, N. C. AND JOHN DUDLEY IS IN THE DARLINGTON SCHOOL, AT ROME, GA. THEY, EACH ONE, ARE DOING FINE.

WE ARE TO HAVE ONE OF OUR W.VA. BOYS WITH US HERE IN OUR CHURCH ON OCT. 28TH., THE REV. E. R. AREHART, FORMERLY OF FRANKLIN, W. VA., AND NOW OF THE NORTH BRAZIL MISSION. AS WE COULD NOT GET HIM ON A SUNDAY, WE ARE HAVING A DINNER FOR THE WHOLE CHURCH AND HE WILL BE OUR GUEST SPEAKER.

IT IS QUITE DRY DOWN HERE, BUT WE ARE STILL HAVING TOMATOES AND SQUASH OUT OF OUR GARDEN. (MULCH FARMING).

WITH BEST WISHES TO EACH OF YOUR FAMILY AND TO ALL OUR FRIENDS, I AM

MOST SINCERELY,

Ewell Wiley.

RAY CAVENDISH
COMMISSIONER

THE STATE ROAD COMMISSION OF WEST VIRGINIA
CHARLESTON 5

August 23, 1951

9

Mr. C. C. Karnes
District Engineer
State Road Commission
Elkins, West Virginia

Dear Mr. Karnes:

As you know, we have had considerable pressure for the construction of an all-weather road from a point on Route US 219 in the vicinity of Slaty Fork to the operation of the Maust Coal & Coke Company, in Pocahontas County.

Request for this improvement has come from several of the County's leading citizens. On your next trip to that section please get in touch with Senator Fred C. Allen of Marlinton, Delegate June McElwee and the Honorable Calvin W. Price, Editor, The Pocahontas Times, in order to go into this matter thoroughly with them. In the event it develops that it is the desire of the people to have this section of road constructed, you may consider this as your authority to revise the Pocahontas County Bond Program to include this project.

Very truly yours,

Ray Cavendish
Commissioner

C.FB

cc—Hon. Fred C. Allen
Hon. June McElwee
Hon. Calvin W. Price
Hon. John C. Fox, Fayetteville
Mr. H. K. Griffith

THE POCAHONTAS TIMES

CALVIN W. PRICE, Editor

Marlinton, W. Va.. May 25, 1939

To all members of the West Virginia State Newspaper Council :

Greeting :

The date of the summer outing for 1939 to Pocahontas County has just been definitely set for Thursday, Friday and Saturday, June 29 and 30, July 1. The plans and specifications will be mailed you soon. Please write to me and say you are coming, and how many you will bring with you. We all will do our poor best by you.

Regards,

CALVIN

THE POCAHONTAS TIMES

CALVIN W. PRICE, Editor

Marlinton, W. Va.. May 25, 1939

To all members of the West Virginia State Newspaper Council :
Greeting :

The date of the summer outing for 1939 to Pocahontas County has just been definitely set for Thursday, Friday and Saturday, June 29 and 30, July 1. The plans and specifications will be mailed you soon. Please write to me and say you are coming, and how many you will bring with you. We all will do our poor best by you.

Regards,

CALVIN

. PRICE, STATE GEOLOGIST
. TUCKER, ASST. STATE GEOLOGIST
E. KARE, ASSISTANT GEOLOGIST
T. NECK, ASSISTANT GEOLOGIST
. LUCKE, ASSISTANT GEOLOGIST
. AZURE, SECRETARY-BOOKKEEPER
J. HESSLER, CLERK

STATE OF WEST VIRGINIA
GEOLOGICAL AND ECONOMIC SURVEY
MORGANTOWN

JOHN B. McCUE, CHIEF CHEMIST
HOMER A. HOSKINS, CHEMIST
ALVAH J. W. HEADLEE, CHEMIST
COOPERATING GEOLOGISTS:
JAMES H. C. MARTENS, MINERALOGIST
HARRY M. FRIDLEY, GEOLOGIST
DANA WELLS, PALEONTOLOGIST

Aug. 3, 1937.

Honorable Calvin Price,
Editor, The Pocahontas Times,
Marlinton, W.Va.

Dear Calvin:

Some days ago in talking with you, I mentioned the fact that the Association of American Petroleum Geologists was holding its meeting this year in Pittsbungh, Pa. Preceding the technical session, an extensive field trip requiring three days would be taken the most of which is to be in West Virginia. The plan is to enter West Virginia near Red House continue east over U. S. 50 to Winchester down the valley to Harrisonburg, west to Franklin, Circleville, Thornwood, Minnehaha Springs, Marlinton, Lewisburg, Charleston, Parkersburg, Wheeling and Pittsburgh. You can see that this puts particularly all of the trip in West Virginia and furthermore, goes through the good county of Pocahontas. This delegation will be an important group, a group composed of people from widely scattered points, especially the western States. I am, of course, very anxious that we West Virginians make a good impression with our visitors. We know we have the geologic interest and the problem is up to us to see that they get to see our geology at its best.

My present purpose in writing though at this time is to ask if it will be possible to have lunch served the group in Marlinton. Could the hotels there handle it or would it be possible for one of the church organizations to do it. It will be impossible at this early date to tell definitely how many will be there. It is estimated that there will be anywhere from 75 to 150. I am inclined to think the latter will be nearer correct. It will be necessary, however, that the least amount of time possible is consumed for the lunch period because that day's trip will extend from New Market, Va., and the party must be in Charleston by six o'clock.

Hon. Calvin Price,
2
8-3-37.

With the many points of geologic interest, you can see that there will be little time for eating. If it is not asking too much, will you advise me whether or not arrangements can be made to serve a lunch or noon day meal to this party on Tuesday, October 12th at one o'clock, also the price for the meal? If you can help me with this and advise me, I will be further indebted to you.

Sincerely,

Paul H. Price,
State Geologist.

PHP a

No.9 Hubbard Court,Charleston,W.Va

Oct.11,1937

Mr.Calvin W.Price
Marlinton,W.Va

Dear Cal;-

I went off the W.P.A.payroll as of Oct. 9, but will continue to check the marker inscriptions and handle the other contacts with the manufacturer of the markers until the order is completed.There have been shipped the markers for 33 of the 55 counties. Of the remainder,of course there average much fewer markers to the county.

I can now devote my time for a few weeks to seeing what additional markers are desired by various communities. I enclose copy of statement which I am using.Perhaps it should have been printed but it cost a little more than I felt jusitified in putting into itDo you think that it should have been a printed form?

I'll be glad to have you indicate what you think of the set-up. Does there seem to be a feeling at Marlinton that there should be additional markers anywhere. Several towns want a marker on each road leading into that community but I feel sure that every county will want one or more additional markers.

Yours sincerely,

Ross B.Johnston

Prin:

Address

The program of marking points of outstanding historic and scenic interest in West Virginia will be completed so far as funds will permit before the end of 1937 by the erection of the last of the 440 highway markers under the Works Progress Administration, the Road Commission of West Virginia, and the Historic and Scenic Marker Commission. Private groups and communities have indicated a desire for additional markers for which there are no funds available. A plan is now offered by which private cooperation may add to the unified program that is now underway to designate the State's landmarks, and to more full mark places, such as towns and cities, that have already received single markers.

Private groups or communities which want to purchase additional markers of the same design as those now being erected on West Virginia highways may do so by obtaining the consent and approval of the Historic and Scenic Markers Commission as to the inscription appearing on the tablet, and as to the place of erection. If such markers are then paid for and delivered to the State Road Commission, with the necessary post for each marker, that department will erect and maintain the markers to the same extent as though purchased and installed by the combined effort of Federal and State government and the Marker Commission.

The Michaels Art Bronze Company., Covington, Kentucky, has manufactured the highway markers which have already been purchased. This firm has agreed to make direct contract for each order for additional markers at a delivered price of $65.00 each. This does not include the supporting posts which must also be supplied by the purchaser of the markers. The posts must meet standard specifications.

Agencies which want additional markers should fill out the order below and forward promptly to Ross B. Johnston, No. 9 Hubbard Court, Charleston, West Va., who will aid in preparing the inscriptions and checking locations of markers for the West Virginia Commission on Historic and Scenic Markers and assemble and forward the orders to the manufacturer.

THE MICHAELS ART BRONZE CO., 231-243 Court Avenue,
Covington, Kentucky

Date _____ 1937

This is your authorization to manufacture _____ historic and scenic highway markers at the unit price of $65.00 delivered at West Virginia points which will be designated later. It is understood that inscription and location of each marker is to have the approval of the West Virginia Commission on Historic and Scenic Markers. Shipment will be made to the proper district offices of the West Virginia State Road Commission upon final instructions after the orders have been assembled.

Yours very truly,

Name _____

Please Print _____

Address _____

PARKERSBURG CIVIC WOMANS CLUB

PARKERSBURG, WEST VIRGINIA

July 31, 1950

Mr. Cal Price
Marlinton, W. Va.

Dear Mr. Price:

I am inreceipt of your letter of July 18 and am delighted to know you will come to Parkersburg and speak before the Civic Woman's Club.

Since you have specified that you can only come on a Thursday, Friday or Saturday, we have decided that Thursday, October 19 will be the time - if that is still all right with you. It will be a covered dish dinner with husbands present and if there is a Mrs. Cal Price we will be very happy to have you both present for the entire evening. If not - Mr. Price - for sure.

As a state federated club, we are asked to have one program on West Virginia this year - and that is what we would like for you to talk about also subject to your approval. Too, in my other letter to you I forgot to ask you about charges, etc. Please let me hear from you abain.

I will advise you later regarding time and place - place will depend upon registration. Looking forward to hearing from you, I am

Sincerely yours,

Mrs. Glen E. Mealy

Mrs. Glen E. Mealy
1023 Laird Avenue
Parkersburg, W. Va.

MUSEUM DISPLAY
160th ANNIVERSARY INC.

COMMONWEALTH OF VIRGINIA
SENATE CHAMBER
RICHMOND

JAMES H. PRICE
LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR
RICHMOND, VIRGINIA

2 October 1937

Mr. Calvin W. Price, Editor
Pocahontas Times
Marlinton, West Virginia

My dear Calvin :

Upon my return from Lexington this morning, I find several copies of the Pocahontas Times awaiting me. I have just had time to hurriedly look through the paper and my attention has been attracted by your very kind comments on the Price family. I will distribute some of these copies to other members of the connection.

When I returned home, my wife told me that during my absence Judge McClintic had done me the honor to call and pay his respects. He frequently comes to Richmond and I have thoroughly enjoyed him.

One of the greatest pleasures that I had at the Greenbrier Valley Fair was seeing you again and since you have some daughters living in our section, I am hoping that you may have occasion to come to Richmond. If you do, I certainly want you to reserve time enough to come to see us.

I appreciate the papers very much.

Sincerely yours,

Jim

W. VA.
AJORITY WHIP

CIVIL SERVICE
DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA
(CHAIRMAN) LABOR
MINES AND MINING
ROADS

Congress of the United States

House of Representatives

Washington, D. C.

January 10, 1942

Mr. Calvin Price
Marlinton, West Virginia

Dear Calvin:

I appreciate your comprehensive letter of January 3. I shall direct my answer first of all to Mr. Bell. I have recommended Mr. Bell to Col. Vandervoort of the Zone Construction Quartermaster office of the War Department in Columbus, Ohio. I feel certain he is deserving and will do all I can to be helpful.

Secondly, I must state I have given practically no consideration to being an aspirant for the United States Senate. I have been so engrossed in my duties that I have really put forth an all out effort in my present job to contribute to our defense efforts. I sincerely appreciate your friendship for me, and I know how much valuable aid you would render in case I were to become a candidate. I shall check the matter very carefully within the next few days and perhaps come to a definite decision. I know Mr. Staggers very well.

Thirdly, the retention of the Fish and Wildlife Service in Washington is now being considered along with the retention of the other agencies. I have been having conferences with Senator McCarran, Chairman of the Senate District of Columbia Committee, and we have been putting forth every effort to keep these bureaus here because shifting them would impair efficiency, etc. We have had as witnesses before our joint hearing the Director of this organization. I hope for an audience with the President on this subject Monday, in company with Senator Barkley and Senator McCarran.

With kindest personal regards always,

I am

Sincerely and faithfully yours,

Jennings Randolph

jr/l

JENNINGS RANDOLPH

SERVICING DIVISION

readers.

CONSERVATION INFORMATION SERVICE

NATIONAL WILDLIFE FEDERATION

WASHINGTON, D. C.

- F L A S H -

YOUR HELP IS NEEDED -- NOW!

An executive order has been issued, transferring certain services of the government from Washington to other cities. The Fish and Wildlife Service of the Department of the Interior is scheduled to go to Chicago, unless immediate steps are taken to prevent it.

A majority of the 375 employees are highly trained technicians and specialists. Over 150 have indicated that due to the purchase of homes or other conditions they cannot carry on in Chicago. These men have been with the Service for years and cannot be replaced in the near future when their services are indispensable to the conduct of this Bureau which in turn is vital to the conservation of our wildlife and related natural resources.

It is of the utmost importance that the Fish and Wildlife Service be in the vicinity of Washington in order that it may work in close cooperation with defense and other conservation agencies, such as the Soil Conservation Service, the National Park Service, Triple A, etc.

At Patuxent, Maryland, within ten miles of Washington, the Fish and Wildlife Service has 3,000 acres, now being used as a wildlife refuge with buildings and laboratories for conducting experimental work. Within sixty days, temporary buildings can be erected on this land, to house this Service and possibly the National Park Service.

To erect these buildings will cost far less than to move the Service and the personnel to Chicago. Such an arrangement will enable the retention of the Service of all of its valuable personnel.

Our Honorary President, J. N. Darling, says:

"This move to Chicago will mean the eventual disintegration of the Fish and Wildlife Service, because the broad comprehensive plan for the future of the Service requires that it work in close cooperation with the other departments having to do with the conservation of our natural resources.

"To have this decision revised and the Service move to Patuxent or some other place within a few miles of Washington instead of to Chicago will aid and not hinder our war preparations. Every effort must be made by those who are deeply interested in the preservation of our wildlife to prevent this transfer to Chicago."

The order was issued by the Executive branch of the government. Please - now - the day you receive this letter - write or wire Harold Smith, Director of the Budget, Washington, D. C., and express your view on this vital problem. For good measure, also write your Representative and Senator.

REMEMBER PEARL HARBOR -- ALSO REMEMBER THE DUST BOWL!

Sincerely,

I. R. Watts

I. R. Watts, Director
SERVICING DIVISION

Mrw:Sh

OHIO RECLAMATION

AN ENTERPRISE CARRIED ON BY THE OPEN CUT MINING INDUSTRY OF OHIO TO RESTORE THE MARGINAL SURFACE LANDS DIRECTLY CONNECTED WITH OPEN CUT OPERATIONS

304-26th.St.S.E.
Charleston,West Va.
December 31 1941.

Mr.Calvin Price,
Marlinton,West Va.

Dear Mr.Price:

I have today written a letter to Hon. Jennings Randolph in regard to getting a position in the land department U.S.Army or any other position and have taken the liberty to use your name as one of my references.I am also going to ask you if you will write him a letter tying me up with Pocahontas County as to property,family etc.also in regard to my character, ability and democracy.If you will do this as soon as possible so that it would reach him before he takes any action it will be greatly appreciated.

Hoping you had a merry Christmas and that you will have a Happy Prosperous New Year,I am,

Sincerely,

Walton H. Bell

WILLIAM L. BURT, Chairman
JAY LITTLEPAGE, Director

OHIO RECLAMATION COMMITTEE

AN ENTERPRISE CARRIED ON BY THE OPEN CUT MINING INDUSTRY OF OHIO TO RESTORE THE MARGINAL SURFACE LANDS DIRECTLY CONNECTED WITH OPEN CUT OPERATIONS
BOX 85, ST. CLAIRSVILLE, OHIO

April 7, 1942

Mr. Calvin Price
Pocohantas Times
Marlington, West Virginia

Dear Mr. Price:

In accordance with our telephone conversation the other night, I am enclosing a check for $35.00 in payment for the bear rug. I would appreciate it very much if you could have the rug shipped by express, collect, to me here at Wheeling, West Virginia.

I want to thank you very much for your interest and trouble in getting this rug for me.

Yours very truly

William L. Burt

WLB:RJ

Enc. 1

March 20, 1940

1614 NINETEENTH STREET, N. W.
WASHINGTON 9, D. C.

January 14, 1949

Dear Mr. Price:

I have just become a reader of the Pocahontas Times and like your articles on wild life very much. You have a happy style (which I can certify as good, after my long experience as an editor). Keep up the good work!

Noting in the Blue Book that you are a member of the Commission on Markers of Historic and Scenic Places in your State, I should like to know if any such spots have been marked during the last year or two, and if so, where and why. Do not trouble yourself to write, but perhaps you have a printed report or some published data.

Although I have merely skirted the State in my travels, I have a keen interest in West Virginia's unique history and equally unique position geographically among the States. It seems to me to be capable of enormous development, aside from its chief product--coal. It should become the chief center of interest to motorists from every part of our Union, it seems to me.

Sincerely yours

Ira E.Bennett

Mr. Calvin W.Price
Editor Pocahontas Times
Marlinton, West Virginia.

Ira E. Bennett

Shenandoah Life Insurance Co., Inc.

Roanoke, Virginia

DAVID D. TAYLOR, BRANCH MANAGER

320-21-22-23 PROFESSIONAL BUILDING,
CLARKSBURG, W. VA

February 5, 1942

Mr. Cal Price
Editor Pocahontas Times
Marlinton, W. Va.

Dear Mr. Price:

First let me preface my remarks to you by stating that I to have a wholesome respect for the John Hancock Mutual Life Insurance Company, and I am sure your recommendation of Mr. S. N. Hench is not lightly given and that he is a gentleman of the first water. Be that as it may, I cannot help but be somewhat shocked that you, who stems from the fine old stock of the old dominion state of Virginia, steeped in its democratic traditions, and loyal in every other respect to its worthy tenents, should affiliate yourself and your worthy newspaper in a program of propaganda for this yankee domiciled and managed institution.

Do you not think, Cal, that the bones of your ancestors will turn over in chagrin, when they realize that grand old Virginia Company, the Shenandoah Life, has been represented in your baliwick by your good friend and neighbor, Harper M. Smith, low these many years, and has given protection and comfort to the good citizens of Pocahontas County, with never a nod of recognition or encouragement from your most illustrious publication the Pocahontas Times. Yet here at the first opportunity, you burst into impassioned print in behalf of this ultra northern, yankee dominated, New England located, financial institution.

Nevertheless, Mr. Price be assured of our love for you personally and respect for your ability regardless of this one misguided action on your part.

Very truly yours,

David D. Taylor

David D. Taylor, Branch Mgr.
Northern W. Va. Branch Office

DDT:LGN

ADDRESS REPLY TO DIRECTOR CONSERVATION

STATE OF WEST VIRGINIA
CONSERVATION COMMISSION
CHARLESTON

October 5, 1937

Honorable Calvin Price,
Editor, Pocahontas Times,
Marlinton, W. Va.

Mr. C. T. Whitacre,
District Game Protector,
Dunmore, W. Va.

Mr. John Shanholtz,
District Game Protector,
Moorefield, W. Va.

Gentlemen:

It seems to me that in the past our friends from across the Alleghenies in Virginia, have been working a bit of a rabbit's foot on West Virginia, where deer hunting is concerned. I am reliably informed that when we opened our deer season prior to theirs, a considerable number of deer were driven from West Virginia across the Allegheny Mountains and into Virginia. The Virginians were then clever enough when their season started, to make their drive from the Virginia-West Virginia line eastward into Virginia -- thus driving the deer further into their territory where many of them remained.

Now, I propose that you gentlemen endeavor to pursuade our West Virginia deer hunters to take a leaf from Virginia's book and since Virginia's adjoining counties have an earlier open season, let our hunters drive westward from the Virginia line when our season opens -- thus driving any of the Virginia deer which have crossed the Alleghenies further westward into the good State of West Virginia, where I am sure they will feel more at home.

For your information, according to Virginia's Game Laws for the year 1937-38, the only open season in bordering counties are as follows:

Allegheny and Bath Counties -- November 15th -- 20th.
Craig County, Open Hunting Season - November 15th - 30th.

You will remember the old saying, "match force with force; guile with guile, craft with craft."

Very sincerely,

H. W. Shawhan

Director of Conservation

HWS:th

House Built By William Ewing, at Ewington, Ohio, 1812.

Enoch Ewing, 1799–1885.
Va.–O.–Mich.

Digitized by Google

XI.

CAPTAIN JAMES EWING.

The Ewing family of Pocahontas County and vicinity was founded by James Ewing, born near Londonderry, Ireland, of Scotch parents, about 1720. He came to Virginia as a young man, and there married Margaret Sargent, of Irish birth. who bore him five children: Jennie, who married Clendennin, Susan who married Moses Moore, Elizabeth who married George Dougherty, John, and William. John was born in 1747. At the time of the Clendennin massacre in Greenbrier County, John, a mere lad, was taken prisoner by the Indians, and carried into the Ohio country. There he was adopted into an Indian tribe, baptized according to Indian custom, and given an Indian name. But John's Scotch-Irish blood was not easily converted to Indian, and when a returning party of warriors brought back as a curiosity an English Bible, he explained to them that it was the word of God. The Indians asked whether his God was an Indian or a white man, and when John answered that he was a white man, they would no longer listen to his reading the book.

Digitized by Google

John learned the Indian tongue, but he never loved the Indian. In his old age, at the mention of the word "Indian in his presence he would always say, "Curse and confound the Indian." He was released from captivity under a treaty with the Indians, probably in 1764, and delivered to the whites at Fort Pitt, from which point he made his way back to his old Virginia home. In 1774 he married Ann Smith, Irish. They had eleven children, namely: William, 1775–1858; Susannah Holcomb, 1766–; Hon. John Smith Ewing, 1778–1837; Janeat Howell, 1781–1855; Sarah Holcomb, 1782–1850; Ann Ewing, 1785–; Andrew, 1787–1868; Elizabeth; Nancy Mills, 1781–; Lydia Burris 1792–1872; Samuel, 1797–1855. The children of these gave John a list of grand children numbering sixty-five. In 1801, John emigrated from Pocahontas and located in Gallia County, Ohio, where he died in 1825. Of his family, his son William alone remained in Virginia, occupying lands on Stony Creek until the time of his death. John Smith Ewing represented his district in the Virginia Assembly in about 1812. Anselm T. Holcomb, son of Sarah, was a member of the Ohio Legislature. John Ewing, son of Andrew, and George Burris, son of Lydia, were members of the Missouri Legislature. Andrew, son of John S., was a member of the California Legislature.

John's living descendants are legion. They may be found in nearly every western state, and counted among the successful farmers, business men, and professional men of the country. Among them are John Ewing, lawyer, Grant City, Mo., Clay Ewing, Yorktown, Kan., Jennie Sprouse, M. D. Greenview, Ill., M. Howell Finnegan- New London, Mo., P. H. Holcomb, lawyer, Butler, Mo., S. C. Holcomb, lawyer, Yates Centre, Kan., A. T. Holcomb, Portsmouth, O., William Whitman, county clerk, Van West, O., S. G. Burnside, merchant, Kansas City, Mo., Sumner Ewing, teacher and author, Springfield, O., Mrs Homer McCray, Kendallville, Ind., Laura Dunning, Ingomar California.

Digitized by Google

The descendants of John Ewing reverently refer to him as "Indian John."

William Ewing, brother of "Indian John," was born in 1756. In 1774 he joined Arbuckle's company of militia, and pursued Chief Cornstalk and his braves to the Ohio River, where he participated in the famous battle of Point Pleasant. Here he was in the thickest of the fight, but came out without a scratch, narrowly escaping instant death. He had availed himself of the shelter of a sapling while firing at thr redskins, when an excited comrade rushed up to the place pushing him from his shelter and occupying it himself. William was scarcely out of the way before his comrade was struck in the head by an Indian bullet and killed instantly. In after years he related that every time he took deliberate aim at an Indian in that battle his rifle flashed in the pan, and his Indian got away, but when he fired at random his gun never missed fire. If he killed an Indian he never knew it, but he tried his level best to avenge the capture of his sister Mrs Clendennin and his brother John.

In 1785 he married Mary McNeil, sister of Gabriel

Digitized by Google

McNeil, and daughter of Thomas McNeil. He settled on Swago Creek, near Buckeye, and was popularly known as "Swago Bill." It is said that he blazed a line of trees around the lands he selected, and afterwards had the tract patented. Once he was plowing when the alarm came that the Indians were preparing to attack the settlement. The shelter of the nearest fort was sought, but the Indians did not appear. After a few days of quiet, William ventured out to the farm, where he found everything about as he had left them, except that a brood of quails which had been hatched and mothered by a chicken had disappeared. On his return to the fort he shouldered his plow, thinking to hide it from the Indians in the woods. While proceeding through the woods he suddenly heard "thump, thump, thump," followed by "click, click, click," and turning to one side he saw three Indians behind a large log with their guns pointed at him. They had tried to shoot, but their powder was damp, and the guns had missed fire. William dropped his plow and started for the fort as fast as he could run, with the Indians after him. Going over a hill and into a gully, he suddenly changed his course, ran up the ravine a short distance and stopped, and shortly had the pleasure of seeing his pursuers trot by in the regular course. Ewing made his way to the fort in safety.

William and Mary Ewing were the parents of twelve children, all born on the Swago, near Buckeye, namely: Elizabeth Doddrill, 1787–1852; Thomas, 1788–1874; Jonathan, 1790–1850; William, 1792–; James, 1793–1824; John, 1795–; Sarah Wallace, 1797–1827;

Digitized by Google

Enoch, 1799–1885; Jacob, 1802–1878; Abram McNeel, 1804–1891; George, 1807–1883; Andrew, 1809–1885. The children of these gave William and Mary a list of grand children numbering eighty-one, twenty-two of whom are still living. In 1810 William and his family moved to Gallia County, Ohio, and the town of Ewington was named in their honor. Thomas served as Justice of the Peace for many years. Elizabeth, Thomas, William, James, John, Sarah, Abram, George, and Andrew lived and died in or near Gallia County. Jonathan and Jacob died in Hancock County, Ill., Enoch died in Hillsdale County, Mich., and Andrew died in Iowa. Mary McNeal Ewing, the mother, died in Mercer County, Mo., in 1858. Enoch Ewing and his family went to Michigan in 1853, and seven of his children are still living in that State, besides a host of grand children. William's descendants, like John's, are counted among the successful men of the country. Among them are Dr G. A. Ewing, Jackson, O.; Dr G. K. Ewing, Ewington, O.; Dr U. B. G. Ewing, Richmond, Ind.; Dr William Leonard, Fostoria, O.; Rev Thomas E. Peden, President Theological Seminary, Ayden, N. C.; Rev M. L. Peden, Temperance, Mich.; W. J. Aleshire, editor, Gibsonburg, O.; E. E. Aleshire, lawyer, Stanberry, Mo.; Levi Howell, civil engineer, Luray, Mo.; Frank P. McCarley, civil engineer, Pittsburg, Pa.; Hon. W. S. Matthews, President Insurance Company, Toledo, O., ex-member of the Ohio Legislature; E. B. Matthews, manufacturer, Jackson, O.; G. W. Ewing, Plymouth, Ill.; W. L. Ewing, Rutlege, Mo., J. K. Ewing, Port

Digitized by Google

Blakely, Wash.; John W., H. McK., James L., and Andrew A., of Camden, Mich.; E. C. White, White, Mich.: J. C. Jenkins, Cunningham, Kansas; Isaac Jenkins, White, Mich.; William H. Ewing, merchant, Camden, Mich.; I. E. Ewing, manufacturer, Reading, Mich.; W. J. Ewing, merchant, Kunkle, O.; Rev I. H. Ewing, Bristol, Ind.; J. C. Ewing, merchant, Pioneer. O.; L. P. Cravens, teacher, Lake City, Minn.; Ida M. Ewing, Pontoosuc, Ill.; A. L. Ewing, teacher, Wellston, O.; Smith H. Ewing, merchant, Frankfort, O.; John H. Ewing, county clerk, Gallipolis, O.; Rev Sadie P. Cooper, Detroit, Mich.; Prof. R. B. Ewing, Ewington, O.; Theresa Gilbert, Sioux Falls, South Dakotah.

The compiler is indebted to Hon. A. E. Ewing, of Grand Rapids, Mich., for most of the material contained in this sketch. He is a great-grandson of "Swago Bill," a grandson of Enoch, and a son of Henry McK. Ewing. His mother was a Miss Hank, of Monroe County. He is a lawyer, and a member of the House of Representatives of Michigan in 1893.

Captain James Ewing, the founder of these families, died probably about the year 1800. He was captain of a company of militia in Augusta County during the Revolutionary war, and tradition asserts that he received a large tract of land in consideration of his services. Tradition makes him the hero of more than one occasion. One of especial interest is told of how he captured an outlaw by the name of Shockley, who was a terror to the country, and who had stolen James' rifle from ever his cabin door. His descendants have reached to the eighth generation, and numerically have reached into the thousands. His Highland Scotch instinct made him to prefer the mountains to the plains, and it is probable that in his mountain home, surrounded by the perils of pioneer life, beset on the one hand by wild animals, and on the other by savage Indians, he found life quite to his liking.

Digitized by Google

His wife, it is said, lived to be one hundred years old.

Digitized by Google

IV.

CAPTURE OF THOMAS WILSON.

About 1750 John Wilson and Bowyer Miller located on Jacksons River, in what is now Highland County, Va. Mr Wilson settled at the mouth of Peak or Stony Run, while Miller located at Wilsonville, farther up. During Braddock's war Mr Miller refugeed to Tinkling Spring, and finally across the Blue Ridge, leaving land, house, and property uncared for.

About 1756 Mr Wilson refugeed near Greenville, taking his movable property with him, but finding it impossible to get subsistence, sent his horses and cattle back and employed some one to do the ranging and salting. We hear nothing more of him. In a year or two his family ventured to return and took up their abode on the east bank of the river, some two hundred yards perhaps below the crossing leading to the Bolar Spring. The Indians then raided their home about the year 1760.

This John Wilson, the pioneer, was the grandfather of the the late William Wilson, whose daughters Charlotte and Susan married Adam and Washington Stephenson, citizens of Highland County.

Digitized by Google

The morning of the raid John Wilson, one of the sons, had gone to Fort Lewis on the Cowpasture to invite hands to assist in raising the house recently occupied by Mrs Washington Stephenson. In the meanwhile Mrs Wilson and her daughters Barbara and Susan were very busy in preparations for the raising, and were cooking and washing on the east bank of the river near the cabin. Thomas Wilson, a younger son, was at the mill grinding the needed corn meal. The mill stood near the crossing of the Warm Run leading to the residence of the late David Stephenson.

Upon John's return late in the evening as he came in sight of home he was fired upon by Indians. One ball passed under his arm pit and tore the fringe off his hunting shirt. Mounted on a fleet horse he turned instantly to return to the fort whence he had just come and was soon out of sight of the Indians. While going at full speed through the gap a limb knocked his hat off. He stopped and picked it up at the peril of his life. This person was the father of the William Wilson already mentioned, and of the late Mrs Esther Bolar near the Warm Springs.

Upon reaching the fort he told what had happened and begged for assistance at once. None were willing to venture that night. The captain then ordered a draft for a detachment. It was very late in the night before the detail reached the summit of Jack Mountain overlooking the valley. It was dark, no light save that of the summer stars, and in the valley this light was obscured by a dense fog. With sad forebodings they began the descent into the darkness of the ravine beneath, through which they were to grope their way, and where their young guide had been fired on and pursued by the wily enemy. They cautiously moved down the mountain, quietly passed through the gap—all on foot except their guide John Wilson. At the gap he dismounted, hung up his saddle and bridle, and turned the jaded horse out to graze in the woods. He also advised his friends to leave the path, cross the Warm Run, and pass down the right bank by a circuitous way to the mill to see whether it was running or not. "If it be running," says John Wilson," "it is a bad sign, for then I know the Indians have surprised Brother Tom and killed him, because they would not know how to stop the mill. But if it is not running there is some hope, for he may have seen the Indians, stopped the mill and made his escape, for I know no Indian can catch him by running."

Digitized by Google

The mill was found to be silent. Young Wilson entered it quietly and found everything in place, and the newly ground sack of meal was at the chest, securely tied. Taking hope from this, the rescuing party crossed the river just above the mouth of the Warm Run, and passed over the bottom to the knoll on which the church stands, and thence moved with the greatest caution in the direction of the dwelling on the opposite side of the river.

Upon reaching the camp just opposite the cabin, John Wilson advised the men to remain there until he could wade over and find out what had happened. If all was well he could call them over, but if the cabin had been destroyed or occupied by the Indians he would return and determine on what would be best to do. When he approached the dwelling he found the doors heavily barricaded, but through a well known crevice he discovered the family was yet there. Thereupon he gave the sigual, and his friends hastened over in all the transports of exulting joy, so great was their relief from the long and powerful suspense they had been in for so many hours.

Digitized by Google

The mother and her daughter Barbara had been wounded by the clubs or tomahawks of the Indians, but not fatally injured, Susan had escaped unhurt. It was found that none but Tom Wilson was missing. The last thing known of him he was at the mill. Upon going to the mill early in the morning, the party found his track, and that he had been running. This they followed until they found where Tom had stepped on a stick, had fallen, been overtaken and captured. The Indians were trailed from that point across the river to the bluff near the residence of the late Michael Wise. Thence they went southwest to a point about a mile below where the church now stands. There they remained some time, as the signs indicated. From that point they were traced back to Peak's Run, up which they went.

Tom's sister Susan took the lead in all this search for Tom. She was well nigh frantic with grief. At frequent times she would cry out as she went in advance of the party by fifteen or twenty yards: "Here are my poor brother's tracks."

Upon reaching the top of Back Creek Mountain, it was thought best to go no further, as fourteen men could do nothing with so many savages as the signs indicated. It was with great difficulty that Susan could be prevailed on to return. For years nothing was heard of Tom. He died of fever soon after his capture. We hear nothing of John Wilson, the father, as he does not appear to have been at home.

Digitized by Google

The writer is indebted to the late John Cleek, Esq., for the material for this and other sketches.

Information was received concerning Tom Wilson in the following manner.

David Kincaid, who had been one of the fourteen rescuers, went with an expedition sent to treat with the Indians at Fort Pitt concerning the ransom of prisoners. A treaty was made and a day appointed for giving up all in captivity. That day passed away and no prisoners were brought in as agreed. It looked suspicious, and that night every precaution against surprise was taken, lest the Indians should prove hostile and treacherous, but nothing occurred as feared.

The next day was nearly spent, when late in the evening a little girl ten years of age was brought in. She could speak nothing but Indian dialect, and could tell nothing about herself. Mr Kincaid's wife and three children had been taken prisoners about the time Tom Wilson was taken. He remembered one of the children had lost a thumb. Upon examination it was found as he had stated, and the recognition of father and child was of the most touching character. The next evening Mrs Kincaid was brought in, whereupon husband, wife, and the only surviving child were reunited.

Digitized by Google

Mrs Kincaid could tell all about that which had happened to Tom Wilson. He had just finished his task at the mill, and was on the way to the house, when he discovered the Indians, who were coming down the east bank of the river. Wishing to take him alive they headed him off, and he took up the river and was caught. They wished also not to alarm the women at work near the dwelling, nor the men at work on the west bank near where the new house was to be reared, getting in the logs and hewing them.

Tom and the other prisoners were taken to a place some distance away. They were securely bound and left in the charge of an old Indian, while the rest should return and capture the parties already referred to. In this they failed, and all escaped to the house, though some were slightly wounded by the tomahawks thrown at them. The doors were barricaded, and the Indians repulsed without taking any captives.

John Wilson having made his escape on horseback, the Indians supposed he would soon return with men from the fort, and so they did not press the seige, but started immediately for their towns and were miles away ere John returned.

Thomas did not survive his captivity very long.

John Wilson said he had great difficulty in persuading the family to give up the house raising and go to the fort until it was certain all danger for the time being was over. John also reports that among the wounded, besides his mother and sister Barbara, was an Irish weaver whose name is forgotten. At the time the attack was made he was weaving in an out house. During the melee an Indian came upon him and drew his gun. The Irishman fell forward on his face just as the trigger was pulled, the ball inflicting a wound on his hip.

Digitized by Google

When the relief party came in the night, and the question was asked "is anybody killed?" the Irishman quickly responded: "An faith, there is nobody killed but meself!"

The writer is also under obligatiovs to Squire John Cleek for the following items:

A fight occurred between the whites and Indians at Cunningham's fields, near Harpers, head of Kerr's Creek. The Indians are reported by tradition to have carried their dead to the summit of the mountain and buried tbem under the stones now found near the road-side on the way from Rockbridge Alum to Lexington.

The first settlement on the Bullpasture River, in Highland, was made near the Blue Spring, known as the Locrkidge farm, by the Hicklins and Estills. The Grahams and Carlyles the next farms higher up the river. Pullin, a native of Ireland, settled above Carlysle. A good many of these settlers sold out and moved to Kentucky, and some of them prospered greatly in their western homes.

Digitized by Google

Sgt. John Ray Williams "Chipper" of the United States Army, died of wounds in combat action on November 29, 1968, in Vietnam. He would have been 22 years old on January,27, 1969. He was a member of Company A,second Battalion,second Infantry of the first Infantry Division.He was inducted into the service September 15,

He was the son of Mrs. Nellie E. Williams of Marlinton, and the late Dyrlie W. Williams.

Besides his mother he is survived by two half sisters, Mrs. Libby Rexrode of Marlinton, and Mrs. Marguerite Doig of Lincoln, R. I., and a host of other relatives.

At the time of his induction he was a junior at West Vir-where he was a member of Lamda Chi fraternity, and the WVU Marching Band. A grad graduate of Marlinton High School where he also played in the band for six years in including two years in Junior High.

He had been a member of the Marlinton Methodist Church since he was eleven.

He has belonged to in Junior High.

He had been a member of the Marlinton Methodist Church since he was eleven.

He has belonged to 4-H Club and Boy Scouts and was well-known over the County having worked for The County Agent's office and Youth Science Camp during the summer while attending the University.

Funeral arrangements are incomplete and his children accomplished in opening up abundant homes, under difficulties, is truly remarkable and worthy of special appreciation. He loved to hunt, and on one occasion came near being killed by a panther from which he escaped with difficulty.

Mr Auldridge, owing to his disabled condition, became a school teacher, and pursued that vocation for years, and did much good in that line. When he died at an advanced age several years since, the common remark was that one of our best old men had gone from us.

CHRISTOPHER HEROLD.

Among the prosperous citizens of Pocahontas County in its early development, Christopher Herold deserves recognition of a special character. He was of pure German parentage—his immediate ancestry came from the Fatherland, settling in Pennsylvania, thence removing to Virginia. Though he could not read English, no one would have suspected it, so well posted he seemed to be in politieal matters and current affairs. His powers of memory were surprising, and his business sagacity was equal to any of his contemporaries. He was honest and enterprising. He and his sons accumulated an immense landed estate on Elk, Douthards Creek, and other places, amounting to many thousands acres.

Christopher Herold married Elizabeth Cook, of Pendleton County, and soon after their marriage located on Back Creek, now known as the Thomas

Digitized by Google

Campbell place. From Back Creek, Highland County, he migrated to Douthards Creek, about seventy-six years ago, and bought of Colonel John Baxter, and settled on lands now held by Henry White and sons and Henry Sharp, on Douthards Creek. On this place Mr and Mrs Herold reared their family and passed the residue of their lives. Their family consisted of seven sons and three daughters: Susan, Jane, Elizabeth Ann, Henry, Peter, Benjamin, Charles, Christopher, Andrew, and Josiah.

Susan Herold was married to Philip Moyers, and settled in Upshur County.

Jane was the wife of Captain John Buzzard, who lived in Huntersville several years. He managed a hotel, was Captain of the "Light Horse" company, and finally moved to Missouri.

Elizabeth Ann married Samuel Hogsett, Junior, and settled in Harrison County, where her family now live. Mr Hogsett died, and she was afterwards married to Mr Sapp.

Henry, the eldest of the pioneer's sons, married Elizabeth Lockridge and settled at Driscol, and after living there a number of years, moved to Nicholas County. Their sons were Anderson, Washington, William, and Benjamin. Wise Herold, now living on Knapps Creek, is a son of Washington. Henry Herold's daughter Elizabeth married a McClung, in Nicholas County; and another daughter Maria was married to John McClintic at Frankford, W. Va.

Peter Herold married Catherine Snyder, of Highland; settled on the Red Lick branch of Elk, where he died, and his family afterwards went to Missouri, whither they had been preceded by Daniel Herold, a son of Peter.

Digitized by Google

Benjamin Herold, a very prominent citizen in his time, was married to Mary Boone of Franklin County, and for several years lived at Driscol. He bought out his brothers, Andrew and Josiah, and thereafter resided at the homestead. Finally he moved to Missouri. Benjamin's sons were, Charles, Joseph, Peter, and the daughters were Eugenia, Mary, and Lucy.

Christopher Herold's fourth son, Charles, died when about grown.

His fifth son, Christopher, Junior, married Sally Ann Hefner, daughter of Samuel Hefner of Anthonys Creek, and lived on the homestead, where both died, leaving a daughter, Sally Ann, who married Mr Waggoner of Webster County.

The sixth son, Andrew, married Maria Seybert, dasghter of Joseph Seybert, and lived some years on the old homestead, and then purchased near Frost, where he now resides.

Andrews's family numbered nine sons and two daughters: Mrs Ida Rebecca Moore, Myrta, Lanty W., Millard F., Joseph, died aged eight; Isaac Newton, now in Missouri; John L., Edwin L., Horace F., in Highland; Andrew Forrest and Pruyn Patterson, deceased.

The seventh son of Christopher Herold, Sr., Josiah Herold, married Mary Ann Cleek, of Knapps Creek, and located on Stony Creek, upon the farm occupied by the family of the late James McClure. Deeming it best to refugee during the war, he went to Mr Cleek's. There he was seized with diptheria in a malignant form, and he and his two little sons died.

Digitized by Google

To illustrate something of the privations endured by this worthy man and family in their efforts to make their way in the world, mention may be made of what occurred in the winter of 1840.

Andrew, then about grown, was sent to Elk to look after some cattle to be wintered there. A snow fell, early in the winter, between four and five feet in depth. The only chance to keep the cattle alive was to fell timber for browse. How to have this done was the problem that confronted the youth. Having procured the services of Joe Courtney, a man of stalwart form and needful pluck, they started for the browsing ground. Courtney went ahead, and the young man followed in his trail, snow up to the arm pits. They managed to cut what carried the cattle through.

In the meanwhile all communication between neighbors seemed cut off. Andrew's brother, Peter Herold had taken sick and died before he could hear of it. James Gibson, Senior, now living on Elk, managed to reach an eminence in hearing of the browsing party, and by the loudest tones he could command got Andrew to understand what had taken place. The funeral rites were performed under difficulties indescribable.

The winter finally passed away, and when Andrew returned home in the spring he was emaciated and changed in appearance almost beyond recognition by his neighbors.

When this venerated man---Christopher Herold—

Digitized by Google

died some years ago, he was verging ninety years. He and his faithful wife sleep in the family burial ground near their last home on earth, the scene of much of their life's toils and mutual joys and sorrows.

DANIEL KERR.

Acknowledgements are due Samuel Sutton and Mrs Harvey Curry, near Dunmore, for the following items that may rescue from oblivion the memory of a very worthy and useful pioneer of upper Pocahontas. This was Daniel Kerr, who located soon after the Revolution on the upper end of the immense estate now owned by Uriah Hevener.

It seems very probable he came from Rockbridge County. He established a mill, saw mill, and blacksmith shop on the Little Back Creek branch of Deer Creek, and his place became a centre of industry for a wide region.

He was married twice. The first wife was a Miss Kirkpatrick, of Anthonys Creek. Their children were Robert, John, William, Thomas, and James. Daniel Kerr's second wife was a Miss McKamie, of Rockbridge, a very sprightly and attractive person. Her children were David, Daniel, Nancy, Betsy and Mary.

He was a sincerely pious person, and the close of his life was very touching. He had assemnled his family for domestic worship. Upon finishing the Scripture lesson he kneeled for prayer, and for a long interval he was silent. Upon going to him in that

Digitized by Google

Colonel William Craig

Mountain Man and First Permanent Settler in Idaho

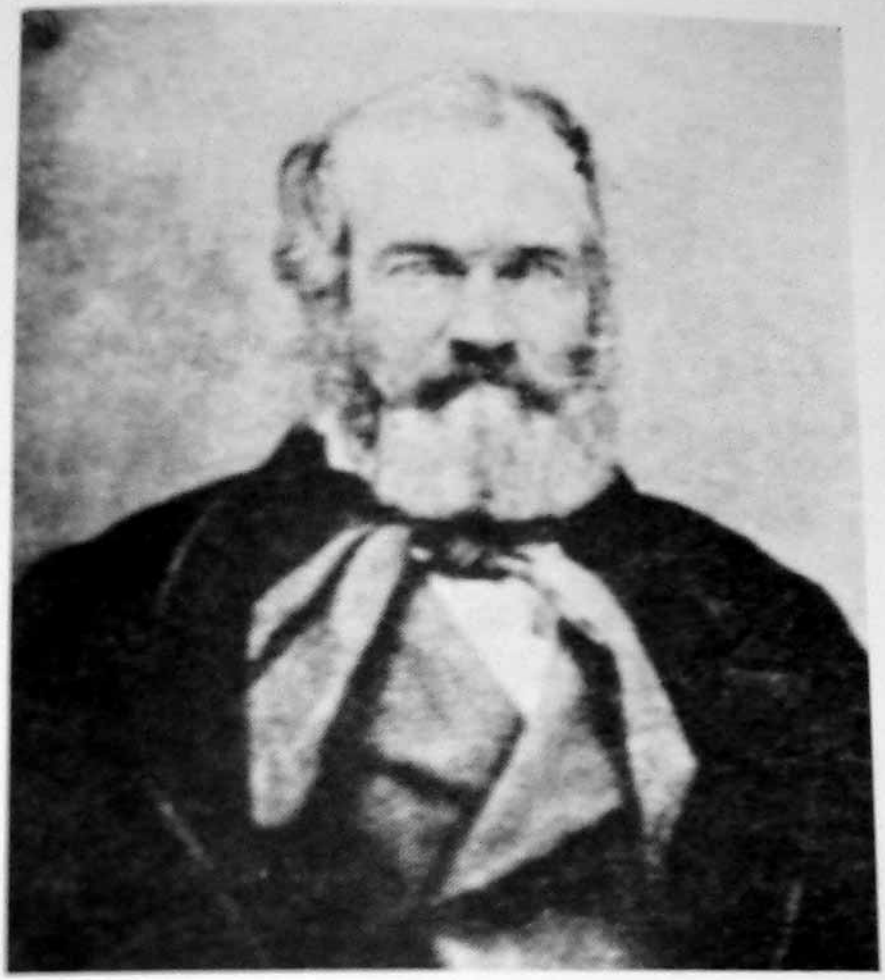
By D. B. Kraybill

In the late summer of 1954, I made a survey of the school district of Sandpoint, Idaho in connection with my duties as a Field Representative of the Office of Education. I was eager to get to know the history of the five Mountain States of Idaho, Montana, Utah, Wyoming and Colorado, which constituted the territory I was serving. The business manager of Sandpoint School District gave me a copy of the History of the State of Idaho[1] which was used in the schools and in this book I found the following brief statement about Colonel William Craig:

> Idaho's first permanent white settler was Colonel William Craig. Born in Greenbrier County, Virginia, in 1807, he cast his lot with the Rocky Mountain trappers in the summer of 1829. During the romantic fur-trading third decade of the last century, he, with his intimate associates, Robert Newell and Joseph Meek, led the wild, free life of the fur hunter. Shortly after the arrival of the Reverend H. H. Spalding at Lapwai (1836) Colonel Craig selected a home near the mission on Lapwai Creek. The records show that he established a permanent residence in Idaho in the fall of 1846. In harmony with the provisions of the Oregon Donation Act of 1850, he and his Nez Perce wife, Isabel, claimed and patented 640 acres of land at Lapwai. During the winter of 1855-1856 he rendered distinguished aid to Governor I. I. Stevens while the latter was negotiating a series of Indian treaties. So conspicuous was his leadership among the Nez Perce's that he was given a place on Governor Steven's staff with the title of Lieutenant-Colonel.
>
> During the winter of 1858-1859 he was postmaster at Walla Walla, where he resided temporarily. He was the first Indian Agent at Lapwai and was influential politically during the early years of the Territory. He died in 1869 and was buried at Lapwai.

Contact with the historians of the Far West educational institutions and research into the literature of the fur trading era in the Far West, including many biographies of Mountain Men or Free Trappers, has led to the following findings: (1) Little is known of Colonel Craig's early life. At age 17, he is reputed to have killed a neighbor in self defense and then fled to the west. He would never speak of his life in Greenbrier County Virginia, now West Virginia. (2) From the biographies of some of the Mountain Men such as Kit Carson, Robert Newell, Joseph Meek, Jim Bridger, Old Bill Williams and others, we hear of him repeatedly and know that he was on many hunting and trapping expeditions during the hey-day of the trappers—from the middle twenties to the early forties. He was with Joe Walker who was assigned, by Captain Bonneville, to lead an expedition to explore Great Salt Lake. (3) Craig, together with Thompson and Sinclair, owned Fort Davy Crockett,[2] built in Brown's Hole in northwestern Colorado. It was located on the left bank of the Green River, above the mouth of Vermillion Creek. (4) Colonel Craig was a respected and influential citizen in the early days of Idaho Territory. Craig Mountain in Idaho is named after him. There is a Chapter of the Sons of the American Revolution in Lewiston, Idaho, known as William Craig Chapter Number 2. This chapter took upon itself the task of securing funds to erect a suitable marker at the grave of Craig. His resting place is at Jaques Spur, near the mouth of Mission Creek, Idaho. The grave is in plain sight of the North and South Highway.

[1] C. J. Brosnan, History of the State of Idaho, Charles Scribner's Sons, 1948, p. 111.



COLONEL WILLIAM CRAIG

(Courtesy of Nellie B. Pipes, Oregon Historical Society). A reprint from The Colorado Magazine (Sept. 1934), publication of the State Historical Society of Colorado.

Craig's Early Life

References to the year of birth of Craig vary from the years 1800 to 1807. All references to his place of birth give Greenbrier County, Virginia. Nicholas County, West Virginia was formed January 29, 1818, by act of the General Assembly of Virginia, mainly from Kanawha County but included a small area from Greenbrier and Randolph Counties. The establishment of Fayette County (1831), Braxton County (1836), Clay County (1858), and Webster County (1860), successively altered the boundary of Nicholas County.[3] Descendants of William Craig, a Covenanter, from Ulster, Ireland who first moved to Pennsylvania (1721) and later to Augusta County, Virginia, settled finally in Greenbrier County, Virginia (now West Virginia) above Spring Creek. Robert Craig, of this family, came to Nicholas County in 1837 and located on what is now the Fielding Herold farm.[4]

---

[2] Leroy R. Hafen, "Fort Davy Crockett, Its Fur Men and Visitors", Colorado Magazine, January, 1954, p. 1-11.
[3] William Griffee Brown, History of Nicholas County, (1954), pp. 1, 2, 3.
[4] Ibid., p. 308.

Whether our subject, William Craig, was of a family that had moved to Nicholas County or of a family remaining in Greenbrier County, further researches will have to determine. It is likely that he actually grew up in what is now Greenbrier County, West Virginia. If we take 1807 as his year of birth and age 17 or 18 (both ages are found recorded) as his age when leaving for the west, he would have left about the year 1825. This was 12 years prior to the first Craig coming to Nicholas County.

We here submit two brief accounts of his early life that vary only slightly in dates and the nature of his earliest activity in the west. Robert G. Bailey gives the following account:

> The authenticated story of Colonel Craig begins with his appearance in St. Louis in 1818. St. Louis at that time was the headquarters of the American fur traders, who were seeking to oust the Hudson Bay trappers of the Northwest. Craig joined one of the outfits, composed of American traders, or French Canadians, as they were popularly known, and accompanied them in bateaus [sic] to what is now Fort Benton, Missouri. Here he left his trader friends and joined forces with a number of trappers, who were headed for the Rocky Mountains. In time he became a full fledged trapper. The main rendezvous for the trappers was at Fort Bridger, Wyoming. It was here that Craig first met the Nez Perces, who told him of the large quantities of fur to be had in what is now Central Idaho. Later, Craig, Meek, and Robert Newell accompanied a party of Nez Perce Indians to their home section where they engaged in trapping on the waters of the Clearwater and Salmon. The date of this expedition is given as of 1829. On this trip each of the trappers got himself a Nez Perce wife, and with them returned to their rendezvous east of the Rocky Mountains. Craig had an adventurous career and for ten years after his marriage roamed the western country from Wyoming to the Pacific Ocean. He was a member of the Walker expedition to California (1833-1834).[5]

In the Colorado Magazine, September, 1934, Leroy R. Hafen gives us the following account:

> Of William Craig's early life we know but little. He was born in Greenbrier County of the 'Old Dominion', as he called his native state (Virginia), about 1799 or 1800. At the age of 18 he quarreled with a man much older than himself and killed him in self defense. Alarmed at this act, he went to St. Louis; here in this emporium of the fur trade, he joined a party of [5] Robert G. Bailey, River of No Return, (1947) p. 47.

> French Canadian trappers bound for the upper Missouri. With bateaus [sic] they made the long, arduous journey to the vicinity of the present Fort Benton, then moved south into the mountains. Craig left the Canadians, joined American trappers and became a full fledged Mountain Man.[6]

So far, we have found no clear references to Craig, as a trapper, until 1829 when he joined the expedition under Smith, Jackson, and Sublette. The party of 54 trappers recruited by William Sublette left St. Louis March 17, 1829 and headed for the Rocky Mountains. It may well be that up to that time he was with the trappers operating in the upper Missouri. General William H. Ashley spearheaded the trading and trapping expeditions in that area from 1822 to 1826 when he sold out to Smith, Jackson, and Sublette.

Craig as Free Trapper and Mountain Man

It should be remembered that prior to the hey-day of the Mountain Men or Free Trappers, the southwestern part of what is now United States and most of what we speak of as Rocky Mountain Area, was Spanish Territory. There was not yet a settlement of boundary line in the disputed Oregon Country. In 1821 the Independent Republic of Mexico was established. In 1822 Mexico reversed the traditional Spanish policy and threw open the doors of New Mexico to American trade. In 1825 the state of Coahuila-Texas, of which Texas was a district, adopted a land law which opened the state to all Christians of good moral and personal habits who would swear allegiance to Mexico. Little wonder, then, that the decade beginning about 1820 saw enterprising and venturesome souls, from the East, beginning a trek to the West to open up trade. This, too, was the day of the Beaver Hat. The stage was set for the Western Trader and Trapper. The outpost of Toas, New Mexico, was the jumping-off point for trappers operating in the southwest. St. Louis was the starting point for those heading for the Northern Rockies and the Upper Missouri.

There was ushered into existence a new breed of men: The "free trappers" or "mountain men" as they called themselves. These individuals are aptly described by Enid Johnson in his biography of Bill Williams:

---

[6] Leroy R. Hafen, "Mountain Men-William Craig", The Colorado Magazine, September, 1958, Vol. XL, No. 3, p. 174.

> The true pathfinders of the West were the Mountain Men; they were the hardy adventurers who wandered over the unknown deserts and mountains of the West in their search for beaver and to trade with the Indians. So they were called 'Mountain Men'.
>
> From the early 1800's to 1850 they roamed far and wide over the West adventuring into its lonely places, discovering its hidden trails, marching with the sun to the last frontier. Each footstep beset with danger from wild beasts, hostile Indians, hunger, cold, thirst, and many accidents.
>
> It was they who first explored and established the routes to travel which are now and ever will be the avenues of commerce in that region.
>
> The moving force in their lives was an intense love for the freedom of the wilderness. The mountain man knew that he would have to walk alone, relying upon himself, working and fighting on his own hook.[7]

William Craig was identified with these Mountain Men at least from 1829 to 1840 when he settled near Lapwai, Idaho with his Nez Perce Indian wife, Isabel.

In her biography of Joe Meek, Mrs. F. F. Victor sets forth the following incidents involving Craig:

> In the fall of 1829, while employed in William Sublette's trapper band, Craig became acquainted with a fellow Virginian, Joseph L. Meek. One day Craig, Meek, and Nelson were traveling up a creek on foot to tend their traps, when they came suddenly upon a red bear. The three men ran for trees. Craig and Meek climbed a large pine, but Nelson took to one of two small trees that grew close together. The bear followed Nelson. With his back against one tree and his feet against the other the bear climbed almost to Nelson's perch. When the trees separated with the bear's weight and he fell to the ground, the bear tried a second time with the same result. With his third fall the beast gave up in disgust and ambled away.
>
> 'Then', says Meek, 'Craig began to sing and I began to laugh, but Nelson took to swearing'. 'Oh, yes, you can laugh and sing now', says Nelson, 'but you were quiet enough when the bear was around'. 'Why, Nelson', Meek answered, 'you wouldn't have us noisy before that distinguished guest of yours'. 'But Nelson damned the wild beast and Craig and I laughed and said he didn't seem wild a bit.'[8]

---

[7] Enid Johnson, Bill Williams—Julian Messner, Inc., N. Y. Foreword.
[8] F. F. Victor, The River of the West, pp. 11-12.

Meek also tells this story on Craig. An incident that happened in the winter of 1829-1830:

> While the trappers were crossing the mountains between the Yellowstone and Bighorn Rivers, game was scarce and provisions were nearly exhausted. Craig managed to catch a rabbit and put it up to roast before the fire—a tempting looking morsel to starving mountaineers. Some of his associates determined to see how it tasted, and Craig was told that the Booshways (a corruption of the word Bourgeois, the bosses, or leaders of the expedition) wished to speak to him at their lodge. While he obeyed this supposed command, the rabbit was spirited away, never more to be seen by mortal man. When Craig returned to the campfire, and beheld the place vacant where the rabbit was so nicely roasting, his passion knew no bounds, and he declared his intention of cutting it out of the stomach that contained it. But as finding the identical stomach which contained it involved the cutting open of many that probably did not, in the search, he was fain to relinquish that mode of vengeance, together with his hopes of supper.[9]

Captain Benjamin L. E. Bonneville, a West Point graduate, who had become infected with the frontier fever, had secured the financial backing of a wealthy New Yorker and had come west in 1832 with 110 men. His experiences since that time had hardly been of the sort to delight his patron. The elaborately planned Fort Bonneville that he built in the Green River Valley was abandoned almost as soon as completed, while his brigades had been so handicapped by his inexperienced leadership that their catch in furs was small. Still clinging to hopes of a fortune, he ordered one of his bands of mountaineers westward at the close of the 1833 rendezvous, with instructions to search the barren lands beyond Great Salt Lake for likely hunting grounds. This was the expedition that gave its leader, Joseph Reddeford Walker, an opportunity to earn his niche among the pathfinders of the American West.

> No pains or expense were spared in fitting out this party of forty men which he was to command. They had complete supplies for a year, and were to meet Captain Bonneville in the ensuing summer, in the Valley of Bear River, the largest tributary of Salt Lake, which was to be his point of general rendezvous.[10]

---

[9] F. F. Victor, The River of the West, p. 78.

[10] Washington Irving, The Adventures of Captain Bonneville, U. S. A., The Co-operative Publication Society, Inc., (New York and London), p. 160.

A description of this expedition is given in various biographies of men who were among the 40 who made the journey. The accounts vary. According to Joe Meek they passed through what is now Yosemite National Park. We are here setting forth a brief account of the expedition as found in The Far Western Frontier by Ray Allen Billington:

> Walker's men skirted the north shore of the Great Salt Lake, found their way through the wild land of rocks and sand that lay beyond, followed the well-trapped Humboldt River to the Sierra Nevada Mountains, and crossed this awesome barrier where swirling snow and icy winds reduced even the seasoned hunters to near desparation, [sic] to emerge at last amidst the warmth of the San Juaquin Valley of California. Pushing on to San Francisco, the party turned southward along the coast to Monterey, where they spent the winter of 1833-34. In mid-February Walker took the trail once more, moving south along the San Juaquin Valley to Kern River, which was followed eastward into the low defile since known as Walker Pass. There the hunters turned to skirt the Sierras as they marched through Owens Valley and across parched deserts where they nearly died of thirst. In June they picked up their own trail which led them back along the Humboldt in time to reach the 1834 rendezvous at Ham's Fork of the Green River.[11]

William Craig, with other independent trappers, was among the 40 men who joined the Joe Walker expedition to California. A story pertaining to it which Craig told to Thomas J. Beall after they met in Idaho in 1857 is here repeated:

> The waters of the Humboldt River are of a milky cast, not clear. So one afternoon, while camped on the said stream, and being the first to strip, I started for the swimming hole and was just about to plunge in when I got a hunch that things were not as they should be and I had better investigate before taking a dive. I did so and found the water was about a foot and a half deep and the mud four, this condition being in the eddy. So I waded to where there was a current and found the water a little more than waist deep, no mud and good smooth bottom. In looking toward the camp I espied Joe Walker coming and he was jumping like a buck deer and when he arrived at the brink he says to me: 'How is it?' 'Joe,' I replied, 'It is just splendid.' With that he plunged head first into that four and a half feet of blue mud.
>
> Fearing trouble and not being interested in the subsequent proceedings, I made myself scarce by hiding in the brush on the opposite side and in so doing I ran into some rosebrier bushes and scratched myself some, but I was so full of laughter I did not mind that. I peeped through the bushes just in time to see him extricate himself from the mud. He then washed the mud off as well as he could, returned to the tepee, put on his clothes, shot his rifle off, cleaned it, then reloaded it and hollered at me, and said: 'Now show yourself and I'll drop a piece of lead into you' which I failed to do, as I did not want to be encumbered with any extra weight, especially at that time. I was compelled to remain in hiding most of the afternoon. Before sundown I was told to come into camp and get my supper and leave, that I could not travel any further with that party.

[11] Ray Allen Billington, The Far Western Frontier 1830-1860, Harper and Brothers, p. 86.

I was very glad of the permit for it was rather monotonous out there in the brush with nothing but a blanket around me and nobody to talk to and my pipe in camp. I soon dressed myself and then it was time to chew. Our company was divided into messes and each mess was provided with a dressed buffalo hide. It was spread on the ground and the grub placed upon it. When supper was announced we sat down. I sat opposite to Walker and in looking at him discovered some of the blue mud of the Humboldt on each side of his nose and just below his eyelids, and I could not help laughing. He addressed me in an abrupt manner and said: 'What the h--l are you laughing at?' I told him that gentlemen generally washed before eating. With that the others observed the mud and they too roared with laughter in which Walker joined, but he threatened if ever I played another such trick on him he would kill me as sure as my name was Craig. This place on the Humboldt River was ever afterwards called by the mountain men 'Walker's Plunge' or 'Hole'.

Craig characterized the Walker expedition as more of a horse-stealing than a fur-trapping expedition. He says that they got away with 500 to 600 horses, which they traded to the Indians on the way back to the Rocky Mountains.[12]

In his biography of Joe Meek, in Chapter VI, "The Exciting Year of 1832", Harvey E. Tobie has the following reference to Craig:

Late in the fall, Meek, Craig and a few other hunters joined the northern party of which Newell was a member, on an exchange of men. On the Madison River they were again within a few miles of their Tagging American Fur Company rivals. For several days disagreeable weather and mud underfoot kept both groups from moving; but story-telling, card playing and other amusements helped the fraternizing men while away hours that would otherwise have been tedious.

[12] Thomas J. Beall, "Recollections of William Craig", in Lewiston (Idaho) Tribune, March 4, 1912.

> Those ahead had the best hunting, and the Rocky Mountain men broke camp October 11. Three days later, Vanderburgh, moving in the opposite direction, met his death in an Indian attack. Fitzpatrick's men were also subjected to Indian annoyance which Newell noted briefly: 'Met some Blackfeet, 60 warriors, made peace with them and the next day fought another party. Returned to Salmon River and took up winter's quarters.'[13]

Bernard DeVoto in Across The Wide Missouri gives a detailed description of the fur trading expedition led by Jim Bridger in 1838. The Bridger brigade met with a group of missionaries on their way to the Oregon Country. Meek, Newell, Joe Walker, and Craig were with the expedition and the paragraph that we here quote shows that Mrs. Craig was with him. The rendezvous was at the Popo Agie not far west of Fort Laramie:

> While their husbands tinkered with the outfit, the ladies (missionaries' wives) moved New England to the Popo Agie by setting up a sewing circle. Humble, frantically inquisitive squaws hung round them in platoons, touching them to see the blood move under this odd white skin, inspecting the mysterious articles in their personal outfit, fingering unheard of things like brooches and hartshorns and pancake turners. The white squaws had odd, but admirable equipment for dressmaking; thimbles, emery bags in the shape of strawberries, needles of many sizes but all small to Indian eyes, darning eggs, embroidery frames, threads of all sizes and colors, yarns, silk flosses. They could do no finer work with these tools than the red ladies did with awls and split sinews but they could work with stupefying ease and speed. So the squaws sighed and chattered and brought the ladies the bright cottons their husbands had been buying for them at the trading booths and the ladies made dresses for them unquestionably longer in the skirts than Indian fashion prescribed. Myra mentions Mrs. Joe Walker and Mrs. Craig; Mary, Mrs. Robinson. Craig was an old Rocky Mountain Fur Company man; there were numerous Robinsons. Others are mentioned in quantity but not named. Myra sniffs at the mean quality of the cloth and is scandalized by its cost of two dollars a yard.[14]

This reference in DeVoto's book seems to be in harmony with what Francis Haines quotes in his book The Nez Perces relative to Craig's wife. But the marriage to Isabel, in 1838, would not be in harmony with the statement by Bailey in his River of No Return (Note 5) which has Craig getting himself

---

[13] Harvey S. Tyhus, He Was Like Joe, Portland, Oregon, pp. 31, 32.
[14] Bernard DeVoto, Across The Wide Missouri, Houghton Mifflin Company, p. 253.

Affidavit

of settlers on unsurveyed lands, claiming under the 4th section of Act of 27th September 1850 and the amendments thereto

William Craig of Walla Walla County in the Territory of Washington being first duly sworn, says that he is a white settler on the Public Lands in said Territory, and that he arrived in Oregon on the 23rd day of July A.D. 1849 — That he is a native born citizen of the United States — That he was born in Greenbrier County in the State of Virginia in the year 1807. That he has fractionally settled upon and cultivated that part of the Public Land in the Territory aforesaid, and fractionally described in the annexed declaration to the Register and Receiver of said Territory, continuously from the 15th Sept A.D. 1850 to the 1st day of June A.D. 1853, and he further says, that he is intermarried with Rachel Craig his wife, and that he was legally married to her on the 1st day of July A.D. 1838 in Indiana Territory and that daughters born Sept 10th 1840 — Sons born Feb 21st 1842

Sabrina " May 6th 1845 — Mary " Aug 20 1848

Emma " June 11 1853

William Craig

Subscribed and Sworn to before me this 1st day of June A.D. 1853

Clerk U.S. District Court

Clerk Co. Probate Ct.

Note that this affidavit establishes Craig's birthdate as 1807 in Greenbrier County in the State of Virginia.

a wife in 1829. We know that Craig visited the Nez Perce Country in 1829 and, at that time, could have met Isabel, but his affidavit relative to "Settlers on Unassigned Lands" in Washington Territory (National Archives, Washington, D. C.) gives July 6, 1838 as the date of his marriage and September 10, 1840 the date of birth of their first child. The reference by Haines follows:

> In 1838, at the Wyoming rendezvous, Craig married Isabel, daughter of Chief James of Lapwai. Two years later, in the summer of 1840, he helped Robert Newell and Joe Meek take two wagons from Fort Hall to Walla Walla for Marcus Whitman. Soon after that, he and his wife appeared at her father's village on Lapwai Creek, where Craig began farming a tract of bottom land near the Spalding Mission. When Spalding objected, saying that he needed all that land for the mission farm, Craig moved farther up the Creek. In 1846, he secured a government deed to his farm, the first deeded land in Idaho.[15]

Fort Davy Crockett—Its Owners and Visitors

Numerous references to Fort Davy Crockett give Craig, along with Thompson and Sinclair as the owners. Located as it was along the left bank of the Green River in the northwest corner of Colorado, it seems to have been a crossroads place, more or less secluded and visited, at sometime or other, by most of the famous Mountain Men of that era. Since Craig was one of the owners, and, therefore, frequently found there, I felt that a description of the fort, as given by several of its visitors, should be set forth in this study; also a word about the other two owners; and some references to visits involving Craig.

The date of the founding of Fort Davy Crockett has not been definitely determined. Brown's Hole, the mountain-walled valley that was the site of the post, had long been a favorite winter resort for the Indians. In this grassy retreat the Indian bands sought shelter from the storms that swept the surrounding mountains.

The most exhaustive study that has been made of Fort Davy Crockett is the one reported in the January, 1952 issue of the Colorado Magazine, published by the State Historical Society of Colorado. This report is by Leroy R. Hafen. He quotes T. J. Farnham as follows:

---

[15] Francis Haines, The Nez Perces, University of Oklahoma Press, p. 83.

> Thomas Jefferson Farnham, leader of an Oregon-bound party from Peoria, Illinois, reached the post on August 12, 1839, after some rugged experiences in crossing northwestern Colorado. He writes that the Fort is a hollow square of one story, with roofs and floors of mud, constructed in the same manner as those of Fort Bent on the Arkansas River. Around these we found the conical skin lodges of the squaws of the white trappers, who were away on their "fall hunt", and also the lodges of a few snake Indians, who had preceded their tribes to this, their winter haunt. Here also were the lodges of Mr. Robinson, a trader, who usually stations himself here to traffic with the Indians and white trappers. His skin lodge was his warehouse; and buffalo robes were spread upon the ground and counter, on which he displayed butcher knives, hatchets, powder, lead, fish-hooks, and whiskey. In exchange for these articles he receives beaver skins from the trappers, money from travelers, and horses from the Indians. And, indeed, when all the independent trappers are driven, by approaching winter, into this delightful retreat, and the whole Snake village, two or three thousand strong, impelled by the same necessity, pitch their lodges around the Fort, and the dances and merry makings of a long winter are thoroughly commenced, there is no want of customers.[16]

Five days after the arrival of Farnham, an east-bound party, returning from Fort Hall, of present Idaho, reached Brown's Hole. Among the new arrivals was F. A. Wislizenus, a German doctor from St. Louis. In his book, written originally in German and giving an account of his journey, Dr. Wislizenus said:

> On August 17, we reached Fort Crockett. It is situated close by the Green River, on its left bank. The river valley here is broad, and has good pasturage and sufficient wood. The fort itself is the worst thing of the kind that we have seen on our journey. It is a low one-story building constructed of wood and clay, with three connecting wings, and no enclosure. Instead of cows the fort had only some goats. In short, the whole establishment appeared somewhat poverty stricken, for which reason it is known to the trappers by the name of Fort Misery. The fort belongs to three Americans: Thompson, Craig, and Sinclair. The latter was at the fort, and received us very kindly but regretted his inability to offer us any supplies.[17]

The excellent journal of E. Willard Smith gives valuable observations on Fort Davy Crockett and its owners. Smith came to the Rockies in the summer of 1839 with the Vasquez

[16] T. J. Farnham, "Travels in the Great Western Prairies" in R. G. Thwaites, Early Western Travels, XXVIII, pp. 262-263.
[17] F. A. Wislizenus, A Journey to the Rocky Mountains in the Year 1839, St. Louis 1912, p. 120.

and Sublette Company. At Fort Vasquez on the South Platte, near the present site of Platteville, he joined a company that was heading for Fort Davy Crockett. Under date of September 16, Smith recorded: "Today we left our encampment, and started to cross the mountains. Our party consisted of eight men, two squaws, and three children. One of the squaws belonged to Mr. Thompson, the other to Mr. Craig. They were partners and have a trading post at Brown's Hole, a valley on the west side of the mountain".[18]

On October 1, they reached Brown's Hole, where Smith remained until mid-winter. Sinclair had been at the fort during the absence of his two partners.

Craig's partner, Philip F. Thompson, according to his sworn statement, Affidavit of Settlers on Unsurveyed Lands," National Archives, was born in Williamson County, Tennessee, in 1811. In early life he went to the Rocky Mountains and in 1842 came to Oregon. Of Thompson's youth and his early years in the mountains, we have no record. He was at Brown's Hole in the summer of 1837 according to Kit Carson and Doc Newell, and from there went on a trading expedition to the Navajo Indians. The mules, he and Sinclair procured in this venture, Thompson disposed of at Fort Vasquez on the South Platte. The goods received for the mules he brought back to Fort Davy Crockett to trade with the Indians.

Thompson went down the Arkansas River and to the Missouri frontier for supplies in the spring of 1839. He returned with his goods in the supply cavern of Sublette and Vasquez, leaving Independence, Missouri, on August 6, 1839, and reaching Fort Vasquez September 13.

From South Platte Post Thompson and his partner Craig, with their Indian wives and children, crossed the mountains to their Fort in Brown's Hole.

Of Sinclair, third partner in the ownership of Fort Davy Crockett, little is known. Of his hospitality Mr. Franham writes in 1839: "I enjoyed the lovely scene at Fort Davy Crockett till near midnight in company with Mr. Sinclair; and when at last its excitements and the thrilling pleasure of being relieved from the prospect of death by hunger allowed me to slumber, that gentleman conducted me to his own room and bed, and bade me occupy both while I should remain with him"[19]

[18] L. R. Hafen (Ed.), "With Fur Traders in Colorado, 1839-40: the Journal of E. Willard Smith", in the Colorado Magazine, XXVII (1950), p. 112.

According to H. H. Bancroft, Prouett Sinclair went to California in 1843.[20] In December, 1851 the California State Library reported that Prouett Sinclair, who had gone to the Rockies from Arkansas in 1830, settled at Cowalitos, in Santa Cruz County, California, in 1843 and was an active business man there until 1882. The Santa Cruz County Great Register of 1888 lists him as 77 years old and born in Tennessee.[21] This was no doubt the partner, since his brother Alexander was killed at the battle of Pierce's Hole in 1832.

Edwin L. Sabin in Kit Carson Days has the following reference to Fort Davy Crockett and its owners:

> Myeth's Fort Hall had been sold, the summer of 1837 to the British. Under the new proprietors it engaged some of the American Trappers, but Fort Davy Crockett, in Brown's Hole, Colorado, on an elbow of the Green courteously managed by the mountain men, William Craig, Philip Thompson, and Sinclair, was the fashionable American gathering place. Thither, after the rendezvous of this summer, journeyed Kit Carson and seven others. Thompson and Sinclair were organizing a trading trip into the Navajo country of present New Mexico, and Carson joined them. This was a trip not after furs, but after horses and mules, and the Navajo merchandise of ropes and blankets. The latter article especially was valued, and it is valued today. Substantial, warm, waterproof, of pleasant pattern, the Navajo blanket early appealed to the Mexican and traveler over the Santa Fe Trail, was made popular by the American soldiers of the days of 1846, and has maintained itself as a Navajo asset ever since.
>
> Out of the Navajo Country, with its peach orchards and ranging flocks, the traders proceeded to Bent's Fort on the Arkansas, where the spoils, principally mules, were sold for the Missouri Market. This winter of 1837-1838 Kit Carson spent in Brown's Hole as hunter for Fort Davy Crockett.[22]

Since Joe Meek and Doc (Robert) Newell were intimates of

---

[19] Farnham's "Travels", op. cit., p. 288.
[20] H. H. Bancroft, History of California, IV, p. 690; V, p. 709.
[21] F. B. Hafen, (Ed.) Colorado Magazine, XXIX, January 1952, p. 24.
[22] Edwin L. Sabin, Kit Carson Days, A. C. McClurg and Company, Chicago, 1914, pp. 197, 198.

William Craig, we are here reporting a reference from DeVoto's book, Across the Wide Missouri:

> Joe was on his way to Fort Davy Crockett and his wife and his partner Newell. He had a shoulder of antelope and in the mountain code offered them breakfast. They had eaten, however, and what they wanted was instruction—the type held true at this meeting. Joe said there was a village of Nez Perces only a day's ride beyond Fort Hall. He himself was going to winter with them when he could get his wife. (A Nez Perce whom he called Virginia; she was to bear him eight children.) He advised the greenhorns to join the village, too, and travel with it to the Nez Perce Country where there was a mission, Spalding's Lapwai. The lava and the peaks, the rivers and the gulches, the sagebrush and the thirst—the country between Bear River and Trail's End was in Joe's mind and he thought, gently, that they would need the Nez Perces.
>
> Farnham thought him much like an Indian: 'The same wild, unsettled, watchful expression of the eye, the same unnatural gesticulation in conversation, the same unwillingness to use words when a sign, a contortion of the face or body, or movement of the hand will manifest thought: in standing, walking, reading, in all but complexion he was an Indian'. He cursed the American Fur Company for them. It had used his skill, risked his life, paid him little, and now cast him off. Every trapper whom Farnham had met—a good many—had said the same. And he looked poor. It was starving times for Joe Meek. He had so sparse and worn an outfit that the wind, which can be cold of an August morning in Bear River Valley, made him shake like an aspen leaf.
>
> Let them watch out for Blackfeet, Joe said. There were some near Soda Springs, which they would presently reach. Farther along they would find Joe's White horse. It had given out and he had had to cache its pack.
>
> Joe Meek, the bear killer, a Carson man, a Bridger man, a Rocky Mountain Fur Company Man—Joe Meek, free trapper, raised his hand and rode off toward Fort Davy Crockett. And the three greenhorns, authentic settlers, and their Snake guide took the trail again, toward the Columbia.[33]

The ultimate fate of the fort is unknown. The wooden structure may have been destroyed by fire, for evidence of the building disappeared. In fact, ranchmen who later settled in Brown's Hole swore that no such post as Fort Davy Crockett ever existed in the valley. Brown's Hole was again the setting for lively activity a few decades later, when cattle rustlers made it a notorious hideout.

[33] Bernard DeVoto, Across the Wide Missouri, pp. 363, 364.

The year 1840, which saw the last fur trade rendezvous of the mountains, apparently witnessed also the abandonment of Fort Davy Crockett. The partnership of Thompson, Craig, and Sinclair broke up. Craig treked to Oregon in the summer of 1840. Thompson followed him two years later. Sinclair is reported to have settled in California in 1843.

Andrew Sublette led a company of health seekers out over the Oregon Trail and to Green River in the summer of 1844. They left Independence on May 12,[24] and in August turned down Green River to Brown's Hole. No data have been found as to whether or not they reached their destination and how they fared. But Andrew Sublette was back on the South Platte and Arkansas Rivers next spring.

John C. Fremont upon returning from the Pacific Coast on his second exploring expedition reached Brown's Hole on June 7, 1844. "This sheltered valley", he wrote, "was formerly a favorite wintering ground for the trappers." Carson, who accompanied Fremont, had spent much time at Fort Davy Crockett and must have told his chief something of the Fort's history. But nothing of this is recorded in Fremont's official report. The pathfinder merely recorded that his encampment was opposite to the remains of an old fort on the left bank of the river.[25]

Life in Idaho Territory

It is understandable that many of the Mountain Men would give up the life of trapper and seek to settle in the desirable areas that they had learned to know. There was no longer, after 1840, so great a demand for beaver skins as in the decade just closed. Also, it was becoming increasingly more difficult to find spots, in the mountains fastnesses, where beaver could be found in quantity as in former years. With one accord they agreed that it was essential to seek the settlements. Since many of these men had friendly relations with the Nez Perce Indians and had wives from that tribe, and were favorably impressed with the country of the Nez Perce Indians, they quite naturally headed for that country. And in as much as there was not yet a boundary settlement in the disputed Oregon country, between Great Britain and the United States, it is not unlikely that some of these men wanted to help perfect the claim of the United States to that territory. I quote from H. H. Bancroft:

[24] Letters of Andrew Sublette to his brother, William, written May 13, 1844 and March 2 and 6, 1845.

[25] J. C. Fremont, Report of the Exploring Expedition to the Rocky Mountains, etc., (Washington 1845), pp. 279-80.

> As it was now absolutely necessary to seek the settlements in order to live, seven of them determined to go to Oregon with their Indian wives and children, about their only worldly possessions, and begin life anew. Their names were Robert Newell, C. M. Walker, J. L. Meek, William Craig, Caleb Wilkins, William M. Doty, and John Larison. Newell, Meek and Wilkins decided to make for the Columbia River. . . .
>
> Craig remained in the upper country and settled at Lapwai, while Meek and Newell proceeded to the Dalles on horseback, leaving their wagons to be brought on at the earliest opportunity.[25]

It was natural that William Craig would settle near Lapwai, Idaho. He was married to Isabel, daughter of Chief James, who was chief of the Nez Perce Indians in the Lapwai Valley. This made it possible for him to learn the Nez Perce language and to understand the customs, attitudes, and beliefs of the tribe. Spalding, the missionary, located along the Clearwater River, near Lapwai, in 1836. Many of the Nez Perce tribe attended his mission school, and in other ways came under his influence. With the coming of Spalding, the influence of Chief James over his people lost strength. This is, no doubt, the chief cause for an enmity between Chief James and Spalding. William Craig and Missionary Spalding did not get along well as neighbors. Craig's kinship with Chief James and his years "Roughing It" as a Mountain Man may have been the leading factors that promoted their mutual dislike for each other; but more about this later. Craig's usefulness in dealing with the Indians is shown in the following quotations from the book War Chief Joseph by Howard and McGrath. Incidentally, Chief Joseph as a boy, attended Spalding's school. His father, Chief Joseph had been baptized by Spalding.

> Soon after the Whitman Massacre, November 29, 1847, regular troops and several companies of volunteers were sent to campaign against the Cayuses in revenge for the murder of the whites; when guilty members of the Cayuse tribe fled into the hills, some of the volunteers suspected the Nez Perces of abetting their escape and favored an attack upon the latter. For a while it seemed that the innocent Nez Perces would be involved in the trouble. With the arrival of Colonel Gilliam and his regulars at Waiilatpu, a council was arranged through the efforts of William Craig, who acted in behalf of the Nez Perces. This meeting was attended by 250 warriers [sic] led by Tu-eka-kas (Joseph), who approached the council under the American flag and carried a New Testament in his hand as proof of his good faith toward the Americans.

[25] H. H. Bancroft, Vol. XXIX, History of Oregon, Vol. I, 1834-1848, pp. 241, 242.

General Palmer, Indian Agent for Oregon, was favorably impressed by the attitude of the Nez Perces, and told them to return to their homes for the spring planting, and to continue their peaceful relations with the whites. . . .[27]

Concerning Governor Stevens' Council Meeting of 1855:

Next to arrive, after several days' delay, were the Cayuses; then came the Walla Wallas, the Umatillas, and the Yakimas. All tribes but the Palouses were represented. Five Thousand Indians and a mere handful of white officials, attended by a military escort of 47 dragoons under Lieutenant Archibold Gracie, were present at the council. It was probably the greatest peace gathering of Indians ever held in the west. Besides Governor Stevens there were present, his thirteen-year-old son, Hazard; General Joel Palmer; Secretaries James Doty and William C. McKay; Agents R. R. Thompson, R. B. Metcalfe, R. H. Crosby, N. Olney, and R. H. Lansdale; Packmaster C. P. Higgins, the army escort; and interpreters William Craig, N. Raymond, Mat Dampher, and John Flette.[28]

The difficulties between Chief James and Missionary Spalding and the possible influence on Craig are well presented by Francis Haines in his book, The Nez Perces:

Chief James and Henry Spalding did not get along too well. Spalding had taken over the local medicine practice depriving James of revenue. Spalding told the Indians that James and the other medicine men got their power from the devil and all their patients were in danger of eternal damnation. He also refused to pay James any rent for the land used by the mission. . . . James had an additional grievance. As Chief of Lapwai, he did not approve of the influx of Indians from other villages. The old tribal custom had explicitly reserved a village site for members of the local band. Now there were [27] Howard and McGrath, War Chief Joseph, the Clayton Printers, Ind., 1952, pp. 36, 38.

[28] Ibid., pp. 41, 46.

Indians from many lands living on what he regarded as land belonging to his band and village but they would not acknowledge him as chief, nor would they obey any of his orders.

Joseph and Timothy, the first two converts, probably irked James most. They ranked highest of all the tribe in the eyes of the Spaldings, and had personal prestige in their own right, each being a village chief. Joseph was one of the important fighting men of the tribe, sometimes leading a war party of several hundred men. Their continued presence at Lapwai considerably reduced the influence of the local chief, who did not see how he could regain his prestige until he had shown that he had power over the Spaldings. It is apparent then that Craig did not cause the trouble at the mission. He merely entered the discussion after it had been going on for some time.[29]

Excerpts from Duery's Life of Henry Harmon Spalding throw further light on the difficulties between Spalding and Craig:

When William Craig arrived to live in the valley, things changed. . . . As soon as he arrived, Craig began criticizing Spalding. On December 1, 1840, Spalding wrote in his diary: 'Old James and others say they have been stopped from going after timber by Cragge who tells them I am making dogs and slaves of them. I ought to pay them for going after timber.'

Craig claimed that if Spalding were a sincere missionary he would feed and clothe the people for nothing. . . . Craig found a powerful ally and sympathetic listener in James, who had reasons of his own for opposing Spalding. . . . Craig persuaded some of the Indians to destroy Spalding's mill dam. . . . Spalding practiced the gospel of the second mile, and sawed a number of logs for Craig in order to help him build a house. For a time Craig worked for Spalding, and outwardly at least they remained peaceful, but Craig's influence was always with the 'Heathen' party. At various subsequent times he caused Spalding great concern.[30]

At the time of the Whitman Massacre, Craig gave protection to Mrs. Spalding by inviting her to come to his home:

On Monday, Mrs. Spalding and the others began to get ready to move to Craig's home when suddenly a party of Nez Perces rode up, headed by a Nez Perce who had taken part in the Whitman massacre. . . . They were keenly disappointed to find Mrs. Spalding forewarned, and that Craig was present with a number of Indians friendly to him. The murderous band saw at [29] Francis Haines, The Nez Perces, University of Oklahoma Press, pp. 83, 84.

[30] Clifford M. Drury, Henry Harmon Spalding, The Caxton Printers, Ltd., Caldwell, Idaho, 1936, pp. 282, 283, 285.

> once that if they tried to harm Mrs. Spalding, it would mean a fight among the Nez Perces. The friendly Indians surrounded the small band of white people and putting the women and children in a wagon that Spalding owned, took them off to the Craig home. . . . The small band of captives in the Craig home, for that is what they had become, were discussing what should be done. Craig felt safe for he had married into the Nez Perce tribe, and the Indians about him promised to protect him.[31]

In 1818 an agreement was reached between Great Britain and the United States that there should be a ten-year period of joint occupancy. Even after the ten-year period had expired no boundary, mutually satisfactory, could be determined upon. England declined any settlement that did not give her the north bank of the Columbia River. Until 1834 the only Americans in the Oregon Territory had been hunters, trappers, and fur traders. The coming of the missionaries, with a few permanent settlers began to change things. In 1835 Marcus Whitman set up a mission at the junction of the Snake and Columbia Rivers. By 1842 there were approximately 500 Americans permanently located in the territory. In 1843 the settlers formed a government of their own and asked Congress to make Oregon a territory.

The constitution of the government formed by the settlers in 1843 had this important provision relative to land claims:

> The claimant should designate the boundaries of his claim, and have the same recorded in the office of the territorial recorder, in a book kept for that purpose, within twenty days from the time of making his claim; unless he should be already in possession of a claim, when he should be allowed a year for recording a description of his land. It was also required that improvements should be made, by building or enclosing, within six months, and that the claimant should reside on his land within a year after recording. No individual was allowed a claim of more than one square mile, or 640 acres in a square or oblong farm according to natural surroundings, or to hold more than one claim at one time.[32]

As stated before, Craig, with some fellow trappers, returned to the Oregon Territory in 1840 and settled in the Lapwai Valley area presided over by Chief James, the father of his wife Isabel. That Craig follows out the provisions of the territorial regulations relative to land claims is indicated in his signed

---

31 Ibid.

32 Bancroft, History of Oregon, p. 311.

Rec'd June 9, 1853

Territory of Washington

Notification

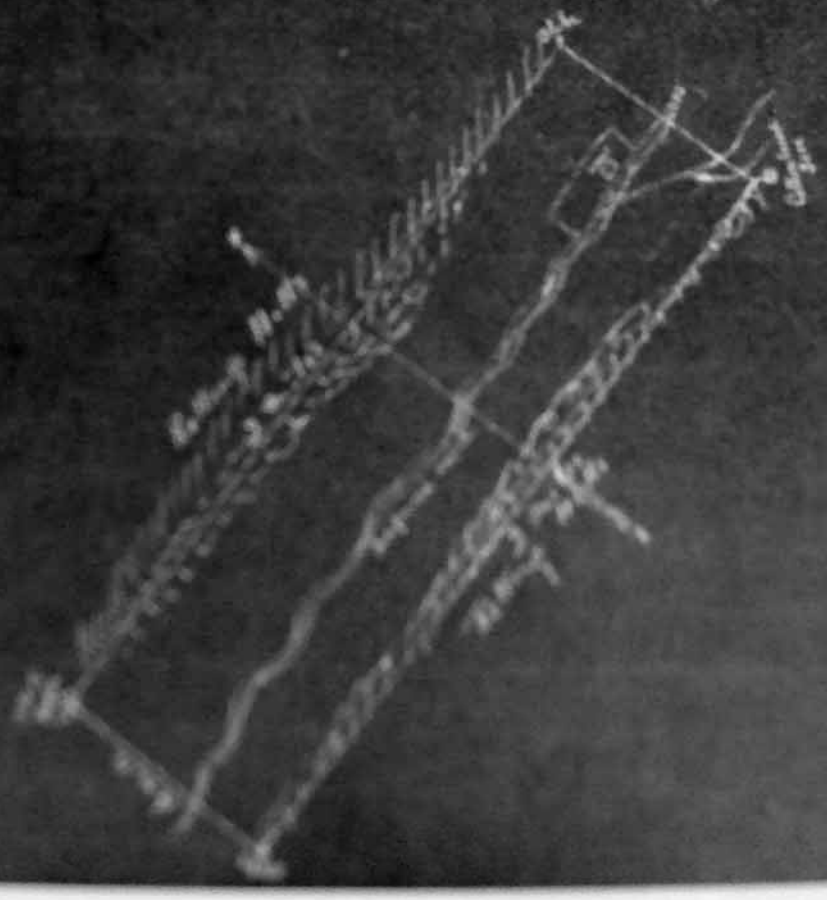
of the Register and Receiver of Washington Territory, of settlement on public lands, not yet surveyed

Pursuant to the Act of Congress, approved the 11th day of February 1853, entitled "An Act to amend an Act entitled 'An Act to create the office of Surveyor General of the Public Lands in Oregon, and to provide for the survey and make donations to settlers of the said Public Lands, and the Acts amendatory thereof.'"

I William Craig of Walla Walla County in the Territory of Washington, hereby give notice of my claim to a Donation of 640 acres of land particularly bounded and described as follows:

Beginning at a Stake 30 yards North of Sapiene creek. Thence West two miles to a pile of Rocks, thence South half a mile to a Stake, thence East two miles to a Cotton wood tree, thence North half a mile to the place of beginning.

William Craig



affidavit of June 4, 1855 (See facsimile of Affidavit, National Archives, Washington, D. C.) where he says in part, "that he has personally resided upon and cultivated that part of the Public Land in the Territory aforesaid, and particularly described in the answered notification (see facsimile of Notification, National Archives, Washington, D. C.) to the Register and Receiver of said Territory, continuously from the 15th, September, A. D., 1846 to the 4th day of June A. D., 1855".

Of course, by June 4, 1855, the boundaries of Oregon, as an organized territory by act of Congress (August 11, 1848), had been fixed and the part, north of the Columbia River and east of the Snake River, was now in Washington Territory. Thus, The Lapwai Valley, which was an area east of the Snake River, was in Washington Territory as the "Notification" indicates.

Governor Stevens, in his capacity as Superintendent of Indian Affairs, after many days of deliberation in council, finally secured Indian approval of the land to be set aside as Nez Perce Reservation. This treaty was signed June 11, 1855. William Craig's claim was within the reservation area. The following excerpt indicates the high regard the Nez Perce Indians had for him:

> William Craig, at the special request of the Nez Perces, was protected in his holdings near Lapwai by a special clause in the treaty. His ability to retain the confidence of the tribe and of the various government officials would indicate that he was a more honest man than Spalding had believed. He was a useful man too, acting as interpreter and letter writer for the Indians on many occasions.[33]

In the Indian wars of 1856 and later Colonel Craig served on the staff of Governor Stevens, heading a company of Nez Perce Indians which he had recruited. He was made a Lieutenant Colonel by the governor.

Colonel Craig was interpreter and witness to several Indian treaties negotiated by Governor Stevens. Attention was already called to the treaty with the Nez Perces at the Walla Walla Council, June 11, 1855. There was also the treaty with the Flatheads at Hell Gate, near what is now Missoula, Montana, July 16, 1855 and the treaty with the Blackfoot Indians at the Blackfoot Council, October 7, 1855, on the Missouri River below the mouth of the Judith in what was then the Territory of Nebraska, now the State of Montana.

[33] Haines, The Nez Perces, p. 126

As Indian Agent at Lapwai he made a report to the Superintendent of Indian Affairs for the year 1857. This report is here given:

Walla Walla, W. T.
July 21, 1857

Sir: In compliance with your circular issued at the office of the superintendent of Indian affairs, at Salem, Oregon Territory, March 19, 1857, to the agents and sub-agents of the different tribes of your superintendency, I have the honor to forward to your office the following report, which I think is correct, viz:

I have in my charge the friendly Cayuses, that live in Washington Territory and the Nez Perces tribe. The Nez Perces' country is bounded west by the Palouse River, which lies north of Snake River, and the Tucannon, which lies south of Snake River; on the north by the range of mountains between Clear Water and the Coeur d'Alene; east by the Bitter Root Mountains; on the south they are bounded near the line dividing the two territories.

The face of their country is barren, and very broken; it is well adapted for stock raising.

They number from thirty-one to thirty-five hundred souls. They have quite a large number of horses, and some cattle. They have always professed friendship towards the whites until last summer, when there were about two-thirds of them who got excited, became hostile, and joined the hostile bands; but since that time they have returned to their country and professed to be friendly. They are now working their little gardens, as they were in the habit of doing before the war. I think they have in cultivation some forty or fifty acres; they raise corn, wheat, peas, and potatoes. It is hard to make an estimate of the number of bushels that they raise, as they commence using it before it is ripe.

I think, with the assistance of some farming utensils, they would be able to raise their own subsistence. The last year they were all supplied with subsistence by the government for a short time, and a part of them until this spring, as they had raised nothing during the time of the excitement.

As a tribe, I think them more enterprising and industrious than any of the neighboring tribes. They have no mills, shops, or houses, erected in their country for the use of the Indians. A part of them appear anxious that the treaties should be kept, and a part do not wish it. As soon as they learn that the treaties are not sanctioned they will all be at rest.

They are anxious to have their children schooled, and mills built. I would suggest that an appropriation of twenty-five thousand dollars be made, as that sum, in my opinion, would be sufficient for those things and to maintain peace and friendly relations with the whites.

The friendly Cayuses that have been temporarily in my charge are not doing much in the way of farming this summer. I suppose there are about sixty souls. They do not appear satisfied that the military are in their country. I suppose Agent Dennison will report their condition, as he told me he had them in his report.

I am, sir, your most obedient servant,

William Craig
Indian Sub-Agent, W. T.

Col. J. W. Nesmith
Superintendent of Indian Affairs.[34]

Mention was already made of the fact that he was Postmaster at Walla Walla in 1858 and 1859.

In 1861 the first ferry was established on the Clearwater River at Spalding, Idaho. This ferry was operated by Colonel Craig until 1864 when it was sold to a man named Schenk.

Colonel Craig had a paralytic stroke in 1869 and died in September of that year. Listed as his heirs were: Isabel Craig (wife), Joseph William Craig, Adeline Pinney, Annie Fairfield Woodard, and Martha Robie Vaughan.

On October 27, 1946, Colonel Craig was honored at dedication ceremonies when a memorial stone was unveiled along the North and South Highway, two miles west of Jacques Spur, in the Lapwai Valley. The dedication address was delivered by Dr. Francis Haines who is presently at Oregon College of Education, Monmouth, Oregon. The following descendants of William Craig were present at the unveiling: Mrs. Mamie Johann, Culdesac, granddaughter; George Pinney, great grandson; Fitzhugh Pinney, Culdesac, the only surviving grandson; Mrs. Helen Pinney Jones, Portland, great granddaughter; Mrs. Minnie Caldwell, Lewiston, granddaughter; Mary Ellen Phinney, Culdesac, great great granddaughter; Mrs. Ermith Phinney Freeland, Portland, granddaughter of Fitzhugh Phinney; and Archie Phinney, Superintendent of the Indian Agency at Lapwai.

---

[34] Senate Documents, First Session, 35th Congress, Vol. 2, 1857-1858. "Report of the Secretary of the Interior", pp. 341, 342.

CORNSTALK—
King of the Rhododendron Country

By Harold Lambert

Ten thousand times I begged you slay no more,
Ten thousand lies you told and cannon roar!
—Song of Cornstalk

Cornstalk stood like a Titan among the great Indians of the 1700's.

There have been great Indian warriors and great Indian statesmen in American history. But few were past-masters both on the battlefield and before the council fires. Cornstalk, Logan, and Tecumseh were three exceptions.

Burdened with the blood of his half-white ancestry, Logan was at psychological odds with himself too often to be canonized among the Indians of West Virginia. Cornstalk was of pure Shawnee blood and was the living result of a breeding program that had extended a thousand years. And it is a matter of record that Tecumseh was great because he not only used his own talents—but also applied knowledge gained from years of study of the life of Cornstalk.

Many Indians are more famed than Chief Cornstalk because there were no writers or 18th Century model press agents to record his deeds and parlay them into the startling chronicles that have made Crazy Horse, Sitting Bull, Joseph, Geronimo, and Roman Nose so familiar to today's public. Cornstalk is poor television or movie material because so little is known of his life—and because he has never had the build-up. Writers who told about him were extravagant in their praise. To hear them or read their accounts, Cornstalk was little less than a bronze god.

"He was truly grand and majestic," wrote Col. Benjamin Wilson who had recently fought for his life against the Shawnee Chief.

Wilson veered near the superlative when he told of Cornstalk's appearance before Governor Dunmore and the gathered

Cornstalk—a pen sketch by the author armies. "His voice could be heard all over the twelve-acre camp." Today it would take quite an electronic sound system to deliver an oration by our most clarion speechmakers, over such an area.

Wilson's description of Cornstalk is one of the most colorful of recorded accounts of the man. "When he arose he was in no wise confused or daunted, but spoke in a distinct and audible voice without stammering or repetition and with peculiar emphasis. His looks while addressing Lord Dunmore were truly grand and majestic; yet graceful and attractive. I have heard the first orators of Virginia, Patrick Henry and Richard Henry Lee, but never have I heard one whose powers of delivery surpassed those of Cornstalk on this occasion."

Cornstalk spoke before Dunmore's gathered troops as he argued for a respectable peace after the disaster at Point Pleasant, when the Shawnees were defeated in what had been the greatest Indian battle of American history.

Not too much is known of Cornstalk's appearance, since people who knew him were so overpowered with his personality that words gushed into floods of vague near-worship. Soldiers who attended the council at Charlotte said that he was taller than the Virginia officers—and they were known to have stood over six feet in height. That Cornstalk was a handsome man can hardly be doubted when we learn that women were constantly attracted to him, including the white wives of Virginia settlers. Like all Shawnees, he was of the best mould of the American Indian. The Shawnees were big Indians and they were light of color. Yet Cornstalk stood out among them in his physical splendor. During the heyday of the Shawnee raids, defending settlers were heard screaming, "Shoot for the tallest one—he may be Cornstalk!"

But he was not intended for any death on the battlefield or raiding party. He was to die at the hand of the cruelest of Virginia weapons—the white man's forked tongue.

He was possessed of a peculiar and awesome modesty. In council he always spoke on the side of peace and with a strange gift of revelation for the outcome. He constantly hinted that the red man was destined for destruction, and that the best that could be done would be to delay the inevitable and try to find some decency and truth in dealings with the pale adversary. He was dealing with people who encroached on Shawnee lands even after their greatest leaders had promised an end to encroachments. Cornstalk reiterated the lies he was told constantly, outlining the white man's perjuries, but he never hinted at personal revenge. His was simply the cause of his people.

When challenged by a lesser man, and who wasn't, Cornstalk was blunt in both talk and action. Before the battle of Point Pleasant when a chieftain labeled him a coward because he still wanted to avoid a pitched battle, Cornstalk was calm before the council. "If you wish to fight you shall fight," he said. "And I shall see to it that you do fight!" The next day this same chief sought to retreat in the heat of battle, and Cornstalk kept his promise by driving the blade of his hatchet through the doubter's skull. Cornstalk was not capable of fear. Two men of the Confederacy tried to retreat on that day of battle and he killed them both. It was his system of maintaining immaculately brave troops against the white man.

At the age of 38, Cornstalk appeared at a peace conference between the colonial administrators at Lancaster, Pennsylvania. He represented the combined Shawnees from the Ohio and Allegheny River valleys—the tribes that had been called "The Arabs of the New World." In his first recorded oratory, Cornstalk urged:

"We produce to you a certificate of the renewal of our friendship in the year 1739. Be pleased to sign it afresh that it may appear we are now admitted to your friendship, and all former crimes are buried and forgotten."

This was the voice of the "Shawnee Sachem" beginning the first vain pleas that lives be saved and that his tribesmen be guaranteed security and a chance to live in the hardwood jungles and river bottoms where they could hunt and fish and maintain their old ways.

The colonial authorities turned Cornstalk down flatly. They wanted no deal with the dread Shawnee, for these were the greatest forest-fighters who had ever lived. The authorities said they would forgive only when future behavior was a historical fact. They did not like the Shawnee tribes and made no bones about it. They would not dignify the young Cornstalk with any kind of a treaty or promise. They treated him shabbily: all other chiefs were given presents and favors at the parley—but Cornstalk received only their cold stares.

The Shawnees went away in disgrace. Cornstalk and his talk of peace were thrust from the parley and told to be on their ways.

This was one of the most horrible mistakes that colonial professional mistake-makers could have designed. The Shawnees had no alternative but to join up with the French. They moved back along the Ohio and Allegheny Rivers and were given arms and ammunition and regarded as human beings by French commanders.

One direct result of the colonial refusal to do business with Cornstalk was the defeat of Braddock near Pittsburgh in 1755. Of the army of 850 men who easily defeated the British's 1,400 regulars, about 600 fighters were the men who had followed Cornstalk. On that one day more than 700 men died because the white settlers had not listened to the King of the Shawnees when he sought peace. No lesser man than George Washington had feared going against these red demons—although he commanded his Virginians valiantly and managed to help many of them escape the slaughter that Braddock had ordered them into. Washington fought that day so sick that he had to have a pillow on his saddle. There is no record that Cornstalk was present in this battle, but many of his lesser chieftains were seen.

During the Indian massacres of 1770, when Indian women and children were slaughtered ruthlessly in Western Virginia and Pennsylvania almost daily, Cornstalk kept begging for peace. He sent word that his tribe was sorry for these incidents—and that he wanted peace so that his men could abandon battle and go hunting for food against impending starvation, if hostilities continued. He was ignored and Governor Dunmore began gathering Virginians into a great army.

When Logan's family was murdered near Wheeling, Cornstalk again plead the cause of a cease-fire. He asked the colonials to "stop such foolish people for like doings in the future." He added that he had gone to great trouble to restrain "the foolish people among us (Shawnees) to sit still and do no harm . . . and shall continue to do so in hopes that the matters be settled."

But the Virginians wanted war—and they were ready to do anything to get the confederated Indians into a great battle for once and for all. The Virginians even cooked up a phoney deal with the Iroquois tribe whereby they "bought" the lands of present West Virginia south of the Kanawha. This incensed the Shawnees who felt that they owned this land—and that the Iroquois certainly had no legal right for the sale. But settlers began to swarm to Western Virginia.

Fearing any direct action against such an accomplished killer as Cornstalk, the Virginians plotted to kill one of Cornstalk's brothers to arouse the chief to do something foolish and justify Dunmore's actions of needling them toward battle. But this plot was discovered and that disaster was avoided when sympathetic whites delivered word of the scheme. Dr. John Conally, Dunmore's official spokesman, even went so far as to write a letter to a friend saying "I shall pursue every measure to offend them (the Shawnees)."

Still Cornstalk remained friendly to the British and the Virginians. Working with Chief White Eyes of the Delaware tribes, he restrained both tribes from taking up arms and murdering more white settlers. Cornstalk had one idea in this suit for peace: he wanted to save the Indians from complete destruction he knew would result from open battle. No patriot in any nation ever took more abuse than Cornstalk took from the colonials. But he was steadfast in his purpose to the end.

In his Indian Wars of Pennsylvania—C. Hale Sipe says the wars by the Virginians (Dunmore's) was "altogether unjustifiable war whose bitter fruits were gathered for many years." He added that it sent the Shawnees to the British in the Revolution and that hundreds of unnecessary lives were lost in Pennsylvania, Western Virginia and Kentucky when the British paid them bounties for colonial scalps. . . .

They went on the warpath in a great struggle that lasted to 1794 when General Mad Anthony Wayne defeated them at Fallen Timbers and compelled them to give up 25,000 square miles of territory north of the Ohio River. An honest treaty with Cornstalk could have saved thousands of lives.

But war was to come in 1774—and Dunmore had the army ready. In a maneuver that practically screamed "treason" to his own soldiers, he split his forces and arranged affairs so that General Andrew Lewis had to meet the Shawnees in a pitched battle.

Lewis had 1,100 troops. Cornstalk's forces were probably slightly less.

Lewis was camped at Point Pleasant. Cornstalk knew this and he headed the confederated warriors of the Delawares, Shawnees, Mingoes and Wyandots. On the night before the battle, Cornstalk made his argument for peace again. He felt that the Virginians were a superior force and that they certainly had superior equipment. Their firearms were good and they knew how to use them. Many Indians were good riflemen, but many were still too aboriginal to understand the mechanics of shooting and reloading at a rapid pace. The bow and arrow was still used in Cornstalk's ranks—and this was no instrument for this bloody day. Some of his warriors used only the tomahawk in battle.

But the chiefs insisted on battle and reminded Cornstalk of his duty to lead them. Cornstalk bowed to the inevitable and promised that he would give the white forces the fight of their lives—and that he would hold the red man's feet to the fire until the chiefs ruled otherwise.

The battle began when a pair of white hunters warned Lewis that Indians were approaching at dawn. The battle lasted a full day, and even General Lewis was awed at the skill of Cornstalk as he maneuvered the white soldiers into a triangle so that the Indian was in front and the rushing waters of the Kanawha and Ohio Rivers were behind them and retreat was impossible. Of the Virginians, 75 were dead at the end of that day and 140 were wounded. Most of the wounded died later. Indian losses were probably less (they admitted only 20 to 30 dead). But Cornstalk saw that the tide was definitely against his red fighters and he ordered a cease fire and directed his army to cross the Ohio and retreat into the plains.

In November Cornstalk entered into a peace treaty at Chillicothe, Ohio, with Dunmore's armies. Here Cornstalk boldly reiterated the sins and broken promises of the Virginians and openly accused them of inciting the war. He spoke at length on the outrage of Logan's family.

With Cornstalk at Point Pleasant were probably the greatest all-American team of all time. Fighting at his side had been Elinipsico, Red Hawk, Scrappathus the Mingo, Chiyawee the Wyandot, Red Eagle, Blue Jacket, and Packinshenoah, the father of Tecumseh.

"Neither party could rightly claim a victory at Point Pleasant," said Drake, the foremost historian of that day. But the Shawnees dealt for peace on Dunmore's terms.

Death of Cornstalk

The outrage and killing of Cornstalk is familiar to everyone who knows West Virginia history.

It was the prime example of the venom that is carried in the forked tongue and the man-serpent in wartime.

Following the "peace" at Chillicothe, Cornstalk remained at peace with the whites in an immaculate gesture of honesty. In the spring of 1777 when most of the Ohio tribes were going with the English, the old chief went to the Moravians in Ohio and explained that the Shawnee chiefs were lining up for the destruction of the white settlers again—that blood would flow as never before. He admitted he was powerless to stop them this time, and that the British were arming the Indians furiously as they prepared to fight the rebelling Americans.

Still in pursuit of peace, Cornstalk went to Point Pleasant in the company of young Red Hawk, a Shawnee chief, where they warned Captain Matthew Arbuckle of the imminent disaster. Cornstalk and Red Hawk were taken prisoners and held as hostages. Several days later Elinipsico, Cornstalk's son, came to visit at a time when a white soldier had been killed and scalped outside the fort. With a cry of "let us kill the red dog," a company of white soldiers under Captain Hall took over the fort. Captain Arbuckle was threatened with death if he tried to stop them.

Cornstalk was advised of the mutiny when the wife of an interpreter slipped through the garrison and warned him. But he made no move to escape. In great dignity he walked toward the murderers and took seven bullets in his body before he fell to the floor without a groan. The other two Indians were then slain in cold blood—and without a chance to defend themselves.

Cornstalk had a premonition of his own death. On the day before his assassination he said, "When I was young and went to war, I often thought each would be my last adventure and I should return no more. I still live. Now I am in the midst of you and if you choose, you may kill me. I can die but once. It is alike for me whether it is now or hereafter."

In 1896 the white men erected a monument to the King of the Shawnees at Point Pleasant. On it is an inscription, "Cornstalk."

The mutineers who took over the fort at Point Pleasant and slew Cornstalk were casually tried and summarily acquitted in the days that were to follow. After all, Cornstalk was an Indian—and what was worse, a Shawnee. . . .

Like most chiefs of his time, Cornstalk had more than one name. Among these were "Cornstock," "Monusk," "Tannebuck," and "Keigh-tuh-qua."

The birthplace of Cornstalk is a mystery that will never be solved. As with Homer of old, many states today claim his birthplace where they wanted to claim his life when he spilled blood on the rhododendron in defense of his people. His birth has been variously put in Pennsylvania, Sciota Valley in Ohio, Kentucky, on the Little Kanawha River in West Virginia, and at Forest Hills in Summers County.

The date of his birth was probably 1720. His first recorded raid was in Rockbridge County, Virginia, where he captured several prisoners. He was active in Pontiac's War and seems to have been assigned Western Virginia as his warring ground. During the ten years he was bringing terror in the Appalachian Mountains, Cornstalk is said to have killed ten settlers for every Indian brave he sacrificed. He once took the entire Greenbrier Valley—leaving it desolate for six years—losing not a single man!

A dozen incidents of Indian cruelty in Western Virginia are accredited to Cornstalk and his raiders, but there is no documented evidence that he was actually present on any of these occasions.

Draper's papers contain many references to Cornstalk, and this coldly documented material constantly praises the chief's character—asserting openly that the white settlers were responsible for all the bloodshed laid at Cornstalk's feet.

Following the battle of Point Pleasant, when his defeated chiefs wanted to renew hostilities with Dunmore, Cornstalk quickly proposed that he would lead such a campaign on the contingent that the Shawnees kill all their women and children and fight to the death. Cornstalk undoubtedly had his tongue in his cheek, and the gathered leaders quickly demurred. "Then I shall sue for peace," the old chief retorted.

Draper calls him a "forest-born Demosthenes."

THE MAN
AT THE WATER PLANT

Most of the young boys who grew up in Marlinton between 1950 and 1990 knew the man at the water plant. They called him "Mr. Curry", not because he required it, but because of their respect and admiration for him. That man was my father, Cecil A. Curry.

I didn't realize just how many young lives my father had influenced until I returned home to Marlinton after an absence of nearly fifty years. No one remembered me but when I explained my father had run the water plant, their faces brightened and a smile appeared. Their usual comment was – "He taught me how to fish" or "He taught my son how to fish." It was obvious how they had appreciated him!

We moved into the drafty log house beside the water plant in 1942 when my father became "operator" and only employee at the water plant. Despite his having only an eighth grade education, he had taken and passed the state examination to qualify for the job. He and my mother would live in the log house until he retired in 1970.

My father loved to fish and he loved to share his knowledge with the many young boys who flocked to the "dam" in the summer to fish in Knapps Creek. Often they would appear at the door to the water plant with a problem and a loud "MR CURRY". It might be a twisted line, a swallowed hook, or some other problem with their fishing gear. He patiently helped them and soon got them on their way back to the fishing hole. Sometimes they came just to show off their catch which he always admired and praised them for their skills.

Mr. Curry seemed to know what young boys needed. Perhaps this came from his childhood when he did not have the companionship of a father. His mother died two weeks after he was born leaving his father with four young boys. His father left him with the Woodell family who later gave him to his "Granny Moore" and never returned for him. Granny Moore was elderly and it was not long until my father was off on his own.

The boys seemed to respect him for the way he treated them. He was small in stature with a gentle voice and a non-threatening image. He could be firm at times, however, such as when a youngster might use bad language. He would not tolerate profanity at the dam and was quick to tell them about it!

After my father retired, he and my mother moved just a few houses away from the water plant. He was able to spend more time fishing, gardening, and tutoring his young students in the fine art of catching fish. He was a familiar sight at the dam helping all those who needed help.

Mr. Curry lived to be 97 years old. He was never a wealthy men but he was rich in friends – which after all is really more important!

SATURDAY NIGHT

When I was a young boy, my world consisted of our small town of Marlinton and the surrounding mountains and streams. Rarely did we travel out of the county and almost never out of the state. Marlinton seemed to have everything I needed or wanted.

The big social event of our week was Saturday night. That was when we all scrubbed clean and went to town. The farm community quit early this one night to travel to town for supplies and to see friends who they may not have seen for a week. Saturday was one night of the week when the merchants remained open past five o'clock.

Those with automobiles began selecting their parking spots on Main Street by about 4:00 P.M. It was almost like church pews with certain spots selected by the same family each week. They would shop, visit with friends, and stay until the stores began to close at 9:00 P.M. Everyone would quietly depart for home to get ready for Sunday church while the town "rolled up the streets".

There were the "sitters" and the "walkers". The sitters chose to remain in their cars while the walkers came by to visit and pass the time before going on to another vehicle. Others chose to stand on the sidewalk and greet the walkers as they went on their way. News and rumors were exchanged and everyone went home better informed than when they came.

There was quite a fuss when the town decided to install parking meters. Some people went out further to park where there were no meters. Others just grumbled and paid the meters. A few were even known to park their cars early in the day to assure a good space and have someone else feed the meter until they returned later in the evening.

Shoppers had their choice of several grocery stores. The A & P (The Great Atlantic and Pacific Tea Company) was a popular spot and their "Eight O'Clock" coffee was well known. I especially liked their "Spanish bars". They were a long brown cake with raisins and plenty of creamy icing. Fortunately, my father liked them also and would buy one when he had some extra money.

Thomas & Thomas was run by two delightful ladies who also delivered groceries in their "woody" delivery station wagon. I remember they allowed me to fold my newspapers on the top of their coke machine before I hopped on my bicycle to deliver them. There was the Schrader Store, Curry's Super Market , Casdorph's and a few others. Few found it necessary to leave town to buy their groceries.

My mother worked for P. C. Curry, my father's great-uncle. He sold groceries and a variety of other supplies. I always enjoyed visiting with her and watching her work. There was a giant wheel of cheese which always looked so appealing. She used a large butcher knife to cut chunks from it for a customer. She would weigh it, wrap it, and price it. The wheel would then be recovered with cheese cloth until the next order was received. Large pickles could be purchased from a big barrel. She also cut plugs of chewing tobacco from large pieces. I believe there were nickel plugs, dime plugs, and so on. My father bought small wood buckets of salt fish. They had to be soaked in water overnight before we could eat them. I remember them as being tasty.

Many of the Saturday night crowd went to the "moving pictures" at the Alpine Theatre. Most of us kids went to the afternoon matinee where we could enjoy a good "western" featuring Gene Autry or Roy Rodgers and "The Sons of the Pioneers". There was always an episode of the weekly serial where the hero was left in a precarious position at the end. My favorite was "Sheena, Queen of the Jungle" but there were many, many more. While some movies featured violence, most were good, clean family entertainment. None required parental guidance!

The price of admission was thirty-five cents, and this was not easy for us to get! For a dime more, you could buy a bag of popcorn and a coke was another nickel. We could nurse the drink and popcorn through nearly the entire movie. Those with a little more money could buy a candy bar, such as a Baby-Ruth or Boston Baked Beans.

The matinee crowd was usually very vocal cheering the hero, hissing the villain, and moaning at any romantic scenes. Sometimes the film would break causing painful cries followed by cheers as it was repaired and our hero returned to the screen. Funny scenes brought loud laughter and sad scenes silence. There was always the horseback chase scenes which circled the same large rocks and seemed to go on forever. We didn't mind as they were exciting and the hero won in the end. The cowboy always got the girl, although the horse was usually in between, and they would ride off into the sunset accompanied by music from some unknown source. The evening show started at 7"00 P.M. and were usually more serious. There were no movies on Sunday and all the stores were also closed.

Moses and Meadows was the busiest spot in town. Some came to buy sandwiches and drinks or brose through the magazines. Others came to play pool or the pinball machines. Many came just to watch or stand and talk. The most popular item in town was the "pool room hotdog". On a steamed bun with their special sauce, pickle relish and fresh onions, it was delicious. I was told by one of those who made the sauce that it was made in the back room and cooked three or four hours. Visitors from out of town just had to have a pool room hotdog with a "green river" soft drink. The price was originally a nickel, went to a dime, and eventually fifteen cents.

The pool tables began to fill up early in the afternoon and stayed busy until closing time. There were those who played a few games and left and the "regulars" who came to play all evening. My father was one of the regulars. His companions were usually Emerson Sharp, Bert Smith, and Ted Bright. They played partners with the two losers paying for the game. Sometimes these games became very serious especially if there was a "fox" where one player intentionally left the cue ball where his opponent would not have a clear shot! After all, games were three for a quarter and on a bad night, a player could spend a dollar or so for a few hours play!

You entered the pool room to a mixture of sights and sounds and smells. You threaded your way through the crowd with their constant din of conversation, past the tempting smells of the sandwich counter, by the bing-bing of the pinball machines and into the smoke filled pool area. It was a great place to spend a relaxing Saturday evening!

The pool room was largely a male domain with few women venturing beyond the soda fountain or magazine rack. Lang's Dress Shop, on the other hand was strictly for women. Few men dared to go in for fear a male friend would see them coming out! I don't believe I was ever in their store.

For an old fashion ice cream soda or milk shake, you would go to the Royal Drug Store or to Harry Sharp's. I loved to watch them fizz the sodas with the foamy top sticking up above the tall soda glass. Chocolate was my favorite. The drug store was usually quiet while Harry's was a bit noisy with mostly kids occupying the booths. The drug store was also where we stood in line to buy our school books every fall.

For men's clothing, you had the choice of the Men's Shop, Wilbur Sharps or the general stores like Brill's and Schraders. Another favorite of mine was Schrader's "5 cents to $1" store where all the toys could be viewed. I often bought a roll of caps for my cap pistol. We referred to it as the 5 and 10.

The Home Product Market or "froggy's" was the best place to buy fresh meat. They even had a home delivery service consisting of a bicycle with a small wheel and large basket on front. Richardson's was the place to find anything for the home, much as it is today.

There were some shady activities going on in Marlinton on Saturday night. Some gentlemen would appear on the street corners with a heavy black bag with them. Others would approach them and the two would disappear down the alley. When the first gentleman returned, his bag seemed somewhat lighter. I believe us kids knew what was happening but when we asked, we were greeted only with a smile.

It is sad now to walk through the streets of Marlinton past the empty stores and to remember what a busy, happy town it once was – especially on Saturday night!

DEER

By C. A. Curry

When I returned home to Pocahontas County a few years ago, I was delighted to see so many deer ((Odocoileus virginianus) in the fields and mountains around my old home. I believe they are a beautiful, graceful animal and each sighting was exciting.

I remembered hunting with my father during the 1940's when sighting a deer was unusual. Hunting them was a team effort with six or seven hunters required. A team of drivers would attempt to drive the deer from their cover and past a shooter on a deer stand. A stand was usually a low place across the mountain or somewhere that the deer would be expected to pass. The shooters job was to kill the deer.

Woe to the hunter who would miss killing the deer as it passed. He was said to have "buck fever" and the only remedy was to cut off his shirt tail. The next day he would be a driver – minus his shirt tail – with someone else on the stand.,

Kills were proudly displayed across the front fender of your vehicle. They fit nicely on the 1940's vehicles with a groove between the fender and the hood. This wouldn't work with today's styles. I'm sure they would simply slide off the vehicle!

Today's hunting methods have changed and it is no longer necessary for drives. Many deer are shot by single hunters and under various regulations, one hunter can legally kill several deer. Out of season kills are possible with special permits for those destroying crops. Improved roads allow hunters easier access to prime deer hunting areas. Despite these changes deer are still plentiful.

I am not a hunter and I deplored deer hunting season. I didn't even want to see my neighbor's trophy deer which was gutted and strung between two trees. I considered leaving the state during deer season to avoid seeing all the slaughtered deer.

My first winter I bought shelled corn and fed the deer. I enjoyed watching them from my bedroom window gobbling the corn. I sometimes got up at night just to check on the deer. Later that winter I had to leave town for two months. When I came back, I found my lawn practically bare. The deer had eaten my new grass so closely that I could barely grasp a blade of it.. I was annoyed but soon forgave them.

Spring arrived and gardens were planted. I didn't plant one but looked forward to helping my neighbor get rid of her surplus crops. The deer had other plans. In one night they consumed her beans, cabbage, and even the green tomatoes. She was devastated and I was now more than annoyed.

Flowers and shrubs were not exempt from the deer's menu. The townspeople had difficulty in raising gardens. Two deer were even seen on the Presbyterian Church lawn.

Some gardeners have resorted to electric fences to discourage the deer. Sometimes even these don't work. The deer seem to have little fear of humans and most dogs.

What happened to cause such great numbers of white-tailed deer now compared to the fewer number that existed when I was a boy some 50 years ago? There are more hunters now and thousands of deer are killed each year. Their population appears to grow and so do the related problems.

One explanation I have heard is that animal populations are cyclical and it is likely that the deer population will decline. There is no evidence so far that this is happening.

Another theory is that the cutting of the big timber has helped their growth. The tall timber provided little food but cutover areas with new growth does provide food for them. A friend cites the import of "Michigan deer" many years ago as a possible answer. They were said to be bigger and stronger and may have allowed a better winter survival rate A cousin has another interesting theory. He believes the deer population increased dramatically during World War II when the young men were serving in the armed forces and there were few hunters.

Whatever the reason, they have been one of the few animal species which have not only survived the advance of civilization but have greatly increased in numbers. I thought it might be interesting to find out what the deer harvest had been during this same period of apparent deer population explosion. My source was the Pocahontas Times which has been reporting deer kills every year. I started with 1942, the first season after World War II started, and sampled the kill statistics through the year 2000 season.

The earlier statistics were estimates while recent ones are the "official counts". They show "about 200" kills in 1942 and a combined bow/gun season kill of 3,218 in 2000, not including other special seasons or permit kills. Totals for other selected years are as follows:

Year	Kills	Year	Kills
1942	"around 200"	1988	2,064
1944	"a couple hundred"	1989	2,687
1946	"expected to be 600"	1990	3,154
1970	"about 500 killed"	1997	1,820
1980	1,488	1998	1,745
1985	2,148	1999	2,347
1986	2,239	2000	3,218 (Bow & gun)
1987	1,986

Cal Price in one of his stories also spoke about the influx of hunters into the county during deer season. On December 5, 1946, he wrote "Place the visitors at 4,000 and the number will not be too great". I wonder what that number is today?

My love for the deer took a steep decline late one July 4th while we were returning from a fireworks celebration. I topped a small rise on U.S. #219 to see a deer in my headlights along the left side of the road. I hit the brakes and began to slow down but it was too late. At just the wrong moment, the deer leaped into the path of our car and the two met. I had experienced what many West Virginia drivers have done – a costly collision with a large animal!

A new hood and grille cost us over $1,000 and lots of time and paperwork. We believed ourselves fortunate as there were no injuries. A neighbor had a similar experience which resulted in a wrecked vehicle, a broken neck, and lots of missed work.

Two days after our encounter with the deer, I saw two fawns bouncing through our back yard. They were adorable and it was hard to dislike these babies. Now, however, I could imagine them as full grown animals crossing a busy highway. I hope the deer will always be in our mountains but I wish there were fewer of them and that they would stay in our beautiful mountains.

WORLD WAR II: CHILDHOOD MEMORIES

By C. A. Curry

World War II, the war to end all wars, was the greatest single national event to occur during my lifetime. Although I was too young to fully realize its significance, my memory of some of the events during the war years remains quite clear.

My first recollection was of December 7, 1941. Our family had gathered in the warmth of our living room to read and listen to the radio. When the announcement of Japan's attack on Pearl Harbor came, my father stopped reading, leaned closer to the radio, and listened very intently. I could tell by his expression that something serious had happened but I was upset because I was missing some of my favorite programs such as "The Shadow".

Soon all young men had to register to be called into military service. My father at age 41 was not likely to be called but I am sure that my mother worried that the war would last until I was draft age. Numbers were assigned each person who registered and a lottery held to decide who would be taken from each community. My mother's brother was among the first taken. He and others gathered at the Post Office and marched several blocks to the court house to be inducted. My uncle did survive the war and returned home to marry and live on my grandfather's farm. My mother worried each day he was gone.

Small flags began appearing in the windows of homes. They were white with a single blue star and fringes on the bottom. We knew this meant a family member was serving in the armed forces. Later, some of these were replaced by a flag with a gold star. This indicated that a "gold star mother" lived there and that her son would not be returning from the war.

The town erected a large billboard on a corner in the business district. The names of all county residents serving in the military were written on the billboard for everyone to see. Stars were added beside the names of those killed in action. There were too many names and far too many stars! After the war, the billboard was taken down and a restaurant now stands in its place. I wonder what happened to it. Perhaps it should have been left standing or moved to another location.

Efforts were made to protect children from the horrors of war. Very little discussion of the war was done with children present. Something which touched everyone, however, was rationing. Ration stamps were issued for gasoline, shoes, and many other items. An "A" stamp for gasoline was issued to those who had to travel such as law officers and physicians. Those who had little need to travel were issued "C" stamps.

Some items did not require ration stamps but were scarce. I particularly remember the shortage of bananas. Word would spread that the "A & P" had received a shipment of bananas and everyone would rush to the store. My father and I stood in line to purchase three pounds of bananas – the maximum for each family. The cost was $.25.

I didn't read the daily newspaper but I did look at the combat maps which were on the front page. They showed the position of the allied and enemy forces in both the European and Pacific theatres. I didn't fully understand them but they did give me an idea of the movement of our troops.

I remember the "War Bond" drives and knew it was through the sale of these bonds that our government helped pay the cost of the war. Meetings were held to sell bonds to the citizens. I attended one rally held in the court house. I am sure it was not intended for children. One soldier told very emotionally and graphically about the combat death of his comrades. Each bond purchaser received a package of combat rations which our soldiers ate. I really wanted one but neither my father nor I had the $25 or so that was required to purchase a bond.

The schools participated in the bond drives. We would buy "savings stamps" for as little as $.10 each. These were pasted into a savings book and exchanged for a bond when the book was filled. Every Friday our teacher would march with us to the post office to make our purchases.

Another school project was the gathering of milkweed "pods" These pods contained long silky fibers with a seed attached. When it ripened, the pod opened and the wind carried the fibers away like tiny parachutes. Wherever they landed, a new milkweed plant would grow the next year. We were told these fibers would be used to insulate flight jackets and I seem to remember they could also be woven into a fine cloth. On a warm fall day, our teacher took us across Knapps Creek and to a field on top of the mountain to pick the pods. I remember it as being fun!

During the war I took a paper route. There were only about 35 customers but they were scattered all over town. I was to deliver papers during my school lunch hour and would need a bicycle to do so. Unfortunately, bicycles were scarce due to the war effort. My father finally managed to buy one at Richardson's. It was called a "Victory Bike". The tires were small and made from synthetic rubber. There were no fenders and the handlebar grips were made of wood. They were fine until they got wet when they split and fell off! It was a good bike and lasted several years.

The war seemed endless but it finally did end. The celebration which followed went on for weeks. I wondered why it lasted so long. The boys used it as an excuse to make a lot of noise.

Today modern technology has eliminated many of those things which we experienced during World War II. Thousands or hundreds of thousands can be killed

CURRY - SWINK

History of Rockbridge County Virginia by Oren F. Morton, B. Lit
[illegible] - Commercial 1980 Reprint

History of Rockbridge Co. Va by Oren F. Morton, B. Lit
Publisher Regional Publishing Co Baltimore date 1980
Road Precincts of 1841 - Taxpayers of 1841 in which they lived:

Page 386 & 552-553 Precinct
Swink, John - 57 - Barley's mill to Lantzy on North River down Kerr's Creek
Swink, Enos - 80 - Brownsburg, by Samuel Wilson's mill, to ridge road on Nevill's land.

Naturalizations prior to 1866
P. 459 - Hugh Laughlin from Ireland approximately Years 1774 - 1815 - Final papers.

Soldiers of the Revolution
P403 - McLaughlin, James - in Cherokee Expedition, 1778
Present Surnames as shown in tax lists for 3 yrs ending May 5, 1917
P393 - Mc Laughlin - W
W - Walker's Creek

P374 Taxpayer of 1782 in Rockbridge
Mc Glaughland, Edward - 1 horse - 7 cattle

P405 - Rockbridge Artillery officers and men were mustered into service of the Confederate States at Staunton, Va on the 11th day of May 1861:
2nd Lieut. Wm Mc Laughlin, Capt. Lieut-Colonel Artillery

P431 - Rockbridge Guards, Co. "H" 25th Va Infantry
Lists of officers and men
Privates
Mc Laughlin, J. M. transferred to Confederate Navy. Died since the War

P45 - Kerr's Creek Confederates - Company "H" 55th Va Infantry
Privates Stephen W. Wardlaw

P438 - "The Boy Company" (Junior Reserves) in the Confederate army from Rockbridge County
Serg.; Milton Swink

CURRY - SWINK

P438

In May preceding the organization of the foregoing company, the Reserves of Rockbridge, both senior & junior, were called in service to aid in checking the advance up the valley of the Federal army under Major-General David Hunter, and the name of the following boys are recalled as having rendered service at that time

Sibrik, Milton

P485 - Forsythe 1. Ann - m. James Armstrong, 1819
2. Catharine - m. John Auld, 1807 3. Elijah - d. in Ohio, 1822
c (about or nearly) 4. Samuel - m. Jinny Moore, 1802
5. William - m. Nelly Auld, 1809.

P498 Laughlin - Hugh - b in Scotland, 1774 c (about or nearly)
m. Mary Hilles, 1805

History of Rockbridge County Virginia by Oren F. Morton, B. Lut Regional Publishing Company 1980 Reprint

P 341 - The only Holland names we have noticed are Hull (Hole), Sley, and Vansandt.

Taxpayers of 1841 - Road precincts in which they lived

P 382 Hull: Philip - 33; Peter and William - 54

33. Bolivar Mills to Henry McCorkle's store.
54. Moore and Dunlap's store to Peter Hull's.

P 230 John A. T. Hull, congressman from Iowa, is a grandson of John, who went from Rockbridge to Ohio in 1813.

P 391 - Present Surnames as shown in tax list for the 3 yrs. ending May 5, 19
Hull - B - K - W
B - Buffalo
K - Kerr's creek
W - Walker's Creek

P 417 - Rockbridge 2nd Dragoons - Company H, 14th Va Cavalry
This company was organized in the lower end of Rockbridge, principally in the vicinity of Brownsburg, previous to the war, and was mustered into service, April 21, 1861
The 14th Va Cavalry was organized in January '63 at Salem, Va and these 3 companies were assigned to it, the Dragoons becoming Company "H"
Hull, N. B.

P 441 - Hull - Wm. M., Co. K, 22nd Va Infantry
Hull, Jno. M., Co. K, 22nd Va Infantry

P 494 - Hull - 1. Daniel - m. Sarah Winegar, 1812 1X. Peter - m. ——— Linkenfelter - Chelsea John (m. Amy Strickland) 2. Peter m Jenny Dickey, 1805 3. Philip - m. Elizabeth Newcomer, 1816 4. Frederick m. Polly Cunningham by 1818.

Samuel Forsythe

Augusta Co, Va

Enea Swink
b - 1783-1784
d March 28, 1867 near Greenbank

Rachel M. Forsythe
b 1794-1795
d still living 2/8/1870

married January 9, 1817

Margaret ann Swink
b October 28, 1828
d January 21, 1913

James Cassell
b ca 1819
d May 17, 1882

November 18, 1847 Pocahontas Co, Va

Jacob Cassell
b
d

Nancy McGlaughlen
b
d

} Married Feb 18, 1815

James Cassell
b 1819
d May 17, 1882

Margaret Ann Slink
b October 28, 1828
d

Married November 18, 1847

James Morgan Cassell
b
d

Sarah Elizabeth Shinaberry
b
d

} Married

Homer Henry Cassell
b January 20, 1895
d January 15, 1978

Sarah Etta Lambert
b January 16, 1893
d February 11, 1986

} Married February 24, 1914

Forsythe

Samuel Forsythe

1. Sarah Forsythe daughter of Samuel married William Stephenson
March 13, 1797
Surety: Wm Stephenson & Samuel
Forsythe
(Volume 2 P. 329
Chalkley's

March 14, 1797 by Rev. Wm
Wilson - William Stephenson and
Sarah Forsythe

2. Rachel M. Forsythe
b 1794-1795
d Still living 8/8/1879
but not in 1880 Census of Pocahontas County
Burial

Married Enos Swink
marriage bond of Augusta Co, Va
January 9, 1817 Staunton, Va

3. Abraham Forsythe
Signed Rachel & Enos Swink marriage
Forsythe (above) bond marriages in Rockingham Co from 1778 to 1816

p43 marriage bonds
Marriage List compiled by Harry M. Strickler
Published by Joseph K. Ruebush Co
Dayton, Va date ——

Isaiah A. Curry
b June 30, 1778 Augusta Co Va located on Back alleghany Mt not long after War of 1812 died October 9, 1859 alleghany Mt growth on neck 81 yrs 3 months 9 days
Place of birth on Death record
Augusta Co. Va
old Zenith Legion marriage
Married 1802
Rockingham County
Abigail Hall

born about 1789-1790
Died

Late in life they moved to Lewis County

His Parents
John Curry see Samuel Curry will in Chalkley's book

Pocahontas Co
1/31/1850
Solemnized by James Wanless

Her Parents
Joseph Hall was surety when she married.
It is usually the Father, brother, relative or friend of bride + groom

1. Robert Curry age 32 yrs 1850 Pocahontas Co Census born ~~Jan 15~~, 1818
died July 15, 1883 drowned at Leatherbark
Buried
married Elizabeth H. Swink in 1852 age 27 yrs Census born in Rockbridge Co, Va
born 1822
died Sept 1, 1883 on Greenbrier River, Pocahontas Co 61 yr reported by Son. Married in Rockbridge - sister to Margaret ann Swink that married James Cassell

2. John Curry
b July 18th, 1820
a confederate Prisoner and released
Located in Barbour County.
Married Virginia H. Wanless in Barbour County, Va
(See Pocahontas Co Marriages Name of bride Virginia Cunningham Sept 7, 1854

3. Margaret Curry Patt Gaspard
born June 10, 1824
Died April 2, 1875
Married Thomas H. Galford (1st wife Buried Cochran Cemetery on Stacy creek born March 9, 1823 - July 2, 1878

4. William Curry (Stonemason)
b In Lewis county, Va

Married Nancy Lytton of Rockbridge, Va

5. James Curry
d killed by a falling Tree when half Jam

6. Sally Curry
b.

Son of Jacob Cassell, Sr
& Nancy McGlaughlin Cassell went west

Married John Cassell
July 2, 1836 listed as John Castle in Marriage bond of Pocahontas Co

7. Elizabeth Curry

See Pocahontas County Marriages

Married James Jones & settled in Harrison County on February 3, 1829 - Wedded February 12, 1829
in Harrison County

8. Anna Curry

Married Isaac Hayes Hayse
located in Barbour County

Volume 3 - P 233 Chalkleys
Will book Number 8 P224 - 2nd August 1808
Samuel Curry's Will - To sons, William, Samuel, Isaac.
Daughter Mary. Teste; Alex Robertson, Samuel Forsythe
Jno. Keith proved 26th December 1808. Samuel &
Isaac Qualify

The Curry Family of Back Alleghany Mountains

to show relationship to Cassells

Native of Va. Came to Pocahontas Co after the War of 1812. Late in life he moved to Lewis County, Va (now WV) + was probated in December 1859
His will was written on 4/24/1855

Isaiah Curry

Born June 30, 1778 (Augusta Co, Va) ~~Rockbridge Co~~ indexed as Pocahontas Co records located on Back Alleghany Mt not long after War of 1812 died October 9, 1859 - Alleghany Mt 81 years 3 months 9 days

Married Abigail Hall of Va Born about 1789-1790 Died

Place of birth on death record Augusta Co, Va

Late in life they moved to Lewis County reported by John Curry, son growth on neck

He listed as a farmer

His Parents John Curry ? See will of Samuel Curry

Sister to Margaret ann Swink that married James T. Cassell

Will of Isaiah Curry dated April 24, 1855 probated Dec term 1859

Anny Curry, daughter
Betsy Curry, Daughter
William Curry, Son
Sally Curry, Daughter
Margaret Curry, Daughter
Robert Curry, Son
John Curry, Son

He is Son of Jacob Cassell, Jr Nancy McClaughlin Cassell

4. William Curry (Stonemason)
Born in Lewis County, Va

Married Nancy Lytton of Rockbridge, Va + settled in Lewis County

5. James Curry

killed by a falling tree when half grown

6. Robert Curry
Born ~~July 15~~ 1818 - He 65 yrs died ~~Sept~~, 1883 drowned at Leatherbark

Married Elizabeth H Swink born in Rockbridge Co, Va
born 1822
Died Sept 1, 1883 on Greenbrier River Pocahontas Co, 61 yrs reported by Son + Married in Rockbridge & believe

7. John Curry
born July 18, 1820
A Confederate Prisoner and released
located in Barbour County

Married Virginia H Wanless in Barbour County Va (See license) for different Bride
Sept 9, 1854 by James E. Moore
She born March 8, 1836

6. Sally Curry
b.
d.

Married John Cassell July 2, 1836 listed as John Castle in Marriage bond of Pocahontas Co
+ they moved west

7. Elizabeth Curry

Married James Jones + settled in Harrison wedded Feb 12, 1829 in Harrison County -

Isaiah H. Curry was a native of Va
And came to Pocahontas County after War of 1812: Later in life he moved to Lewis County, Va Now W Va

8. Anna Curry

Lived in Barbour Co, Va (Hayes)
to Married Isaac Hayes &
located in Barbour Co.

29 January 1850 Bond: Thomas Halford & Margret Curry.
Surety Thomas Halford & John Curry. Isaiah Curry consents for daughter. Test E Enos Saint + Born Jan 10, 1824
John Curry Died April 2, 1875
31 January 1850; Register: Thomas Halford + Marg
Curry by Jas. Wanless
He born Solemnized by March 9, 1823 James Wanless
died July 2, 1898

3
~~8~~. Margaret Curry
See P 156-157 of Halford Book born June 10, 1824 Pritt Halford
Died April 2, 1875
Married 1/31/1850
Thomas H Halford his 1st wife

Burial: Cochran Cemetery on Stony Ck.

Ho E.

Died July 15, 1883 drowned reported by Elizabeth Curry wife Charles Curry son Robert Curry and Elizabeth Swink Curry
& their children

James Curry confederate among last soldiers killed at Appomattox in 1865

F
Enos Curry Married Eliza ann on 10/16/1874 Solemnized by A H Hayes born Dec 31, 1850 John Logan Miss Logan, daughter of the late Died March 29, 1922 Nellysford Va Rachel Wanless Logan lives on Back Allegheny Mt
Ae 26 Burial G. Bethel cemetery Va
Rachel Ae 22 Nancy Curry Married Samuel Deneuer 5/11/1871 Solemnized by J.C. Moore
This Age lives on Back Allegheny Mountain

Charlotte Curry married Brown Gum and lives in Randolph County

Abigail Virginia
"Venie" Rachel A Lavenia Curry married Jacob Cassell born March 28, 1857 Back allegheny (Little Jake) lives on Back Allegheny

born Sept 17, 1850 Charles Curry married Miss Burner and lives
Lewis on homestead on Back Allegheny. He reported
He dealt of his father, Robert Curry July 15, 1882 drowned son of David & A Curry. His mother Elizabeth Saint Curry died Wreckville River Sept 1, 1883 - 61 years of age; Born in Rockingham Co, Va

Eliza ann Logan Curry
born November 20, 1847
Died December 24, 1939 old age
Burial Bethel Cemetery She was 92 yrs 1 month 4 days old Parents John Logan
Rachel Wanless Logan

Great Great Grandfather

Known Issue Swink

1860 census Enos was 71 Rachel was 64 Probably mistaken on him

Probably 76

Enos Swink (Shoemaker) Probably 1850 census

Born 1783-1784

Died March 28, 1867 near Red Bank, W Va

Burial

not listed in 1870 Census

1850 Census Pocahontas County Enos Swink 66 yrs Rachel Swink 55 years living with Robert Curry 32 yrs Elizabeth Curry 27 yrs

1870 census Rachel M Swink 70 yrs living With Zachariah Swink

Marriage Bonds of Augusta Co. Va. January 6, 1817

Married Rachel Forsythe January 9, 1817 at Staunton, Va

Born 1794-1795

Died

Burial

He was a Shoemaker

He was a Veteran of War of 1812 - a Lieutenant

Rachel M. Forsythe was daughter of Samuel Forsythe of Augusta County

4. Margaret ann Swink

She was 22 1850 census

Born October 28, 1828 Rockbridge Co, Va

Died January 21, 1913 Wanless W Va age 84 years

Burial Wanless Cemetery

C.

*Married James J. Cassell Pocahontas Co November 18, 1847

5. Zachariah J. Swink

He was 14 1850 census

Born November 3, 1835

Civil War Co. H 31st at Confederate age 14 in PC 1850 Census

Died December 20, 1915 age 80 yrs

Burial Wanless Cemetery

*Married Rachel Cassell Pocahontas Co. October 5, 1876

6. Elizabeth H Swink

She was 21 1850 census She was 32

Born about ~~1803~~ 1822 - Rockbridge Co, Virginia

age 27 in 1850 PC census

Died September 1, 1883 age about 61 yrs Greenbrier River reported by Son

Burial

C.

*James T. Cassell

Son of Jacob Cassell Sr. Nancy McLaughlin Cassell

a farmer

*Rachel Cassell

Daughter of Samuel Cassell Mary Eliza Valentine Jemerson Cassell

Married Robert Curry

Born about 1818

died July 15, 1882 Greenbrier River drowned at Featherbank death reported by son Charles Curry

1850 census She was 19

5. Caroline R. Swink

Born about 1831

age 19 in 1850 PC census

Died 1907

Burial

Married Harvey Nottingham Oct 19, 1862 Pocahontas Co.

by James E. Moore

over

When figuring date from age of 89 9-in her obituary she would have been born about 1818

1850 census
She was 27

Nancy Swink

Born 1823
Died February 9, 1907 near Casa
Burial

1850 census
He was 28

Married Daniel Wilfong
Marriage bonds Feb 3, 1847

1860 Census
She was 33
He was 34

Ursula Jane Swink

Born 1827
Died
Burial

died before Feb 9, 1907.
as 1 brother & 1 sister living in Nancy Wilfong's obituary

Married John W. Tallman
Marriage bonds May 22, 1847

21 October 1852 Harvey Nottingham & Caroline Ruth Swink
by James C. Moore, Enos Swink consents for daughter.
Teste, John W. Tallman & Zachariah J. Swink

In Birth records of Rachel abigail Va curry
March 25, 1857
Robert & Elizabeth E. Curry

Curry

Elizabeth H. Swink
Born about 1822 Rockbridge Co Va
Died September 1, 1883 age 61 yo Shenbrier River
Burial _____

Returned to Rockbridge Co, Va met Elizabeth Swink & brought her back to Pocahontas county as his bride -

Married
Robert Curry
Born July 15 1818
Died July 15, 1883 drowned at Leatherbark on horseback during a flood attempting to ford Leatherbark
Burial _____

(1882) & Pocahontas County Records

Elder in the Germen Baptist church
Stone Mason & farmer

Her Parents

Enos Swink

Rachel Forsythe Swink

His Parents

A.
Josiah Curry
born 6-30-1778 Augusta Co, Va died 10, 9, 1859 Buck alleghany age 81 y 3 m 9 D
farmer

Abigail Hall
born 1789-1790

1. James H. Curry
Born 1846
Died among last soldier killed at Appomattox, Va (civil war) 1865 at Confederate age 19 y

2. Nancy Jane Curry
Born august 2, 1847 Pocahontas County
Died October 30, 1900 age 53 y 2 m 28 D Dillispie W. Va
Buried
Married Samuel A. Heverer born Rockingham Co, Va may 11, 1871 Solemnized by Pocahontas Co J. E. moore
He born Sept 8, 1843 Son of Adam Heverer & Rebecca Riley Heverer

3. Enos T. Curry
Born December 31, 1850
Died March 29, 1922 age 71 yr 2 m 28 D Nettingham W. Va
Buried Bethel Cemetery
Married Eliza ann Logan archives 10/6/1874 solemnized by A. H. Hamilton
Pocahontas Co ? 10/16/1874

4. Elizabeth Charlotte Curry
Born Feb 7, 1853
Died March 5, 1932 age 79 yr 28 D Idamwood, W. Va
Married Joseph Brown Gum
July 13, 1876 by Hoge P. Moore
Pocahontas Co
Daughter of John W. Logan & Rebecca H. Hamilton Logan lived in Randolph Co "Vermilion"

5. Rachel Abigail Lavenia Curry
Born March 25, 1857 Cass W. Va Back alleghany
Died July 29, 1930 at Cass, W Va age 73 y 4 m 2 D
Buried
married Jacob Cassell
10/15/1881 at Green Bank W Va
"Little Jake" lived on Buck alleghany

(over)

Microfilm
Greenbrier River

2. J Zechariah

b. Charles R. J. Curry
Born Sept 17, 1860 Clover Creek va
Died April 18, 1916 Back Nt Death Case age 55 yr 7 m 1 day
Burial

She is 2nd

Married Ida Crawford Burner
June 5, 1883 Solemnized
by Lafayette Fox
Pocahontas Co
She born 1868-1947

Daughter of Lafayette &
Caroline Gum Burner & Frank

lives on homestead on Back Alleghany
He reported the death of his father,
Robert Curry July 15, 1882 drowned -

...ayette Curry
...d wife & chil...
...son
...eported
...e death
...ly 15, 1883

4/20/1916 Pocahontas Times

Charles Curry died at his home on Back Mountain near Cass Tuesday (April 18) at an advanced age. Burial at the Swink burying ground.

4/27/1922 Pocahontas Times

Died

a few minutes past noon on March 29, 1922 Enos F. Curry, of Back Alleghany, quietly passed from this life. His age 71 yrs and 3 months.

Mr. Curry is survived by his wife and 2 sons, W. B. and F. J. Curry of Nettingham.

During late years he had been in failing health and during the recent epidemic of influenza, Mr Curry contracted the disease and pneumonia developed which quickly caused his death.

Born and raised in this county, Mr. Curry purchased a farm on Back Alleghany Mt, where he lived for a number of years the peaceful and industrious life of a farmer. He will be greatly missed in all the different forms of worship at the church, being a true follower of the Saviour for a long time, each Sunday found him at the little church on the hill.

Funeral services were conducted by his pastor, Rev. L. H. Vandevander of Durbin. His text was "I have finished my course". In the presence of a large crowd the body was laid to rest in the Bethel Cemetery.

"Time speedeth on / the years are Fleeting by like shadows float

Logan

my days with promise come, then fade and die - Days incomplete
Dear Lord, all things around me fail to stay.
Be thou my portion & my rock alway."

D. N. M.

Pocahontas Times 4/27/1922

Logan

John W. Logan of Randolph County
Born May 5, 1818
Died
Buried
former Blacksmith
Married June 4, 1843 Pocahontas Co
Solemnized by Benjamin Zaellman
Rachel H. Wanless
Born April 24, 1824
Died November 26, 1903 age 79 yr 7 m 2 Days
Buried

Surely John W. Logan and William Wanless were related as cousins for daughter's Sale, Andrew Wanless + Nelson Warwick

His Parents
Rebecca Logan

Is Pocahontas data John's mother, → living with him and she was 68 years old at the time

Her Parents
William Wanless
Nancy Wilson Wanless

1. Preston Logan
Born July 29, 1844
Died July 13, 1851
age 6 yrs 11 m 14 D

2. Nancy Jane Logan
Born February 19, 1846
Died March 22, 1936
age 90 yrs 1 m 3 Days Single
Buried

3. Eliza ann Logan
Born November 20, 1847
Died December 24, 1937 old age
age 92 yr 1 m 4 D
Buried Bethel cemetery
Married Enos F. Curry 10/6/1874

4. Mary Elizabeth Logan Barbour Co
Born November 22, 1849
Died March 5, 1883
age 33 yrs 3 m 13 D
Buried Wanless Cemetery
Married John Creed Curtis December 12 1867 by [illegible]

He, 32 She 18

5. William Andrew Logan
Born April 29, 1852
Died July 22, 1855
age 3 yrs 2 m 23 Days

In Pocahontas death records death date July 15, 1855 Buckalew at 2 yrs + 3 months Place of birth Barbour County Reported by John Logan, father

over

august 27, 1855 Back
Allegheny
Pocahontas Co Birth records

6. Margaret Rebecca Logan
Combstone august 27, 1855 Pocahontas
Born august 24, 1855 County Death Record

Housewife. Lived
at Cass, W. Va.

Died March 13, 1938
age 82 yr 6 m 16 D
Chronic Nephritis
Burial Hill top Cemetery
Married James Hanson Gaston

7. Alvina Josephine Logan
Born September 28, 1857
Died December 5, 1929
age 71 y 11 m 9 D
Burial
Married Samuel Renick Hogsett (W.) 12/26/1876
lived at Huntersville, W. Va

12 December 1867 John C. Curtis & Mary E. Logan at the residence of John Logan by Charles A. Joyce. Groom: age 22, farmer, born & living Randolph Co, son of Thomas & Mary Curtis. Bride: age 18, born Barbour Co, daughter of John & Rachel Logan. John W. Logan consents for daughter & Teste, James Wanless.

Mrs. Margaret Rebecca Logan Galford was born August 27, 1855. born Married to James Henson Galford April 1877. She departed this life March 13, 1938, at the age of 82 years, 6 months and 17 days.

Mrs. Galford was known to everyone in her community as "aunt Beckey." She lived a devoted christian life. She was a kind and loving mother and bore her many burdens as only a true christian could do. When she realized the end was near she expressed her desire and readiness to go. During her many weeks of suffering she never complained but seemed content to look beyond to a life eternal.

She was the mother of eleven children, seven of whom are living: Mrs. Ida Belcher, Mrs. Clara Galford, Lewis, Levi and Preston of Cass; Everett, of Covington, Virginia, and Marvin of Logan

She also reared the following grandchildren: Wilson
Robertson, Wallace Robertson, Snowden and Flem Galford.

Pocahontas Times?

Preston Galford

Preston (Springy) Galford, 85, formerly of Durbin and Cass, died Tuesday, June 29, 1982 in Denmar Hospital after a long illness.

Born April 5, 1897 at Cass, he was a son of the late James H. and Rebecca Logan Galford. Mr. Galford was a lifelong resident of Pocahontas County.

Survivors include his wife, Shirley Pusey Galford, of Denmar; a daughter, Evelyn Snedegar, of Baltimore, Md.; a son, Leonard D. Galford, of Columbus, Ohio; and seven grandchildren; Nieces and Nephews.

Services were held Friday at 2 p.m. at the Wallace & Wallace Funeral Home Chapel in Arbovale with Rev. Rick Barkley officiating. Burial was in Arbovale Cemetery.

Pocahontas Times

Card of Thanks

We would like to thank the nurses and doctors at the Denmar State Hospital for their concern and services during the long illness of Preston Galford, and for the prayers, flowers, and expressions of sympathy of relatives and friends.

Shirley B. Galford
Leonard D. Galford
Evelyn G. Snedegar and Grandchildren

Curry

Enos F. Curry
Born December 31, 1850
Died March 29, 1922 Nottingham WV
age 71 y 2m 28 D
Burial Bethel Cemetery

Married October 6, 1874 He 23 She 27
Solemnized by J. H. Hamilton
Eliza Ann Logan
Born November 20, 1847
Died December 24, 1939 old age
age 92 y 1m 4 Days
Burial: Bethel Cemetery

His Parents
Robert Curry
Elizabeth H. Swink Curry

Her Parents
John W. Logan
Rachel H. Wanless Logan
married June 4, 1843 Pocahontas Co
Solemnized by Benj Tallman

1. Joseph Franklin Curry
Born October 26, 1875 Durbin Pocahontas Died May 12, 1948 Durbin
age 72 y 6m 16 Days
Burial

married Margaret Elsie Hoover
4/18/1900

2. Wallace Baxter Curry
Born September 16, 1879, Durbin
Died June 14, 1948 Durbin age 68 yrs 8m 28 Days cerebral Burial Bethel Cemetery Hemorrhage

Married ← not

3. William Curry Back Alleghany
Born June 13, 1884
Died July 15, 1884
age 1m 2 days
Burial

Curry

Joseph Franklin Curry
Born October 26, 1875
Died May 12, 1948 Durbin, WV
age 72 yrs 6 m 16 Days
Burial

Married 4/18/1900
Margaret Elsie Hoover
Born December 22, 1883
Died april 6, 1944
age 60 yr 3 m 14 Days
Burial Bethel Cemetery

His Parents
Enos F. Curry
Eliza Ann Logan Curry

Her Parents
William Hoover
Amanda Collins Hoover

1. Infant Curry
Born July 20, 1901
Died July 20, 1901
Burial

2. Harry E. Curry
Born August 26, 1903 Buck Mountain
Died October 23, 1972 1972
Burial Gum Cemetery age 69 yrs
Married Virgie E. Nottingham
July 3, 1925 at Durbin

3. James Buffer "Pat" Curry
Born January 12, 1906 Durbin
Died January 19, 1974 Elkins Hospital
Burial Bethel Cemetery
Married

4. Letha Curry
Born May 30, 1908
Died
Burial
Married J. Laurence Shiffert

5. Emma Curry
Born December 6, 1912
Died April 1, 1942
age 29 yrs 4 m 25 Days
Buried Burr Hawkins

(over)

6. Anderson Curry
Born July 19, 1915
Died March 19, 1962
age 46 yrs 8 m
Burial

"Joe" Addison
7. Carl Curry
Born april 26, 1918 Dublin
Died November 16, 1980 Middlefield Ohio
Burial Bethel Cemetery

8. William K Curry Hoderman
Born March 5, 1924
d. July 6, 1980
Burial Bethel Cemetery

Married Edith Mick

Margaret Elsie Hoover Curry was born December 22, 1883 and departed this life April 6, 1944. She was the daughter of William and Amanda Collins Hoover. One brother, Kennedy, of Alabama survives her

She was united in Marriage to Frank Curry April 14, 1900. To this union eight Children were born. She is survived by her husband, six children, 14 grandchildren and two great grandchildren. Two daughters preceded her to the grave - one in infancy, and Mrs Burr Houchins, two years ago. Those surviving are: Harry E., and Carl A. of Durbin, James B., in service in Iran. Anderson N. in service in England and William E, in service at Mitchell Field, N.Y: One daughter, Mrs Lawrence Shifflett of Durbin

She joined the Church at an early age, uniting with the Methodist Church, and lived a consistent christian life; and was a regular attendant at Church as long as her health permitted. She was a kind & faithful wife, and mother & friend to all. She was an invalid for almost 6 years, but was always cheerful.

Her funeral was conducted at the Bethel (Olive Cook Mathews 1st cousin) Church by Rev. M. N. De Haven, & Rev J. William Pugh. She was laid to rest in the Church cemetery, in view of her earthly home.

(over)

She was tenderly cared for during her illness by her son, Carl.

She is gone but not forgotten. God saith come and she was ready to answer the call. She often expressed her readiness and willingness to go.

She opened her mouth with wisdom; and in her tongue is the law of kindness.

She looketh well to the ways of her household; and eateth not the bread of idleness.

Her children rise up and call her blessed; her husband also, and praiseth her.

Harry E. Curry

Harry E. Curry, 68, of Durbin, died at home Saturday, October 23, 1971, of an apparent heart attack.

Born August 26, 1903, on Back Mountain, he was a son of the late Frank J. and Elsie Curry.

He married Virgie E. Nottingham at Durbin on July 3, 1925.

He attended the Church of God at Durbin. Mr. Curry retired from the Pocahontas Tanning Company at Frank in March 1969, and had lived at Durbin his entire life.

Two sisters and one brother preceded him in death.

Survivors include his wife, Mrs. Virgie E. Curry; eight daughters, Mrs. Mapine Lantz, of Durbin, Mrs. Arlene Fitzgerald, of Washington, D.C., Mrs. Julia Pearl Mace, of Ridgely, Mrs. Opal Moore, of Hughesville, Maryland, Mrs. Georgia Nelson, of Daleville, Alabama, Mrs. Ellouise Matheny, of Fort Meade, Maryland, Mrs. Sandra Kaye Mullenax and Miss Dianne L. Curry, both of Hagerstown, Maryland; two sons, Leonard E. Curry, of Sharon, Pennsylvania, and Franklin Curry, of Warren, Ohio; one sister, Mrs. Letha Shifflett, of Durbin; three brothers, Baxter and William Curry, both of Durbin, and Carl Curry, of Middlefield, Ohio; 21 grandchildren and 11 great-grandchildren.

Funeral services were held Wednesday afternoon in the Durbin Church of God by Alvin A. Craig and sister, Mary Sowers, of Hagerstown, Maryland, with burial in the Gum cemetery on Back Mountain, Ct.

The Pocahontas Times

In Loving Memory
of Vergie E. Curry
8-16-87

Harry E. Curry
10-23-71

Wonderful Parents,
Gentle, good and kind,
We know the care you tenderly gave God took them home
It was his will
But in our hearts
We miss them still.

Sadly missed and loved by Sons, Daughters, Grandchildren and Great-Grandchildren
The Pocahontas Times
6/1/1989

James B. Curry

James Baxter (Pat) Curry, 68, of Durbin, died Saturday, January 19, 1974, in an Elkins hospital.

Born January 12, 1906, at Durbin, he was a son of the late Joseph Frank and Margaret Hoover Curry.

He was a member of the Bethel United Methodist Church, Durbin American Legion Post and the Loyal Order of Moose, a veteran of World War II, and a farmer.

Survivors include one sister, Mrs. Leatha M. Shifflett, of Durbin; two brothers, Bill Curry, of Durbin, and Carl Curry, of Middlefield, Ohio.

Funeral services were held Tuesday afternoon at the Bethel United Methodist Church by the Rev. Billie Helwick and the Rev. Virgil Cover. Burial was in the Bethel cemetery.

The Pocahontas Times

William E Curry

Durbin - William E. Curry, 56, of Durbin Pocahontas County died Sunday July 6, 1980 in Memorial General Hospital, Elkins after a short illness.

Born at Hosterman, March 5, 1924, he was a son of the late Frank J. and Margaret Hoover Curry.

A life-long resident of Durbin, Mr Curry was a World War II veteran, attended the Bethel United Methodist Church on Back Mountain and was a foreman for the Green Bank District of the W. Va Dept of Highways.

Surviving: Wife Mrs Edith Mick Curry; two daughters, Miss Brenda L. Curry at home and Mrs Donna Warner of Durbin; two sons, William E. Jr of St. Albans and Donald W. of Durbin; a sister Mrs. Letha Shiffett of Durbin; a brother, Carl Curry of Middlefield, Ohio and 3 grand Children

Service will be 2 p.m Wednesday at Bethel United Methodist Church with the Rev David Rittenhouse and the Rev. Mark Huckman officiating. Burial will be in the church Cemetery. Friends may call from 6 to 9 p.m today at Wallace & Wallace Funeral Home Arbovale.

(over)

J Lawrence Shifflett

Durbin - J. Lawrence Shifflett, 72 of Durbin, Pocahontas County died September 24, 1980 at home of a heart attack.

Born July 28, 1908 in Highland County, Virginia, he was the son of the late Cornelius and Mary Hatterman Shifflett. Mr. Shifflett had lived at Durbin for 68 years and was a member of the Durbin Church of the Brethren and a retired employee of the Howes Leather Co at Frank, employed for 45 years.

Surviving wife Letha Curry Shifflett; Three daughters, Mrs Margaret Hill of Green Bank, Mrs Leona Sheets, Colmar Manor, Maryland and Mrs Grace Varner of Durbin; 3 sons, Lawrence, Jr of Mt Hatfield, Pa, James of Green Bank, Allen of Lanham, Maryland; 14 grandchildren; 5 great grandchildren

Services will be 2 p m Monday in the Bethel United Methodist Church on Back Mountain with the Revs. David Rittenhouse and Donald Curry Officiating. Burial was in Church Cemetery.

Wallace-Wallace Funeral Home, Arbovale

one obituary says also Rev Mark Hickman officiating.

11/16/1980 Curry, Carl - Service Will be 2 p.m Friday in Bethel United Methodist Church, Back Mountain with the Rev. David Ritterhouse officiating. Burial will be in the Church cemetery. Friends may call after 6 p.m today at Wallace-Wallace Funeral Home, Arbovale. Mr Curry 62, of Middlefield, Ohio formerly of Durbin, Pocahontas County died Sunday at home after a short illness.

Carl Curry

Carl "Joe" addison Curry, 62, of Middlefield, Ohio died Sunday, November 16, 1980 of a heart attack ~~at his~~ + He had been a resident for 24 years of Middlefield, where he was employed by Georgia Industries as a mill operator.

Born April 26, 1918 in Durbin, he was the son of the late Frank and Margaret Curry. Four brothers and a sister preceded him in death.

Surviving him are three daughters, Mrs Susan Cramer and Mrs Louise Fenselon, both of Middlefield, and Anita Lynn Curry of Columbus, Ohio; one sister, Mrs Letha Shifflett of Durbin and five grandchildren

Services will be held at 2 p.m. Friday at Bethel Church on Back Mountain by the Rev. David Ritterhouse with burial in Bethel Cemetery.

Friends may call at Walker + Wallace Funeral Home in Arbovale Thursday from 6 to 9 p.m.

The Pocahontas Times

Mrs Mary Fitzgerald

Mrs Mary Arlene Curry Fitzgerald, 51, of Washington, D.C., formerly of Durbin, died Wednesday, February 17, 1982 in Bethesda, Maryland, after a long illness.

Born on April 21, 1930, she was the daughter of Mrs Virgie Nottingham Curry, of Durbin, and the late Harry Curry.

She was a 32 year resident of Washington and was employed as a Manager of Weaver Brothers Real Estate Agency.

In addition to her Mother, she is survived by her Husband, Roy L.; stepdaughter, Mrs Hilda Shelton of Marlenton; Stepson, Raymond L. of Bladensburg, Maryland; Sisters, Mrs Myrine Lantz of Durbin, Mrs Opal Moore of Hughesville, Maryland, Mrs Georgia Nelson of Lepas, Mrs Julia Mace of Cumberland, Maryland, Mrs Eloise Hinson of South Carolina, Mrs Sandra K. Mullenax and Diana Curry, both of Hagerstown, Maryland; Brothers, Leonard Curry of Pennsylvania Franklin Curry of Durbin; five grandchildren, one great grandchild; 17 nieces and 24 nephews.

Services were held at 11 a.m. Saturday in Wallace and Wallace Funeral Home, Arbovale with the Rev. Donnie Curry officiating. Burial was in Curry Cemetery, Back Mountain Durbin

Nancy Jane Curry Pocahontas Co.

Born August 2, 1847

Died October 30, 1900 at Gillespie W. Va

Burial

age 53 y 2 M 28 D

She 22
He 26

May 11, 1871 Pocahontas Co

Married Samuel A Hevener

solemnized by J. E. Moore

Born September 8, 1843 Rockingham Co Va

Died

Burial

at age 18

He served 2 years in 18th VA Cavalry Co M under General Stonewall Jackson lived on Back alleghany Mountain

Her Parents

Robert Curry

Elizabeth H Swink Curry

His Parents

Married at Broadway, Va. Rockingham Co. Va

Adam Hevener born 1815 Pendleton County

Rebecca Riley Hevener born 1819

He a blacksmith

(over)

1. Charles A. Hevener Back alleghany

Born

Died October 8, 1894 Pocahontas Co

Diptheria

21 years 11 months

reported by Dr. Settle

2. John Hevener ~~Curry~~

Born February 10, 1875

Died 1963

daughter of John Cassell

Burial

Married 1. Minnie Ellen Cassell

2. Elva May Calhoun

3. Lucy A. Hevener

Born June 10, 1878 Back alleghany

Died

Burial

Married

4. Elizabeth Hevener

Born

Died

Burial

Married

5. James Robert Hevener

Born May 3, 1882 Back alleghany

Died

Burial

Married

Name of this
Mattie V

6. Martha Hevener
Born Nov 8, 1885 Green Bank
Died
Burial
Married

7. Mary Susan Hevener
Born
Died
Burial
Married

——— Hevener
11/21/1889 DB
Samuel + Nancy J Hevener

2. J Zechariah

Charles R. J. Curry
b Sept 17, 1860 Clover Creek, Va
died April 18, 1916
age 55 yrs 7 m 1 day
Burial

Married June 5, 1883
Solemnized by Lafayette Fox
Pocahontas Co

Ida Crawford Burner
b 1868
d 1942
Burial

Resided: on Curry Family Farm for awhile then moved to a location near the present (1981) Company Store at Cass around 1898 they moved to narrow valley on Stony Bottom south of Cass near Beaver's Hachin

His Parents
Robert Curry
Elizabeth H. Swink Curry

Her Parents
Lafayette Burner
Caroline Burn Burner

1. Edgar D. Curry
b June 16, 1888 Green Bank
d
Burial

Married

2. Parker L. Curry
b Dec 14, 1894 Greenbrier R. delivered by D Austin
d
Burial

Married

3. Harry Bernard Curry
b d May 27, 1971 Cass General Hospital
Burial Montgomery Memorial Park
London, W. Va
Married Louise Burr Cassell January 3, 1917
at Cass, W. Va

4. Owens B. Curry
b December 9, 1890 Baltimore P. C. Record
d January 9, 1891 Cass, W. Va
January 24, 1971 at home in
Marlinton, W Va
Burial Mountain View Cemetery
Marlinton, W Va

Married Mary May Geiger

5. Mertie Viola Curry
b January 22
d
Burial

born Married 9, 1884 Bath Co Va ←
Married
Walter George Clarkson July 3 1906
Son of Sarah Jane Clarkson of Bath Co Va &
Grandson of John R. and Juliet Ann McCord Clarkson of Bath Co, Va.

Clarkson

Myrtle Mertie V. Curry
b January 22, 1885
d February 12, 1975
Burial Arbovale Cemetery

Married June 3, 1906 residence of Bride's Parents solemnized by Rev. H. L. Burr
Walter George Clarkson
b March 9, 1884 Bath Co. Va
died August 23, 1959 Pocahontas Memorial Hosp
Burial Arbovale Cemetery

1. Kyle Clarkson
b d September
Burial Arbovale Cemetery

2. Ivan Clarkson
b January 7, 1909
d
Burial
Married Ernestine Hamrick

3. Russell Clarkson
b January 14, 1922
d
Burial
Married Lucy Pearl Reprode
dau of Media alice Sponaugle + Arlie Cecil Reprode

4. Roy B Clarkson
b October 25, 1926
d
Burial
Married June Hardwick

5. Vallie Clarkson
b July 7, 1907 Cass
d December 19, 1980 Sherman Hospital Elgin, Illinois
Burial Arbovale Cemetery
Married Lloyd Wilks

6. Lola Mae Clarkson
b December 22, 1911 Cass
d February 20, 1985 at home Cass
Burial Arbovale Cemetery

Married Ben Jackson
8/11/33

7. Glenna Bliss Clarkson
b
d
Burial
married Richard L. Raimondo

8. Odie Clarkson
b
d
Burial

married

9. Female Clarkson
b 1911
d February 1911
Burial

age 5 weeks when she died

Mrs. Mertie Clarkson

Mrs. Mertie Curry Clarkson, 90, of Cass, died Wednesday, February 12, 1975, after a short illness.

Born January 22, 1885, she was the last of the Charles and Ida Curry family.

She was a member of the Cass United Methodist Church and was a lifelong resident of Cass.

Her husband, Walter Clarkson, and five children preceded her in death.

Survivors include three sons, Ivan Clarkson, of Cass, Russell Clarkson, of Arbovale, and Roy Clarkson, of Morgantown; three daughters, Mrs. Vallie Wilkes, of Elgin, Illinois, Mrs. Lola Jackson, of Cass, and Mrs. Glenna Raimondo, of San Antonio, Texas; twelve grandchildren, and eight great-grandchildren.

Services were held Friday afternoon in the Wallace and Wallace Chapel at Arbovale by the Rev. Kenneth Montgomery, with burial in the Arbovale Cemetery.

The Pocahontas Times

In 1886 when Rumbarger's mill started operations at Davis, Tucker County, another community was destined to become a large lumber town. This was Cass, Pocahontas county. It consisted of three log houses, one owned by Robert Curry (the author's grandfather) was located near where the present Company Store stands; another, owned by Allan Burner was east of the Greenbrier River and the third, owned by Allan Halford, was located near the mouth of Cold Run. Each of these houses had a nearby spring for drinking water.

Robert Curry owned almost all of the land where the town of Cass and the mill now stand. This land was traded to Newton Gum who owned it at the beginning of the twentieth century when Sam E Slaymaker began lumbering operations here

P 86 - Tulmult on the Mountains

He was born October 5, 1926

Lumbering in West Va - 1770-1920 by Roy B. Clarkson McClain Printing Company, Parsons, WVa 1964

His Mother - Mertie Viola Curry Clarkson

Father - Walter George Clarkson had 11 Children. Roy B. Clarkson is the youngest

His wife June Hardwick of Morgantown

3 children - George Roy, Karen Sue & Kimberly Ann

Irvin O. Clarkson (Roy's brother) same book

p 357

bull pen - part of a sawmill just past the cut-off saws. Here lumber is graded and tallied, then sorted onto trucks for transportation to the proper dock or dry kiln for stacking p 359 cut-off - Saw or set of saws in a mill especially designed for trimming the ends of boards at certain standard lengths.

p 361 dry kiln - a building so constructed as to permit drying of lumber by steam or hot air.

p 368

pigs-ear - Saloon, especially one where "home brew" was sold

Clarkson, Walter George
b March 9, 1884 Bath Co Va
d august 23, 1959 Marlinton
75 years Broncho-Pneumonia

His mother Sarah J. Clarkson

Paula Clarkson

Paula Clarkson, of Johnson City, Tennessee, formerly of Cass, was killed in an automobile accident in Johnson City, March 7, 1984. Miss Clarkson was born June 18, 1948, at Marlinton, the only child of Ernestine and Ivan Clarkson, of Cass.

She graduated from Green Bank High School in 1966, and from West Virginia University, with a BS degree in medical technology in 1970. She worked as a medical technologist at the university hospital in Morgantown from 1970 to 1978.

Paula entered the VA system in 1978 and began working as a medical technologist in Danville, Illinois. She transferred from Illinois to the VAMC Mountain Home in Johnson City in August 1980, where she was appointed the position of Supervisory Medical Technologist in the chemistry/urinalysis section of the laboratory service. In 1983 she was awarded the Superior Performance Award.

She was a member of the Cass Presbyterian Church.

Miss Clarkson is survived by her parents and a host of relatives and friends.

Funeral services were held on Saturday, March 10, at the Wallace and Wallace Funeral Home at Arbovale with the Rev. David Rittenhouse and the Rev. Edwin Tetwiller officiating. Burial was in the Arbovale Cemetery.

The Pocahontas Times

In Loving Memory of our Daughter
Paula M. Clarkson

Paula Mae Clarkson

Paula Mae Clarkson, 35, was killed in a car Wreck in Johnson City, Tennessee, about midnight Tuesday, March 6, 1984, when she was hit by a car with a drunken driver.

Miss Clarkson, the only daughter of Ivan and Ernestine Clarkson, of Cass, was medical technology supervisor at the Veterans Hospital in Johnson City.

She was born June 18, 1948, in Marlinton.

Funeral arrangements are incomplete but services will be at Arbovale with Wallace and Wallace Funeral Home in charge.

The Pocahontas Times

In Loving memory of our Daughter
Paula M. Clarkson
June 18, 1948 March 7, 1984
Please stop the senseless killing that caused her death.
Don't drive while drinking

Ernestine and Ivan

Pocahontas Times

Dinner Guests

Visitors and dinner guests of Mr. and Mrs. Russell Clarkson on May 28, were Mrs W. Jean Raupach, Alexandria, Va., Mr and Mrs. George Reprode, Glen Burn MD, Guy Reprode, Baltimore, MD, Mr and Mrs. Hubert Reprode, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Brubaker, Mrs. Dice Murphy Lewis Taylor, Arbovale, and Mr. and Mrs. Albert Grow Jr., Mr and Mrs. Gregory Miller, Grafton, OH. Recording and home movies were taken by Clarence and Louis Lockridge of Grafton, Oh.

The Pocahontas Times
6/8/89

Kyle Clarkson Date _____

One of the saddest funerals conducted in this community for some time was that of Kyle Clarkson, son of Mr and Mrs Walter Clarkson. He was 17 years of age and a young man who had endeared himself to all who knew him, and the great number of friends who called at the home to extend to the bereaved family their expressions of sympathy was evidence of the fact. He would have been in his third year of high school and the faculty and students of the Greenbank High school will miss him. Had he lived he would no doubt have done great credit to the school. He was a regular attendant at Church and Sunday School. He leaves to mourn his loss, his parents, three sisters and four brothers.

His funeral was conducted on Wednesday afternoon, September 6th at 2 P. M. in the presence of a large congregation by Rev. H. Blackhurst assisted by Revs. Barkers and Marshall after which he was laid to rest in the beautiful cemetery at Arbovale to await the Resurrection.

May the God of all Grace comfort and sustain the bereaved family who dearly loved him

H. B.

The Pocahontas Times

CURRY - SWINK

Walter George Clarkson

Walter George Clarkson, aged 75, of Cass, departed this life Sunday, August 23, 1959, in the Pocahontas Memorial Hospital after a long illness.

Mr. Clarkson was born in Bath County, Virginia, March 9, 1884. He was a member of the Cass Methodist Church.

Surviving are his wife, Mrs. Mertie Curry Clarkson; four sons, Odie Clarkson, of Marlinton, Roy Clarkson, of Morgantown, and Ivan and Russell of Cass; three daughters, Mrs. Lola Jackson, of Cass, Mrs. Glenna Raimondo of San Antonio, Texas, and Mrs. Vallie Gustafson of Batavia, Illinois; ten grandchildren, and nine great grandchildren.

Funeral services were held Tuesday afternoon at the home by the Rev. C. E. Potts, with burial in the Arbovale cemetery.

The Pocahontas Times

1973

Mrs Mertie Clarkson of Cass has left to spend the remainder of the winter with her Son, Professor Roy B. Clarkson, 142 Jackson Street (WC) Morgantown. Before leaving she had a dinner with daughter, Mrs Ben Jackson to celebrate her coming birthday, January 22; She will be 88 years old. Others of the family, also celebrating their birthdays were Ivan, January 7, 64 year old and Russell, January 14, 51 years old. Others attending were Mrs Pearl Clarkson, Professor Roy Clarkson and Ben Jackson.

The Pocahontas Times

Mrs. Vallie Clarkson Wilks

Elgin, Ill - Mrs Vallie Clarkson Wilks 73 of Elgin, Ill, formerly of Cass, W Va died Friday December 19, 1980 in an Elgin Hospital.

Surviving: Husband, Lloyd of Elgin, Ill
Daughters: Mrs Thelma Kautz of DeCatur, Ill
Mrs Ramona Schell of California
Son, Kenneth Smith of Elburn, Ill
Sisters Mrs Glenna Rawonds of San Antonio, Texas
Mrs Lola Jackson of Cass, W Va
Brothers: Ivan Clarkson of Cass, W Va
Russell Clarkson of Arbovale, W Va
Roy Clarkson of Morgantown, W Va

Services will be 2 p.m. Tuesday in Wallace & Wallace Funeral Home, Arbovale. Burial will be in Arbovale Cemetery. Friends may call from 6 to 9 p.m. Monday at the funeral home

Father Karl Friedrich Engelke

Mrs. Vallie Wilks

Mrs. Vallie Clarkson Wilks, 73, of Elgin, Illinois, died December 19, 1980 in Sherman Hospital in Elgin.

She was born on July 4, 1907 in Cass, the daughter of the late Walter and Nettie Curry Clarkson.

Surviving are her husband, Lloyd, of Elgin; 2 daughters, Mrs. Thelma Kautz, of Decatur, Illinois, and Mrs. Ramona Schell, of Whittier, California; one son, Kenneth Smith, of Elburn, Illinois; two sisters, Mrs. Lola Jackson, of Cass, and Mrs Glenna Raimonda, of San Antonio, Texas; three brothers, Ivan and Russell, both of Cass, and Roy, of Morgantown; ten grandchildren and 18 great-grandchildren.

She was preceded in death by one daughter and two brothers.

Services were held in Elgin and on December 23 at the Wallace & Wallace Funeral Home in Arbovale. Burial was in Arbovale Cemetery.

Pocahontas Times

Picture

Golden anniversary

Open House was observed at the Ben Jackson residence in Cass in honor of the 50th wedding anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. Ben Jackson, on Sunday, August 7. The Jacksons were married on August 11, 1933. They have one daughter, Helen Houck, who lives in Houston, Texas, and four grandchildren. Mrs. Jackson is the former Lola Clarkson, daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Walter Clarkson, of Cass.

The table was beautifully decorated with a three-tier wedding cake, pink candles and heart shaped crystal and silver bowl.

The cake was served to sixty guests by Mrs. Pearl Clarkson, of Arbovale. The punch was served by Mrs. Ernestine Clarkson, of Cass, and the guests were registered in the guest book by Mrs. June Clarkson, of Morgantown. Mrs. Berdeen O'Brien, of Cass, assisted.

The guest list included: Jeanne and Ken Raysack, Alexandria, Va.; Karen and Scott McElroy and Ray and June Clarkson, Westover; Mrs. Bessie Morris, Cass; Mrs. Pearl and Russell Clarkson, Arbovale; Ida and William Decker, Beverly; Harry Wallace, Cass; Carl and Edythe Davis, Cass; Euna Barkley and Faye Burner, Frank; Wilma Buckman, Buckeye, Anna Grace Ware, Glen Moore, Glen Bank; Nadia Leprode and Lee Murphy, Arbovale; Stella Miller, Everette and Betty Arbogast, George Elliott, Cass; Ruby Salyers, Marlwood Park, Green Bank; Mrs Nola Palmer, Cass; George and Jeanita Gilnita, Augusta, Ga.; Martha and Doug Livesay Stewton, White Va.; Beaulah and Sam Moore, Marlinton, Jim [illegible], Cass; Mina Brooks and Opal Arbogast, Dunmore; Odessa Kane, Cass; Becky O'Brien, Oswego, N.Y.; Beatie and Jamie Sheets, Green Bank; Cathy and Burke Fauley, Rockville, Md.; May and Bernard Freeland, Bellaire, Texas; Stella and Homer Blackhurst, Boyan, Texas; Mildred King, Mr and Mrs. W. K. Blackhurst, Charleston; Dan Taylor, Green Bank; Hurold and Hilda Blackhurst, Williston, S.C.; Richard and Verna Dale, Ernestine and Ivan Clarkson, Cass.

The Pocahontas Times
1983

Mrs. Lola Mae Jackson

Lola Mae Jackson, of Cass, died at home on Wednesday, February 20, 1985, after a long illness with cancer.

She was a lifelong resident of Cass, born December 22, 191[illegible], the daughter of the late Mertie Curry and Walter Clarkson.

Mrs. Jackson was a member of the Cass United Methodist Church.

She is survived by her husband, Ben Jackson; one daughter, Helen Houck, of Houston, Texas; one sister, Glenna Raimondo, of San Antonio, Texas; three brothers, Ivan Clarkson, of Cass, Roy Clarkson, of Morgantown, Russell Clarkson, of Arbovale; and four grandchildren.

She was preceded in death by her parents, two brothers, Kyle and Odie, and one sister, Vallie Wilson.

Funeral services were held at the Wallace and Wallace Funeral Home in Arbovale at 2 p.m. Saturday by the Rev. Edward Tutwiler, with burial in the Arbovale Cemetery.

The Pocahontas Times

Kenneth Raupach

Kenneth M. Raupach, 62, of Alexandria, Virginia, died of cancer on Monday, August 25, 1986 in Alexandria Hospital.

He was a retired supervisory special agent for the Federal Bureau of Investigation and also a founder and member of the board of directors of Ramparts Restaurant in Alexandria.

Mr. Raupach headed a major aspect of the investigation of the assassination of President John F. Kennedy and worked closely with the Warren Commission, testifying before several congressional committees.

In 1979 he retired from the FBI after 25 years service.

He was born in Cleveland, Ohio, and graduated from the University of California at Santa Barbara.

He was an avid ham radio operator and served in World War II as a bomber pilot.

He is survived by his wife, Jeanne Clarkson Raupach, formerly of Cass (she is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Russell Clarkson, now of Arbovale); a son, Kenneth F. Raupach, of Plano, Texas; two daughters, Pamela R. Pelnick, of Media, Pennsylvania, and Jan R. Augsburger, of La Grange, Illinois; a sister, Carita Ruth Spillar, of Cleveland; and six grandchildren.

Funeral services were held August 28 at 10 a.m. at the Everly-Whitley Funeral Home in Alexandria.

The Pocahontas Times

Mr. and Mrs. Russell Clarkson, of Arbovale, and Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Jackson, of Cass, attended the wedding of Karen Sue Clarkson and Gregory Scott McElroy, on Friday, June 17, 1983, in Morgantown.

The wedding ceremony was performed in the Spruce Street Methodist Church and was followed by the reception and dinner at the Ramada Inn.

Karen Sue is the daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Roy B. Clarkson and the niece of Russell Clarkson and Mrs. Ben Jackson.

The Pocahontas Times 6/23/83

6/23/1983 The Pocahontas Times

Mr and Mrs. Russell Clarkson, of Arbovale, and Mr and Mrs. Benjamen Jackson, of Cass, attended the wedding of Karen Sue Clarkson and Gregory Scott McElroy, on Friday, June 17, 1983 in Morgantown.

The wedding ceremony was performed in the Spruce Street Methodist Church and was followed by the reception and dinner at the Ramada Inn.

Karen Sue is the daughter of Dr. and Mrs Roy B. Clarkson and the niece of Russell Clarkson and Mrs. Ben Jackson.

Raimondo – Clarkson

Lieutenant Glenna Bliss Clarkson, of the Army Nurses corps, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Walter George Clarkson, of Cass, became the bride of Richard L. Raimondo, son of Mr. and Mrs. R. L. Raimondo of San Antonio, Texas in a ceremony performed Sunday, November 16, 1947, at 7:30 P.M., in Chapel No. 1, at Fort Sam Houston, Texas, with Father J. S. Kelley, Colonel, USA Chaplain's Corps, officiating at the double ring ceremony.

The bride given in marriage by Major James R. Harrison, of the Medical Corps, Memphis, Tennessee, wore a gown of pink pearl satin, fashioned with a tightly fitted bodice fastened with self-covered buttons all the way down the front, a high collar and floating peplum accented with Reposese lace. The limitless width of skirt flowed into a chapel length train. Her pink illusion finger-tip veil fell from a Queen anne headpiece of pink pearl satin, and her cascade bouquet was of orchids and pink carnation petals.

Lieutenant Mazelle Jernigan, of Little Rock, Arkansas, was attired in a rosemist moire faille, fashioned with a tightly fitted bodice featuring a deep V neckline and tiny short sleeves. A wide self belt emphasized the full flair of the skirt. She wore a half hat of the same rosemist shade of moline trimmed with the moire and she carried a Colonial bouquet.

Mrs. Raimonds, Mother of the groom wore a gray silk afternoon dress, a gray felt hat with matching plumage and black accessories.

George R. Flemery, of San Antonio, was best man.

There is more to this but it was cut off

Pocahontas Times

Mrs. Roy Clarkson

Mrs. June Hardwick Clarkson, 56, of Westover, died Tuesday, July 23, 1985, in West Virginia University Hospital.

She was born April 14, 1929, in Morgantown, a daughter of the late George and Ida Phillips Hardwick.

She was a graduate of West Virginia University, where she obtained her bachelor's and master's degrees. She was a member of Alpha Epsilon Delta pre-med honorary, Kappa Phi, Methodist Girls Club, the Wesleyan Foundation, and Spruce Street United Methodist church, where she had served as pianist and Sunday School teacher. She was a teacher at Westover Junior High at the time of her death.

Surviving her are her husband, Roy B. Clarkson; one son, George Roy Clarkson, of Houston; two daughters, Mrs. Karen McElroy, of Westover, and Kimeran Ann, at home.

Services were held at 11 a.m. Friday at the Williams Home for Funerals in Westover by the Rev. William Turley and Dr. Stacy L. Groscup, with burial in Beverly Hills Memorial Gardens.

The Pocahontas Times

Clarkson - Curry

On June 3 (1906) at 9: a.m at the residence of the bride's parents near Cass, Mr. Walter D. Clarkson and Miss Myrtle V. Curry were united in Marriage, Rev. H. L. Burr, the bride's pastor officiating. The Groom is a native of Bath Co, Va, but has for several years been a resident of this county. The bride is well known, having numerous friends in upper Pocahontas. Immediately after the ceremony the happy couple left for Cass, where they boarded a train for Durbin and Bartow where they will visit friends and relatives of the bride for a few days.

Pocahontas Times
July 12, 1906

2/16/1911 Pocahontas Times
Dunmore - Walter Clarkson's little girl, aged 5 weeks died Monday near Cass

Roy B. Clarkson, a native of W. Va, was born Oct 25, 1926 in Cass, Pocahontas County, one of the most important lumber towns in the State. He was the youngest of eleven children of Walter George and Mertie Viola Clarkson. He grew up with the sound of whining saws, the whistle of Shay engines + the smell of newly sawn spruce or hardwood lumber as constant companions. He attended the local school, walked the board walks of the little town, whacked sticks against the white picket fences, and stared with awe at the swift log carriage as it swept back and forth in the sawmill.

He attended Green Bank High School and while a senior, at the age of 17, he started working Saturdays on the Mower Lumber Co. mill. Full time work at the mill was initiated the day after graduation from High School.

At 18 years he entered the U.S. army + served 2 yrs in the Philippine Islands and in Korea.

Upon returning from the army he again worked on the lumber mill until he entered Davis + Elkins College. A Bachelor of Science degree was earned there in 1951 with a major in Mathematics and minors in Biology & Chemistry.

After graduation from college he taught school one year at Green Bank High School. In 1952 he married June Harlwood of Morgantown and moved to that city. They now have 3 children, George Roy, Karen Sue, and Kimeran Ann. He taught in Suncrest Junior High School until 1956 when he was appointed to the faculty of W Va University. He received a Master of Arts Degree at W. Va University in 1958 and a Doctor of Philosophy degree in Botany in 1960. He is now Assistant Professor of Biology. He is Treasurer of the Appalachian Botanical Club, a member of the Botanical Society of America, the Society of Sigma Xi, and other professional organizations.

His research interests are primarily in fields of Plant Taxonomy & Plant Geography. He published several papers in professional j in these fields. In addition, papers on th history of lumbering have been published.

His doctoral dissertation, "The Vascular of the Monongahela National Forest, W. Va." p valuable background for writing a book of nature. His early experience with the lu industry stimulated an interest in the ind that has culminated in the present book

Mrs. Roy Clarkson

Mrs. June Hardwick Clarkson, 56, of Westover, died Tuesday, July 23, 1985, in West Virginia University Hospitals.

She was born April 14, 1929, in Morgantown, a daughter of the late George and Ida Phillips Hardw

She was a graduate of West Virginia University, Whe she obtained her bachelors and Masters degrees. She was a member of Alpha Epsilon Delta pre-med honora Kappa Phi, Methodist Girls Club, the Wesleyan Foundati and Spruce Street Methodist Church, where she had serv as pianist and Sunday School teacher. She was a teach at Westover Junior High at the time of her death.

Surviving her are her husband, Roy B. Clarkson one son, George Roy Clarkson, of Houston; two daughte Mrs. Karen McElroy of Westover, and Kinneran Ann, at home.

Services were held at 11 a.m. Friday at the Willia Home for Funerals in Westover by the Rev. William Turley and Dr. Stacy L. Groscup, with burial in Beverly Hills Memorial Gardens.

Pocahontas Times

Mrs. Lola Mae Jackson

Lola Mae Jackson, of Cass, died at home on Wednesday, February 20, 1985, after a long illness with cancer.

She was a lifelong resident of Cass, born December 22, 1911, the daughter of the late Mertie Curry and Walter Clarkson.

Mrs. Jackson was a member of the Cass United Methodist Church.

She is survived by her husband, Ben Jackson; one daughter, Helen Houck, of Houston, Texas; one sister, Glenna Raimonde, of San Antonio, Texas; three brothers, Ivan Clarkson, of Cass, Roy Clarkson, of Morgantown, Russell Clarkson, of Arbovale; and four grandchildren.

She was preceded in death by her parents, two brothers, Kyle and Odie, and one sister, Nellie Wilds.

Funeral services were held at the Wallace & Wallace Funeral Home in Arbovale at 2 p.m., Saturday by the Rev. Edward Tetmiller, with burial in the Arbovale cemetery.

Pocahontas Times

Retired

The Rev. John Quinn Geiger, Jr., of Wellsburg, recently announced his retirement from active ministry in the West Virginia Conference of the United Methodist Church after having served 40 years as a pastor.

He began his ministry in 1940 while living in Beckley, and served nine pastoral charges which were: Nuttallburg, Green Sulphur Springs, Williamsburg, Huntsville, Kenova, Athens, Warwood, Wheeling, Wellsburg, and Kadesh Chapel. To mark this achievement, his wife and children gave recognition to him on Sunday, June 15, 1980, by presenting an engraved brass set of candlesticks to the Kadesh Chapel United Methodist Church in his honor and by offering a program of music to the congregation. Rev. and Mrs Geiger are the parents of ~~six~~ children: Rev. J. Q. Geiger, Jr., (Jack); Good Hope; Mrs Mike (Ellen) Dickerson, Painesville, Ohio; Rev. Joseph Geiger, Glen Dale; Mrs. Edward Marks (Irene), Wellsburg; Mrs George (Barbara) Johnson, Grand Rapids Michigan; and Roger, a student at West Virginia University but living at home.

The congregation, with Mr. and Mrs. John McCord as chairpersons, hosted a luncheon following the services and presented to Rev. Geiger a Gift in recognition of his ministry and retirement.

Rev. Geiger attended school in Pocahontas County, graduated cum laude from Glenville State College, and received theological training at Westminster School of Theology and Drew Theological School. He is the author of the book: Man from Michael's Mountain, which characterizes the life and times of an itinerant pastor in Appalachia. He and his wife, the former Velma Mae Huffman, plan to make their home in Wellsburg.

Mr. Geiger, the son of the late John Michael Geiger and Anna Jerdina Steele Geiger, was born and spent his early years at Stony Bottom. His sisters living in Pocahontas County are; Mrs. O.B. (May) Curry, of Marlinton, and Mrs. Carl (Grace) Galford, living at Cass.

Pocahontas Times

Rev. John Quinn Geiger

John Quinn Geiger, of Wellsburg, passed away at the home of his daughter in Grandville, Michigan, on July 17, 1984.

As a member of the West Virginia Methodist Conference, Rev. Geiger's ministry spanned a period of more than forty years, serving Nettelburg, Green Sulphur Springs, Williamsburg, Grantville, Kenova, Athens, Warwood (Wheeling), Wellsburg, and Kadesh Chapel.

Funeral services were conducted at the United Methodist Church of Wellsburg, where he had been pastor for six years. Burial was in the Memorial Gardens of Kadesh Chapel by the side of his wife of nearly fifty years, who had preceded him in death eighteen months before.

Surviving are three sons: John Quinn, Jr., of Grantsville, Joseph N., of Huntington, and Roger, of Harpers Ferry; three daughters, Ellen Gilkerson, Kinesville, Ohio, Irene Marks, of Wellsburg, and Barbara Johnson, of Grandville, Michigan; two sisters, May Curry, of Marlinton, and Grace Galford, of Cass; one brother, Layke Geiger, of Durham, North Carolina; sixteen grandchildren also survive.

The Pocahontas Times

V. W. Geiger

Vaughn William Geiger, age 65, died Thursday, April 9, 1959, at his home at Cass after a long illness.

Survivors include his wife, Mrs. Gladys Geiger; four daughters, Mrs. Gladys Gilbert of Elton, Maryland, Mrs. Ann Stacy of France, Miss Mary Geiger of Chicago, Illinois, and Miss Margaret Geiger, at home; four sons, Raymond Geiger of Florida, Ralph Geiger of Painesville, Ohio, James Geiger and Andy Geiger, both at home; five sisters, Mrs. O. B. Curry of Marlinton, Mrs. D. M. Weiford of Roanoke, Virginia, Mrs. Emory Withrow and Mrs. W. W. Burner of Piedmont, and [illegible]ora.) Carl Dalford of Cass; four brothers, the Rev. J. L. Geiger of Kenova, L. S. Geiger of Alderson, L. G. Geiger of Stony Bottom, and D. B. Geiger of Cass; and eleven grandchildren.

Funeral services were held Sunday in the Alexander Memorial Church at Stony Bottom by the Rev. Philip Newell and the Rev. C. E. Potts, with burial in the family cemetery.

The Pocahontas Times

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE NORTHERN DISTRICT OF WEST VIRGINIA

JUDY CURRY,

Plaintiff,

v. CIVIL ACTION NO. 2:03CV115
(Judge Maxwell)

WALTER W. WEIFORD, personally and in his official capacity as Prosecuting Attorney of Pocahontas County, West Virginia; ROBERT A. ALKIRE, personally and in his official capacity as Sheriff of Pocahontas County, West Virginia; DAVID A. WALTON, personally and in his official capacity as Deputy Sheriff of Pocahontas County, West Virginia; and COUNTY COMMISSION OF POCAHONTAS COUNTY, WEST VIRGINIA, Defendants.

ORDER

I. Introduction

On December 22, 2003, the plaintiff filed a pro se civil action against the above- named defendants pursuant to 42 U.S.C. §1983, 42 U.S.C. § 1985, 18 U.S.C. §241, and W.Va. Code §§61-2-9, 61-5-27, and 61-5-28 seeking monetary damages and a permanent injunction enjoining the defendants from continuing to violate her civil and constitutional rights.

On June 13, 2005, the defendants filed a Motion for Summary Judgment pursuant to Rule 56 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. Because the plaintiff is proceeding pro se, the Court issued a notice pursuant to Roseboro v. Garrison, 528 F.2d 309, 310 (4th Cir. 1975) advising the plaintiff of her right to respond to the defendants' motion for summary judgment. On July 18, 2005, the plaintiff filed a response. On July 26, 2005, the defendants filed a reply. On August 4, 2005, the plaintiff filed a Reply to Defendants' Reply to Plaintiff's Reply to Defendants' Motion for Summary Judgment. This matter has been fully brief and is now ripe for judicial review.

II. Plaintiff's Contentions

The plaintiff asserts that on December 20, 2001, she went to the office of Defendant Weiford, the Pocahontas County Prosecutor, to complain that the Pocahontas County Sheriff's Department had failed to investigate the alleged theft of her beagle by Larken Dean, a cousin of Defendant Walton. The plaintiff alleges that Defendant Weiford told her he "'had no control' of the actions of the deputy, Brad Totten, whereby stating there was nothing he could do for the plaintiff relevant to the failure to act upon her civil complaint." (Complaint ¶10). The plaintiff further asserts that Defendant Weiford ordered her out of his office and shoved her "in the back repeatedly." (Complaint ¶12). According to the plaintiff, as a result of the alleged assault and battery committed by Defendant Weiford, she suffers from head, neck, and shoulder pain consistent with whiplash. (Id. at 13).

The plaintiff raises six counts in her complaint. Counts I, II, and III address alleged violations of state law for assault and battery; witness intimidation; and failure to perform the duties of prosecuting attorney.

In Count IV, the plaintiff alleges that she is bringing a claim pursuant to 42 U.S.C. §§1983, 1985 and 18 U.S.C. §241, because Defendants Weiford, Walton and Alkire "conspired to injure, oppress, threaten, intimidate, and interfere with the Plaintiff's free exercise and enjoyment of her rights and privileges under the Fourth, Fifth, and Fourteenth Amendments of the Constitution of the United States. Plaintiff alleges that the Defendants, as a matter of policy and practice and under color of law, repeatedly denied the Plaintiff equal protection and due process of law, whereby holding the relatives of Defendant Deputy Sheriff David A. Walton as 'above the law.'" (Id. at ¶22).

In Count V, the plaintiff raises a claim of intentional infliction of emotional distress. In Count VI, the plaintiff asserts that the County Commission engaged in "gross negligent supervision" and ignored the pattern and practice of selective prosecution.

III. Discovery

Pursuant to the Court's August 5, 2004 Scheduling Order, the parties had until May 27, 2005, to complete discovery. The Court notes that very limited discovery has occurred in this case. The plaintiff responded to the Defendants' First Set of Interrogatories and Request for Production of Documents. However, the plaintiff has not been deposed. Based on the information before the Court, it appears the following has occurred regarding the defendants attempts to schedule the plaintiff's deposition. By letter dated September 21, 2004, the defendants requested that the plaintiff provide them with dates she was available for deposition, and advised the plaintiff that her deposition would occur at the Pocahontas County Courthouse. No response was received. By another letter dated September 21, 2004, defense counsel made a second request for available dates to take the plaintiff's deposition, and advised her that her deposition would be held at the Pocahontas County Courthouse.[1]

On October 8, 2004, the plaintiff spoke with defense counsel, Drew S. Woods, regarding the location of her deposition. The plaintiff advised Mr. Woods that she did not want to have her deposition taken at the Pocahontas County Courthouse because such was the site of the incidents alleged in her complaint. Thus, defense counsel offered to conduct the deposition at either their offices in Beckley or Charleston, West Virginia. However, the plaintiff requested that her deposition be conducted in a "motel room so that she could either lie-down or relax during the proceeding." The plaintiff was advised that she would be contacted at a later date.

[1]Defense counsel stated that the second request was erroneously dated September 21, 2004, as the letter was mailed on September 29, 2004.

The plaintiff sent defense counsel a letter dated October 7, 2004, in which she made numerous allegations against various individuals including "a federal judge."[2] Along with her October 7, 2004 letter, the plaintiff sent defense counsel a letter dated May 17, 2004 which she received from Dr. Debra C. Sams, D.O. Dr. Sams stated that the plaintiff had been her patient for over five years, and suffers from "recurrent severe depression" and "recurrent severe low back problems." Dr. Sams further stated "[d]ue to the severity of her depression and back problems, the simplest work tasks take a longer period of time. As a result of this, I feel Mrs. Curry to be totally disabled." The plaintiff also sent defense counsel a copy of a letter dated May 27, 2004 which she wrote to Dr. Sams. In her letter, the plaintiff described her various symptoms.[3]

Subsequently, by letter dated October 13, 2004, defense counsel advised the plaintiff that her deposition would be conducted either at the Pocahontas County Courthouse, or their offices in Beckley or Charleston, West Virginia. Defense counsel further advised the plaintiff that her failure to provide deposition dates within 7 days of the date of the correspondence would result in their

---

[2]For example, the plaintiff calls the defendants "criminals" and states that there is "a federal judge who tampers with [her] cases in favor of political and personal friends."

[3]The plaintiff indicated that she has "extremely excessive pain, alternating from down both legs to severe pain of the sciatic nerve with total involvement of the right leg (which can bear no pressure), the hydrocodone (Lorcet 10/650 tabs) is no longer effective in controlling pain. It is still effective however, on the pain which radiates down the right arm from the cervicals." The plaintiff requested that she be given oxycodone for the pain.

filing a motion to dismiss.[4] The defendants eventually requested the Court order the plaintiff to subject to the taking of her deposition at either the Pocahontas County Courthouse or the law office of Pullin, Fowler, & Flanagan, PLLC, in Beckley, West Virginia. By order entered on November 17, 2004, the Court ordered the plaintiff to attend her deposition at the Beckley Office of Pullin, Fowler, & Flanagan, PLLC and within 7 days of the entry of the Order provide defense counsel with dates of her availability for her deposition.

On December 2, 2004, the defendants filed a Motion for Default Judgment pursuant to Rule 37 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure as a result of the plaintiff's "callous disregard to participate in discovery and obey an Order of this Court." (Doc. # 27 at 1).

By Order entered on April 1, 2005, the Court denied the defendants' motion for default judgment and ordered the plaintiff to show cause within 15 days of entry of the order why she failed to comply with the Court's November 17, 2004 Order and to provide medical evidence which documented her inability to attend her deposition at the office of defense counsel in Beckley, West Virginia.[5]

On April 14, 2005, the plaintiff filed a Motion for Extension of Time to Respond to Order to Show Cause. In her motion, the plaintiff stated that she had to " wait until April 8, 2005, to get an appointment with her physician." She also asserted that Dr. Sams is "preparing documents which are to be typed by an 'outside' clerical service for the Plaintiff to present to the Court." The plaintiff stated that she would respond to the Court's Order to Show Cause on or before April 26,

[4]Defense counsel asserts that they decided not to take the plaintiff's deposition in a motel room because there is no medical evidence which reveals her deposition must be taken in a motel room and because of "the continuous threatening behavior displayed by the plaintiff."

[5]The Court also denied the plaintiff's motion for sanctions of unethical conduct.

2005.

On April 26, 2005, the plaintiff filed a document titled Plaintiff's Response to Court Order Entered April 20, 2005, in which she stated that Dr. Sams is working on documentation for the plaintiff to submit to the Court. The plaintiff also argued that the defendants have acted unethically by failing to request her medical records.

On April 28, 2005, the plaintiff filed a document titled Plaintiff's Response to Order to Show Cause in which, among other things, the plaintiff alleged that had the defendants requested her medical records, they would have received the "just cause" as to why she had not complied with the Order of the Court. The plaintiff also attached a copy of the April 25, 2005 report of Dr. Sams and requested that her deposition be conducted at a neutral location in Marlinton, West Virginia.

Prior to the plaintiff making her filings on April 26, 2005, and April 28, 2005, on March 17, 2005, the plaintiff filed a Motion to Extend Time to Amend Pleadings and on April 4, 2005, she filed a Motion to Amend Pleadings.

By Order entered on May 10, 2005, the Court Ordered the defendants to file a response, if any, to the plaintiff's Response to Court Order Entered April 20, 2005 and Response to Order to Show Cause and plaintiff's Motion Extend Time to Amend Pleadings and Motion to Amend Pleadings.

On May 24, 2005, the defendants filed a reply to Plaintiff's Response to Order to Show Cause in which they argued that the plaintiff has failed to show cause why the deposition cannot be conducted at counsel's office in Beckley, West Virginia or the Pocahontas County Courthouse. In support of their position, the defendants stated as follows: "Dr. Sams' correspondence simply provides that the Plaintiff may be uncomfortable if required to travel to Beckley, West Virginia and that it would be in her best interest to be deposed in Pocahontas County. Dr. Sams' correspondence makes no reference to any requirement that the Plaintiff can only be deposed lying down or in a 'geri-chair.'" (Doc. #45 at 2). The defendants also stated that the plaintiff's assertion that her physical disabilities prevent her from traveling to Beckley, West Virginia, for her deposition must be "seriously questioned as the Plaintiff appeared for the Rule 26(f) meeting at Defense counsel's office in Beckley, West Virginia on July 7, 2004." (Id. at 3). The defendants further argued that Dr. Sams "provides no evidence or explanation as to any medical or psychological condition that would prevent the Plaintiff from being deposed at the Pocahontas County Courthouse"; that the defendants would "incur unneeded costs in conducting her deposition at either a 'motel room' in Pocahontas County, West Virginia, or as Dr. Sams suggests in a conference room located in Pocahontas County Hospital"; and that "[i]t is simply not the Defendant's burden to incur further costs in acquiring Plaintiff's medical records to determine if the Plaintiff's refusal to be deposed in Beckley, West Virginia is legitimate, in particular, in light of the fact that Plaintiff previously appeared at the Beckley office for the Rule 26(f) meeting." (Id. at 4-5).

The defendants requested that the Court strike the plaintiff's pleadings and enter default judgment against the plaintiff. In the alternative, the defendants requested that the Court sanction the plaintiff and award the costs and fees associated with the taking of the plaintiff's deposition to the plaintiff.

IV. Analysis

A. Motion to Amend

On April 4, 2005, the plaintiff filed a Motion to Amend her complaint to add a claim under 18 U.S.C. §1961 for RICO violations against the current defendants and 8 potential defendants.

On May 25, 2005, the defendants filed a Response to Plaintiff's Motion to Amend Pleadings wherein the defendants asserted that the plaintiff attempts to use an alleged drug trafficking ring to raise a RICO cause of action against 8 individuals and that the plaintiff's new allegations of a RICO violation "could not possibly have resulted out of the same transaction, occurrence or series of transactions or occurrences resulting from the alleged incident on December 20, 2001." (Doc. #46 at 4). The defendants further asserted that "it is preposterous to believe that the eight (8) individuals are somehow conspiring against Plaintiff to benefit any interstate or foreign commerce as they have no common connection by law or fact" and that the plaintiff's allegation of an enterprise is based on acts of vandalism and stalking directed towards her. (Id. at 5). Thus, the defendants concluded it would be complete waste of judicial economy to allow the plaintiff to amend her complaint.

Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 15(a) provides that "a party may amend the party's pleading once as a matter of course at any time before a responsive pleading is served . . . Otherwise a party may amend the party's pleading only by leave of court or by written consent of the adverse party; and leave shall be freely given when justice so requires." "In the absence of any apparent or declared reason -- such as undue delay, bad faith or dilatory motive on the part of the movant, repeated failure to cure deficiencies by amendments previously allowed, undue prejudice to the opposing party by virtue of allowance to the amendment, futility of amendment, etc. -- the leave sought should, as the rule requires, be 'freely given.'" Foman v. Davis, 371 U.S. 178, 182 (1962). See also Sandcrest Outpatient Services, P.A. v. Cumberland County Hosp. System, Inc., 853 F.2d 1139, 1148 (4th Cir. 1988). However, the court has the discretion to either grant or deny the motion to amend. Foman, 371 U.S. at 182.

The defendants answered the complaint on April 13, 2004. The petitioner wants to add totally new claims against totally new defendants as well as the existing defendants. The RICO claims are unrelated to the allegations in the plaintiff's complaint. Thus, the plaintiff's motion to amend is DENIED.

B. Motion for Summary Judgment

On June 13, 2005, the defendants filed a Motion for Summary Judgment pursuant to Rule 56 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure in which they argued that the plaintiff has failed to provide any evidence prior to the close of discovery on May 27, 2005; that Defendants Weiford, Alkire and Walton have qualified immunity; and the Pocahontas County Commission cannot be liable on the basis of respondeat superior.

The plaintiff responded by stating that the defendants' interrogatories were "idiotic"; by making allegations against the Court and defense counsel; by blaming the lack of discovery on the Court's failure to "rule on the issues pertaining to said conditions of being deposed"; and argued that the defendants do not have qualified immunity. The plaintiff requests "an immediate arrangement to be deposed, under her Doctor's reasonable conditions, on neutral territory so Defendants may not fabricate false reports regarding the Plaintiff and have her wrongfully arrested and taken away." (Doc. # 55 at 6). She further requests that she be granted IFP status so she can "initiate reasonable efforts of discovery." (Id.)

From the text of Rule 56(c) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, it is clear that summary judgment "shall be rendered forthwith if the pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any, show that there is no genuine issue as to any material fact and that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(c).

"When a motion for summary judgment is made . . . an adverse party may not rest upon the mere allegations or denials of the adverse party's pleading, but the adverse party's response . . . must set forth specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial." Fed. R. Civ. P. 56(e).

The Supreme Court has held as follows regarding summary judgment:

> [T]he plain language of Rule 56(c) mandates the entry of summary judgment, after adequate time for discovery and upon motion, against a party who fails to make a showing sufficient to establish the existence of an element essential to that party's case, and on which that party will bear the burden of proof at trial. In such a situation, there can be "no genuine issue as to any material fact," since a complete failure of proof concerning an essential element of the nonmoving party's case necessarily renders all other facts immaterial. The moving party is "entitled to a judgment as a matter of law" because the nonmoving party has failed to make a sufficient showing on an essential element of her case with respect to which she has the burden of proof.

Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 322-23 (1986).

"The burden on the moving party may be discharged by 'showing' -that is, pointing out to the district court-that there is an absence of evidence to support the non-moving parties' case." Id. at 325.

First, the Court notes that plaintiff did not timely file her response to the defendants' motion for summary judgment. By Order entered on June 14, 2005, the plaintiff was advised of her right to file a response to the defendants' motion for summary judgment within 14 days of the entry of the Order. On June 29, 2005, the plaintiff requested that she be given until July 15, 2005, to file a response because of her "indigency, lack of transportation, change in medication, and worsening of Plaintiff's radiculopathies in both arms caused by permanent disc and vertebral degeneration." By Order entered on July 5, 2005, the Court granted the plaintiff's request gave her until July 15, 2005 to file a response. However, the plaintiff did not file her response until July 18, 2005 claiming that her copier broke. Thus, technically, the defendants' motion for summary judgment is unopposed. However, pursuant to Custer v. Pan Am. Life Ins. Co., 12 F.3d 410, 416 (4th Cir.1993) where a motion for summary judgment is unopposed, the district court must nonetheless ensure that the moving party is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. See also, Riccobene v. Scales, 19 F. Supp. 2d 577, n.1 (N.D. W.Va. 1998).

Thus, the Court has proceeded to determine whether there is a genuine issue of material fact. The Court notes that pursuant to the August 5, 2004 Order, discovery was to be completed on May 27, 2005. The plaintiff has not conducted any discovery whatsoever. "The fact that a litigant is proceeding pro se does not relieve [her] from [her]obligation to comply with the scheduling orders of the Court entered for the orderly conduct of litigation." Jackson v. DDD Company, 3 F. Supp. 2d 666 (D. Md. 1998). Further, the plaintiff failed to comply with the defendants' attempts to depose her, and the Court finds that the plaintiff has not shown cause for failure to comply with the defendants attempts to depose her.

The April 25, 2005 letter of Dr. Deborah C. Sams, does not indicate that the plaintiff could only be deposed lying down or in a "geri-chair," or that the plaintiff could not physically attend a deposition in Beckley. Instead, Dr. Sams states that the plaintiff "does have a history of chronic degenerative joint disease, she does have disc disease of the neck C6-C7. She also does have disc disease central mild herniation in the lower back as S1. She has chronic pain syndrome, insomnia issues. She is on multi-medications for the above as well as for severe and quite distinctive muscle spasms that she has in her low neck and back." With regard to the plaintiff's ability to travel to Beckley, Dr. Sams merely states the plaintiff would be "uncomfortable by the time she got there it would make it more difficult to answer questions because she would be dealing with acute fatigue syndrome as well as acute muscle discomfort." Dr. Sams further states that the plaintiff rarely drives herself and would have difficulty getting transportation to and from Beckley. Thus, the plaintiff has not shown cause for failing to comply with the Court's November 17, 2004 Order.

Because the plaintiff has not developed any evidence whatsoever, there is no genuine issue material fact.[6] Specifically, in Count IV of her complaint, the plaintiff alleges that Defendants Weiford, Alkire and Walton conspired to violate her Fourth, Fifth, and Fourteenth Amendment rights and, as a matter of policy and practice, denied her equal protection and due process of law. It appears to the Court, when liberally construing the complaint as required by Haines v. Kerner, 404 U.S. 519, 520 (1972) and Gordon v. Leeke, 574 F. 2d 1147 (4th Cir. 1978), that the plaintiff is complaining that Defendant Weiford violated her constitutional rights by failing to investigate or prosecute Larken Dean. However, prosecuting attorneys are entitled to immunity when deciding whether to prosecute, even if the decision to prosecute is malicious. Imbler v. Pachtman, 424 U.S. 409, 427 (1976).

Further, prosecutors are absolutely immune for failing to independently investigate matters that are referred to them for prosecution. Van Cleave v. City of Marysville, Kansas, 185 F. Supp. 2d 1212 (D. Kan. 2002). Prosecuting attorneys are also entitled to absolute immunity for decisions not to prosecute. Roe v. City of San Francisco, 109 F.3d 578 (9th Cir. 1997); Harrington v. Almy, 977 F.2d 37 (1st Cir.1993); Wellman v. West Virginia, 637 F. Supp. 135 (S.D. W.Va. 1986). The decision whether or not to prosecute and what charges to bring rests entirely within the prosecutor's discretion. Wellman, 637 F. Supp. at 138. Consequently, Defendant Weiford has absolute immunity for his decision not to prosecute . The plaintiff has failed to submit any evidence that would defeat Defendant Weiford's immunity.

Moreover, to establish a civil conspiracy under 42 U.S.C. §1983, the plaintiff must prove that the defendants acted jointly in concert and that some overt act was done in furtherance of the conspiracy which resulted in the plaintiff's deprivation of a constitutional right. Hinkle v. City of Clarksburg, WV, 81 F.3d 416 (4th Cir. 1996). The plaintiff has not produced any evidence of a conspiracy.

[6]There is nothing in the record which indicates the plaintiff attempted to conduct any discovery on her behalf at all. The plaintiff blames her lack of evidence on the Court's denial of in forma pauperis.

Additionally, the plaintiff states that in addition to bringing her conspiracy claim under §1983, she is also bringing her claim under 42 U.S.C. §1985 and 18 U.S.C. §241. First, 18 U.S.C. §241 is a criminal statute, and provides no basis for civil liability. See Moore v. Kamikawa, 940 F.Supp. 260 (D.Hawai'i 1995), aff'd 82 F.3d 423 (9th Cir. 1996). Further, in order to state a claim under §1985(3), a plaintiff must allege and prove the following four elements: "(1) a conspiracy of two or more persons, (2) who are motivated by a specific class-based, invidiously discriminatory animus to (3) deprive the plaintiff of the equal enjoyment of rights secured by the law to all, (4) and which results in injury to the plaintiff as (5) a consequence of an overt act committed by the defendants in connection with the conspiracy." Simmons v. Poe, 47 F.3d 1370, 1376 (4th Cir.1995). "Moreover, the law is well settled that to prove a section 1985 'conspiracy,' a claimant must show an agreement or a 'meeting of the minds' by defendants to violate the claimant's constitutional rights." Id. at 1377. Conclusory allegations of a conspiracy are insufficient to state a claim. Id.

Additionally, the defendants have raised the defense of qualified immunity. With regard to qualified immunity, the United States Supreme Court has provided that "government officials performing discretionary functions, generally are shielded from liability for civil damages insofar as their conduct does not violate clearly established statutory or constitutional rights of which a reasonable person would have known." Harlow v. Fitgerald, 457 U.S. 800, 818 (1982); see also Pritchett v. Alford, 973 F.2d 307, 312 (4th Cir. 1992).

The plaintiff has provided absolutely no evidence with regard to her claims in Count IV.

Thus, the defendants are entitled to summary judgment.

In Count VI, the plaintiff attempts to hold the County Commission liable on the basis of respondent superior. Municipal entities are absolutely immune from punitive damages, City of Newport v. Fact Concerts, 453 U.S. 247 (1981), and are not liable under the theory of respondeat superior. Monell v. Department of Social Services, 436 U.S. 658 (1978). However, a municipal entity may be liable for monetary, declaratory, and injunctive relief under §1983 if the execution of a municipal policy or custom was the "the moving force for the violation of constitutional rights." Id. at 694.

A policy can be made in a "policy statement, ordinance, regulations, or decision officially adopted and promulgated by the body's officers," Monell 436 U.S. at 690, by an act of a municipal official with final policymaking authority, City of St. Louis v. Praprotnik, 485 U.S. 112 (1988), or by widespread custom or practice. Monell, 436 U.S. at 691.

"[P]laintiffs seeking to impose liability on a municipality under §1983 must, therefore, adequately plead and prove the existence of an official policy or custom that is fairly attributable to the municipality and that the policy proximately caused the deprivation of their rights." Semple v. City of Moundsville, 195 F.3d 708, 712 (4th Cir. 1999), cert. denied, 528 U.S. 1189 (2000)(quoting Jordan by Jordan v. Jackson, 15 F.3d 333, 338 (4th Cir. 1994)).

The plaintiff has provided no evidence whatsoever of an official policy or custom of the County Commission regarding the issue at hand. Consequently, the defendants are entitled to summary judgment as there is absolutely no genuine issue of material fact.

With regard to the plaintiff's state law claims, Counts I, II, III and V, the defendants are entitled to summary judgment. The plaintiff is bringing these claims pursuant to the Court's supplemental jurisdiction which allows federal courts to hear and decide state-law claims along with federal-law claims when they "are so related to claims in the action within such original jurisdiction that they form part of the same case or controversy." 28 U.S.C. § 1367(a); Wisconsin Dept. of Corrections v. Schacht, 524 U.S. 381, 387 (1998). Discretion rests with the district court to decline to exercise supplemental jurisdiction when:

> (1) the claim raises a novel or complex issue of State law,
>
> (2) the claim substantially predominates over the claim or claims over which the district court has original jurisdiction,
>
> (3) the district court has dismissed all claims over which it has original jurisdiction, or
>
> (4) in exceptional circumstances, there are other compelling reasons for declining jurisdiction.

28 U.S.C. § 1367(c).

The Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals has provided additional guidance as to when a district court should exercise jurisdiction over state law claims, stating:

> A district court may exercise its discretion over state law claims made in the case through supplemental jurisdiction pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1367 when there is a federal basis for jurisdiction. See Shanaghan v. Cahill, 58 F.3d 106, 109 (4th Cir.1995). The district court exercises its discretion by considering factors that include: convenience and fairness to the parties, the existence of any underlying issues of federal policy, comity, or considerations of judicial economy."

Semple v. City of Moundsville, 195 F.3d 708, 714 (4th Cir. 1999), cert. denied, 528 U.S. 1189 (2000).

Because the Court has dismissed the plaintiff's federal claims, it declines to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over the plaintiff's state law claims.

Consequently, in light of the foregoing, it is ORDERED that the defendants' June 13, 2005 Motion for Summary Judgment is GRANTED. It is further ORDERED that the plaintiff has failed to show cause for failing to comply with the Court's November 17, 2004 Order. It is further ORDERED that the plaintiff's March 17, 2005 motion for extension of time to amend pleadings and her April 4, 2005 Motion to Amend pleadings are DENIED.

It is further ORDERED that the defendants' request for default judgment in Document #45 is DENIED as MOOT in light of the order granting the defendants' summary judgment.

It is further ORDERED that, in light of the Order granting defendants' summary judgment, this action is DISMISSED and retired from the docket of the Court.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

The Clerk of Court is DIRECTED to send copies of this Order to the pro se plaintiff and all counsel of record.

ENTER: September 21st, 2005

/s/ Robert E. Maxwell
UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

THE POCAHONTAS TIMES

Entered at the Postoffice at Marlin ton, W. Va., as second class matter

CALVIN W. PRICE, EDITOR.

THURSDAY, MARCH 18, 1926

Let us take up some more finished business. Move your calendar back about a hundred and fifty years ton, W. Va., as second class matter

CALVIN W. PRICE, EDITOR.

THURSDAY, MARCH 18, 1926

Let us take up some more finished business. Move your calendar back about a hundred and fifty years. Something happened here then that had news value if they had only been known it at the time. Daniel Boone and Jacob Warwick had a fight at Clover Lick. After all it happened the other day and it is not too late to chronicle the event.

This is to do my bit to claim for West Virginia a large share of the of fame Daniel Boone, and as usual we have to fight for what we get.

"Seven cities warred for Homer being dead,
Who living had no roof to shroud his head."

The seven cities were Smyrna, Rhodes, Colonphon, Salamis, Ios, Argos and Athens.

Seven states contend for a share in Daniel Boone. They are Pennsylvania, Kentucky, Virginia, West Virginia, North Carolina, Tennessee, and Missouri. It can be shown that West

Argos and Athens.

Seven states contend for a share in Daniel Boone. They are Pennsylvania, Kentucky, Virginia, West Virginia, North Carolina, Tennessee, and Missouri. It can be shown that West Virginia treated him better than any of the other states, for it is to West Virginia that he owes his civil and military rank.

West Virginia was at one time filled with traditions of Daniel Boone. He was a hero and the subject of much conversation. His name was on the lips of the pioneers wherever they congregated.

One of the tales that impressed me most as a child was the time that Daniel Boone killed twenty Indians. I believed it then, but I doubt it now, as it seems to me that it would have been preserved in written history. It came to me this way. I was receiving instructions how to split a log to make fence rails, and the use of the big wooden wedges called gluts. These were made in the woods out of dogwood or other hard material, and if carelesslly made they would not draw and were inclined to jump out of the log by the lateral pressure. The expert said that twenty Indians surprised Daniel Boone in the woods making rails. Boone thought his time had come. He was working on a log and it had tory. It came to me this way. I was receiving instructions how to split a log to make fence rails, and the use of the big wooden wedges called gluts. These were made in the woods out of dogwood or other hard material, and if carelessly made they would not draw and were inclined to jump out of the log by the lateral pressure. The expert said that twenty Indians surprised Daniel Boone in the woods making rails. Boone thought his time had come. He was working on a log and it had opened by means of a wooden wedge Boone asked the Indians to help him with the log, and ten on one side and ten on the other inserted their hands in the crack and attempted to pull it open, whereupon Boone knock-out the wooden wedge and the log snapping shut caught the hands of the Indians and held them in a vice like grip. Then Daniel Boone tomahawked and scalped them at his leisure. Maybe they kept it out of the papers on account of a law against killing Indians, which law was more honored in its breach than its observance.

There is no reason to question the fact that Daniel Boone and Jacob hawked and scalped them at his leisure. Maybe they kept it out of the papers on account of a law against killing Indians, which law was more honored in its breach than its observance.

There is no reason to question the fact that Daniel Boone and Jacob Warwick had a fight. That is well established. My father who was born two years after Jacob Warwick died, knew him well. Alright, say that he knew about it well. My father was a great-grandson of Jacob Warwick, and he could get the story from his mother or grandmother, I reckon.

Boone was a surveyor and land looker but lacked the infinite capacity for taking pains to perfect the titles to his locations. He had started to take up land on Elk River, and had sold it to Jacob Warwick and got money for it. Some time later Jacob Warwick found that he had got nothing in the way of a completed title, and being a man who was then acquiring a great fortune in lands, he brooded over his loss. Then when

Boone was a surveyor and land looker but lacked the infinite capacity for taking pains to perfect the titles to his locations. He had started to take up land on Elk River, and had sold it to Jacob Warwick and got money for it. Some time later Jacob Warwick found that he had got nothing in the way of a completed title, and being a man who was then acquiring a great fortune in lands, he brooded over his loss. Then when Daniel Boone came into the community there was a quarrel and a fist fight. We never heard who whipped. I judge from that the old roosters were separated. This might have been at Dunmore but we picture it at Clover Lick. It did not greatly interfere with Boone's visit. Cleared up a misunderstanding, so to speak. Anyway Boone said to Warwick; "You have never seen any rich land. Come with me and I will show you where there is rich land." Referring to Kentucky, only Boone probably called it Fincastle if this occurred the first time Boone lived here in the seventeen-seventies, or Kentucky if it was during his second residence in the seventeen-eighties. I think it was the first time, for Boone and Warwick started on a long trip to roosters were separated. This might have been at Dunmore but we picture it at Clover Lick. It did not greatly interfere with Boone's visit. Cleared up a misunderstanding, so to speak. Anyway Boone said to Warwick; "You have never seen any rich land. Come with me and I will show you where there is rich land." Referring to Kentucky, only Boone probably called it Fincastle if this occurred the first time Boone lived here in the seventeen-seventies, or Kentucky if it was during his second residence in the seventeen-eighties. I think it was the first time, for Boone and Warwick started on a long trip to Kentucky, but were turned back by Indians on the warpath.

Look at any reference book you pick up, you will find in it a life of Daniel Boone, yet none of the standard works even refer to his citizenship in Kanawha county, yet that is the only residence he ever had where he was honored by election to office, or where he ever received an officer's commission. He was elected to the Virginia legislature in 1790, with his colleague, George Clendenin. In Warwick started on a long trip to Kentucky, but were turned back by Indians on the warpath.

Look at any reference book you pick up, you will find in it a life of Daniel Boone, yet none of the standard works even refer to his citizenship in Kanawha county, yet that is the only residence he ever had where he was honored by election to office, or where he ever received an officer's commission. He was elected to the Virginia legislature in 1790, with his colleague, George Clendenin. In 1789 he was elected Lieutenant Colonel of the melitia of Kanawha county and that is where he got the title Col. Boone, one that he was fond of using, but a title that his biographers never give him.

When Daniel Boone sought to record some of the history that he had observed, he hooked up with a school teacher named Filson, and got out a publication called "The Adventures of Colonel Daniel Boone, formerly a hunter." This was when Boone was fifty-nine years old. Owing to the fact that Boone could not spell and Filson could not write, it did not add much to the sum of human

When Daniel Boone sought to record some of the history that he had observed, he hooked up with a school teacher named Filson, and got out a publication called "The Adventures of Colonel Daniel Boone, formerly a hunter." This was when Boone was fifty-nine years old. Owing to the fact that Boone could not spell and Filson could not write, it did not add much to the sum of human knowledge. But you can see that Daniel Boone did not despise his colonelship in the Kanawha troops.

Daniel Boone is the beau ideal of pioneer times. He filled all the specifications in the way of height, good looks, endurance, skill, and courage. In his day they called these disciples of Ulysses the Long Hunters, owing to the fact that a few generations in the mountains had produced a race of giants, Of late years they have started to call them the Tall Men. This was suggested by the late Emerson Hough. It is said that he undertook to bring out three books on related subjects called a trilogy. The first was The Covered Wagon, and the second was North of 36. The third was never written, his career being cut short by death. The third book was to have been called The Tall Men. This would have have referred to the pioneers of this section and the hero would have been Daniel Boone. It was an irreparable loss to us of the mountains, but it coincides with our rotton historical luck.

If I had time I would undertake it myself, but I do not seem to be able to abstain from eating long enough to write a book.

Why did men and women grow tall and beautiful when they settled in the mountains? The bible says that no man can add a cubit to his stature. Perhaps not, but there is no reason why with proper care the human cannot add half a foot or even half a cubit. It was done in the mountains. Even yet you can get a six foot company of militia together in why with proper care the human cannot add half a foot or even half a cubit. It was done in the mountains. Even yet you can get a six foot company of militia together in any of these counties, but our foot is subsiding. See what you think of this theory? The mountaineers were the tallest people on earth because they were cornfed. Wheat was unknown in the mountains for generations. The child was raised on corn bread prepared from corn meal manufactured in a primitive manner from grain ground by stone burrs. It naturally follows that a child so fed will grow strong and tall whereas a white flour child may be stunted in its growth. Thirty years ago, cornbread was a standard article of diet in this country. There was even a kind of compact formation of great specific gravity called sweetened corn pone, first called johnny-cake. Johnny-cake is something else now. On this corn diet boys grew like live kind of compact formation of great specific gravity called sweetened corn pone, first called johnny-cake. Johnny-cake is something else now. On this corn diet boys grew like live stock. It would be a day full of sorrow when corn was taken away from the beasts of the field. But it has happened that our precious children are deprived of this healthy food and forced to live on starch.

In the old days when the long hunters or tall men went to the lowlands and there were fed on wheat bread they almost unvariably got sick. They could not digest it. I have heard old timers talk about sick wheat many a time. When they first grew it they were afraid to eat it.

Daniel Boone's distinguishing mark was black hair and golden eyebrows, and blue eyes.

Just a few dates. Not enough to tire you. But you have got to use a few dates in history as you go along. Boone was a son of George Boone, a citizen of Berks County, Pennsylvania, the county of the city of Reading, it had wedge lp him e side their ted to knock-ne log nds of a vice tomas lei-of the ainst more s ob-

n the Jacob
well was wick say
My acob tory r, I

and

few dates in history as you go along. Boone was a son of George Boone, a citizen of Berks County, Pennsylvania, the county of the city of Reading, the strongest Democratic county in the world. When a boy, the family moved to the Yadkin river country in North Caroline. He was still on the eastern waters. There he grew to manhood and married Rebecca Bryan. He was born February 11, 1735, and died September 26, 1820, aged eighty-five years. To fix the period of his activities it may be mentioned that they correspond to the life and times of Jacob Warwick who survived him eight years.

When Boone was thirty-four years old, he was taken up by a certain rich man by the name of Henderson. who had dreams of an empire beyond the mountains. He sent Boone on an exploring trip and Boone spent much time around and about where Boonesboro, Kentucky, is located, giving it a claim to the oldest settlement in Kentucky, though Harrodsburg has perhaps the better claim by about two weeks.

who had dreams of an empire beyond the mountains. He sent Boone on an exploring trip and Boone spent much time around and about where Boonesboro, Kentucky, is located, giving it a claim to the oldest settlement in Kentucky, though Harrodsburg has perhaps the better claim by about two weeks.

Henderson then got a color of title to a tract of land from the red men. This tract was about as big as the states of Kentucky and Tennessee, and Henderson dreamed of founding an empire to be known as Transylvania. He did elect one legislature of eighteen members, Daniel Boone and his brother, Squire Boone, being two of them. They held one session in 1775, but the Continental Congress was practiced upon in the usual style of honest politics and Transylvania was sunk without trace.

The first effort to colonize Kentucky was undertaken by Boone in 1773. He led a colony of settlers in that direction. There were some twenty families traveling in wagons, that were to be left when the Wilder and his brother, Squire Boone, being two of them. They held one session in 1775, but the Continental Congress was practiced upon in the usual style of honest politics and Transylvania was sunk without trace.

The first effort to colonize Kentucky was undertaken by Boone in 1773. He led a colony of settlers in that direction. There were some twenty families traveling in wagons, that were to be left when the Wilderness Trail had been reached. They had got as far west as Powell's Valley when they encountered a war party of Indians. Powell Valley is the most western of the valleys of southwestern Virginia.

The party numbered about seventy persons. Daniel Boone sent his son James Boone in command of a squad of men to scout as flankers on one side of the march. On October 9th, 1773, this party of scouts camped a mile or so in the rear of the main camp for its protection. During the night, an Indian war party of Shawnees fired on the rear camp and killed of men to scout as flankers on one side of the march. On October 9th, 1773, this party of scouts camped a mile or so in the rear of the main camp for its protection. During the night, an Indian war party of Shawnees fired on the rear camp and killed James Boone and five others. This was on the morning of October 10, 1773, just a year before the battle of The Point, and was the beginning of the movement that ended with the subduing the Indians in Dunmore's War. It also marked the beginning of Daniel Boone's feud with the Indians. From that time forth he was dangerous. Before then he might had killed Indians through a sense of duty. After that it was a pleasure.

Dunmore's complaint of the slaughter of the pioneers on the Western Waters always started with the Powell Valley battle. This caused this expedition to Kentucky to be given up. In Powell Valley the wagon train broke up and the settlers returned to their former might had killed Indians through a sense of duty. After that it was a pleasure.

Dunmore's complaint of the slaughter of the pioneers on the Western Waters always started with the Powell Valley battle. This caused this expedition to Kentucky to be given up. In Powell Valley the wagon train broke up and the settlers returned to their former homes.

Dunmore had come to Virginia and had announced his policy of inducing the council to open up the western waters for settlement, and this caused the land hungry people to organize surveying parties to do the work of surveying and locating so that they would be ready to take the titles without delay. They did not wait for spring. In 1774, they commenced to trail west as soon as the days began to lengthen. By June, Dunmore knew he had a war on hands, and one of the things he impressed upon Preston, the headman of Fincastle county, was to warn all those surveying parties that war was merly a ne was to the ell and did not human that se his ops.

eal of e spec-good urage.
sciples owing ns in ace of start-This
erson rtook lated
first settlers returned to their former homes.

Dunmore had come to Virginia and had announced his policy of inducing the council to open up the western waters for settlement, and this caused the land hungry people to organize surveying parties to do the work of surveying and locating so that they would be ready to take the titles without delay. They did not wait for spring. In 1774, they commenced to trail west as soon as the days began to lengthen. By June, Dunmore knew he had a war on hands, and one of the things he impressed upon Preston, the headman of Fincastle county, was to warn all those surveying parties that war was about to break out and to give them a chance to return. Preston secured Daniel Boone and Michael Stone as scouts to go as far as the falls of the Ohio, (Louisville) and warn all surveying parties. These two men accomplished a journey of eight hundred miles in sixty-four days in the month of June. July, and August, 1774. In the meantime, Preston, and Andrew Lewis, and Charles Lewis had been drumming up the long hunters for the Lewisburg army.

When Boone got back, the army was already assembling at Lewisburg, and Boone reported there, and was detailed to take charge of Moore's Fort, at the mouth of Stony Creek, on Clinch River, in Scott County, Virginia. He had no commission. He was referred to in the dispatches as "Boone." The commandant of the fort next to him, Russel's was William Poage, Sergt., who was recommended for a com mission. That is the part that Boone played in Dunmore's War. He saw long and continous service. None longer but he was not at The Point, the day of the battle.

Boonesboro. That is the first year that the pioneers took their families with them. Boone stayed in Kentucky for eleven years, and he was an active and important member of that community, and he killed and scalped the Indians. He was captured. He fought two battles with the Indians at Blue Licks, and lost another son in battle with the Indians. He was a friend and contemporary of George Rogers Clark, of Albemarle County, Virginia. Those two heroes of Kentucky, were simply ruined by peace. After the war, they became as nothing to their companions, and the ruling forces. Clark was an outcast and a drunkard, and shunned by all. Boone was sober, upright, and popular, but because he had not complied with all the red tape in regard to location of land and proving his claim, he was dispossessed and retired from Kentucky in dis-was an outcast and a drunkard, and shunned by all. Boone was sober, upright, and popular, but because he had not complied with all the red tape in regard to location of land and proving his claim, he was dispossessed and retired from Kentucky in disgust. He could overcome the red Indian, but red tape he could not understand

Then it was that he moved to Kanawha county, West Virginia, and settled at the mouth of Crooked Creek, on the Great Kanawha, on the battlefield. He and his wife acknowledged a deed at Point Pleasant in Greenbrier County, in 1786, for land in Kentucky, and that is best evidence of the date when Daniel Boone was driven out of the ungrateful state of Kentucky.

We then find the Boone family back on the West Virginia side of the Ohio river, having parted with Kentucky forever. There must have been some grievance against that state. Such as might have followed battlefield. He and his wife acknowledged a deed at Point Pleasant in Greenbrier County, in 1786, for land in Kentucky, and that is best evidence of the date when Daniel Boone was driven out of the ungrateful state of Kentucky.

We then find the Boone family back on the West Virginia side of the Ohio river, having parted with Kentucky forever. There must have been some grievance against that state. Such as might have followed the loss of his land.

When he got back. Kanawha had growing pains. It was ready for countyhood, taking in nearly all of the territory south of the Midland Trail and a lot north of it. Of course it was a backward settlement. The people of Point Pleasant, St. Albans, and Charleston, were not all sur-men ac-nt hun-in the August,

Preston,
Charles
up the g army.
e army
Lewis-re, and rge of Stony
Scott
o comin the com-him,
Sergt.,
com
that War.
rvice.
t The stylish like the people of Hunters-ville, Hillsboro, Frankford, Lewis-burg, and Union, in that day and time, however much dog they put on now. Boone was one of three most active men in the formation of that county. This is sufficiently proven by the fact that he was made lieutenant colonel of the county. Samuel Lewis was colonel, and George Clendenin and Andrew Don-nelly, members of the legislature. Boone was not a toiler. He could survey if you ever got him started and keep him at it. We know that he could not spell, but we know he was a man of a large vocabulary and was probably an orator. But here is something that tells me that he was a clever person and one that might conceive the idea of a new county and carry it out. One day when it was open season for Indians in Ken tucky he went out hunting and only killed two. But as he hung their scalps up to dry he remarked: Today conceive the idea of a new county and carry it out. One day when it was open season for Indians in Kentucky he went out hunting and only killed two. But as he hung their scalps up to dry he remarked: Today I have been to Lulbegrud and killed two Brobdignags in their capital.

A man that could make that grim play on the words of Dean Swift, was a man of quality, condition, and character. The place where Boone got the brace of Shawnees is called Lulbegrue Creek, somewhere in the dark and bloody ground.

It is remarkable that the ten years or such a matter that Boone spent in Kanawha county could be so universally ignored by historians. The more I see of historians the more I am convinced that they are slow on the uptake. Boone's fifties were passed in Kahawha county, and the county of Kanawha is the proudest monument that he has today. He trailed to Missouri about the year 1795, where he lived for the remaining twenty-five years of his life. But his son or sons continued to reside here, and nearly all of the Boones monument that he has today. He trailed to Missouri about the year 1795, where he lived for the remaining twenty-five years of his life. But his son or sons continued to reside here, and nearly all of the Boones yet qualify for the Society of Tall Men.

It seems to me that Boone during those years went on the good old rule not to allow business to interfere with hunting, trapping, and fishing.

Here is a specimen day that is well authenticated. Patrick Huddleston at the close of the Revolution lived at the Long Shoal below the Kanawha Falls. One evening a stranger walked in carrying a rifle and a pack. Huddleston was his friend but his boys had never seen him. The boys were delighted to know that this was the famous Daniel Boone. The next morning at day break when the family awoke Boone was not there but his pack was. After a while he came in and explained that it was his custom to look for game at Falls. One evening a stranger walked in carrying a rifle and a pack. Huddleston was his friend but his boys had never seen him. The boys were delighted to know that this was the famous Daniel Boone. The next morning at day break when the family awoke Boone was not there but his pack was. After a while he came in and explained that it was his custom to look for game at day break. After they had breakfast, Boone told the boys he would show them some beaver. They found a fox trap about the place and with in a few days, Boone and the boys caught thirteen beaver.

It may be that Boone was that rare bird—a sensible man who took time to live.

for Economical

about a hundred and fifty years. Something happened here then that had news value if they had only been known it at the time. Daniel Boone and Jacob Warwick had a fight at Clover Lick. After all it happened the other day and it is not too late to chronicle the event.

This is to do my bit to claim for West Virginia a large share of the of fame Daniel Boone, and as usual we have to fight for what we get.

"Seven cities warred for Homer being dead,
Who living had no roof to shroud his head."

The seven cities were Smyrna, Rhodes, Colonphon, Salamis, Ios, papers on account of a law against killing Indians, which law was more honored in its breach than its observance.

There is no reason to question the fact that Daniel Boone and Jacob Warwick had a fight. That is well established. My father who was born two years after Jacob Warwick died, knew him well. Alright, say that he knew about it well. My father was a great-grandson of Jacob Warwick, and he could get the story from his mother or grandmother, I reckon.

Boone was a surveyor and land

Warwick, and he could get the story from his mother or grandmother, I reckon.

Boone was a surveyor and land looker but lacked the infinite capacity for taking pains to perfect the titles to his locations. He had started to take up land on Elk River, and had sold it to Jacob Warwick and got money for it. Some time later Jacob Warwick found that he had got nothing in the way of a completed title, and being a man who was then acquiring a great fortune in lands, he brooded over his loss. Then when Daniel Boone came into the community there was a quarrel and a fist fight. We never heard who whipped. I judge from that the old roosters were separated. This might have been at Dunmore but we picture it at Clover Lick. It did not greatly interfere with Boone's visit. Cleared up a misunderstanding, so to speak. Anyway Boone said to Warwick; "You have never seen any rich land. Come with me and I will show you up a misunderstanding, so to speak. Anyway Boone said to Warwick; "You have never seen any rich land. Come with me and I will show you where there is rich land." Referring to Kentucky, only Boone probably called it Fincastle if this occurred the first time Boone lived here in the seventeen-seventies, or Kentucky if it was during his second residence in the seventeen-eighties. I think it was the first time, for Boone and Warwick started on a long trip to Kentucky, but were turned back by Indians on the warpath.

Look at any reference book you pick up, you will find in it a life of Daniel Boone, yet none of the standard works even refer to his citizenship in Kanawha county, yet that is the only residence he ever had where he was honored by election to office, or where he ever received an officer's commission. He was elected to the Virginia legislature in 1790, with his colleague, George Clendenin. In 1789 he was elected Lieutenant Colonel of the melitia of Kanawha county and that is where he got the title Col. Boone, one that he was fond of using, but a title that his biographers died some years ago, he was verging ninety years. He and his faithful wife sleep in the family burial ground near their last home on earth, the scene of much of their life's toils and mutual joys and sorrows.

DANIEL KERR.

Acknowledgements are due Samuel Sutton and Mrs Harvey Curry, near Dunmore, for the following items that may rescue from oblivion the memory of a very worthy and useful pioneer of upper Pocahontas. This was Daniel Kerr, who located soon after the Revolution on the upper end of the immense estate now owned by Uriah Hevener.

It seems very probable he came from Rockbridge County. He established a mill, saw mill, and blacksmith shop on the Little Back Creek branch of Deer Creek, and his place became a centre of industry for a wide region.

He was married twice. The first wife was a Miss Kirkpatrick, of Anthonys Creek. Their children were Robert, John, William, Thomas, and James. Daniel Kerr's second wife was a Miss McKamie, of Rockbridge, a very sprightly and attractive person. Her children were David, Daniel, Nancy, Betsy and Mary.

He was a sincerely pious person, and the close of his life was very touching. He had assemnled his family for domestic worship. Upon finishing the Scripture lesson he kneeled for prayer, and for a long interval he was silent. Upon going to him in that position he was found to be speechless and helpless. Much of the time after this he appeared to take very little notice of what was going on, and seemed unable to recognize friends. One day there was a gleam of intelligence and he uttered these words: "Farewell to all," and then lapsed into silence, and not long thereafter died so gently he had been dead some minutes before the fact was realized.

Digitized by Google

Andy Hughes now lives on or near the site of the old Kerr home. Daniel's son, Robert Kerr, settled on a part of the old place, and finally moved west. John Kerr went to Augusta County, and lived there, and then moved to Missouri. William Kerr married a Miss Gillespie, and settled the place now occupied by Asbury Sheets. His family was composed of three sons and two daughters. These sons, Jacob, George, and Andrew now live in the vicinity of the old home place. Mary Ann, one of these daughters, married Henry Sheets. The other daughter, Rachel, married a Mr Armstrong, in Highland County.

Thomas Kerr, another son of the pioneer, married a Miss Foglesong, of Greenbrier, and settled where James Kerr now resides, near the road to the top of Alleghany. His family consisted of three sons and two daughters. The sons are Robert, George, and James. The daughters are Mrs Phœbe Phillips and Mrs Mary Wooddell. Robert has been quite a traveller over most of the western States and territories, and now owns valuable lands in upper Pocahontas.

Lieutenant Robert D. Kerr, a son of James Kerr, graduated with distinction from West Point, in 1898, being assigned to the engineer branch of the service. He was ordered to the Philippines, and died on board a troop ship, in August, 1898, and was buried in the Pacific Ocean.

Digitized by Google

Mary Kerr, of the pioneer family, became Mrs Warwick Wolfenberger. Her brother, James Kerr, lived in Greenbrier, not far from Lewisburg.

David W. Kerr, one of the younger members of Daniel Kerr's family, lived for years near Greenbank, and was a person of high reputation. He was a carpenter by trade, yet by diligent self improvement he rose to be a person of prominence as a member of the county court, Colonel of the Militia, ruling Elder in the church, faithful teacher in Sabbath schools, and leader in prayer meetings. His daughter Maggie became the wife of Rev J. C. Carson, a well known minister in West Virginia and Tennessee. Adolphus Kerr, M. D., of Millboro Depot, is his son, and his brother and mother reside there also.

Colonel Kerr's wife was Eliza Whitman, daughter of William Whitman, on Anthonys Creek. Mr Whitman was a native of Orange County, Goshen Township, New York. He was a remarkable person, and his influence was for good wherever he lived.

The blessing called down by the good old pioneer abide with his descendants to the third and fourih generation. "The mercy of the Lord is from everlasting to everlasting to those who remember his commandments to do them."

Digitized by Google

get ready for bed. At this suggestion Mr Hannah arose and in a very soft solemn tone repeated and then sang a hymn. He then knelt in prayer and poured out his full heart in humble, trusting prayer, in the tone and manner of a loving child to a kind and more loving father. The memory of that prayer, heard fifty years ago, imparts a pleasant glow to my feelings while writing these memorial sentences.

DANIEL McCOLLAM.

One of the oldest families in our county is that of the McCollam relationship. While it is not certain, yet there is good reason to believe that the pioneer ancestor was named Dan. McCollam. From some interesting correspondence had by James McCollam's family with a lady in New Hampshire there is no reason to question that he was of Scotch-Irish descent, and the son of a physician a graduate of the University of of Edinburg, and lived in New Jersey. The name of the pioneer's wife cannot be recalled.

Mr McCollam, the ancestor, came from New Jersey in 1770, or thereabouts, and settled on Brown's Mountain near Driscol, which is yet known as the "McCollam Place," now in the possession of Amos Barlow, Esq. His children were Jacob, Daniel, William, Rebecca, Mary, and Sarah.

Jacob McCollam first settled on the "Jake Place," a mile or so west of Huntersville on the road to Marlinton; thence he went to Illinois, and was killed by a falling tree.

Digitized by Google

Daniel McCollam married Anna Sharp, daughter of John Sharp, the Frost pioneer, and settled first on the Bridger Place near Verdant Valley, thence to the Marony Place near Buckeye, and finally settled in Noble County, Missouri. Two of his daughters remained in Pocahontas, Mary (Polly) who became Mrs John Buckley. Her son was the Rev Joshua Buckley, a venerable and greatly respected citizen of Buckeye who died April 23, 1901, at the advanced age of 92 years. The other daughter, Jane McCollam, was married to the late Joseph Friel and lived on the Greenbrier about five miles above Marlinton, where some of her family yet reside. Rachel and Nancy went with their father to Missouri. Rachel became Mrs Van Tassell and Nancy became Mrs Brown. Daniel McCollam set out to visit his former home, and while coming up the Ohio he was exposed to the small-pox. He at once went back and died of the disease in his western home.

Rebecca McCollom was married to the late Robert Moore, Senior, of Edray. Isaac Moore, Esq., Robert Moore, Junior, and Jane Moore, the wife of the late Andrew Duffield, near West Union, were her children.

Sarah McCollam was married to John Sharp, and lived on the place occupied by J. Wesley Irvine, near Verdant Valley, who is her grandson. Ellen, who became Mrs Amaziah Irvine; Mary, who became Mrs Josiah Friel; Rebecca, who was Mrs John R. Duffield; and Nancy, who was Mrs Willlam Irvine, were her daughters.

Mary McCollam was married to Thomas Brock and

Digitized by Google

lived on the "Duffield Place," now held by Newton Duffield. Her children were Daniel Brock, who married a Miss McClung, of Nicholas County; William Brock, Robert Brock, and Margaret, wife of the late William Duffield, near the Warwick Spring.

William McCollam married Sally Drinnan, daughter of Lawrence Drinnan, whose home was on Greenbrier River, on the upper part of Levi Gay's farm, very near the bank of the stream. It is to be remembered as the place where James Baker, one of the first school teachers, was slain by an Indian warrior about 1786. Soon after his marriage he settled near the summit of Buck's Mountain, about 1798, perhaps three hundred yards of the residence now occupied by his son, James McCollam, Esq. Traces of the old home are yet visible. His family consisted of five sons and six daughters. John, Lawrence, William, Isaac, James, Sarah, Susan, Nancy, Matilda, Rebecca, and Ruth.

John McCollam went to Lincoln County, Tennessee, where one of his descendants became an eminent Baptist minister.

Lawrence McCollam died in 1861.

William McCollam died in youth.

Isaac McCollam married Margaret Thomas, daughter of John Thomas, and settled in Randolph County. Fletcher McCollam, near the head of Stony Creek, is a son of Isaac.

James McCollam first married Anna Jane McCoy and settled on Buck's Mountain near the old homestead. George W. McCollam, a well known citizen, is his son. His second wife was Miss Mary Anna

Digitized by Google

Overholt.

Sarah McCollam, daughter of William McCollam, became Mrs Absalom McCollam and lived on Hill's Creek. The late William Morrison, at Buckeys, was her son.

Susan was married to the late James Kellison, on Brier Knob, head of Hill's Creek. Daniel Kellison, Esq., at Mingo Flats, Randolph County, is her son.

The daughters, Nancy, Matilda, and Rebecca were never married. They lived to be elderly persons, and were esteemed for their good character, industry and lady-like deportment, and made themselves very useful in many ways. All of them were so kind and skilful in waiting on their sick neighbors.

Ruth McCollam was married to William Kee, Esq., near Marlinton.

Thus far it has been placed in our power to illustrate the family history of these worthy people.

William McCollam was one of the original members of the Stony Creek M. E. Church, and while he lived was prominent in meetings and the official proceedings. Upon one occasion while the parents were absent attending meeting or visiting the sick, the house caught fire and was consumed with the most of its contents. At the time of the burning, John, the eldest son, was about eight years old; Lawrence was about two. In the confusion the baby boy seems to have been forgotten, and when John asked where the baby was he was told by one of the little girls that he was in the cradle asleep. John pressed his way through the smoke and heat at the risk of his life, and brought his brother out alive, but in doing so both were so badly burned as to have scars upon their persons long as they lived.

Digitized by Google

This man toiled on however; rebuilt his home, opened more land, and in the meanwhile eleven children had gathered around his table. At the time when his care and presence seemed most needed, it seemed good to the God he loved to call him away from a responsibility so important. The sugar season had just opened —the morning was such as to indicate a heavy run, and much wood were needed to keep the kettles boiling fast enough. On the 4th of March, 1818, he had morning prayer, sang a hymn of praise to Him that watches the sparrow when it falls, and went forth cheerfully to his work. A large red oak tree suited to his purpose was selected, which soon bowed and fell beneath his stalwart strokes, but somehow a limb from another tree in its rebound smote him with such furious force that he never seemed to conscious of what had happened. This occurred about a mile from home, near where James Hannah lives.

Though all this was sudden, there has never been a misgiving about the certainty of his having found rest from his honest toils and efforts to meet his duties, the rest that remains for the people of God. He had learned from his Scotch ancestry to sing:

"The sword, the pestilence, or fire,
Shall but fulfill their best desire,
From sin and sorrow set them free,
And bring thy children, Lord, to thee."

Digitized by Google

SLATY FORK SCHOOL

Slaty Fork, West Virginia

Presented By

EMMA S. HOWARD,

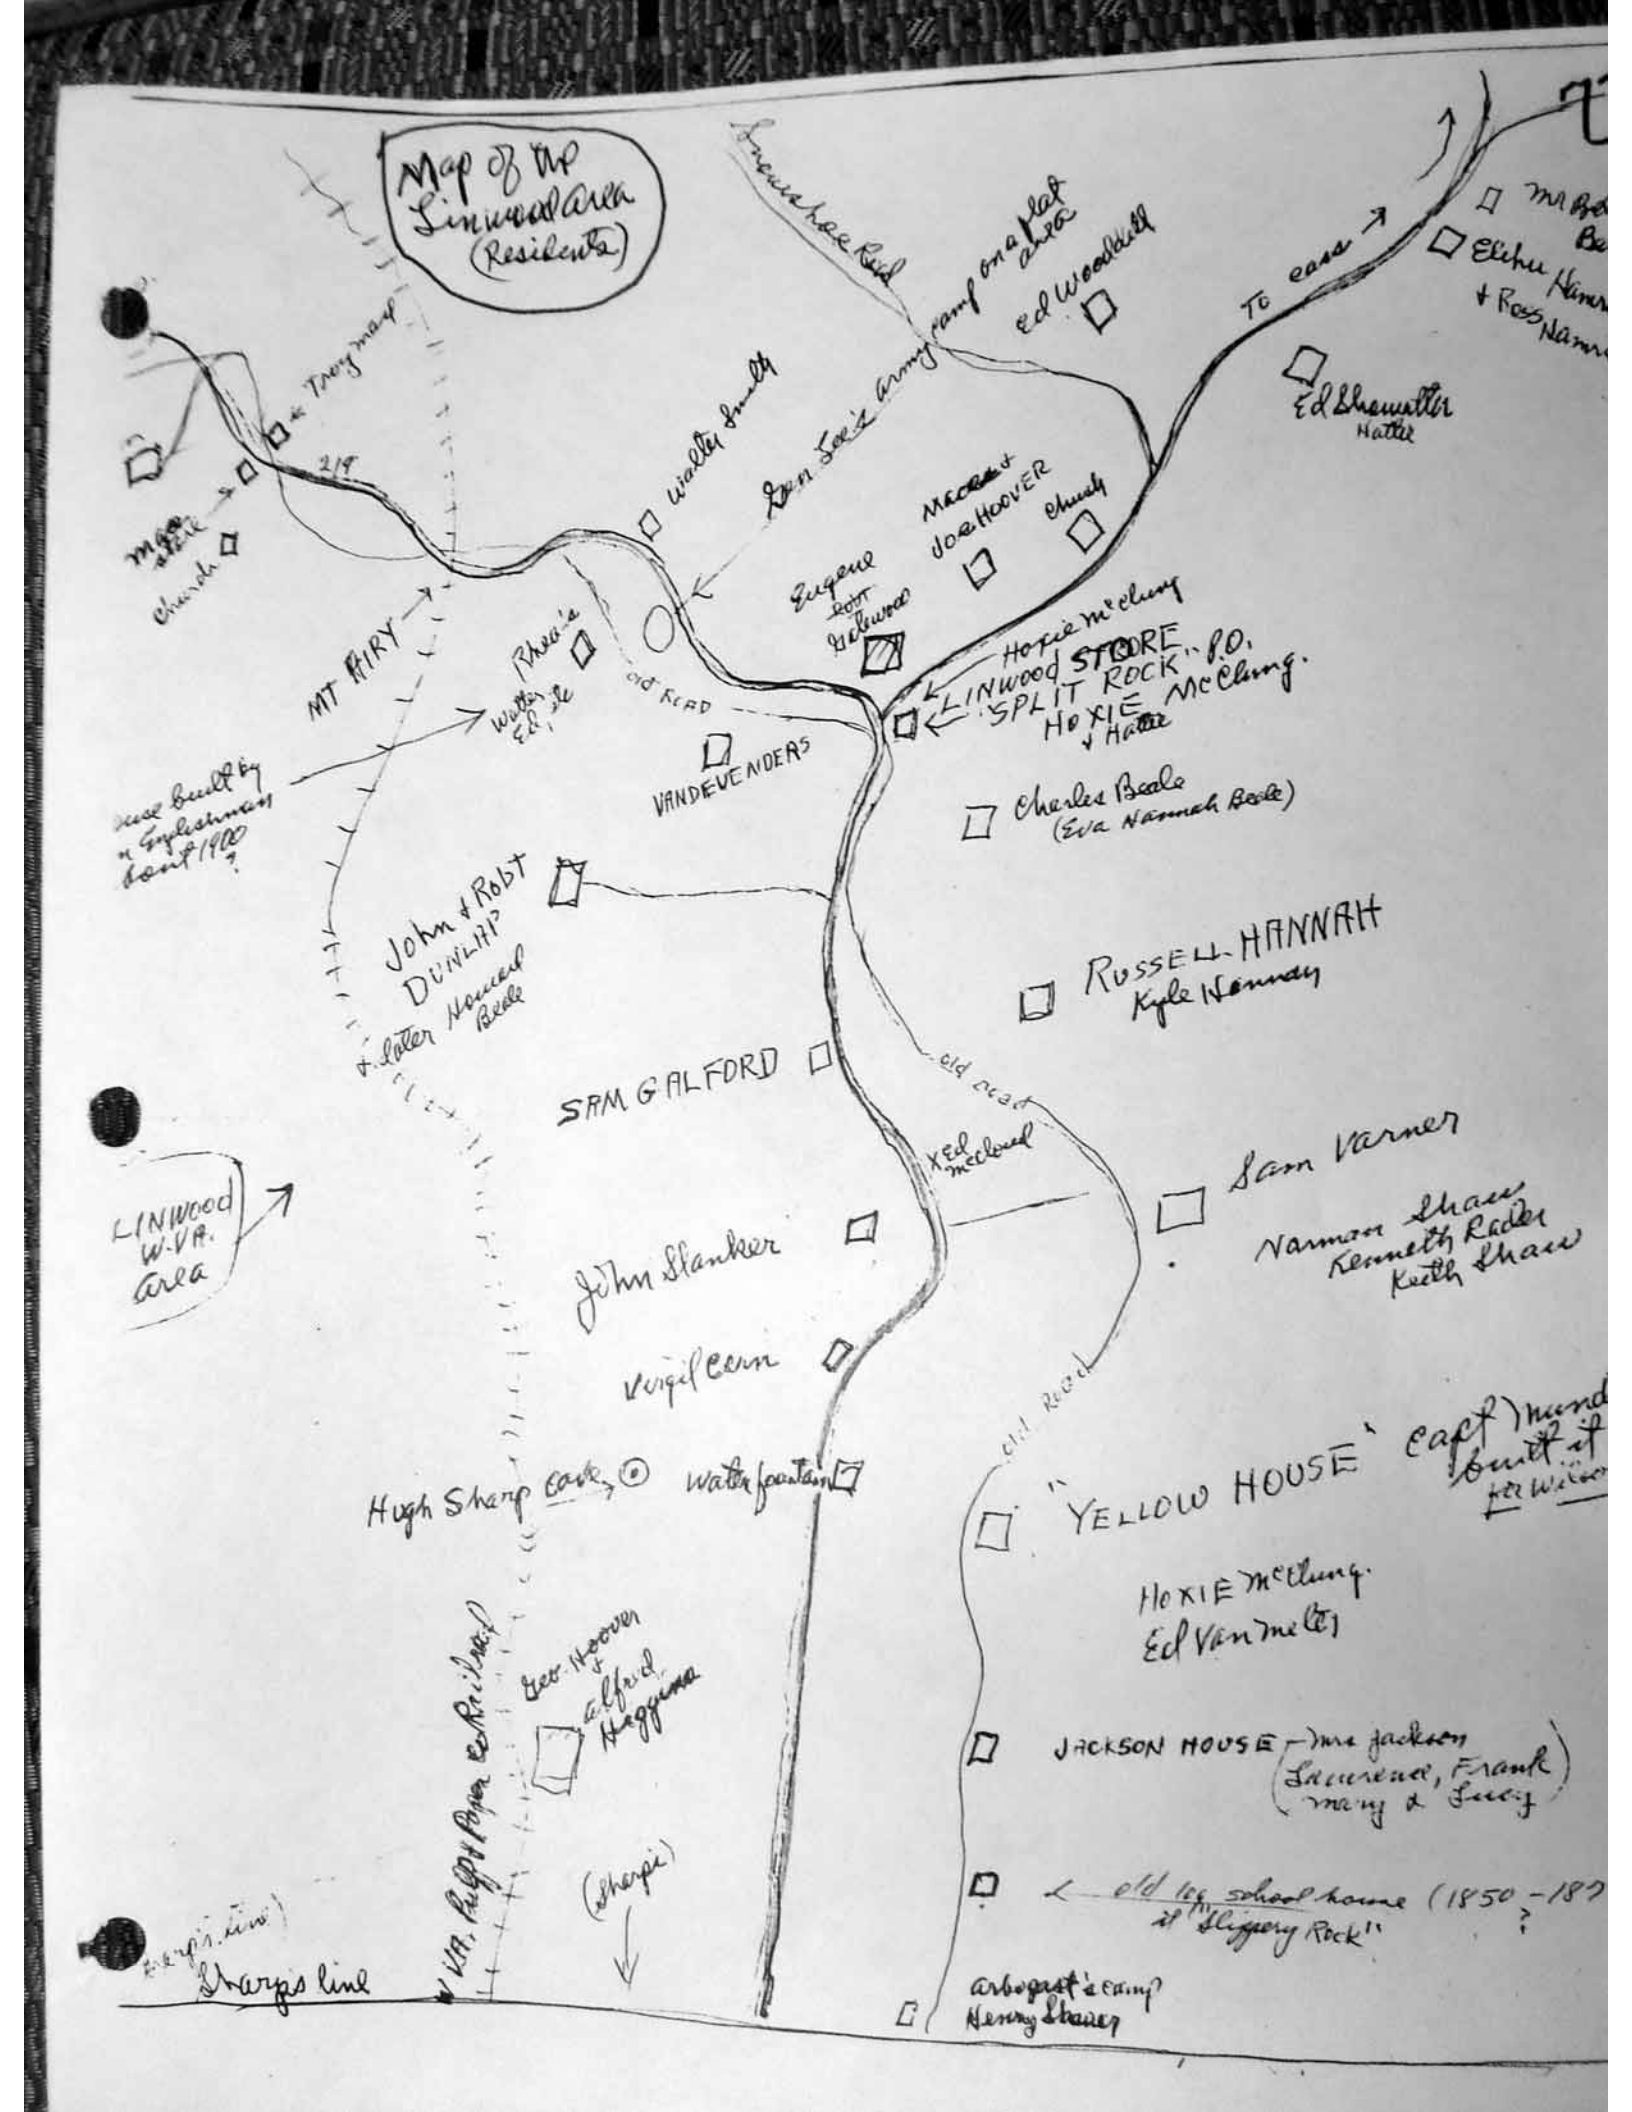
Teacher

March 20, 1908

Trustees

F. T. Sharp L. D. Sharp

S. D. Hannah



Map of the Linwood area (Residents)
Sneuse Hare Rd
Ed Woodell
To east
Elihu Hamer
Ed Shewalter
Hatter
Wallace Smith
Ben Lee's army camp on a flat area
Mac & Joe Hoover
Church
Eugene Lott Gallwood
Hoxie McClung
LINWOOD STORE, P.O.
SPLIT ROCK
HOXIE McClung.
Hatter
MT AIRY
Rhea's
Walter
Ed
old road
VANDEVENDERS
house built by an Englishman about 1900 ?
Charles Beale
(Eva Hannah Beale)
John & Robt DUNLAP
& later Howard Beale
RUSSELL-HANNAH
Kyle Hannah
SAM GALFORD old road
Ed McCloud
Sam Varner
Varnon Shaw
Kenneth Rader
Keith Shaw
LINWood W.VA. area
John Slanker
Virgil Cern
Hugh Sharp farm water fountain
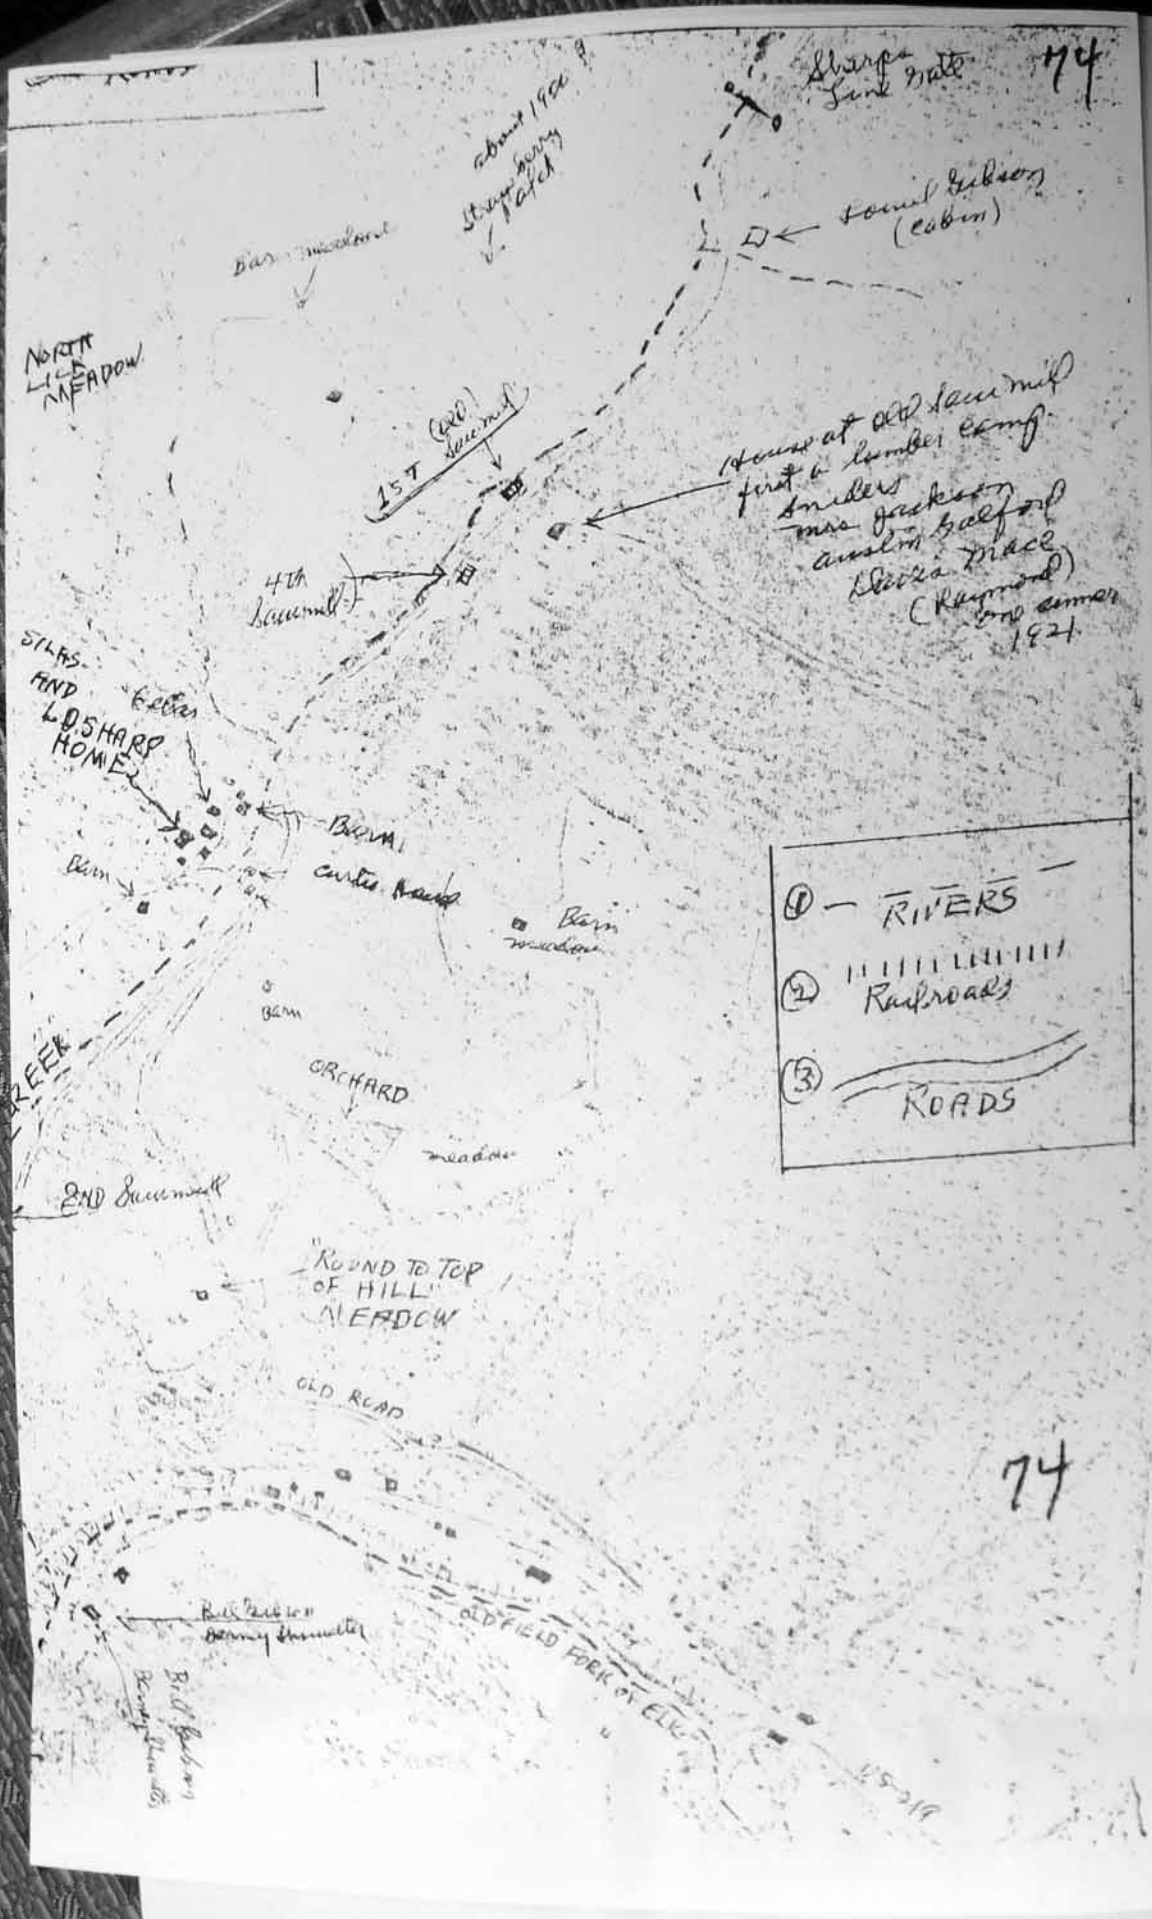
"YELLOW HOUSE"
HOXIE McClung
Ed Vanmeter
JACKSON HOUSE
Mrs Jackson
Lawrence, Frank
Mary & Lucy
old log school house (1850 - 187
at "Slippery Rock"
Geo. Hoover
& Alfred Haggans
(Sharps)
Sharps line
arbogast's camp?
Henry Shaver

Map of Slatyfork area & residents 1900's - 1900's



74
Sharps Lime Kiln
about 1950 Stumpy Ford
Bar meadow
Found Gibson (cabin)
NORTH LICK MEADOW
1st (old) Sawmill
House at old Sawmill first a lumber camp
Sneiders
Mrs Jackson
Austin Bedford
Eliza Mace (Raymond)
one winter 1924
4th Sawmill
STARS AND L.D.S HARP HOME
Barn
Barn
Barn meadow
Barn
CREEK ORCHARD
meadow
2ND Sawmill
"ROUND TO TOP OF HILL" MEADOW
OLD ROAD
OLDFIELD FORK OF ELK
Bill Parsons
Barney Hunnicutt
Bill Parsons
Barney Hunnicutt
US-219
(1) — RIVERS
(2) Railroads
(3) ROADS
74

Post Office Department
BUREAU OF ACCOUNTS
Washington 25, D. C.

76

OFFICE OF THE COMPTROLLER

February 27, 1953

Mr. L. D. Sharp,

Slatyfork, West Virginia.

Dear Mr. Sharp:

This has reference to your letter of February 16, 1953, to the Postmaster General, regarding your eligibility for an annuity based upon your service as postmaster.

The records of the Department show that you were appointed postmaster at the fourth class post office in Slatyfork, West Virginia May 15, 1901 and resigned August 28, 1916.

Public Law 215, approved May 22, 1920, was the original United States Civil Service Retirement Act under which Federal Government employees were first accorded annuities based on such service. However, Section 1 of the Act required that an employee to be entitled to any annuity must have been actively in the service on August 20, 1920. In view of this information it appears that you were not eligible for any retirement rights when the first retirement law became effective.

Since the passage of the organic Retirement Act of May 22, 1920 there have been many amendments made thereto by acts of Congress but none have been retroactive to include cases where employees left the service prior to August 20, 1920 as in your case.

Sincerely yours,

J. W. Askew,
Comptroller.

John B. Floyd, Esquire, Governor of Virginia Deed to Adison Moore and George Beal June 22, 1848 July 31, 1849 Book 102, Page 16 Richmond Pocahontas Co.?

John B. Floyd, Esquire, Governor of the Commonwealth of Virginia:
To all to whom thes presents shall come---GREETING: Know ye, that in conformity with a Survey, made on the 22nd day of June, one thousand eight hundred and forty eight by virtue of Land Office Treasury Warrant No. 12,846, there is granted by said Commonwealth, unto Adison Moore and George Beal a certain Tract or Parcel of Land containing Seven hundred and twenty six acres lying and being in the County of Pocahontas, on both sides of Elk River, adjoining the land of William Sharp and a survey known by the name of the Pennell & Sherwood survey and bounded as follows, Viz-- Beginning at a spruce pine and beech on the East bank of the Old Field Fork of Said River, twelve poles above the mouth of Slatyfork on said Sharp's line and with the same so as to include any of said Sharp's land N 23 W 750 poles crossing Slatyfork at 12 poles and the Big Spring at 160 poles and Elk River at 378 poles to 3 sugar trees on the point of the Bearpen Ridge near the main top; thence leaving the "Pennell & Sherwood" survey S 60 W 60 poles to a yew pine & beech in a flat near Bearpen & N 80 W 40 poles to a maple & yew pine South 40 poles to a sugar tree and beech in a flat S 55 W 80 poles to 2 beeches S 25 E 352 poles crossing the ~~XIII~~ Middle run below a waterfall to a sugar tree on top of ridge S14 W 66 poles to a sugar tree and beech corner to David and John Hannah's survey of 500 Acres & with the same S 40 E 124 poles to a pine & indianwood S 80 E 128 poles to 2 beeches S 40 E 154 poles to a beech & sugar tree, leaving said line N 70 E 57 poles crossing the old Field Fork of Elk to the beginning, with its appurtenances.

To HAVE AND To HOLD the said Tract or Parcel of Land with its appurtenaenes, to the said Adison Moore and George Beal and their heirs forever

In Witness Whereof, The said John B. Floyd, Esquire,
Governor of the Commonwealth of Virginia hath hereunto set his hand and caused the Lesser Seal of the said Commonwealth to be affixed at Richmond, on the thirty first day of July in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and forty nine, and of the Commonwealth the seventy fourth.

(Signed) John B. Floyd

(Wax Seal attached here)

Note: Underlined words are printed by a press on the document.

Ivan Sharp got Uncle Hugh Sharp's old Deeds etc. This was among those papers. This deed does cover land on Gauley Mt. Wm Sharp bought Hamon Sharp land on the Gauley side of Elk at Slatyfork. Ella Sharp Gibson retained mineral rights on Gauley Mt., so she must have owned some land there at one time. The waterfalls mentioned must be the one near mouth of Slatyfork. (or remotely the one on Buck Hollow--up Slatyfork)
Why does this Deed say "include any of said Sharp's land"?
Ramona Sharp Shipley has the original Deed in her possession. (Parkersburg, W. Va.

Hugh Sharp and Capt. Nimrod(?) G. Munday(Mundy) received 105,000 A acres from Benjamin Rich, October 1875

87

Whereas, Benjamine Rich and Thortitos (?) Courow (?) who were joint owners of the James (?) Welch survey of one hundred and five thousand acres of land situated on the head waters of Elk and Gauley Rivers in Webster and Pocahontas counties in the State of West Virginia did on x the day of October 1875 enter into an agreement in writing with Nimrod(?) G. Mundy and Hugh Sharp of the State of West aforesaid ly which agreement the said Mundy and Sharp were to take possession of the said tract of land; and whereas the said Mundy and Sharp did take possession of said tract of land and did build a house on the same and the same Munday and Sharp now have possession of said land; and whereas the said agreement under which they entered into said land has been lost ar mislaid. Now this paper writing is made for the purpose of recognizing and (?) ←(cosetie ?) using said agreement and the tenanancy of the said Munday and Sharp and(?) continueing said tenancy.

Witness our hands and seals the 27th day of October 1887

Benjamin Rich (SEAL)
N. G. Mundy (SEAL)
H. C. Sharp (SEAL)

Executed in duplicate

This was some sort of a deed or attempt to get a deed for land maybe supposed to be recorded (but wasn't)?) in the court house. (Some records were lost during the Civil War when records were hid in haystacks etc to prevent the Yankees(?) from taking or burning them. (One record book was lost then)
Or this may have been an attempt to claim the land by "Squatter's Rights"---?

81
LDS#2

Now Mr. Sharp, there is just one thought that I wish to give you and that is that the stockholders of this Fair Company are just a little different from the Fair itself. In other words, the stockholders give to the people of Pocahontas a fair ground on which to hold their fair and in return they should and will get a reasonable return on the money invested. The fair itself is a public spirited proposition but the fair ground is a business proposition, although, of course, the investment is prompted to a very great extent by public spiritedness. (In other words, the first item on the fair company's expense account is the dividends to the stockholders and then the other expenses connected with the fair before the premium lis is considered, so that the stockholders can rest assured that they will ge their dividend.) Of course, all the property, buildings and everything con nected with the fair belongs to the stockholders, but it is just the way w have of handling this proposition to make it a success financially. When any one donates service to the fair, they should not feel that they are do nating anything to the stockholders but they are simply helping the fair. feel sure you will catch my idea and that it is of great assitance in sell stock, and the only way that we could handle the matter successfully in my opinion. In other words, we are to treat it as one separate and distinct proposition. Of course, anything more than the 6% dividend that the fair would make in any one year will be paid the stockholders, but the idea in mind is that we are going to pay them a 6% dividend as our insurance that we take out insures the payment of the dividend even though it rains every day of the fair.)

We have the following old subscribers from your district who have not paid up as yet:

(S.B. Wallace's Letter to L.L. Sharp)

[redacted]	5 shares
[redacted]	10 "
[redacted]	2 "
[redacted]	2 "
[redacted]	2 "
[redacted]	1 "
[redacted]	5 "
[redacted]	1 "

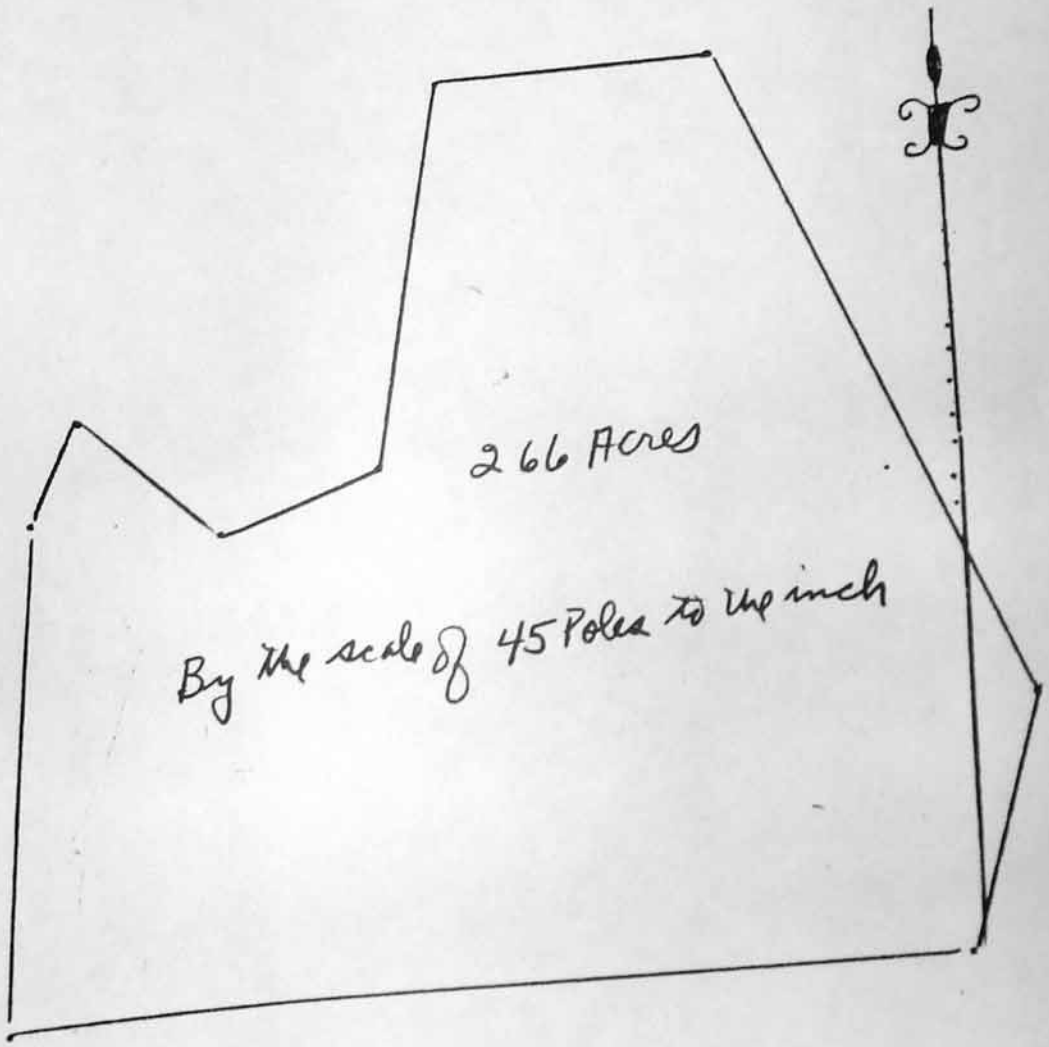
Now it seems that there must be some cause [illegible]

David & John Hannah Deed to Clunen ? 266 acres

(Courses?) of land sold by David & John Hannah to atty containing 266 acres on the water of the middle run being part of a survey of 450 acres bounded as follows (Tourt)

Beginning at a sugar tree and beech corner to 720 acres pattented to George Beel and Adison Moore and with there line N 14 E 68 poles to a Sugar tree & spruce pine on a ridge N 25 W 180 poles crossing the middle run to yew pine doble ironwood & sugar tree on a steep hillside thence leaving said line S 85 W 70 poles to 2 yew pines and Chestnut by a drain S 11 W 100 poles to a beech & birch S 68 W 49 poles to a yew pine sugar tre & lynn N 52 W 46 poles to an ash sugartree & yew pine S 27 W 28 poles to 2 yew pines near a large ledge of rocks S 5 W 130 poles to 2 ~~yew pines x x x x x x~~ maples & spruce pine N 86 E 246 poles to the beginning which is the division line

signed S. H. Clark



Thomas Wood's Deed to Wm Sharp Jan. 11, 1843 Book 3, Page 514 82

Deed from Thomas Wood and wife to Wm Sharp bearing date 11th day of January, 1843 for one undivided half of Lot No. 8 known as a survey made by Stephen Sherwood in the year 1786 - on which a patent issued in the year 1787 in the name of Joseph Pennell (the half of the lot aforesaid) conveyed by Wood to Sharp contains 2500 acres, and bounded as follows, to wit: Beginning at 2 sugars on top of the mountain on a line dividing Lots No. 7 & 8. Then with the said line S 33½ W 526 poles to a birch on a rocky ridge, thence N 27 W 105¼ poles to a Beech & Spruce on Gauley Mountain, Thence N. 14 E. 480 poles crossing Elk River to a beech and cucumber in a small bottom near the river. S 36 E 1200 poles to the beginning. ---

Abstract taken from Deed of Record in Clerks office of County Court of Pocahontas in Deed Book No 3 Page ~~5th~~ 514.

Teste

Wm Curry clerk

This abstract taken from Deed Book #3 Page 514

Ramona Shipley has the original abstract of Deed
Reference made to Deed Book #3, Page 514

Which William Sharp is this ??

Wm. II (1772-1860) lived and burried near Fairview. He may have bought it for Wm III---?? (age 71 when deed written)

Wm. III 1815-1888) lived at Slatyfork and buried in Sharp cemetery.
---age 28 when Deed made.

By checking the Court House records, one might get a clue, since this is only an Abstract of the Deed.

See deed 1860 - Wm II To Wm III

Report on Lot #8. -- a Correction? Lot 7 & 8 July 19, 1854 87

Copy from surveyor's report made 19th July 1854: by S. H. Clark, of Lot No. 8---- Begin at a cucumber S 37½ E crossing Elk at XX 150 poles in all 1490 poles to a sugar tree in place of a stake called for in pat. of Lot No. 8 & No. 7 (?) (sva 1/3 102 poles longer S(?) (S35,?X) W crossing big spring at 300 Slatyfork 650 in 1160 to a pine & two birches on west brow of mountain ½° variation & 88 longer, thence X N 33 W 370 no cor (corner?) found hickory called for. 1° variation N 2 W crossing slatyfork at 276 big spring at 380 crossing slatefork at 276, big spring at 380 , crossing(elk (?)) at 1288 XXI (?) in all 1754 to big -(beginning . (?)

Ramond Shipley has the original copy of this.

A reference to Lots No 7 & 8 is in Thomas Woods Deed to Wm Sharp 1843

A reference to Lot # 8 is in Deed of Wm Sharp to Wm Sharp, Jr. 1860
(but this (1860) is after the above "report"

89 Wm. Sharp, Sr. (II) Deed to Wm. Sharp, Jr. (III) 11-2-1860. 2020 Acres. 88

This deed of conveyance made this 2nd day of Nov. in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty between William Sharp Sr, of the County of Pocahontas and State of Virginia of the first part and William Sharp, Jr. of the County and State aforesaid of the second part, witneseth that the said William Sharp Sr. of the first part in consideration of the natural love and affection he bears toward his son Wm. Sharp, Jr. and for the further consideration of the sum of five dollars to him in hand paid by the said Wm Sharp, Jr. before the ensealing and delivery of these presents the receipt thereof is hereby acknowledged by the said William Sharp, Sr. hath given, granted and conveyed and by these presents doth give grant and convey unto his son Wm. Sharp, a certain tract or parcel of land lying and being in the county of Pocahontas and State of Virginia on the waters of Elk River and containing 2020 acres being part of a lot of 2951 acres known as half of Lot No. 8 of the Pennell Survey formerly conveyed to Wm Sharp by Thomas Wood and wife and bounded as follows to wit: Beginning at three beenhes near a low place in Middle Mountain on the line dividing Lot No 8 Thence S. 82½ W. 105 poles to a Sugar and Beech on the brow of the mountain. Thence S 42 W. 22 poles to two sugar trees on the brow of the mountain Thence S 20 W. 66 poles to two beeches and Sugar tree by a drain, Thence 46 W. 76 (46 W 76 W 21 POLES) W 21 poles to two sugar trees & beech, Thence S 76½ W 76 poles to two beeches and cubumber, Thence S 20 W. 52 poles to a beech and two white lynns on the side of the mountain, Thence S 71 W. 40 poles to a cucumber and beech, Thence S 24½ E. 201 poles to two ashes and two maples on the top of a ridge, Thence S 34 W. 103 poles to two beeches and sugar tree on the back line of the original survey. Thence with the same S 27 E. 785 poles to a brich on a rocky ridge, thence N 33½ E 526 poles to two sugar trees on the top of the mountain. Beginning corner of the original survey, Thence N 36 W. 670 poles to the beginning.

To have and to Hold the same two thousand and twenty acres of Land together with all and singular the premises and appurtenances (&c) unto the Said William Sharp, Jr., his Heirs and assigns forever To and for the only use and behoof of him the said William Sharp Jr, his Heirs and assigns in all Time to come.

In Witness whereof the said William Sharp Sen,,(Sr?) hath hereto set his hand and (Seal) the day and year first above written.

Signed, sealed and acknowledged
In presence of

William Sharp (SEAL) signed

Pocahontas County to Wit:

I, William Baxter, a Justice of the Peace for the County aforesaid in the state of Virginia do certify that William Sharp Sr. whose name is signed to the writing above bearing date on the 2nd day of November 1860 has acknowledged the same before me in my County aforesaid, given under my hand this 2nd day of Nov. 1860

William Baxter, J. P.

Clerks Office of the County Court of Pocahontas 6th November 1860

This deed from William Sharp, Sen. to William Sharp, Jr. was presented in the Clerk's office and the certificate of the execution and acknowledgement being legally certified, the same is admitted to record.

Teste: Wm Curry , Clerk

In Deed Book # 8 Page 121

89

Hugh Sharp Deed to Sarah E. Sharp, 3-25-1885 Deed Book 17, Page 75.

89

This Deed made this 25th day of March 1885 between Hugh C. Sharp of the first part and Sarah E. Sharp of the second part all of the County of Pocahontas And State of West Virginia. Witnesseth, That for and in consideration of one dollar paid to him by the said Sarah E. Sharp the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged the said Hugh C. Sharp does grant, bargain and convey to the said Sarah E. Sharp with general warranty all his right and title and interest in a certain tract of land (except one hundred and fifty acres adjoining the lands of S. L. Gibson and James Gibson in the southern corner of the said tract) and lying on Elk River adjoining the lands of John Hannah, James Gibson, and others and bounded as follows, Viz: Beginning at a red oake beach and sugar tree below the mouth of Slate fork and by the creek on Jacob Sharp's line and with the same N 35 E 75 poles to 2 ashes and 2 maples on a ridge, thence leaving said line North 79½ E 28 poles to a yew pine and two beeches on a ridge and on a clift of rocks S 71 E 74 ps to 3 beeches on a ridge and opposite the Sharp School house S80 E 295 poles to 2 linns and 2 beeches on the side of Slate Fork Mountain S 18 E 44 poles to 2 beeches near the brow of the mountain S 79 E 76 poles to 3 beeches S 56 E 28 poles to 2 beeches S 67 E 92 poles to 2 sugars cor to the original tract of which this is a prt and with same (or sane)? S 33½ W 650 poles to a spruce pine and 2 birches on the side of the Mt, N 27 W 524 poles to a sugar and beech by the pike. Thence leaving said line N 34½ E 29 to a stake N 10½ E 10 poles to a cherry by the road, Thence N 13½ W 63 poles to 3 beeches by the creek N 3½ W 23 poles to a beech and 2 spruces near the bank of the creek N 47 W 40 poles down said creek and through a mill dam to the beginning corner, and containing twelve hundred acres of land, more or less, and being a part of a tract of 2020 acres conveyed by Deed from Wm Sharp to the said Hugh C. Sharp. Witnesseth, the following signatures and seal this the 25th day of March 1885

Hugh C X Sharp (Seal)
his mark

Teste Wm B. Hannah, Jr.
Samuel (W?)(M ?) Gibson

State of West Virginia, Pocahontas County ---To wit.
I, a justice of the said county and district of Edray do certify that Hugh C. Sharp whose name is signed to the above writing bearing date 25th day of March 1885 hath this day acknowledged the same before me in my said County. Given under my hand this the 26th day of March 1885

Henry N. Hannah, J. P.
(?)

Pocahontas County Court Clerk's Office, June 15, 1885.
This deed from Hugh C. Sharp to Sarah E. Sharp was presented in this office, and thereupon toghether with the certificate thereto annexed is admitted to record.

Teste John J. Beard, Clk

(paid X $1.25) Sent by mail to Silas Sharp asper his order, July 10th 1885. John J. Beard, cl'k.

- contains 1200 acres
- Part of 2,020 acres
- 150 acres not included

Sam and Mary Gibson's Deed to Sarah [illegible] Sharp 3-11-1889

90

This deed made this 11th day of March 1889 between Samuel M. Gibson and Mary J, his wife of the first part and Sarah E. Sharp of the second part, all of the Co. of Pocahontas and State of W. Va. Witnesseth that for and in consideration of the sum of one dollar cash paid in hand the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged the said Sam M. Gibson and Mary J. his wife doth sell and convey unto the said Sarah E. Sharp a certain tract of land lying in the co. of Pocahontas and State of W. Va. on the East side of Old Field Fork of Elk River, adjoining the lands of S. L. Gibson, H. N. Hannah and others (it being a tract of land conveyed to said Samuel M. Gibson and wife by George P. Hannah and also a tract of 35 acres conveyed to the said Saml M. Gibson by J. T. (or L?) Hoggsett containing in all two hundred and two acres more or less together with all appurtenances there unto --attached and warrant generally the land herein conveyed. Witnesseth the following signatures and seals.
Samuel M. Gibson (SEAL) Mary J. Gibson (SEAL)

State of W. Va. , Pocahontas County.
I, H. N. Hannah, a Justice in and for the County and State afore said do hereby certify that S. M. Gibson whose name is signed to the writing hereunto annixed, bearing date on the 11th day of March 1889 acknowledged the same before me in my County aforesaid. I also hereby further certify that Mary J. Gibson, the wife of Samuel M. Gibson whose names are signed to the writing hereunto annexed bearing date on the 11th day of March 1889 personally appeared before me in my County aforesaid, and being examined by me privity and apart from her husband and having the writing aforesaid fully explained to her, She the said Mary J. Gibson acknowledged said writing to be her act and declared that she had willingly executed the Same and does not wish to retract it.
Given under my hand this 11th day of March 1889.
Henry N. Hannah, J. P.

Pocahontas County Court Clerk's Office, Jan. 7th , 1890.
This deed was this day presented to me in my office and therefore together with the.....

Dave: This Mary Gibson was the sister of Sarah (Hannah) Sharp, and the daughter of David Hannah. Also the sister of Melinda Hannah that married John Rose, and sister of Rev Geo. Hannah, Henry, and of Otha who died and had vision of Heaven. Mary was the baby that Otha asked to place in the fireplace to show that it would not be harmed when he had his vision. Another brother, Joe, died a few days before Otha.

91 Silas Sharp, Sarah Sharp & Hugh Sharp to L. D.Sharp (Book 26,Page 56)
March 30, 1895 91

This Deed made this 30th day of March, 1895 between Silas Sharp and Sarah E. Sharp, his wife and Hugh C. Sharp of the one part and Luther D. Sharp of the other part all of the county of Pocahontas and State of W. Va. Witnesseth: That for and in consideration of the sum of one dollar paid to them by the said Luther D. Sharp the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, the said Silas Sharp, Sarah E. Sharp and Hugh C. Sharp doth grant,bargain, sell and convey unto the said Luther D. Sharp with general warranty all their right, title and interest in a certain tract of land containing 496 acres and bounded as follows. Beginning at 2 Lynns and 2 Beeches on the side of Slatyfork Mountain, corner to Hugh C. Sharp and with his lines S 18 E 42 4/5 poles to 2 Beeches near the B_____(brow?) of the _____ (Mtn.?) S 79 E 15 poles to 2 Beeches on top of Slatyfork Mountain corner to M. Ella F. Gibson and Malinda C. Hannah and with the same S 22 W 26¼ poles to a bunch of Lynns on a hill side ; S 30 W. 68 poles to a stone center and Sugar, Beech and Ironwood; S 47 W. 350 poles - at 52 poles crosses Slaty Fork - at 68 poles crosses Buck Lick Fork to 2 Beeches and 2 Yew Pines on hillside on a line of S. L. Gibson's Heirs, and with the same N. 20½ W. 47 poles to 2 Lynns and 2 Beeches; continued 246 poles to a rock above the turnpike road (¼ N 10 E _____(from?) a Hemlock witness) corner to lower lot and with the same; and with the meanderings of the turnpike road; N. 10 E. 35 3/4 poles to the Cleveland Rock; N 59 E 85 poles a Beech and Service below the road; thence leaving the meanderings of the road; S 69½ E 62 poles - crossing the road twice and the Slatyfork and the road to a stake by the road at the ford of the creek S 58¼ E. 92 poles to 3 Lynns at the foot of a hill near the Creek ; N 36 E. 48 poles to a cucumber witnessed by a small cucumber and Beech on a hillside near the top of a spur; N 20 E 43 (43) poles to a Beech witnessed by 2 beeches on a hillside; N 30 E 24 poles to 2 beeches on Hugh C. Sharp's line and with the same S 79½ E 108 poles to the beginning. The said Silas Sharp and Sarah E. Sharp,his wife, reserves the right and privilege of cutting any timber they may want to use and to run any stock they may wish on the said above described tract of land free of charge. Witness the following signatures and Seals, this 30th day of March 1895.
Silas Sharp (Seal), Sarah E. Sharp (Seal) & Hugh C Sharp (Seal)
("X" --his mark)

State of W. Va., Pocahontas County: To Wit; I, A. C. L. Gatewood, a Justice of the Peace in and for the County aforesaid, do certify that Silas Sharp, Sarah E. Sharp, his wife, and Hugh C. Sharp whose names are signed to the writing bearing date on the 30th day of March 1895, acknowledged the same before me in my county aforesaid. Given under my hand this 30t day of March 1895 (signed)--A.C.. Gatewood, J. P

W. Va. : Clerk's Office of the County Court of Pocahontas County, May 1, 1895. This Deed from Silas Sharp & wife, and Hugh C. Sharp to L. D. Sharp was this day presented to me, in my office, and thereupon, the same together with the certificate of acknowledgment thereunder written is admitted to record.

Teste: S. L. Brown, Clerk

Dade: "Buck Lick Fork" apparently is the run that we called "Buck Hollow"--where Lowell Gibson has his camp.
Cleveland Rock is a large rock that rolled off the bank, almost blocking the old road--between "round top of the hill" and a place near Lou Gibson's place on Rt 219. "Cleveland" painted on it when he was running for President of USA.

92 Deed Book 33, Page 122 92

SARAH E. SHARP'S DEED TO L. D. SHARP 9-27-1902

This deed made this the 27th day of Sept. 1902 between Sarah E. Sharp party of the first part and L. D. Sharp party of the second part all of the County of Pocahontas, West Va. Witnesseth, That for and in consideration of the sum of one dollar paid by the party of the second part to the party of the first part the receipt whereof in hereby acknowledged, the said party of the first part herebygrants and conveys to the party of the second part with covenants of general warranty; all her right, title and interest in and to a certain tract or parcel of land containing 165 acres lying on the Slatyfork of Elk River at or near its junction with the Old Field Fork situated in Pocahontas County, W. Va. and is and described as follows to wit: Beginning at (A) 2 maples and 2 askes in rocks on top of a ridge--corner to Hugh C. Sharp and with the same N. 80½ E 27 3/4 poles to a number of small birches on rocks by dead Yew Pine -- and 2 - dead Beaches S70½ E71½ poles to 3 beeches on a ridge opposite the Old School House S 77¼ E 180 poles to two beeches, corner to part laid off for L. D. Sharp and with the same S 30 W 24 poles to a Beech witnessed by 2 Beeches on a hillside S 20 W. 43 poles to a Cucumber witnessed by a small cucumber and Beech on a hillside near the top of a Spur... S 36 W. 48 poles to 3 Lynns at the foot of a hill near Slatyfork, N 58¼ W 92 Poles to a stake at the pike at the ford of Slatyfork N 69½ W 62 poles, crossing the road and creek and crossing the road again twice to a beech and Service below the road thence with the meanderings of the Turnpike road S 59 W 85 poles to the Cleavland Rock S 10 W 35 3/4 poles to a Stone ¼ pole short of a Hemlock witness above the road on the old line and with the same N 20½ (20½) W 54 poles to 2 beeches on the bank of the Old Field Fork continued 45 poles to a Birch on the bank of the creek corner to H. B. Sharp and with the same N 20 W 22 poles crossing the Slatyfork to a stake on the McCutchean line and leaving the same N 36 E 60 poles to the beginning.

This said 165 acres of land conveyed by this deed being a part of a tract of land conveyed as 1200 acres but afterwards surveyed and found to contain 1105 acres and was conveyed by H. C. Sharp to the said Sarah E. Sharp by deed bearing date on the 25th day of March 1885 and of record in the office of the Clerk of the County Court of Pocahont Co. W. Va. in Deed Book No 17 Page 75 to which deed reference is here made for a more complete description of said land.

The said party of the first part reserves the right to one half of the house in which the said parties now reside and the one third of the frui in the orchard on this tract of land and the said party of the first par agrees and binds himself to keep one horse and one cow for the party of the first part during her natural life. The said party of the second pa further agrees and binds himself to comfortably support, keep and mainta and furnish with all the necessaries of life the said party of the first part during the period of her natural life, and after her death the said party of the second part takeseverything reserved in this deed by the party of ther first part. To have and to hold unto the said party o the seonc part his heirs and assigns forever. Witness the following signatures and seal. Sanah E. Sharp (SEAL), State of W. Va., Co. of Poc ahontas, to wit: I, T. S. McNeel a notary public in and for Poc. Co. do certify that Sarah E. Sharp whose name is signed to the writing above bearing date on the 27th day of Sept 1902 has this day acknowledged this same before me in my said Co. Given under my hand this 27th day of Sept 1902 T. S. McNeel- N. P.

Clerks Office 9-27-02: This Deed from Sarah E. Sharp to L. D. Sharp was day presented to me in my office and thereupon the same together with th certificate of acknowledgement hereunder written, is adimtted to record. Teste : S. L. Brown, Clerk

92 Deed Book 33, Page 122 92

SARAH E. SHARP'S DEED TO L. D. SHARP 9-27-1902

This deed made this the 27th day of Sept. 1902 between Sarah E. Sharp party of the first part and L. D. Sharp party of the second part all of the County of Pocahontas, West Va. Witnesseth, That for and in consideration of the sum of one dollar paid by the party of the second part to the party of the first part the receipt whereof in hereby acknowledged, the said party of the first part herebygrants and conveys to the party of the second part with covenants of general warranty; all her right, title and interest in and to a certain tract or parcel of land containing 165 acres lying on the Slatyfork of Elk River at or near its junction with the Old Field Fork situated in Pocahontas County, W. Va. and is and described as follows to wit: Beginning at (A) 2 maples and 2 askes in rocks on top of a ridge--corner to Hugh C. Sharp and with the same N. 80¼ E 27 3/4 poles to a number of small birches on rocks by dead Yew Pine -- and 2 - dead Beaches S70½ E71½ poles to 3 beeches on a ridge opposite the Old School House S 77¼ E 180 poles to two beeches, corner to part laid off for L. D. Sharp and with the same S 30 W 24 poles to a Beech witnessed by 2 Beeches on a hillside S 20 W. 43 poles to a Cucumber witnessed by a small cucumber and Beech on a hillside near the top of a Spur... S 36 W. 48 poles to 3 Lynns at the foot of a hill near Slatyfork, N 58¼ W 92 Poles to a stake at the pike at the ford of Slatyfork N 69½ W 62 poles, crossing the road and creek and crossing the road again twice to a beech and Service below the road thence with the meanderings of the Turnpike road S 59 W 85 poles to the Cleavland Rock S 10 W 35 3/4 poles to a Stone ¼ pole short of a Hemlock witness above the road on the old line and with the same N 20½ (20½) W 54 poles to 2 beeches on the bank of the Old Field Fork continued 45 poles to a Birch on the bank of the creek corner to H. B. Sharp and with the same N 20 W 22 poles crossing the Slatyfork to a stake on the McCutchean line and leaving the same N 36 E 60 poles to the beginning.

This said 165 acres of land conveyed by this deed being a part of a tract of land conveyed as 1200 acres but afterwards surveyed and found to contain 1105 acres and was conveyed by H. C. Sharp to the said Sarah E. Sharp by deed bearing date on the 25th day of March 1885 and of record in the office of the Clerk of the County Court of Pocahontas Co. W. Va. in Deed Book No 17 Page 75 to which deed reference is here made for a more complete description of said land.

The said party of the first part reserves the right to one half of the house in which the said parties now reside and the one third of the fruit in the orchard on this tract of land and the said party of the first part agrees and binds himself to keep one horse and one cow for the party of the first part during her natural life. The said party of the second part further agrees and binds himself to comfortably support, keep and maintain and furnish with all the necessaries of life the said party of the first part during the period of her natural life, and after her death the said party of the second part takeseverything reserved in this deed by the party of ther first part. To have and to hold unto the said party of the seono part his heirs and assigns forever. Witness the following signatures and seal. Sanah E. Sharp (SEAL), State of W. Va., Co. of Pocahontas, to wit: I, T. S. McNeel a notary public in and for Poc. Co. do certify that Sarah E. Sharp whose name is signed to the writing above bearing date on the 27th day of Sept 1902 has this day acknowledged this same before me in my said Co. Given under my hand this 27th day of Sept 1902 T. S. McNeel- N. P.

Clerks Office 9-27-02: This Deed from Sarah E. Sharp to L. D. Sharp was this day presented to me in my office and thereupon the same together with the certificate of acknowledgement hereunder written, is adimtted to record.

Teste : S. L. Brown, Clerk

THIS DEED made this the 8th day of August, 1912, between Hugh C. Sharp, party of the first part, and L. D. Sharp, party of the second part, all of the County of Pocahontas, State of West Virginia;

WITNESSETH: That for and in consideration of the sum of Ten ($10.00) Dollars cash in hand paid, the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, and the natural love and affection which he bears to his nephew, L. D. Sharp, and the further consideration to be hereinafter mentioned, the said party of the first part does hereby grant, sell and convey unto the said party of the second part, a certain tract or parcel of land situate lying and being in the County of Pocahontas State of WestVirginia, on the Big Spring Branch of Elk River containing 868.64 acres, more or less, and is a part of 2020 acres, which is a part of the lot of 2951 acres, known as "Half of Lot No. 8" of the Pennell survey, formerly conveyed to William Sharp, Sr., by Thomas Wood and wife and the tract of land hereby conveyed is bounded and described as follows: Beginning at two sugars on top of Slaty Fork Mountain, corner to the West Virginia Pulp & Paper Company and running N 31-45 W at 4430' to the Turn Pike, corner to John T. McGraw eight acre tract sold by William Sharp to R. K. Wilson and with the Pike to a small beech on the edgeof the Pike; thence N 25 E 33 feet to a small beech and pointers on the bank of a small drain; N 47 W 922 feet crossing the Big gone, small sugar marked, pointers marked; also corner to Harmon Sharp's land and with the same S 21-09 E 2100 feet; crossing Big Spring Branch of Yelk in all 3400 feet to two ashes corner to L. D. Sharp and with his line N 81 -15 E 463 feet to a stake, two yew pines and basswood called for now gone; S 70-30 E 1225 feet to two beeches on a ridge corner to the graveyard lot and with the same N 11 -30 E 45 feet to astake; S 86 W 175 feet to a set stone; S 11-30 W 70 feet to a set stone on the old line, leaving the Graveyard; S 78-07 E 4625 feet to two beeches and two lynns on the north of the mountain; S 17-51 E 680 feet to two beeches near the brow of the mountain; S 77-06 E at 231 feet to L. D. Sharp's corner leaving same and with the West Virginia Pulp & Paper Company in all 935 feet to three beeches; S 54-30 E 463 feet to two beeches; S 64-30 E 1217 feet to the beginning.

The further consideration of this deed as mentioned above, for the land hereby conveyed is that the said party of the second part agrees and binds himself to furnish and provide to the said Hugh C. Sharp all the proper maintenance and support during his natural life, such as clothing, food, medical attention and spending money necessary, as requested by the said party of the first part, consistent with his station in life, and everything so as to make the said party of the first part comfortable during his life-time and to provide a respectable funeral and burial for saidparty

95

State of West Virginia, County of Pocahontas, to wit:

I, G. S. Welford, Justice of the Peace in and for Pocahontas County, West Virginia do hereby certify that Hugh C. Sharp, whose name is signed to the foregoing writing, bearing date the 6th day of August, 1912, has this day acknowledged the same before me in my said County.

Given under my hand this the 2nd day of September, 1912.

G. S. Welford, Justice of the Peace.

WEST VIRGINIA:

Clerk's Office County Court Pocahontas County,

September 6th, 1912.

This deed from Hugh C. Sharp to L. D. Sharp was this day presented to me in my office and thereupon the same together with the certificate of acknowledgment thereunder written, is admitted to record.

Teste: C. J. McCARTY Clerk

STATE OF WEST VIRGINIA,

COUNTY OF POCAHONTAS, to-wit:

I, Hildreth T. Meadows, Clerk of the County Court of Pocahontas County, State of West Virginia, do hereby certify that the foregoing is a true and correct copy from the records of my said office.

GIVEN under my hand and seal this the 30th day of July, 1963.

Hildreth T. Meadows

Clerk of the County Court of Pocahontas County, West Virginia.

L.D.Sharp Deed 496 Acres to Sons 12-12-1934 Deed Book 70, Page 478 96

This Deed made this 12th day of Dec. 1934 between Luther D. Sharp and M. E. Sharp, his wife, parties of the first part, and Ivan L. Sharp, Silas S. Sharp, Paul L. Sharp, and Luther D. Sharp Jr. parties of the second part, all of the Co of Pocahontas and state of W. Va. Witnesseth: That for and in consideration of the sum of one dollar paid cash in hand the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, and for love and affection the said parties of the first part do hereby grant, sell and convey with the covenants of general warranty to the parties of the second part jointly all of the following described tract of land, situated in the Edray Dist. of Pocahontas Co. on the waters of Slatyfork, a branch of Elk River, and was conveyed to Luther D. Sharp by Silas Sharp, Sarah E. Sharp and Hugh Sharp, by deed dated March 30th 1895 and of record in the office of the County Clerk of Pocahontas Co., in Deed Book 26 at page 56 and bounded as follows, beginning at two lynns and two beeches on the West side of Slatyfork mountain a corner of the Hugh Sharp lands, and with the same, S. 18 E. 42.8 poles to two beeches near the brow of the mountain S. 79 E. 15 poles to two beeches on top of the mountain, corner to the W. Va. Pulp and Paper Co. and with same, S. 22 W. 26¼ poles to a bunch of lynns on a hillside, S. 30 W. 68 poles to a sugar, beech and ironwood with a stone center, S. 47 W. 350 poles, crossing Slatyfork at 52 poles, Bucklick run at 68 poles to two beeches and two spruce pines on a hillside, on a line of S. L. Gibson's Heirs, and with same, S. 20½ W. 47 poles to two lynns and two beeches, continued 246 poles to a rock above the old Turnpike, hemlock pointer, and with the meanderings of said pike, N. 10 E. 35 3/4 poles to the Cleveland Rock, N. 59 E. 85 poles to a beech and service below the road, thence leaving the meandering of the road, S. 69½ E. 62 poles crossing the road twice, crossing Slatyfork and the road to a stake, by the creek at the ford, S. 58¼ E. 92 poles to three lynns at the foot of the hill near the creek. N. 36 E. 48 poles to a cucumber witnessed by a small cucumber and beech on a hillside, near the top a spur N. 20 E. 43 poles to a beech witnessed by two beeches, on a hillside, N. 30 E. 24 poles to two beeches in a line of the Hugh Sharp land and with said line N. 79½ E. 108 poles to the beginning, containing 496 acres, more or less, to have and to hold unto the parties of the second part their Heirs and assigns forever.

Witness the following signatures and seals. Luther D. Sharp, M. E. Sharp (Mabel) (SEALS)

State of W. Va. Pocahontas Co., to-wit: I, Jesse P. Hannah, a Notary Public in and for the Co. of Pocahontas do certify that Luther D. Sharp and M. E. Sharp, his wife, whose names are signed to the writing above, bearing date on the 12th day of December, 1934, have acknowledged the same before me in my said County. Given under my hand this the 31st day of Dec. 1934. My commission expires Mar. 18, 1939. (Notarial Seal) Jesse P. Hannah, N. P.

State of W. Va., Clerk's office of the County Court of Pocahontas Co, Jan. 4th, 1935. This Deed from Luther D. Sharp and wife to Ivan L. Sharp et al was this day presented to me in my office, and thereupon the same, together with the certificate of acknowledgment thereunder written, is admitted to record therein. Teste: Moody Kincaid, Clerk.

(mailed to Ivan Sharp, Slatyfork Jan 10, 1935 (1935)

(A reference above to Deed Book 26, Page 56, 3-30-1895, Silas, Sarah, and Hugh Sharp to L. D. Sharp.)

This deed of Conveyance made this 2nd day of November in the year of our Lord one thousand Eight Hundred and Sixty between William Sharp Sr. of the County of Pocahontas and State of Virginia of the first part and William Sharp Jr. of the County and State aforesaid of the second part witnesseth that the said William Sharp Sr. of the first part in consideration of the natural love and affection he bears toward his son Wm. Sharp Jr. and for the further consideration of the sum of five dollars to him in hand paid by the said William Sharp Jr. before the ensealing and delivery of these presents the receipt thereof is hereby acknowledged by the said William Sharp Sr. hath given granted and Conveyed and by these presents doth give grant & convey unto his

W. 21 poles to two sugar trees & beech. Thence
S. 76½° W 76 poles to two beeches and cucumber thence S. 20° W. 52 poles poles to a beech and two white lynns on the side of the mtn
Lain thence S. 71° W. 40 poles to a cucumber and & beech thence S. 24½° E 20 poles to two ashes and two maples. on the top of a Ridge. thence S. 34°
W 103 poles to two beeches and Sugar tree on the bac line of the original Survey. thence with the sam
S. 27° E 785 poles to a birch on a rocky ridge. then
N. 33½° E 526 poles to two sugar trees on the top of th mountain. Beginning corner of the original survey thence N. 36° W. 670 poles to the beginning.

To Have and to Hold the said Two Thousand and Twenty Acres of Land, Together With all and ~~Singular the Appurtenances and Appurtenances unto the~~
~~said~~ William Sharp Jr. his Heirs and Assigns Forever.
To & for the only use and behoof of him the said
William Sharp Jr. his Heirs & Assigns in all time to come. In Witness Whereof the said William Sharp Senr. hath hereto set his hand and Seal
the day and Year first above Written.
Signed Sealed & Acknowledged in the Presence of us

William Sharp Senr

I William Baxter a Justice of the peace for the County aforesaid in the state of Virginia do cert fy that William Sharp Sr. whose name is signed to the writing above bearing date on the 2nd day of November 1860 has acknowledged the same before me in my County aforesaid. Given under my hand this 2nd day of Nov. 1860

William Baxter J.P.

Clerks Office of the County Court of Pocahontas
6th November 1860.

This Deed from William Sharp Sent. to William Sharp jr. was presented in the Clerks office
& the certificate of the execution & acknowledgment being legally certified, the same is admitted to record

Teste

Jno Curry Clk

In Deed Book # Page 121

John B. Floyd Esquire Governor of the Commonwealth of Virginia:

To all to whom these Presents shall come—GREETING: Know ye, That in conformity with a Survey, made on the twenty ninth day of June one thousand eight hundred and forty eight by virtue of Land Office Treasury Warrant, No. 12,846

there is granted by the said Commonwealth, unto Addison Moore & George Beal

103

a certain Tract or Parcel of Land, containing Seven hundred & twenty six acres, lying & being in the County of Pocahontas, on both sides of Elk River, adjoining the land of William Sharp & a survey known by the name of the Pennells & Sherwood survey & bounded as follows Viz. Beginning at a spruce pine & buckeye on the East bank of the old field fork of said River below the mouth of Laby's Run & with Sharp's line & with the same so as to include any of said Sharp's land N 23 W 92 poles crossing Sholy fork at 82 poles & the Big Spring at 160 poles and Elk River at 176 poles to 3 sugar trees on the point of the Bear pen ridge near the Big Spring to p; thence leaving the Pennell & Sherwood survey S 66 W 46 poles to a sugar & buckeye on a flat S 5 W 100 poles to a sugar & poplar pointers & a maple & sycamore S 60 W 80 poles to a sugar tree & buckeye at pt 333 & 80 poles to 2 buckeye S 25 E 332 poles crossing the middle run below a water fall to a sugar tree on top of ridge at 66 poles to a sugar tree & beech corner to David & John Kennard's survey of 220 acres, & with thence S 80 E 124 poles to a pine & indian wood S 60 E 128 poles to 2 beech N 40 E 354 poles to a beech & sugar tree, leaving said line at 220 & 7 poles crossing the old field fork of Elk to the Beginning, with its Appurtenances

TO HAVE AND TO HOLD the said Tract or Parcel of Land, with its appurtenances, to the said Addison Moore & George Beal and their heirs forever

In Witness Whereof, The said John B. Floyd Esquire Governor of the Commonwealth of Virginia, hath hereunto set his hand and caused the Lesser Seal of the said Commonwealth to be affixed, at Richmond, on the thirty first day of July in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and forty nine and of the Commonwealth the seventy fourth

John B. Floyd

103

RAMSEY

Edith Harriett Ramsey

William N. Ramsey, Jr.
B. 10-18-1818 Pittsylvania Co, VA
or 12-5-1818 tombstone
D. 11-20-1857 White Sulphur Springs Greenbrier County

Md. 12-2-1839
Pittsylvania Co., VA
by Abner Anthony
Bondsman: Middleton Meade

Sarah (Sallie) Edith Meade
B. 10-29-1823
Pittsylvania Co., VA
D. 9-27-1862 (C.H.)
9-14-1862 (tombstone)
Greenbrier County Death Record
Cause of death "Fever"

William Newman Ramsey, Sr.
B. about 1772 Pittsylvania Co., VA
D. after 1840 census before 1850 census
Pittsylvania County, VA

Md. 3-17-1794
Pittsylvania Co., VA
Bondsman - Nathan Sparks

Rhoda McMillion (or MacMillion)
B. about 1776 Pittsylvania Co., VA
D. before 1840 census
Pittsylvania Co., VA

Thomas Ramsey (Revolutionary War Soldier)
B. before 10-4-1734 Pittsylvania Co., VA
D. between 4-20-1790 and 8-16-1790
Pittsylvania Co., VA
Md. before 1761 or 7-10-1762

Frances Young
B. about 1738 Pittsylvania Co., VA
D. after 1808 Pittsylvania Co., VA
(her son, Noton, was married 1808 and named mother, Frances Ramsey)

Middleton Meade
B. 10-3-1793 Pittsylvania Co., VA
D. after 1850, before 1860 Greenbrier Co.
(appears in 1850 Greenbrier Census as being 55 yrs old)

Md. 12-19-1820
Pittsylvania Co. VA
Bondsman - Noton and Rachel Ramsey, parents

Elizabeth Ramsey
B. 9-13-1803 Pittsylvania Co., VA
not from Court House
D. 4-17-1854 (Monroe Co. C.H.)
(Monroe Co. Death Record Book 1 p. 5 Line 67)
Cause - Typhoid Fever
Age 50yrs., 5mos., 4 days another source has death as 10-10-1867

Noton Ramsey
B. Pittsylvania Co, VA
D. about 1-29-1852 " " "

Md. 2-11-1808 Pittsylvania Co., VA
or 1-18-1808 " " "
or 5-30-1808 " " "
Bondsman, William Witcher, father

Rachel Witcher
B. Pittsylvania Co., VA
D. after 1852 " " "

Thomas Ramsey
(above)

Frances Young
(above)

William Witcher

Edith Ramsey

125 (death)

PEDIGREE CHART

STREET ADDRESS OR P.O.

CITY, STATE, ZIP CODE

NO. 1 ON THIS CHART IS THE SAME AS NO. ____

ON CHART NO. ____

ada
Violet
Evan
Cecil
Li
Paul

1 Luther David Sharp, Jr.
BORN 8 June 1916
WHERE Slaty Fork
WHEN MARRIED 11 July 1940
DIED
WHERE
Sylvia Virginia Friel
NAME OF HUSBAND OR WIFE

NAME OF RECORD OR BOOK WHERE THIS INFORMATION WAS OBTAINED. IF NOT NAMED ON CHART BY NUMBER

PRINTED IN U.S.A.

2 Luther David Sharp
BORN 8 June 1872
WHERE Slaty Fork
WHEN MARRIED 16 Feb. 1893
DIED 13 Mar. 1963
WHERE Marlinton Hospital

3 Laura Jane Morgan
BORN 31 Mar. 1874
WHERE Ronceverte
DIED 17 Oct. 1932
WHERE Slaty Fork

4 Silas Sharp
BORN 3-2-1842
WHERE
WHEN MARRIED
DIED 10-24-1895
WHERE Slatyfork

5 SARAH HANNAH
BORN 12-15-1844
WHERE
DIED 12-21-1905
WHERE Slatyfork

DAVID HANNAH

Hester ZICAFOOSE or SICAFOOSE (??)
from Crab Bottom

6 Rev. Samuel Craft Morgan
BORN 8 July 1847
WHERE Ronceverte
WHEN MARRIED 21 Feb. 1872
DIED 7 Jan. 1898
WHERE Falling Springs Greenbrier County

7 Edith Harriett Ramsey
BORN 20 Dec. 1855
WHERE White Sulphur Springs
DIED 25 Sept. 1932
WHERE Lobelia

8 William Sharp III
BORN 1815
WHERE
WHEN MARRIED 5-8-1888
DIED
WHERE

9 Rachel Dilley
BORN 1806
WHERE
DIED 7-31-1882
WHERE

Joseph Hannah (2 mar. Tavern 9 miles out)
BORN
WHERE WHEN MARRIED
DIED
WHERE Mill Run
Elizabeth Burnsides
BORN
WHERE
DIED
WHERE

12 James Randolph Morgan
BORN 2 April 1815
WHERE Rappahannock Co., VA
WHEN MARRIED 24 June 1841
DIED 6 May 1897
WHERE Ronceverte

13 Elizabeth Pollie "Mary" Myers
BORN 1810
WHERE Greenbrier County
DIED
WHERE Ronceverte

14 BORN
WHERE WHEN MARRIED
DIED
WHERE
See her chart

15 BORN
WHERE

16 Elizabeth Waddell
CONTINUED ON CHART 7

17 Alexander Waddell
CONTINUED ON CHART Ross

18 Martin Dilley
CONTINUED ON CHART

19 Hannah Moore
CONTINUED ON CHART Margaret Moore born 2 Aug. 1765

20 David Hannah, Sr.
Lived Locust Creek
From Ireland
Elizabeth Gibson from Augusta County
CONTINUED ON CHART

22 CONTINUED ON CHART

Alex. Waddell (above)
B. Feb 1732 near Glasgow, Scotland
D. Sept 6, 1834 Green Township Gallia Co. Ohio
Md. about 1770-72 Shenandoah Co. Va.

Eleanor Ransch - Nora Roush
B. 1751-52 Millseek Valley near Mt. Jackson, Va
D. Oct 27, 1827 Gallia Co. Ohio daughter of John Adams Ransch (1711-1786) and of Susannah Lehern (?-1796)

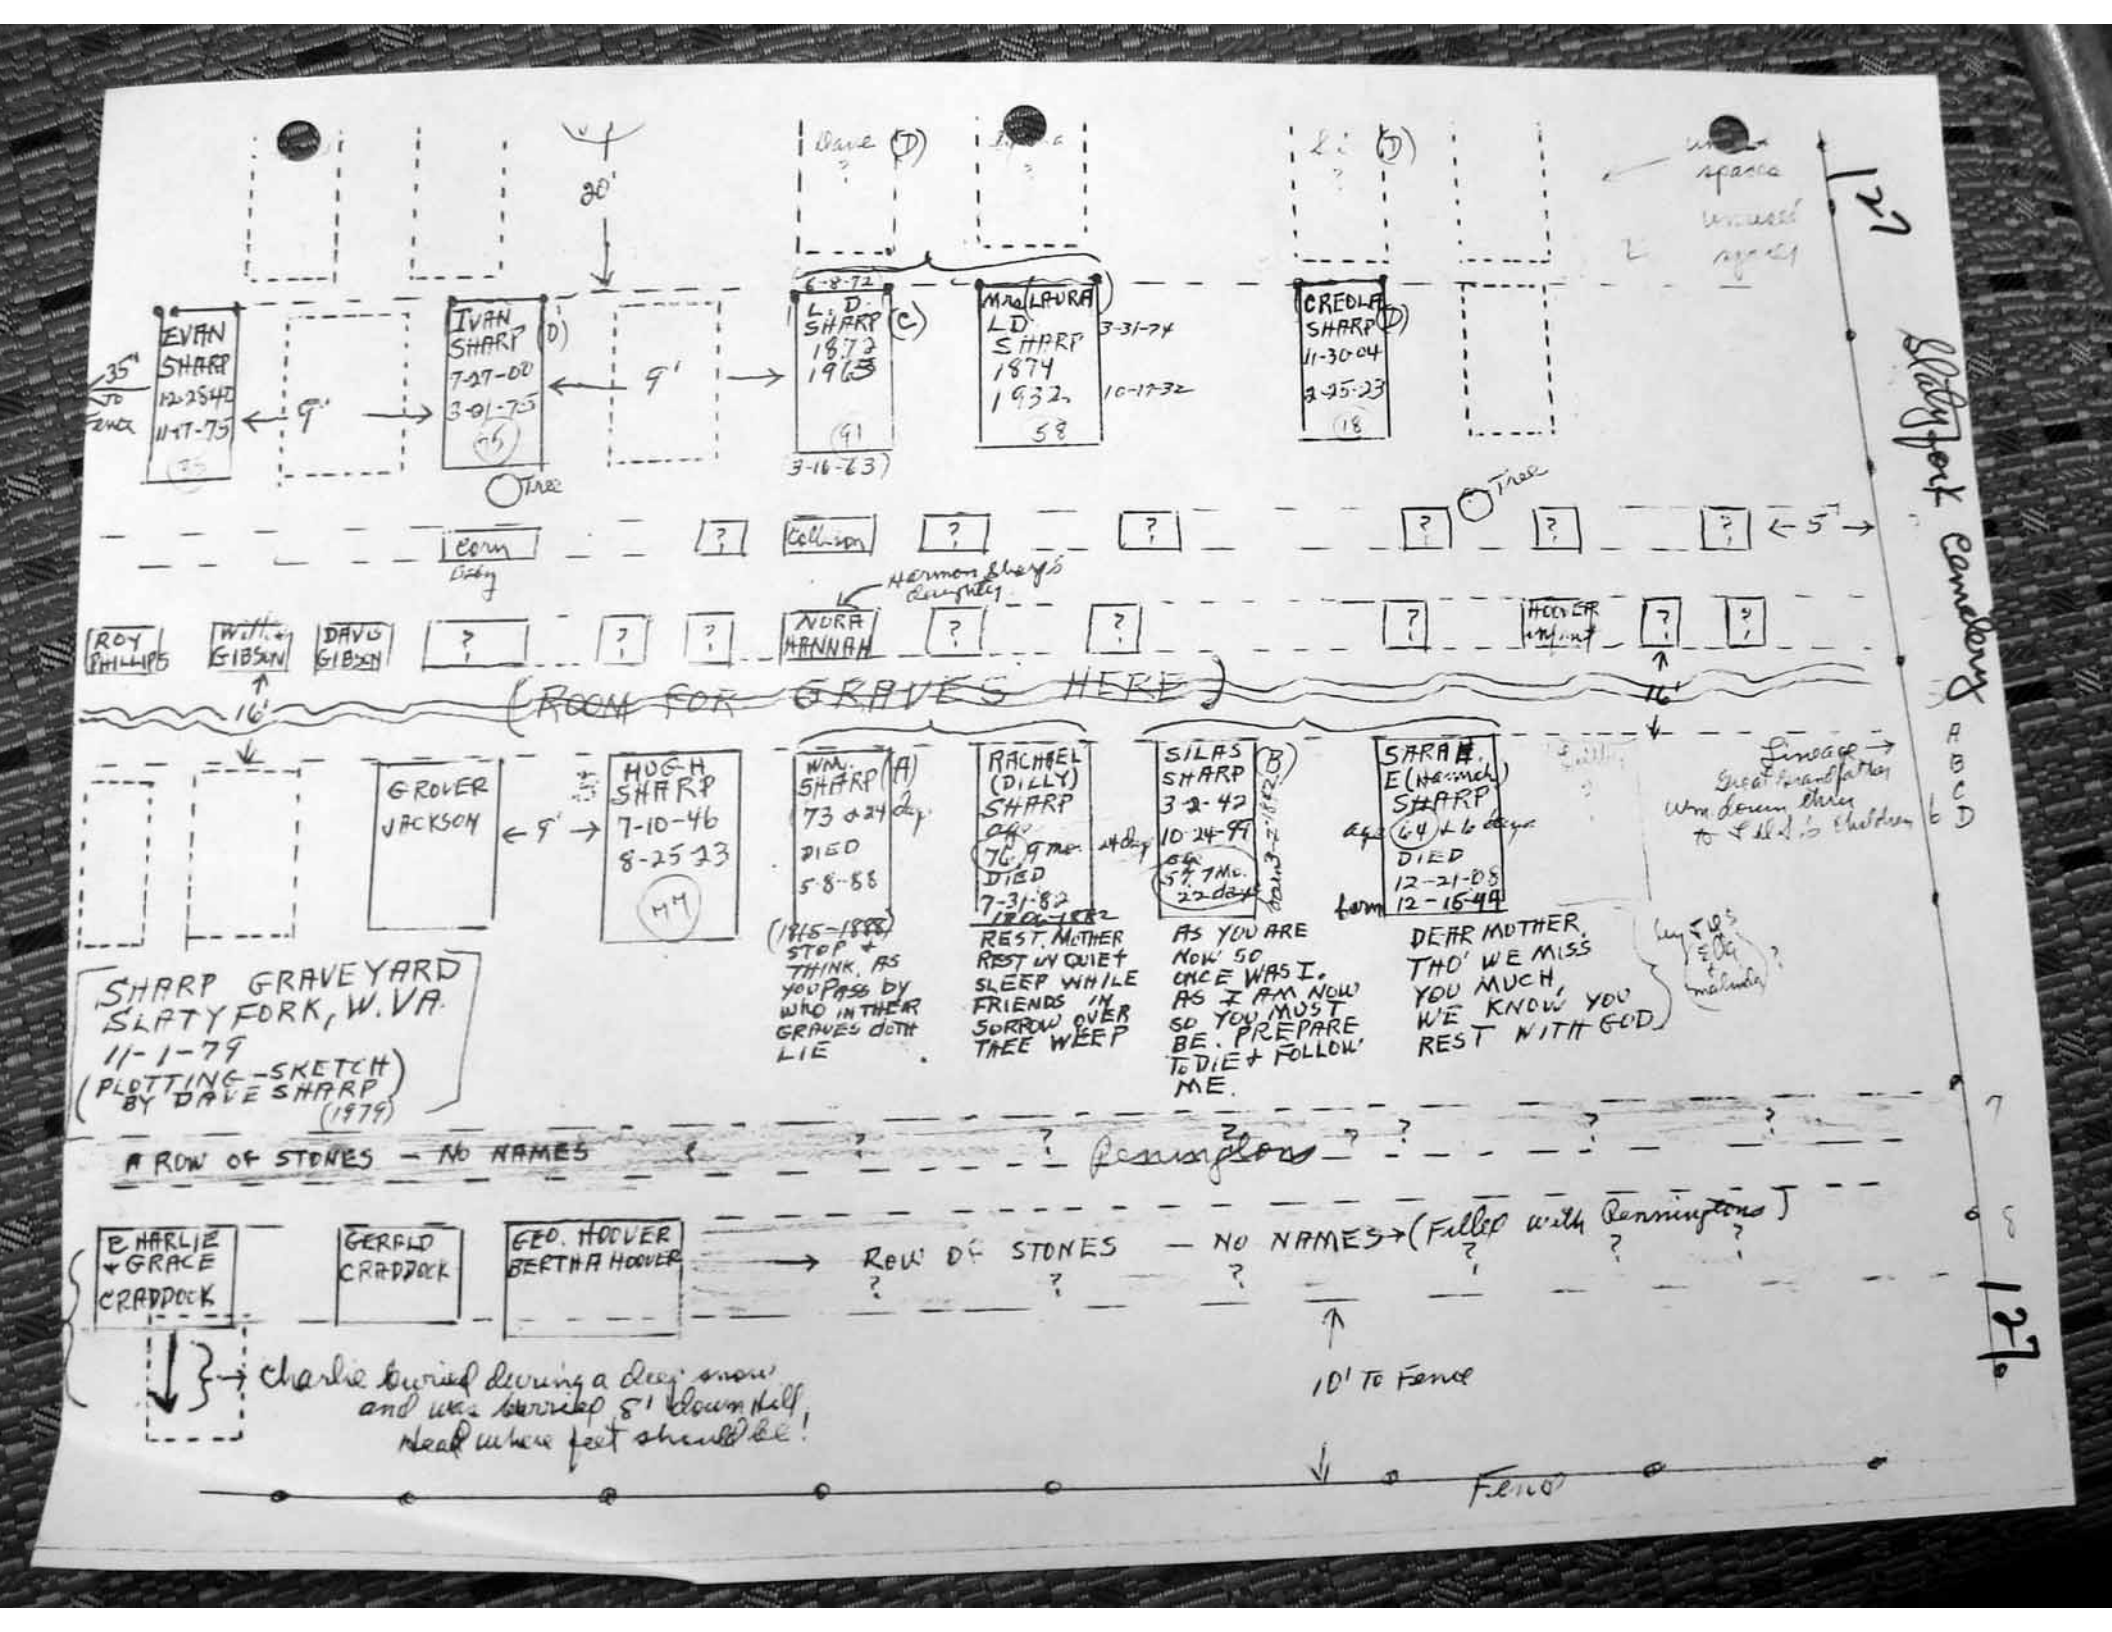
30 CONTINUED ON CHART

31 CONTINUED ON CHART

Edward Thornton



Slaty Fork Cemetery
SHARP GRAVEYARD
SLATY FORK, W. VA.
11-1-79
(PLOTTING-SKETCH)
BY DAVE SHARP
(1979)
EVAN SHARP
12-25-42
11-17-75
IVAN SHARP
7-27-00
3-01-75
L. D. SHARP
1872
1963
3-16-63
MAE LAURA
L D SHARP
1874
1932
3-31-74
10-17-32
CREOLA SHARP
11-30-04
2-25-23
30' 9'
35' to fence
Tree
corn
Collins
Herman Sharp's daughter
NORA HANNAH
ROY PHILLIPS
WILL GIBSON
DAVID GIBSON
HOOVER
ROOM FOR GRAVES HERE
16'
GROVER JACKSON
HUGH SHARP
7-10-46
8-25-13
WM. SHARP
73 & 24 days
DIED
5-8-88
(1815-1888)
STOP & THINK, AS YOU PASS BY WHO IN THEAR GRAVES DOTH LIE RACHEL (DILLY) SHARP age 76 9 mo. 14 days
DIED
7-31-82
REST, MOTHER REST IN QUIET SLEEP WHILE FRIENDS IN SORROW OVER THEE WEEP SILAS SHARP
3-2-42
10-24-91
age 54 7 Mo. 22 days
AS YOU ARE NOW SO ONCE WAS I. AS I AM NOW SO YOU MUST BE. PREPARE TO DIE & FOLLOW ME.
SARAH E. (Hannah) SHARP age 64 & 6 days
DIED
12-21-08
12-15-44
DEAR MOTHER, THO' WE MISS YOU MUCH, WE KNOW YOU REST WITH GOD
Lineage → Great Grandfather Wm Brown Sharp to Edd & children
A ROW OF STONES — NO NAMES
CHARLIE & GRACE CRADDOCK
GERALD CRADDOCK
GEO. HOOVER BERTHA HOOVER
ROW OF STONES — NO NAMES → (Fulled with Pennington's)
Charlie buried during a deep snow and was buried 8' down Half Head where feet should be!
10' TO Fence
Fence
127

128

A TRIBUTE
published in the pages of

THE POCAHONTAS TIMES
MARLINTON, W. VA.
MAR 20 1963

Memorial Obituary

L. D. Sharp

Luther David Sharp, a life long resident of Slatyfork, died Wednesday, March 13, 1963, in the Marlinton Hospital, at the age of 90 years, 9 months, and 5 days.

Mr. Sharp, the only son of the late Silas and Sarah Sharp, was born June 8, 1872, at Slaty fork. At the early age of 12 he started his mercantile business, buying and selling fur, livestock and merchandise. For many years his merchandise was hauled from Millboro, Virginia, and Beverly by covered wagons. Mr. Sharp was the first Postmaster of Slatyfork and gave it its name when the office was opened. He loved to fish and hunt, killing his last deer at the age of 89. He was one of the first group of apiary inspectors in West Virginia, and raised bees to produce the famous Pocahontas County white lynn honey.

"L D," as he was affectionately called by his close friends, helped organize and was a charter member of the Slatyfork Methodist Church. He was a lover of sacred music and organized the Slatyfork Choir, well known in Pocahontas and surrounding counties for its fine music.

Preceding him in death were his first wife, Laura Jane Morgan Sharp; two daughters, Creola and Ada Curtain; two sisters, Ella (Mrs. Robert Gibson) and Malinda (Mrs. Ellis Hannah).

He leaves his devoted wife, Mabel Hansford Sharp; a daughter, Mrs. Violet Markland, of Richmond, Virginia; four sons, Ivan Sharp, of Nitro; Paul Sharp, of Port Neches, Texas; Dave Sharp, of Cincinnati, Ohio, and Si Sharp, at home; twelve grandchildren, twenty-one great-grandchildren; two great-great grandchildren, and a host of friends.

Funeral services were held Saturday afternoon in the Slatyfork Methodist Church with the Rev. Clarence Pierson assisted by the Rev. Ezra Bennett in charge. Burial was in the Slatyfork Cemetery.

128 1/2

Madison Eagle

Lucy C. Bowie, Editor Telephone 948-5121

GREEN PUBLISHERS, INC., Printers & Publishers

Entered at the Post Office at Madison, Va., as second-class Mail Matter. 2nd Class Postage paid at Madison, Va., and at additional mailing office.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY: BOX 325, MADISON, VIRGINIA 22727

Investigation Continues In Forester's Death

Investigation is continuing by Augusta County Sheriff's Department in the death of forester, Evan L. Sharp.

Sharp, 34, a sub-district forester over Madison, Greene, and Rappahannock Counties, died last Monday while hunting in George Washington National Forest with friend and Chief Fire Warden of Greene and Madison, Donald Lee Parrott of Quinque.

His body was not discovered until last Wednesday morning on Elliott's Knob at North Mountain in Augusta County, about 1-3/4 mile from his truck. Sharp had apparently been shot by another hunter. A single shot from a high powered rifle entered through the abdominal area and lodged in the body. According to evidence found in the mountains, it is estimated the bullet which struck Sharp was fired from 80-85 yards away.

An Augusta sheriff's department spokesman said Monday, there was no definite information yet concerning the accident. A check of persons hunting in the area, licenses and big game stamps is underway. Several hunters at campsites in the area have also been questioned during the investigation. Reports are awaited from FBI laboratories pending identification of several items of physical evidence found in the area.

Letter to Editor

On behalf of the personnel of the Virginia Division of Forestry, I want to express our sincere appreciation to all of the people in the Madison and surrounding area for their help in the search for Forester Evan Sharp. All of us in the Division of Forestry feel very keenly the loss in Evan's tragic death. It is heartwarming to know that the concern for Evan was so widespread, and that the response to this concern by his friends and neighbors in Madison County was both immediate and magnanimous. We especially want to recognize the efforts of the Madison Rescue Squad and the many other volunteers, whose names we do not have, from the Madison area. For their efforts and time, including the considerable distance to Augusta Springs and in entering the search, we offer our sincere thanks.

Sincerely,
W. F. Custard, State Forester

Evan Sharp – Killed 129

AUGUSTA SPRINGS—A body identified as Evans Sharp, the Madison County hunter missing since Monday, was found late this morning on Elliott's Knobb.

MR SHARP

An Augusta County Sheriff's Department spokesman would only confirm that it was Sharp's body. He would not comment on the cause of death.

The search had been intensified this morning as scores of volunteers, Augusta Military Academy cadets and area students joined in the rescue efforts being coordinated by the sheriff's department at Grange's Market on Va. 42 here.

Mr. Sharp, 34, had gone hunting Monday with his partner, Donald Lee Parrott of Madison County, and failed to return to his truck parked on Chestnut Flat, a mountain top between Elliott's Knob and Hite Hollow, west of here.

Rescue teams concentrated Tuesday on the east side of the mountain, where a gunshot was reportedly heard Monday at dark.

Mrs. Sharp, who drove here Tuesday after learning of her husband's disappearance, said the whole situation seemed incredible since her husband was a very "self-sufficient" and experienced hunter, although he occasionally was troubled by one of his knees injured previously while fighting a fire.

Mr. Sharp was employed by the Virginia Division of Forestry and was a member of the Madison County Rescue Squad. He formerly lived with his family in Augusta County and was "very familiar" with the hunting area, according to his widow.

The search had not been without confusion. One report said that a hunter from Madison County somewhat fitting Mr. Sharp's description was seen several miles from the Chestnut Flat area.

Also rescue officials were helped or hindered by the innundation of volunteers that led one spokesman to say: "There are too many chiefs and not enough Indians."

Involved in the search were the Staunton-Augusta, Craigsville-Augusta Springs and Madison County rescue squads, the Civil Air Patrol, State Police, the Virginia Game Commission, the Virginia Division of Forestry, and auxilaries, churches and private individuals who supplied food to the rescue workers.

Two search planes of the CAP and a State Police helicopter flew over the mountainous terrain Tuesday and this morning.

Hunter died of gunshot wound 1975

The death of a Madison County man Monday in the mountains west of Augusta Springs was due to a gunshot wound, Augusta County authorities said Wednesday, and the wound appeared not to be self inflicted.

An autopsy completed today at the state medical examiner's office at Roanoke determined that Evans Lilbern Sharp died of a rifle wound in the abdomen. He had been dead since "sometime Monday", State Medical Examiner Dr. David Oxley said.

Mr. Sharp, 34, of Madison County was found Wednesday morning by Virginia Division of Forestry volunteers in a moderately wooded area in the Chestnut Flats section of North Mountain. An experienced outdoorsman and forester from Madison, Green and Rappahannock counties at the time of his death, Mr. Sharp was last seen around 1 p.m. Monday and was reported missing 9:30 that night.

Mr. Sharp, a former resident of Staunton said to be very familiar with the mountains, had gone hunting with a friend Monday and did not return to his truck.

A search, coordinated by the Augusta County Sheriff's Department and strengthened by volunteers, began Tuesday and intensified Wednesday before the body was found late Wednesday morning.

The body was first taken to King's Daughters' Hospital, then to Madison County. Later, it was taken to Roanoke to the state medical examiner's office for an autopsy.

According to a sheriff's department spokesman, Mr. Sharp was found lying face up, his rifle near the body. He had been shot in the stomach, the spokesman said.

The case is now under investigation by the department deputies.

A spokesman for the department thanked those who participated in the two-day search.

Mr. Sharp was son of Mr. and Mrs. Ivan L. Sharp.

Surviving besides his mother who lives at Nitro, W. Va., are his widow, Mrs. Phyllis (McCutcheson) Sharp of Madison; two sons, Arthur T. and Roderick E. Sharp, both of Madison; one brother, Ralph Sharp of California, and one sister, Mrs. Thomas Shipley of Parkersburg, W. Va.

Services will be conducted 10 a.m. Friday in Madison United Methodist Church. Burial will be 4 p.m. in Powhatan County, W. Va.

DEATHS

Mrs. Laura Morgan Sharp, wife of L. D. Sharp, died at her home at Slaty Fork on Monday afternoon, October 17, 1932. She had been ill for many months with heart disease and complications. She was in her 59th year, having been born March 31, 1874. Burial in the Sharp family graveyard on Wednesday afternoon, the funeral being conducted from the Slaty Fork Church by her pastor, Rev T. H. Taylor.

Mrs. Sharp was the daughter of the late Rev. Samuel Morgan. Her mother, Mrs. Edith Morgan Irvine, preceded her to the grave a few weeks since. Of her father's family there remain, two brothers, William and Edgar, and a sister, Sarah (Nannie)

Forty years ago she became the wife of L. D. Sharp. He and their children, Ivan, Silas, Paul and Luther, Jr., Mrs. William Curtin, of Baltimore, and Mrs. R. W. Markland, of Richmond, survive. A daughter, Creola, died nine years ago.

For a life time, Mrs. Sharp, had been a professing christian, a member of the Methodist Church. She was a good woman, who well performed the duties of wife, mother and neighbor.

Evan Sharp

Evan Lilburn Sharp, 34, of Madison, Virginia, formerly of West Virginia, was killed Wednesday, November 19, 1975, in the National Forest in Augusta County, Virginia. SLATYFORK

He was a native of ~~Philippi~~, and was in the Virginia Forestry Service.

His father Ivan Sharp, died earlier this year. He was a grandson of the late L. D. Sharp of Slatyfork.

Surviving are his wife, Phyllis McCutcheon Sharp; two sons, Arthur Todd and Roderick Evan, both of Madison, Virginia; mother, Mrs. Ivan L. Sharp, of Nitro, a brother, Ralph Sharp, of California; sister, Mrs. Thomas Shipley, of Parkersburg.

Services were held Friday morning in Madison United Methodist Church in Madison, Virginia. Burial was Friday at 4 p. m. in Slatyfork Cemetery.

(1) William Sharp, Pioneer of Huntersville (1740 -18 X33) 1833) 130

William Sharp, Jr. (or 2nd) (abt 1780-1860) Wife: Elizabeth Waddell (they lived near Verdant Valley) (1772-1860) MARRIED 4-27-1795

William Sharp, "Jr" (or 3rd) 1815-1888) Wife: Rachael Dilley of near Campbelltown, Lived Slatyfork. (born abt 1815)

Silas "Si" Sharp, 1842-1899 -57 "Sarah Hannah 1847-1908 -64 1847-1908	Hugh C 1848-1923 -77 Slatyfork (unmarried) 7-10-1846	Harmon, lived Slatyfork and Elkins father of: Talbert, Richard, Mable 10-2-1850	(William Luther civilin, killed in Civil War, 16 12-17-1843	Henry killed in Civil War 8-17-1840	Bernard killed in Civil War 6-14-1839	Mary Ella died age 6 2-11-1849

130

Luther David Sharp, 1872-1963 -91 married Laura Jane Morgan, daughter of Rev. Sam Morgan of Edgay Edray (5) 1874-1932 - 57

Luther's Sisters: Melinda (mrs. Ellis Hannah?):
- *Vee Hannah
- *Mrs. Charles Beale
- *Russell Hannah
- *Mrs Baxter (Lena?)

(Mrs Robt Gibson) Mary Ella Gibson:
- *Allie (Forest Gibson)
- *Bill Gibson
- *Florence Gibson
- *Otis OTIS Gibson
- * ONNIE THOMAS

Ada ELLA Johnson) Curtain) Donald Helen Billie Clara Stanley Baltimore	Violet (Rufus Markland) 3-15-97 Richmond, Va. *Rufus, Jr. (Ft. Wayne, Ind)	Ivan 1900-1975 (Genevieve Ornderff) *Ralph *Evan *Ramona (Tom Shipley)	Creola 1904-1923 18 died of throat infection 11-30-23	Si 10-27-07 ( ) Slatyfork	Paul 11-24-10 ( ) *(Venda Lowe) (deceased) (Katherine Milhellin) Pt. Neches, Texas *Thayer 6-3-33 (Beverly Champion) *Barbara Jane 8-4-35 (Glen Smith)	Luther D Sharp, Jr. 6-8-16 ("Dave") (Sylvia Friel of Marlinton) *Linda Dee 12-19-61 B (Dennis Eduardo) E (Cincinnati, O) May 1980

David Hannah (married 11-21-1843) Wife: Hester ("Hessie") Simafeese from Crabbottom (his sister Jane Hannah married Jess Barlow and lived on the Barlow place on Elk at Valley View)

Sarah (married Silas Sharp DEC 15-1844-12-21-08) -64 Thier children: Luther Sharp, Melinda (Hannah), Ella (Gibson) (

*Rev Gee. Hannah	*Mary married Sam Gibson *Richard *Henry *Archie *Ruth	*Melinda married John Rose Stella married Mr Fischer (Myrtle Hazel) A ROBERT	*Henry married Margaret McClure) (Son Ernest Hammond Roswell N.M	*Joe died age 12 diptheria	*Otha died about age 12 diptheria 16.500 Q vision

*STELLA

Rev. Sam Morgan (7-8-1847 - 12-31-1855), Circuit Rider, Edgay Charge (Methodist) (1889-1894) (Edith Ramsey) married at 16 (2-21-1872) (See Morgan History)

She later married Wes Ervin

Laura Jane Morgan 1874-1932 -58 married L.D. Sharp

*Will Morgan Lobelia	*Minnie died in Weston	*Edgar Lobelia	*Lena Edray
a daughter Miriam who married Roy Sparks			Married Charlie Mitchel (children were Ruby & Edith) Remarried McKenny (children John & ? Clyde & Naomi) more Ellis

Laura was 15 when her father moved into the Edray Parsonage, 3 years later at 18 (almost 19) she got married 2-16-1893

1980-1982

1

History and Stories
of the
SHARP FAMILY
of Slatyfork, W. Va.
Principally by and of Luther David Sharp, Sr.
6-8-1872 - 3-19-63

Compiled from magnetic tapes, recollections, etc.

This history booklet of the L. D. Sharp family was compiled by Dave Sharp from recollections and tapes he made of "LD" and from others in the family. Valuable assistance was provided by Si Sharp for his recollections of important stories; by Ramona Shipley for her transcribed tapes of her father, Ivan, and copies she made of old deeds etc.; by cousin Allie Gibson letting me tape her stories of the Sharps; and by Paul Sharp for his tapes he made of Dad's stories. THAYER SHARP MADE XEROX COPIES Cousins Veo Hannah and Allie Gibson loaned old original pictures of the Sharps from which to make copies used in the booklet.

Credit goes to Edith Workman of Millsboro AND HUBERT TAYLOR-IN PARTICULAR for the copy of the Rev. Samuel Morgan history compiled by cousin Hubert Taylor, 14 Stroud St., Wilmington, Del. 19805, from which our copies are made. This is a complete history of the family of Laura Sharp, wife of L. D. Sharp. Thanks to cousin Edith! Thanks to cousin Hubert !

Stories and/or pages are numbered in "red" ink. Any one who has additional stories or pages please make four OR MORE copies and number them in red so we can place them in the proper location in the booklet. For instance, page 26-A would go after page 26.

Also: any other rare family pictures and other pictures of great interest are welcomed, to make negatives to have copies made for the four booklets.

A booklet was issued to each:

Paul Sharp, 723 Avenue D. Port Neches, Texas, 77651
Si Sharp, Slatyfork, W. Va. 26291
Mrs. Ramona Shipley, 43 Meadowcrest Drive, Parkersburg, W. Va. 26101
Dave Sharp, 4171 Paxton Woods Drive, Cincinnati, Ohio 45209
Each of the above have Cassette tapes from which the transcriptions in the booklet were made.

PLEASE ! If this copy becomes misplaced or lost, please return it to one of the above persons or decendants. It is very important that it stays in the Sharp family

2-8-81

4

Last picture taken of Silas

1897

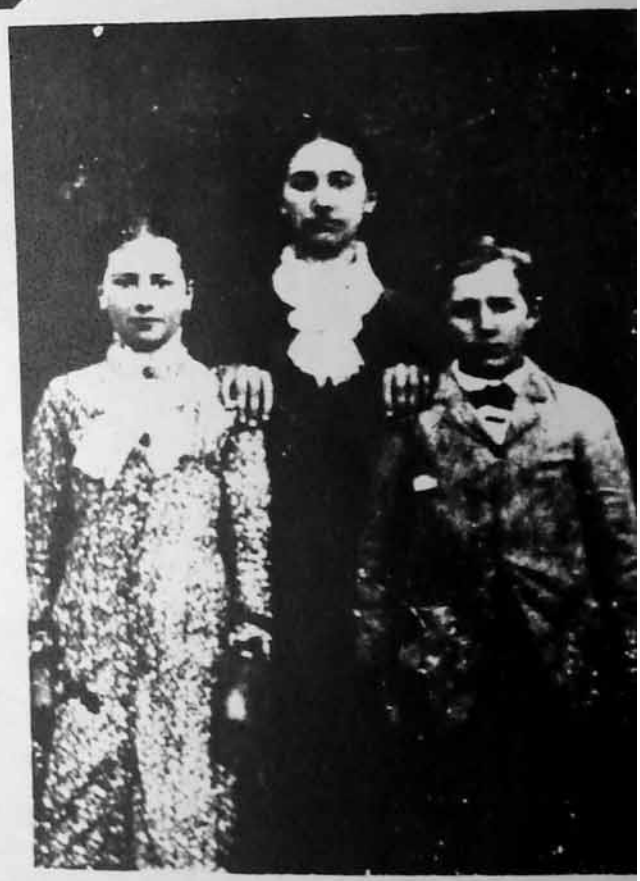
Ella Luther Melinda

Last picture of Silas 1898

Silas ("Si")

Sarah ("Sally")

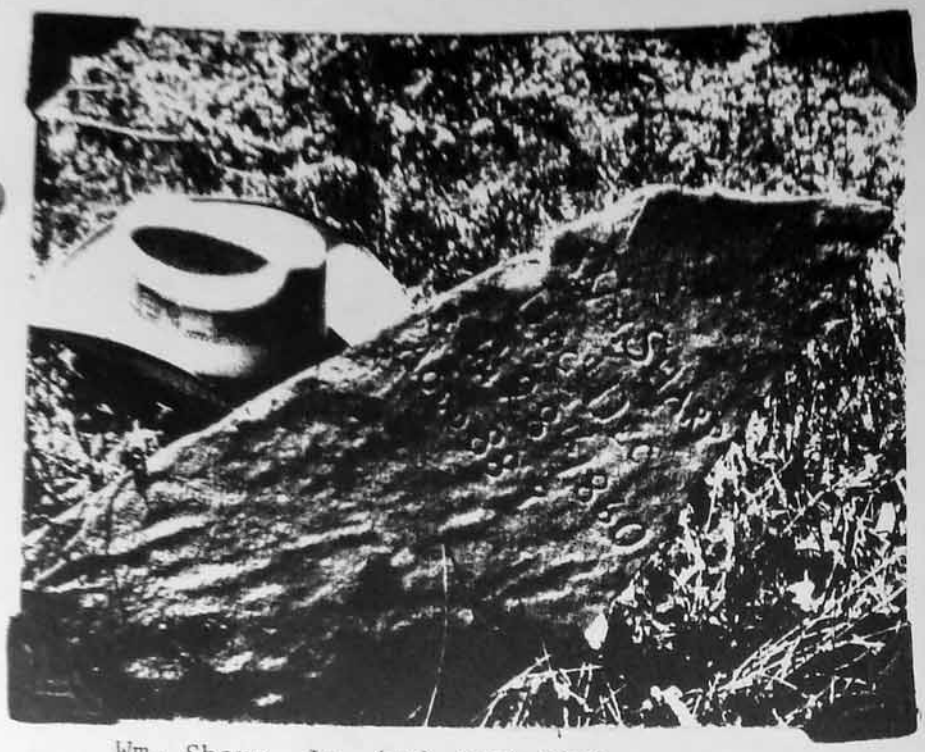
from a tintype



Ella Melinda Luther

Luther David & Mary Ella Melinda Luther

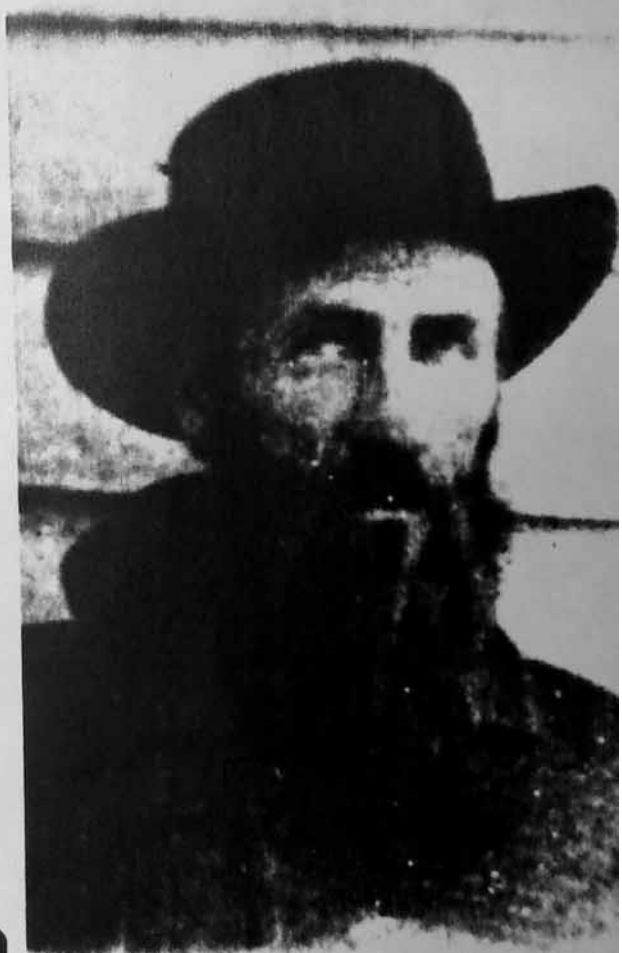
2



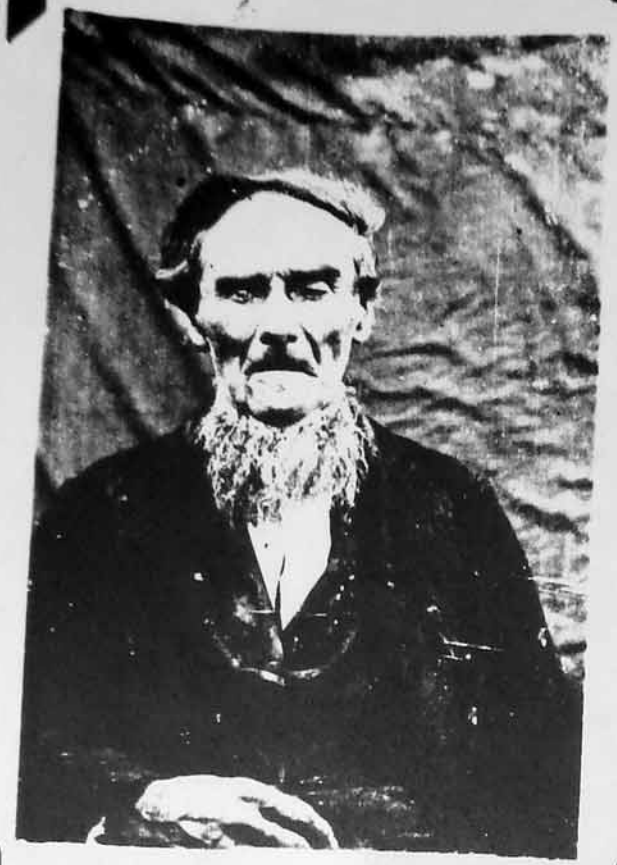
"WM SHARP
DECD DEC
The 28TH 1860
AODD 88Y"

Wm. Sharp, Jr. (II) 1772-1860

Wm. Sharp's tombstone in the Sharp cemetery on the Edray to Cloverlick road, near Fairview lane intersecting and near Arthur Friel's place.
He was the son of the pioneer William Sharp (1740-1833) and father of Wm. Sharp(III) (1815-1888) who is buried at the Slatyfork cemetery.



3



Parents of Silas and Harmon Sharp

WILLIAM SHARP (III) 1815-1888

RACHAEL (Dilley) SHARP 1805-18

Parents of Silas and Harmon

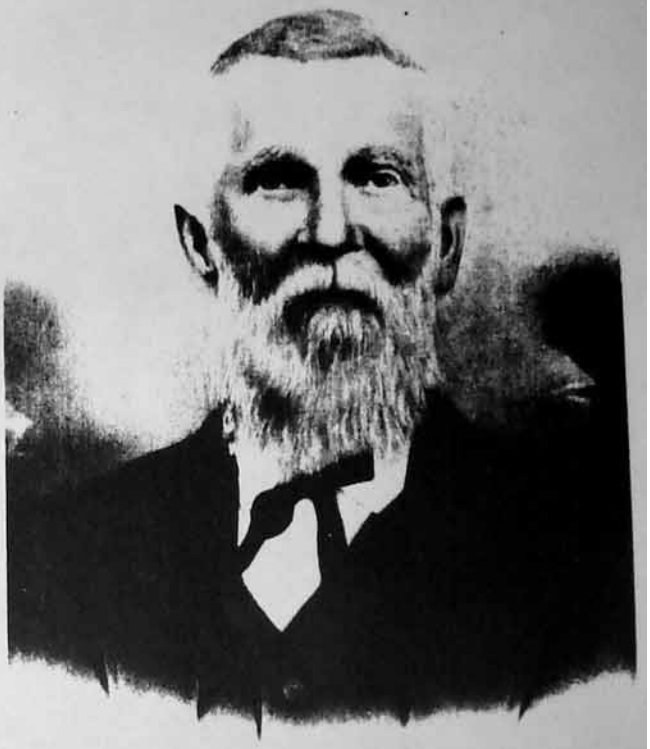
Sons of William

SILAS ("SI") SHARP SARAH (HANNAH)

James Randolph Morgan
4-3-1815 - 5-6-1897
father of Sam Morgan

5

Sam Morgan with Buggy ran off & wrecked & killed him

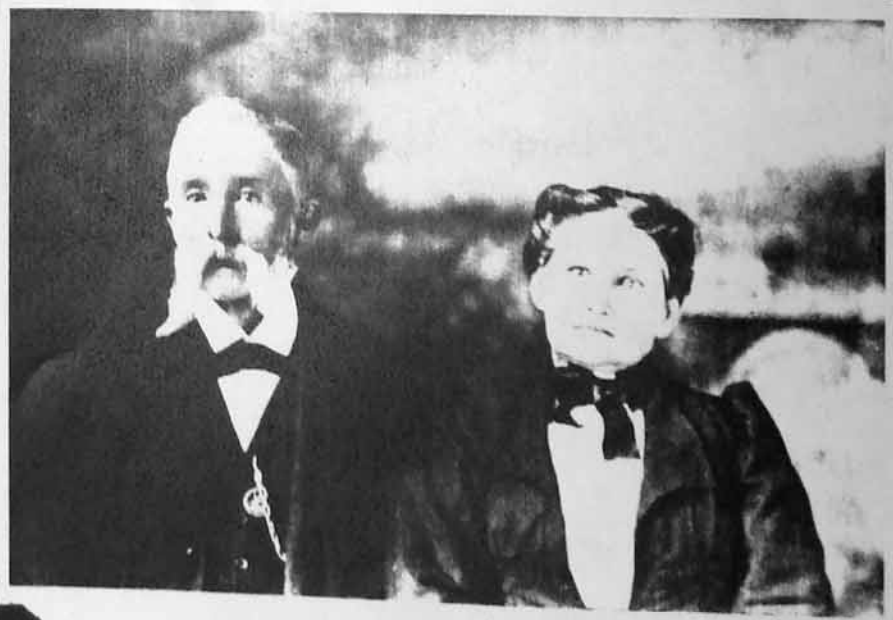


(married 2-21-1872)

↖ Rev. Sam Morgan

↖ Edith Morgan

(Parents of Laura Sharp (3-31-1874 - 10-17-1930))



Her second husband

Wes Irwin

Edith Irwin (3-31-1874 - 9-25-1932)

6

Hugh Calvin Sharp

The first bee-hive had a glass inspection opening, covered with a wooden removable cover still in existence.

Probably made by Capt Thomely (of Buckhannon) a friend of Hugh's.

Note earlier style of bee hive

Hugh Sharp
(7-10-1846 - 8-25-1923)

Uncle Hugh Sharp on Porch of old log house that used to be attached to the present log house.

(Perhaps Ed sitting on porch?)

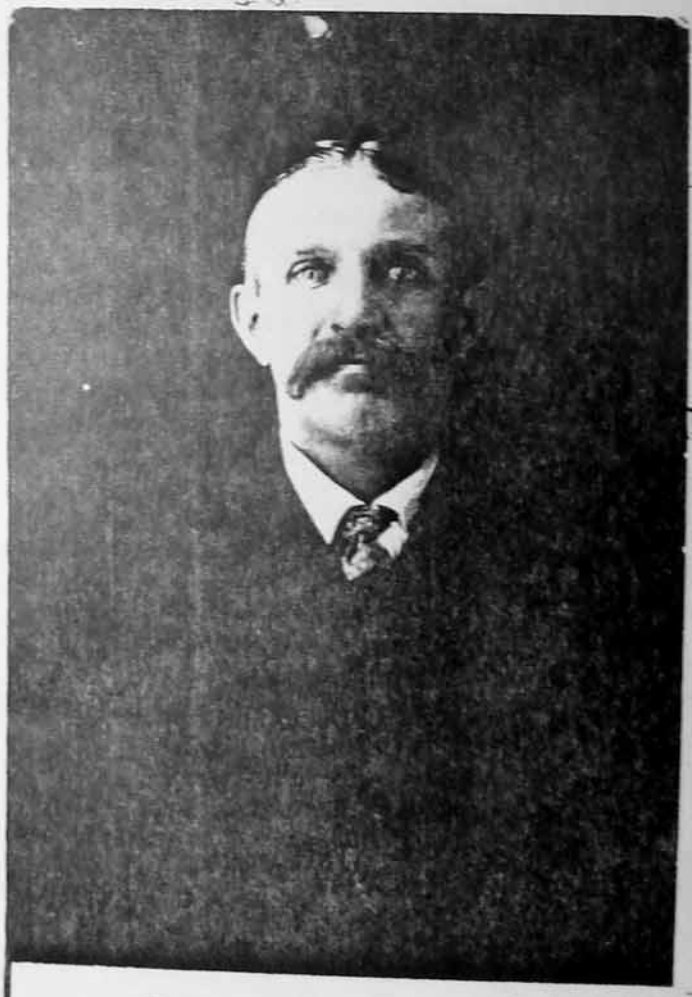
Hugh Sharp 1846-1923
Hunting knife in belt now belongs to Evan Sharps sons in VA.

H. H. Sharp

H. H. Sharp from Tan Type ap' 19-?

H. H.

HUGH SHARP Beaten Hunting Sept 1917
Age 71



8

8

(from Tin Types)

from Tin Types

Quarterly meeting – Perhaps ... Friday ... 8-F

Howard Wade S C Morgan ... George Hannah ... Rev Clark ... Rev. Fralt ... Rev Hedrick

1 George T Moore
2 Howard Wade
3 Rev. Clark
4. Uncle Georg Hannah
5. S.C. Morgan (Grandfather Samuel Morgan)
6. Rev. Hedrick
7. Rev. Faltz

(Believe all are preachers.)

8

Ivan (2) Violet

Jim Mother Freda (?)

To Will Morgan:
we send you a pic
of a part of the wool handled by us this year we have bought
The wool from 4000
5000 sheep This year
Your Friend
L. D. Sha
Sharp

Left to Right: Dad, Ada, Si, Paul
Ivan, Austin Galford, Mother,
+ Dave on horse behind Mother

10

10

Hugh → Ovada, Juan Ada, Dade, L.D.

Sept'

Sister Ramona Top picture →

Violet Sandra Paul Li

uncle Hugh ↑ L.D. Sharp family Sept 1917

65

65 1938

"65" candles "L.D."

Melinda Hannah L.D. (65 age) Ella Gibson

11

Sugar Camp

Maple Sugar camp at Slatyfork about 1912 ?
near old homestead, below the bridge and just below the meadow near creek

(L. D. SHARP) I D + Laura ada + Violet

ada Laura Ivan Violet Luther
Ivan Violet
(Married 2-16-1893)

C-1

Photograph of L. D. Sharp's Maple Sugar Camp at Slatyfork
Described by Ivan L. Sharp Nov. 27, 1973

"The picture faces Buzzard Mountian. You can faintly see the line of the old road going toward Marlinton. Ada may have been married or she and/or Si may have been taking care of or watching the store, in case some customer should come. I don't quite recognize the horses. The one with the (white) star in the forehead looks like "Old Bell", grandmother Sharp's (Sarah) mare. The other appears to be Mike, the strawberry roan with ears sticking straight up. A lot of age difference in the two horses."

"Judging from the size of Violet the plain (clear) one in the picture (in white), I appear to be standing (left to right): Ivan, Joe Snyder, Gemmie ~~[illegible]~~ Snyder, Violet, Mother (Laura), Creola, Paul and Dad (L.D.) at the kettles. ~~[illegible]~~ / Gemmie Snyder was oldest and only daughter of Wirt Snyder. Wirt Snyder and Austin or Floyd Galford on the sled."

Dave: (If this picture could have been snapped in Feb. 1916, they would be these ages: LD 44, Mother 42, Violet 19, Ivan 16, Creola 12, Si 9, and Paul 6 See further note of Dave's at the end.)--Dave.

Ivan further stated: "There looks to be a fuel shortage for the kettles, but we kept some dry wood in the shed and a pile of poles below the camp for the two pans. (evaporating pans were inside the shed.) One or two persons would stay in camp at night to keep fires going and pans filled to prevent burning of syrup. Sometimes would roast potatoes, apples and meat at night by the fire."

Dave's further notes: Violet born 1897, married July 1918 at age 21.

Willie H. Gibson of Will Gibson (at mouth of Slatyfork creek) was a photographer and took pictures up to perhaps 1920 or later. This picture was among Will Gibson's things after he died. The card was not mailed but was addressed to Mr. Earnest Gibson, Ekkwater, W. Va. with this message "Hello. How are you by this time? I am well and hope to find you the same. Sugar Camp view; from Willie H. Gibson". Dorothy Fitzwater gave Dave the original picture. She inherited it from perhaps a sister or other relative maybe married to young Willie. The Slatyfork Creek is between the camp and the hill, in picture.

Ivan further stated: "The sugar camp is below the old barn meadow. A big wood log type storage tank in foreground, 4 big iron kettles for boiling sugar water down from 50 gal. to about 1 gal of syrup. Inside shed is two furnaces with evaporating pans, a bunk bed for night work. The two smoke stacks were from the old saw mill that ceased operation further up the creek years before. A sled was used to haul the sap to the camp using two 50 gal wood barrels--sometimes three. Picture appears to have been taken when Wirt Snyder lived at the old Jackson house up the creek (almost to buck-hollow)"

Note: The boy beside Mother appears to be thin like Si or Dave. If Dave, then the boy in trough must be Paul. Then picture must have been taken about 1918 or 1919 before Violet married. Could the girl beside Violet be Creola??? A good puzzle ! ... but an interesting picture .

Laura Ingalls Wilder

Laura Jane Morgan (Sharp) Minnie Virginia Morgan

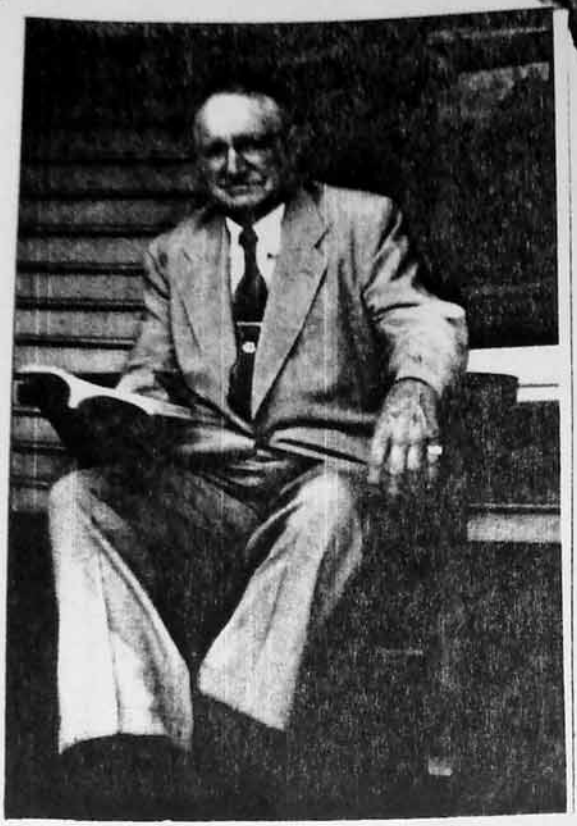
from Zan Types

Laura (Morgan) Vanness

Hauling sugar water To make maple syrup

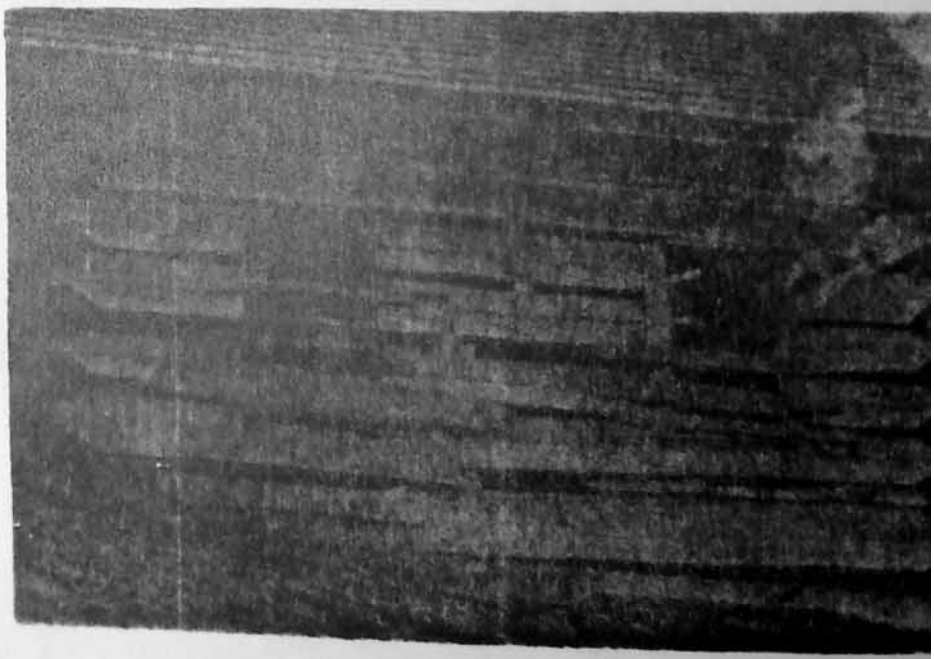
Laura & Cecila at store
(?) (?)
L & C on sled
Goin with bucket
Sam Gibson on horse carrying mail

(Hauling sugar water to make maple syrup & sugar



L.A. Sharp

Laura Jane (morgan) Sharp



Log School House where I'd went to school

We have clear photo's

ditto

Ralph Benwick & Mary

16 dismantled about 1955 (?)

The old mill dam and Grist mill at Slatyfork played at Bethany

Luther Helmentoller Jr

Bernard Galford

Bernard Galford Rosie Galford Bernard Galford Miss Knowles Violet Slaty Austin Galford old Mill Dam

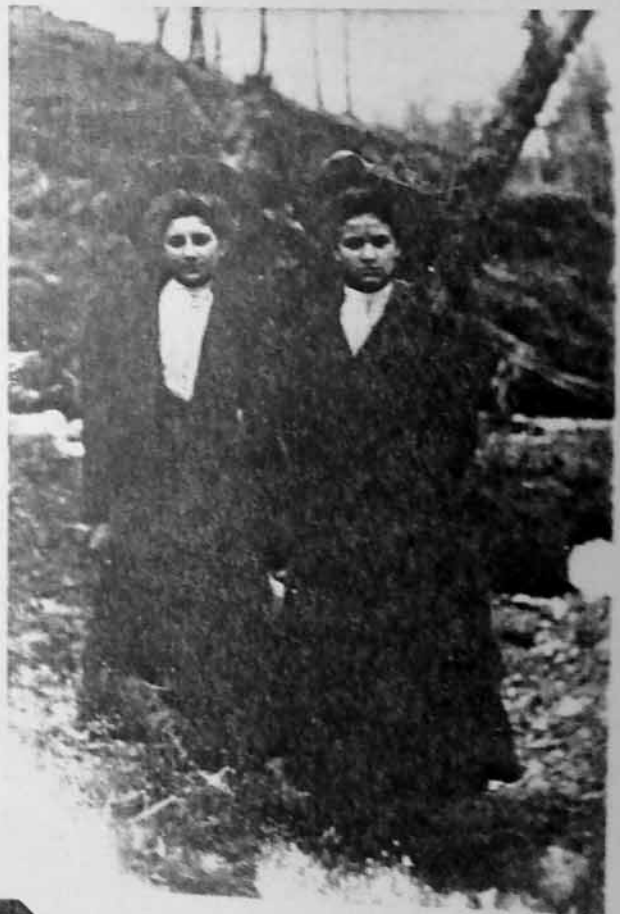
at the old Mill Dam

(Cir 1917)

"Brice Griffin" mill at Slatyfork

Violet (Sharp) Markland

Ada (Sharp) Curtain/Johnson

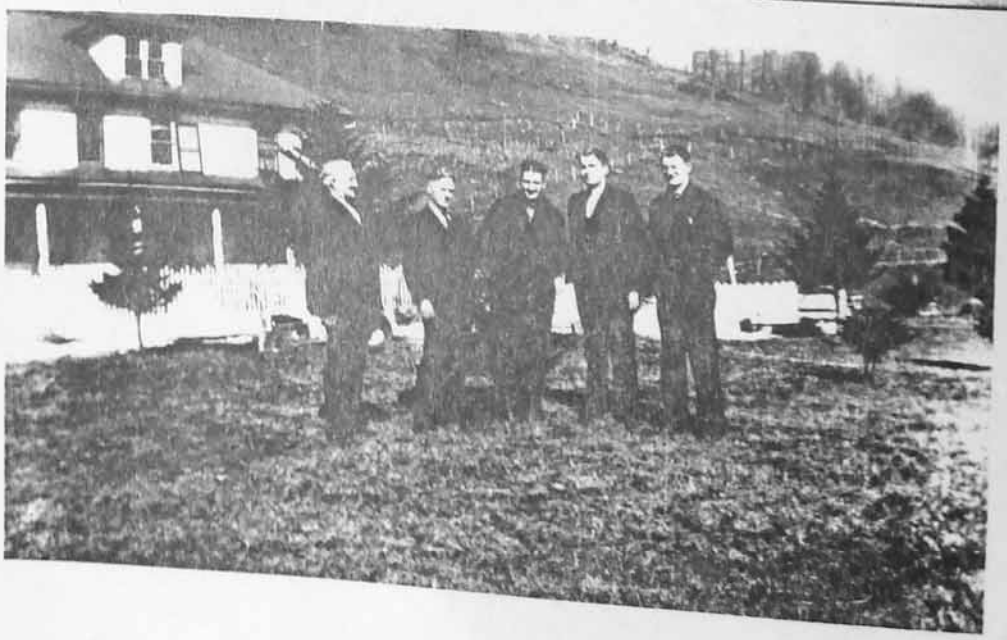


Violet Sharp. Lena McREAN

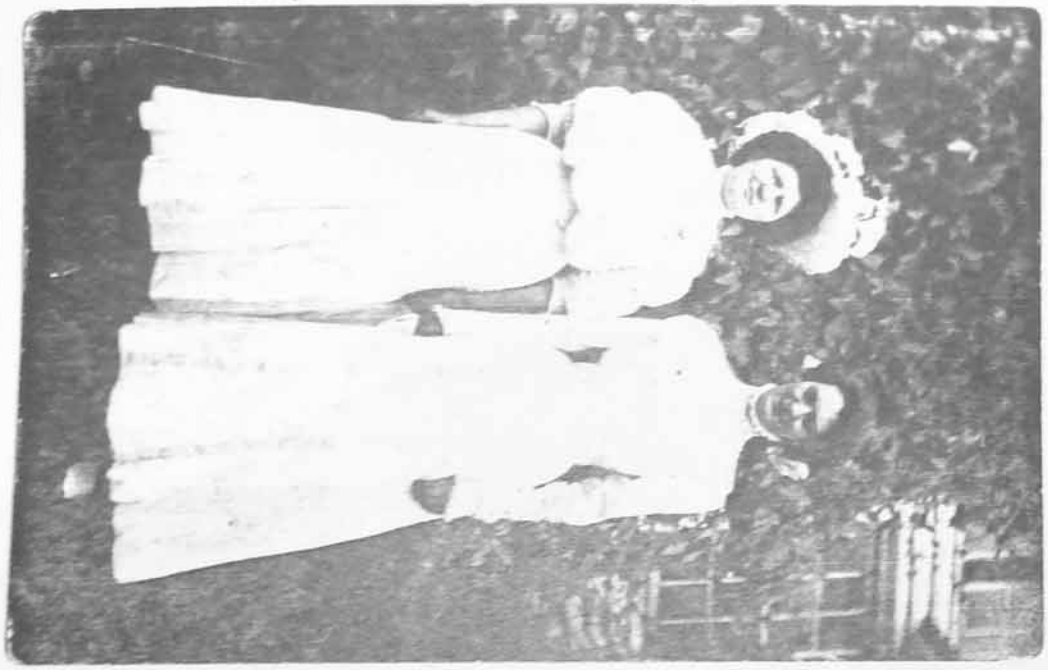
Ada Sharp at Dicky fork creek Mabel Mahanger

i. Ada Jean Violet Ernest

L.D. & his 4 sons



Abe + Mable wedding



Abe Senna Brian Violet Ltd.

Marian Morgan Violet Senna Evelyn Ltd. Junior Davis

20

F H
+
his children Chaves

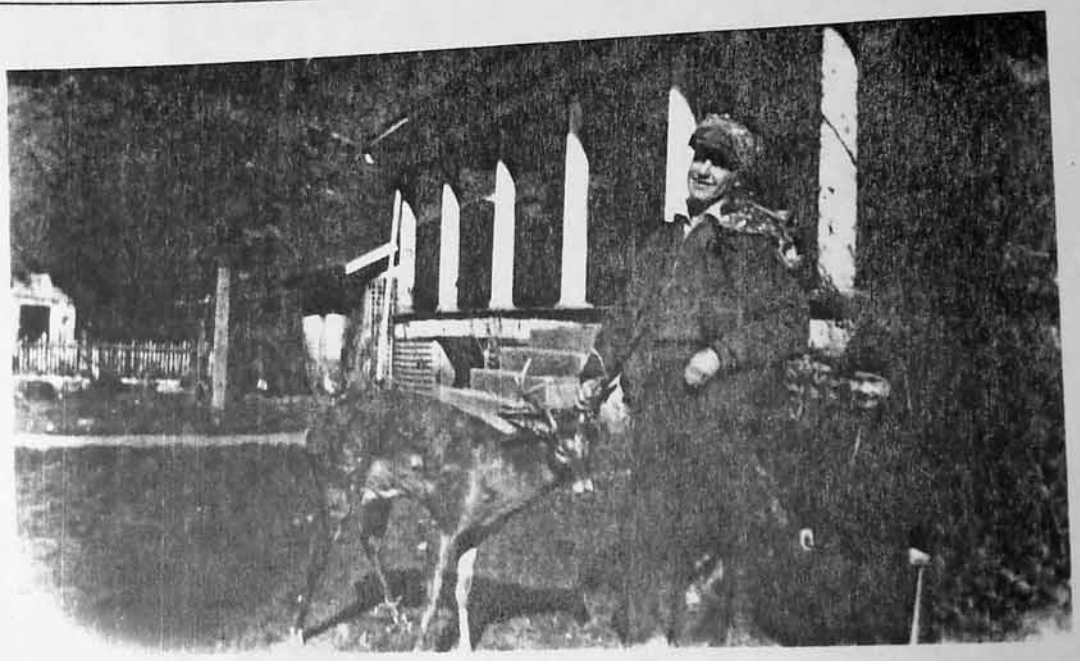
Joan
Eva



Joan (1950) F.H.

Jan 1950

TAHQUITZ CANYON SPRING

at church services

1 Bob Gibson
2 ?
3 ?
4 Frank Graham
5 ?
6 Susan Gibson
7 Lil
8 Paul
9 Dave Berry
10 ?
11 Gordon (Graham)
12 Bertha Hoover
13 Emily Jackson
14 Mary Hedrick & Baby
15 Granddaughter
16
17 Cousin
18 Carrie Smith
19 Va Smith
20 Boy ? ? ?

Elizabeth
Cameron Hoover

Slatyfork School #3
Burned about 1928
Located 75 yards from Pg 219 up Slatyfork Creek

See 143-144

Slatyfork School #3

20-H

4 copies

3 copies

21

Mary Knowles & Violet

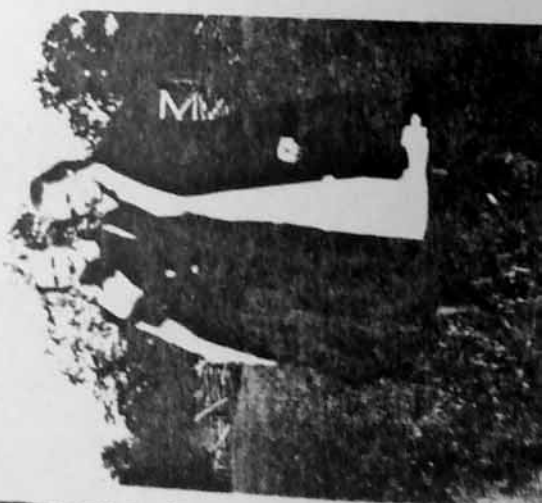
Ada & Violet

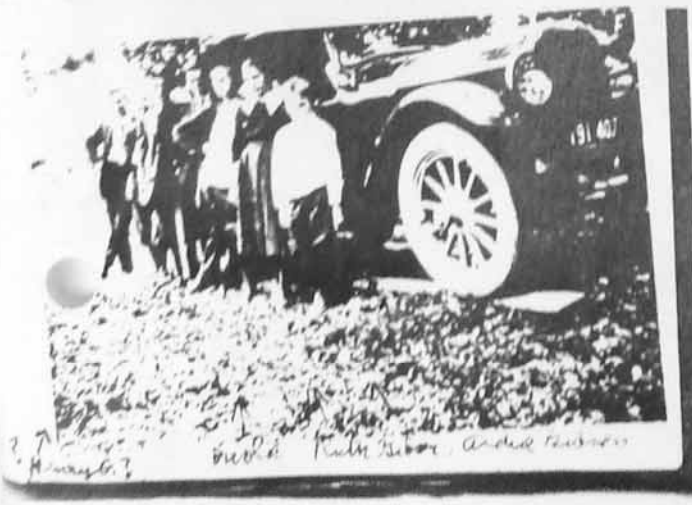
called Esther & Violet

Ada & Violet

Jean Bryant

Creola





From Creola's album 23

Creola

Mother and Creola

Creola

23

Creola

Creola

Creola Stamps
Sue Bratton

Creola Sue Bratton

24

Creola Shard

24 creola

creola
about 1930

25

Joan middle holding reins

Joan inside

"LD" on back of Spring wagon

Joan inside

"LD" + Joan "going to Town"

LD

Joan

(Dad) LD. abt

Joan

Joan Anita Halpin

Where on hers behind mother (Tenara)

LD (Dad)

Della Susan Violet
F.W. Carla Laura Li

Susan & Dad Cap.

Laura (morgan) Sharp

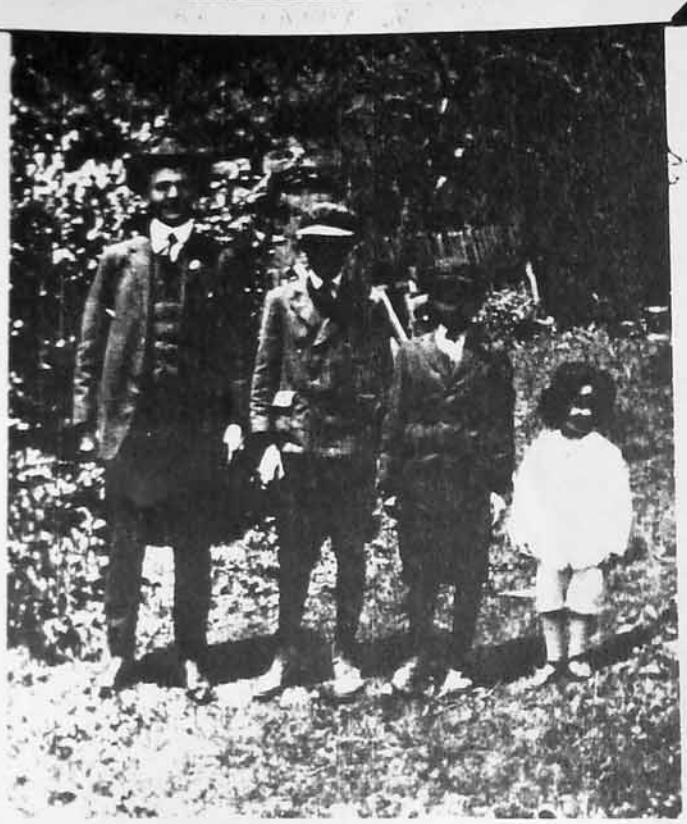
F.W. Sharp at 20 acre Farm near Orlando — Now "Disney World"

in Home meadow

Edith milked

Old "Charlie" Horse

Edith at old Home



28

J.H.

J.H. in Fla at 20 acre farm

J.H. fishing Trip

Twins Henrietta Laura ada
Rufus Violet Helen

POST CARD

POSTAGE NOW ONE CENT

THIS SIDE FOR CORRESPONDENCE

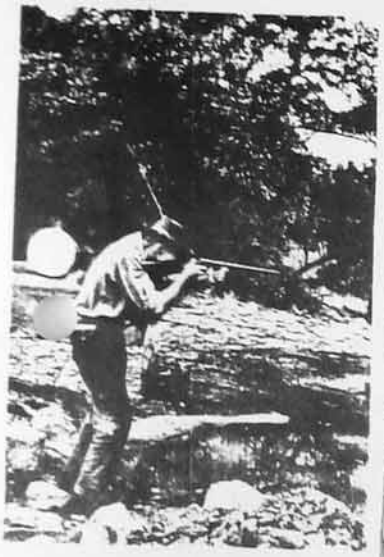
June 4, 1917

Dear Father as it is the day near your Birthday, I am sending you a little card hope it finds you well and yours, from your Loving Sister Malinda Hope we meet from beyond that Happy Land

THE ADDRESS TO BE WRITTEN ON THIS SIDE

Mr. L. D. Short
Slaty Fork
W. Va.

L D Rev Eza Bennett Eugene Jones
Slaty Fork Church



Ada Short

Violet

Henry Gibson
LD's Ford car

L D & truck load of wood

Mrs. Columbus Morgan

Frank Boots, Miriam Morgan & Ada Shay
at Slate Fork company store

MIRIAM MORGAN

31

Ray? Sheldon

Thyrd girl?

Zola Hannah?

Charles Bradford

Pearl Hanely

Leola Simmons

Ruth Thomas

Dorothy Hanely

Gennetta Simmons or Sheldon girl

Harold Johnson

Mary Sharp

Raymond Mack

Hubert Bonner

Pearl Peoples

Helen Johnson

Slatyfork School

about 1924 (?)

L.D. & his Frolo.

Kitchen

DAVE "LD" [illegible]

At the Reunion--Sept. 1950

Dear Dave:

Clara took this candid picture of Dad at the reunion.

The camera seemed to have captured a glimpse of that elusive, ethereal happiness he experienced in having his children all home again.

Can't you just see him in memory as he talked to you on that eventful day? That treasured quality of good humored true friendliness in the laughter of his smile which lights up his face like a Heavenly Illumination, makes him seem very near and very dear to each one of us. With love and fond memories

Ada

Dad.

"LD" hiring boss
June 1-55

"LD" the fisherman
Summer 1958

"LD" out taking care of his sheep
Christmas week
1958

"LD" and son, Ivan,
at Ivan's home
1959

"LD" the hunter,
Nov. 1955

He shot the squirrel out of the hickory tree just behind him and he is standing beside the old barn. The squirrel fell from the tree with a broken back. Dad tried to step on it's head and the squirrel bit at his pants leg !

Dad's family
Christmas 1950
(in kitchen) left to right:
Violet
Kathe
Paul
Ivan
Dad
Mable Genevieve
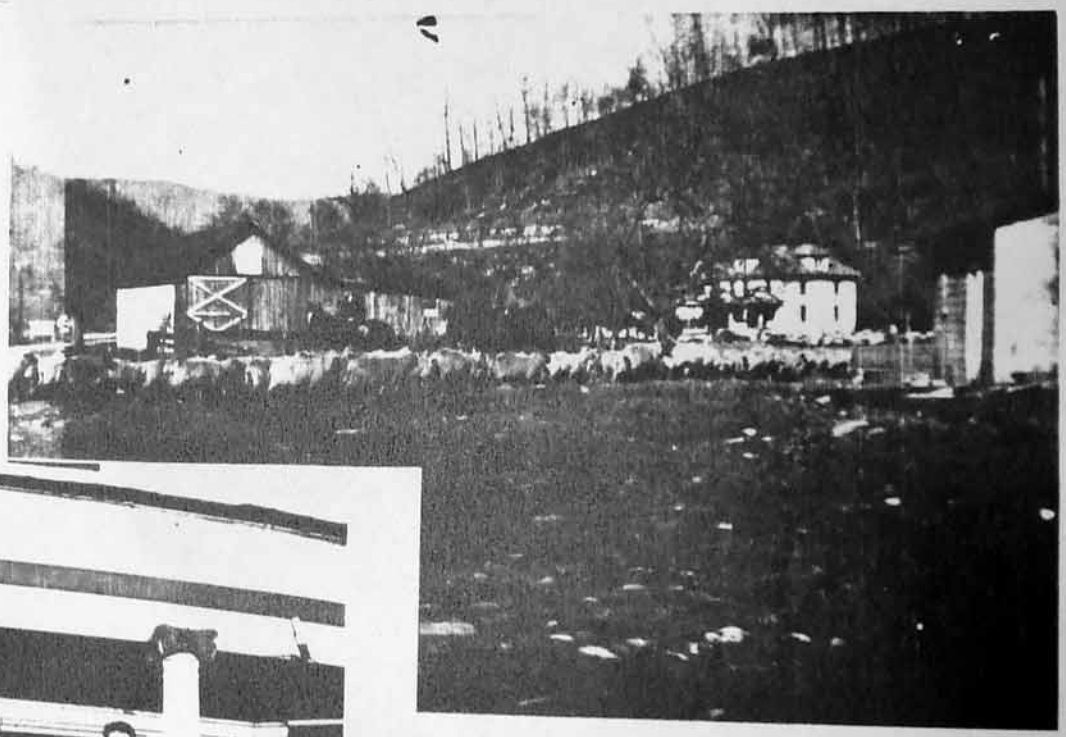
Bashful Si
Dave
Evan
Sylvia a t bottom

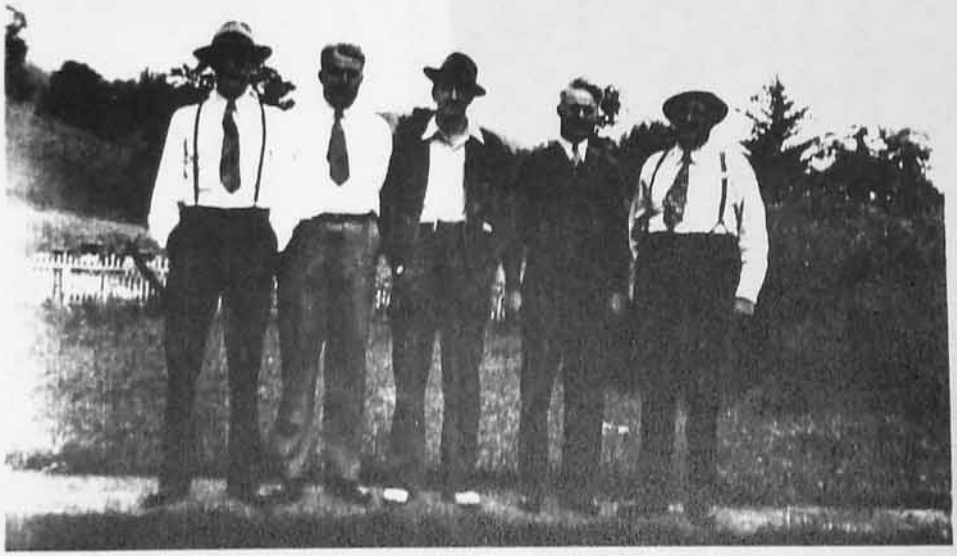
Dad
Stacy
(cor 1939)

Mary
Stacy

Si in Fla 1963

LD & chickens





Ed + his boys

Paul + Vonda
Barbara
+ boys

Eunice + Si Sharp 1982

Slats + Si

IVAN SHARP FAMILY

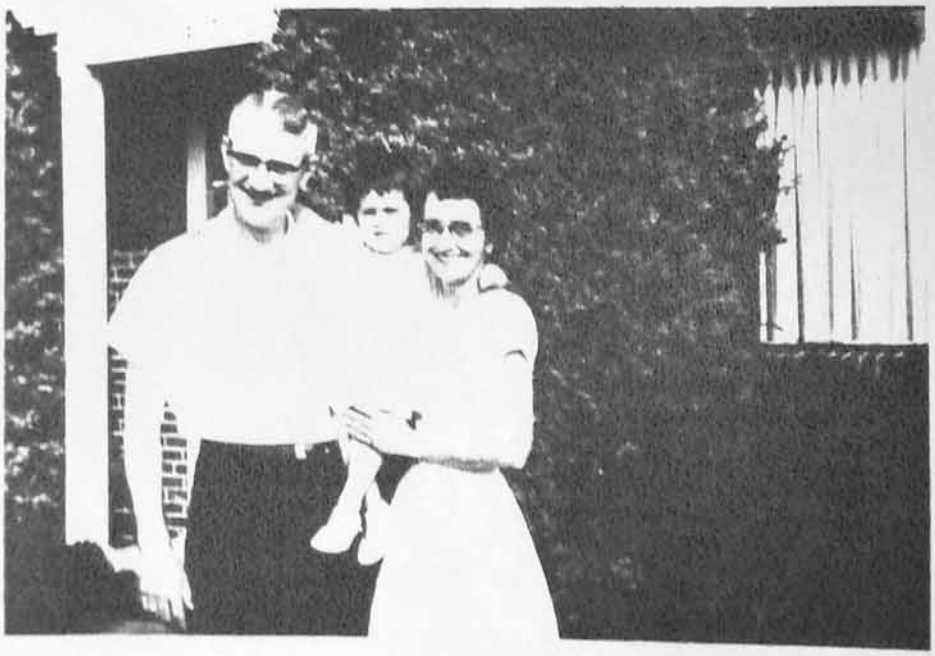
IVAN SHARP

EVAN

(Eunice, Si) Dave (Paul, Kitty) (Symington, Hallie) Tom Shipley

Paul & Kitty Edwards

JAN 64



Dave Linda Sylvia (1963 ?)

Benny & Linda
Eduardo
Xmas 1980

David Hannah house

Left:

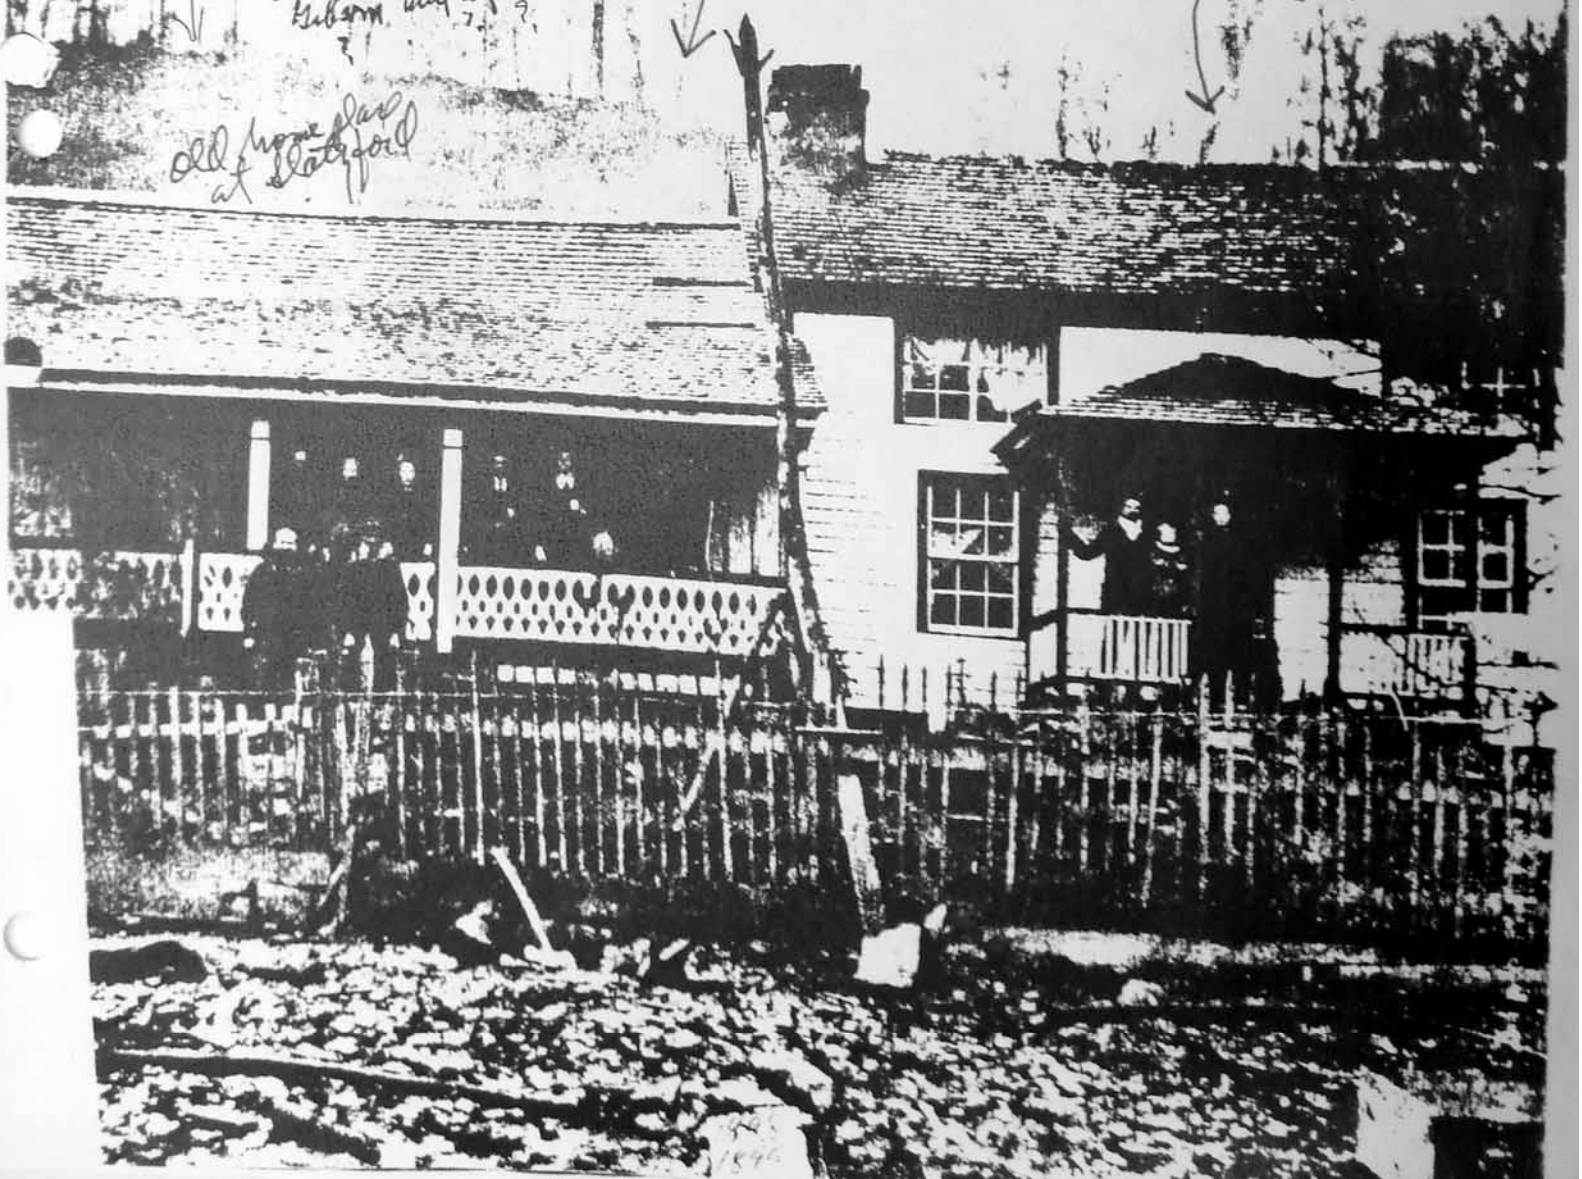
Rear: Jeff Sampson
Right old man Jim Gibson
Leo & Sarah (Jeff)

the old house place at Blackjack

Rear Portico
L.D. Laura
+ 2 children
ada + Kitty

Betty
Gibson

old house place at Blackford



(1)

Saturday night

Edray, W. Va.
Jan. 14th 1893.

Mr. Luther Sharp:-

Dear Friend:

I will try to write a few lines in reply to your kind letter that I received Wednesday evening. I am always glad to hear from you and to hear you were well. Willie and Pa have both been sick but they are better now, Pa went to Clover Creek this morning. Miss Effie Moore is right sick, the Doctor says she has the fever, I was down to see her this evening it snowed so, they did'nt want me to come home. Flora caught me home on a horse. If it keeps on snowing like it has been it will soon

Letter from Laura Jane Morgan to Luther Sharp from Edray, Webster County, West Virginia, January 14, 1893. They were married a month later on February 16th, 1893 at Edray Methodist Church, Pleasant by the Rev. Jeffrey Sam. Morgan. (Transcription) be as deep as it was two years ago, it is almost too cold for sleighing now. I seen Mrs. Gillen going to Marlinton in a sleigh today it would be dark before she would get home. Mr. Andy and I have not taken any sleigh ride yet, I don't think we will if he can help it, it would be nice if he would come to take some one else sleigh riding and they would go with another fellow. I don't think I will go with him again, as second choice.

(2)

It has been right lonesome since school has closed, but I am glad it has closed, it has been so cold this week, I believe we would have frozen in that cold school-house. I never did see cold weather last so long. I have not entirely laid my books aside I did'nt quite get through some of them, and

4

O, may thy life be one sweet dream, and one bright long summer day.
And like the winter evergreen,
May it never fade away.

(3) I look over them sometimes.

Mr. Sydenstricker was wanting Pa to send me to Hillsboro to school, he said he would board me for half price. Pa asked me if I wanted to go. I told him no, but did not say why.

I believe the people are very well pleased with the entertainments Saturday night, if they are I am. Mr. Jackson was here Thursday a while. I did want so bad to tell him what he said about me, but I did not have a good chance to tell him, he told the truth when he said I was ugly, I did'nt care for that, but as for me being "proud" or "stuck up", it is not so.

If I was as handsome as he is, I believe I would talk about other people being ugly, and stuck up. Ha. Ha. I heard he said

(4)

I received the present you sent me and appreciated it, but I would much rather you had not sent it. You must excuse this badly written and composed letter. I must close for this time. Your true and loving friend, Laura Morgan.

(4) if he were you, he would go to see Nimma, because she is the best looking. Perhaps he told you ~~so I don't~~ know

You certainly were treated "up a limb" Sunday night, and about as to have all gone get a nice photograph.

I was very much pleased yesterday to get a letter from cousin Katie Wanger, she always writes such long letters, she writes all the news, and so much mischief.

You will have a cold time if you go to Webster Co. next week.

I think my ring is so nice it is rather tight, but then no one can get it off. I have never taken it off since you put it on. I would not give it up for any one else's ring.

Edray, Pocahontas Co. W. Va.
Oct 24th, -92

Mr. Luther Sharp:

Kind Friend I will endeavor to write you a few lines in answer to your kind letter, I received some time ago, I would have written sooner but was very busy, and I thought perhaps you would come over to the meeting. The meeting commenced yesterday. There was very good meeting last night, there will be meeting every night except Saturday night, The meeting will last over Sunday, come over before it closes.

It is such nice weather for meeting now.

You said you supposed the school master was afraid to scold me. He never has any occasion to scold me I am so good I would be afraid to cut up at school. Mr. Barlow is not very strict but he makes us get our lessons. I am going to go all the school, I like to go first rate.

You need not be afraid that I will show your letters. It is something that I would not do. It is useless for me to ask you not to show my letters, because I know you will not, I will close writing my scribling to a close, excuse it, short and bad writ[ten] because I am in a hurry.

I remain as ever yours friend. Laura Morgan.

I (Laura) all I want to see her again some time. It's a long ways to go. I would love to go see aunt Sallie (Sarah Ragsdale Whaley Ware) while she is living.
Genevieve is better than she was.
she can walk over here and back.
she still has a girl staying with her. Addy had all her boys (Addison & Rufus) together pulled three weeks ago. she has had an awful time of it. Addy has an abscess on her gum. Dr
Dr lanced the place and has a poultice on it and the dr wanted her to go in town and have an X-Ray made of it but she said she was not able.
She has had an awful bad cold too. She could get get any one to stay with her. They got a woman to stay a few hours one day. Ollie aunt had been in the hospital and his uncle sick and his sisters husband had Pneumonia so gone of his people could help them any.

Laura wrote to her brother Will - Before 19280719

45 [redacted] who married [redacted]
3 [redacted] has not been well and his mind is bad. they took him last week to Roosevelt & the hospital and he came back and they say he is no better. he is at home.
it is a pity for him they have 8 children, and they want any thing that is going. they want pick on all the Children. they want the best that is going but never think of the poor Virgie was over 2 days and helped clean up the store. Joe is getting real frail he totters around, he can hardly hear.
they are cutting timber up on the Jim Jackson place and have a saw mill there. Hally Shelton they have a camp there and Ella Bibson Cooke there. I must 2 send Ruby some thing pr per Birthday. I will send Edith a hand kerchief if I can send it in my letter. write me when you can Love 2 you all from Laura Shark written to her brother L. Morgan

No mention of Violet (born 3-15-1897) to Ada perhaps about 2 years old (Ada born 2-21-1894) so letter written about Spring of 1896

Willy is still working for Mr. Pat Henrys.
Will has not been over to see his girl for a few Sun's, but I think he will go soon.
We had right dry weather until the other day it rained and has been raining some ever since. Our onions are beginning to come up somenow. I planted a few Jerusalem cherry flowers last week and they are coming up somenow.
Ida called some to day.
Well what is Ada doing
I want to see her very bad & suppose her kiss her for me and don't think her at all.
Mr. Harvey Morrison and wife are going along good they have been up to Mr.
William Morrisons to a log rolling. Pa has been clearing off his own ground to day and is too tired to write this time. Well I will close my uninteresting letter for this time by asking you to write soon.

From your sister
Minna Morgan

Letter from Minna to her sister Laura Shaff (Morgan)

4

45

Letter to Ivan by his mother, Laura March 2 (1921 ?)

Dear Ivan: March 2 (Ivan in Buckhannon ?)

(page 1) I received your letter and card both last night. I should have gotten the letter of course I could do yp your clothes, but they might get mashed up getting to the railroad. You know they have to be carried horseback to Cloverlick and some times the mail gets wet. It is raining tonight. I came over to the store and stayed over tonight. There is some snow on the north side.

(page 2) I heard today that Cad Gilmore was arrested at Spruce for bootlegging whiskey. They were making it at Cheat Bridge and he was ..... it on the train and selling at Spruce. We heard they arrested one other man and Gilmore was fined $500 or that's what I heard. Coyner was not drunk but John (Slanker?) and Resa (Higgins?) were drunk. Hattie (McClung) said she would not have minded(?) if if John or Alfred (Higgins) had hurt him. But to have to carry a (scar ?) made by (with a couple stick) Resa was the limit. Resa had on her fine dress and she sat

(page 3) ~~She~~ (JOHN) in the cabbage that she had for supper. People talk awful about John and Resa. Bill(who?) (HOOVER OR GIBSON) and Sam (Higgins?) moved the wool out of the Curtis house today so I suppose they will .move.... Nannie (Higgins?) is as hot as a fox. She sent Sam over for a big box to put the things in and I was in a minute and she had three boxes in the floor. She said over there this morning she washed those little darned (horses or houses) were all burned up. I am afraid she is mean enough to burn them if she had her things out of there. She has no where to go only -(Page 4)--if where they came from. And she says she is not going there. Papa (LD) and I got an invitation to the inauguration ball at Charleston, but I don't expect we will go. ha, ha. The boys have their fishing tackle and fishing catalog. I am glad you got the "Times". Papa was around the hill and cut a lot of grafts to graft some apples in the spring. Papa wrote out a notice to take to Uncle Hugh about not selling apples on Sunday. Uncle hugh sells honey and apples to the Bohunks They could come any day, they are so close by.

The following on different paper, but apparently to Ivan, maybe mailed at the same time --?? (Pages 1, 2, 3 & 4, (or 5, 6, 7 & 8)

(1) March 3, 1921 Well I have come over to the new house. It rained and the creek is full Sam & Bill have gone to the commissary(?) The stores have come (?) and I suppose they will have lotsof .... (Grace Green (husband) ... there now... (Teacher) Delphie has sent her draft by Cecil to cass to have it cashed, and he has sent men (Rhodes) paying for her board and .... she has ..... . Nannie went (slagging?) out to the barn this morning where Sam was. I guess she thought Hattie might go out to see (page 2) him, Hattie never looked at him. Papa said Nannie would not speak to him this morning. ..... (Rec'd Mail P.O.)
The girls asked Papa about (stamp?) and he told them to go out to the house to get them... (stamps?) I reckon Nan would not let them go over. She just acts like a mad bull all the time she is a (raaring?) about a lamb of hers. Papa said he was keeping her sheep for nothing and paying Sam and Bill for looking after her sheep as well as hisown. She is so mad about Luthers ma.... (GRACE) moving down. (page 3) Mrs. Tracy is real poorly I heard they did not expect her to live.anytime. She is a good woman and (told)not to be afraid to die. Matilda Hoover is home now. Mrs. Hover has a very bad cold. I am sending Creola a couple waists. She wants Violet to select her some clothes at Baltimore. Ada was a little better, but real poorly when she wrote. Her ..... cost nearly $4 each. (page 4) (4) Well I have written all I know to write I will not get to write so often when the spring work comes on. Papa wants me to go to attend the store so he can sew grass seed over here. There is not many cutting timber now but the Bohunks. Well I will have to close for this time.
with love, Mama.

(Luther worked on farm & Ada more cooked) (Sam & Nannie Higgins lived in Curtis house for Uncle Hugh)

(See typed sheet #46)

Dear Ivan:

I got your letter and Candy both but might have mixed the letter Pat let did not. Of course I could do no more than put them right at washed up, getting the RR and hurrying home to be called first thing to Clara [illegible] and [illegible] mail got wet. It is raining to beat it. Cops out, to the store and [illegible] to night. Then no [illegible]
Brian at the [illegible]

Page 1 mar. 2

down in the cabbage that she had for supper
Folk talk awful about
John and Resa.
Bill and Sam mowed
the weeds out of the Curly house lot today so if Pete they will grow
Nannie was not as a lot she Bert Sam ought to a big lot to feed the things in and I was in a quandry and of had 3 notes — the flour
she paid over three days morning she picked three little Burrell peaches for after breakfast up. I am afraid she'll freeze
[illegible] to [illegible] before the [illegible] and her [illegible] [illegible] of them. She has no there to [illegible]

47

page 3

I heard to day that Col
Gilmore had arrests at Sprigle for not keeping whiskey they ice grabbing at Creek Bridge &
he was hung from
the dam and scaling of Spruce the heartless wretch one other man and Simas says had both of their hats shot
I heard Cooper was not drunk but perhaps had been the worse
Hatter and she would not have appointed an inferior officer
but the Capt & Lieut to carry a scout ordered by Resa was the Lieut
Resa had on her fine dress and

page 3

page 4

we believe they came from and also Hays like us but going there. Papa and I got an invitation to the Inaugural Ball at Charleston but I don't expect we will go. Hatta
the boys have all been having stake and fishy Calabaw. I am glad you got the Times.
Papa was around the hill and got a lot of Brass to pay off some debts in the spring papa wrote to a Northern paper to tell them about the Col Cooper affair on Sunday. We have Lelbs Church and after the Benediction they have Communion Service

page (4)

Note To copies:

If sheets (49) & (50)
is too bad
Then leave them OB
- as they are typed up on Page (45)

OK

51

Becky Post-Herald 6-13-60

Man Celebrates 88th Anniversary

SLATY FORK (RNS) — "Just keep on — keeping on" is to what I attribute my 88 years," said Luther David Sharp on his 88th birthday anniversary Friday. "Yes sir, activity is the thing that keeps us young. We would die in a short time if it were not for work," Sharp stated.

Sharp was born June 10, 1872, the son of Silas and Sara Hannah Sharp of Slaty Fork. He was educated in the schools of Pocahontas County. As a child, Sharp said he could remember that they always had three changes in the meal for breakfast, they had meat and bread; for dinner, bread and meat; and for supper they had both of them with lots of dried apples for sauce and pies.

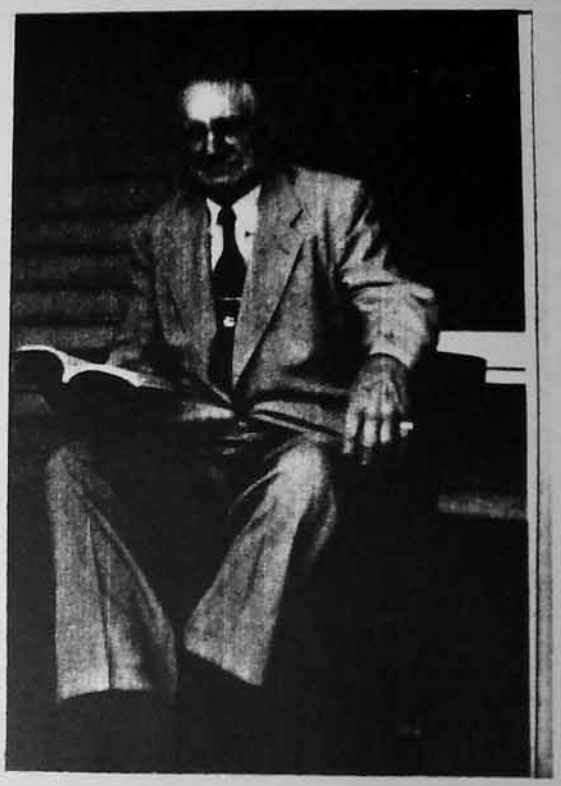
"The world has certainly bloomed out in flower since I was a boy," Sharp said. "I can remember when there was no buggy or no automobile. When a family bought the first lamp and around here, a daughter in the family slipped it out and brought it to our house and asked us to hide it because she was afraid it would blow up and kill their whole family. All the cooking had to be done over an open fire place."

"My father was a farmer who liked to hunt and fish. I have always liked to hunt and fish, and have gotten a deer each year of my life up until two years ago," Sharp reminised, "guess I am getting too old."

When Sharp was 15 years old he went into the store business at Slaty Fork on the old railroad. After the building of the new road, he built his present store in 1917. For 70 years he has been in the general store business. At the present time his oldest son, Luther David Sharp Jr., of Cincinnati, Ohio, owns the store and Mrs. Henry Gibson manages it for him.

Sharp married the former Miss Laura Jane Morgan and they were the parents of five living children, L. D. Sharp Jr. Ivan of Nitro; Paul of Port Netches, Texas, Silas S. Sharp, at home; and Mrs. Violet Markland of Richmond, Va. After the death of his first wife, several years ago, Sharp married the former Miss Mabel Hansford of Marlinton.

LUTHER DAVID SHARP



Notice to Confederates.

The meeting of Moffett Page Camp of Confederate Veterans is called to meet at the Times Office in Marlinton on Saturday, April 9 for the purpose of electing officers, appointing delegates to the Reunion at Mobile, and transacting any other business that may come before the Camp. A good attendance is desired.

LEVI WAUGH, Commander.
E. D. KING, Adjutant.

Farn For Sale.

Abont 385 acres, fine grazing, farming and fruit land. Some timber and an excellent orchard of improved trees. This land is so situated that there has never been a fruit failure. Good house, two barns, well watered, in good community. About five miles from depot, most of the distance being Macadam road. Address, Times Office, Marlinton, W. Va.

FOR SALE:—A small grist mill known as Griffin mill on Big Spring of Elk, Good water power all the year round. About 1 1-2 acres of land, with small dwelling. For further particulars apply to S. C. Galford, Slaty Fork, W Va.

Contractors Wanted.

We will let to contract the cutting of twenty thousand cords of pulp wood this season. As big a contract as you can handle can be secured. Apply at once to

WILLIAMS & PARIS,
1st National Bank Building,
Marlinton, W. Va.

L.D. Wrote from Fla. 1925

Pocahontas

3-26-1925

52

RLINTON, POCAHONTAS COUNTY WEST VIR

$1.00 A Year

Jan 1, 1914

YELK

Mrs. Carrie H. Dilley, of Dilleys Mill, who has been visiting her daughter, Mrs. Birdie O. Dilley, the past two months, has returned home.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles McGuire's little boy continues to improve.

Charles Galford has gone to Marlinton where he has opened a jewelry repair shop

The directors of the Marlinton and Elk Mutual Telephone Company met Saturday. The officers are L. D. Sharp, president; S. Mc Dilley, vice-president and general manager; J. D. Gibson, secretary and treasurer. The most important business transacted was the cutting out of free phones after January 1; the extending of the short line wire down Elk wherever the extension of the company's business justifies it; the cooperation of the different mutual companies entering the Marlinton switchboard will be asked in order to install two phones, one in the C. & O. station and the other in the freight office.

The W. Va. Pulp & Paper Co. have scheduled a daily passenger, (Sundays excepted) from Cass to the commissary near Slaty Fork, beginning January 1. The train will leave Cass in early morning, returnig in time to connect at noon with the up C. & O. train. This will be the main line to Webster Springs.

Mr. and Mrs. Sam Gibson were Marlinton visitors, Friday.

James Gibson got tired of skinning his shins handling backlogs and foresticks and has now installed steam heat in his house.

Mr. and Mrs. Andy Loan are spending the holidays at Millboro, Virginia.

Bina Moss and Earl Gibson are visiting at Howardsville, Va.

Joe Buzzard was on Elk this week contracting for lambs for next fall.

Married, at the residence of the officiating minister, Rev. C. H. Anderson, December 25, 1913, Clarence Blakeslee and Miss Glenna Sharp. The bride is the eldest daughter [illegible] and a very promising lady

3-26-1925 Column #1

FROM FLORIDA

We have taken our east coast tour, and on arrival back to our home in Orlando, will give you a part of our experience. The first day we went through Cocoa City, Indian River City and several small towns and reached Melbourn City at about the right time to pitch our tent. We were directed to the tourist camp and found it to be the best camp we have seen on the east coast. And as my son and I are fond of fishing we enquired where we could go fishing that night and were told that the best place to fish in all the country was off the Indian River bridge. The bridge is two miles long. We got flashlights, hooks and lines and pulled out for the fish market to get shrimp for bait and found that they did not have any, so we went to the grocery and bought some meat rind. When we got to the bridge and were telling the fishermen about our bad luck in not being able to get shrimp. They said "you did not need any bait, we are all fishing with a small piece of white rag." I thought they were kidding me, but soon saw that they were actually catching them thick and fast with the white rag and hook. One man had a small piece of oil cloth on his hook and they used it just as we use an artificial fly in West Virginia. We had heavy sinkers on our lines and continued to fish with the meat rind until my son caught a trout, and took one of its gills and in a short time we caught all we could eat for breakfast. I never saw so many fish caught in so short a time in all my life. Some had fifty or more nice trout, and there must have been 200 people fishing and all were catching fish. One man told me that he had caught 700 trout the night before on a hook that was run through a piece of his white handkerchief. Ask Dick Smith if he can beat that man's fish story.

The next day we pulled straight ahead for Palm Beach and we reached the ocean in time to go out on the great long pier and catch a mess of fish for breakfast. Then we drove around among the beautiful palm trees and flowers and looked at all beautiful scenery on Palm Beach. Then we drove over to West Palm Beach to the tourist's camp, and instead of finding the camp among the fine cocoanut and palm trees we found it located where there were but few shade trees, and the tourists were not very well pleased with the camp, but we made it all right.

The next day we drove down to Hollywood and pitched our tent to camp over Sunday. This city has been building only four years and in bathing. We drove out to Coral Gabels where so many rich men are spending their money in lots and fine buildings. It is no place for a poor man. Miami is getting pretty well up with Chicago for crime. We found some tourists who were afraid to go to Miami on account of so much robbing and so many murders in the last year. That was one reason why Sharp camped outside of Miami.

Column #2

We took another shoot out from Miami and went down the east coast as far as the road is cut out. The first city of any size below Miami was Homestead. We went on below Florida City along way down until we found no more road. There is a vast rich country and there are thousands of acres of tomatoes, and as the old saying is "I never saw tomatoes before." I did not see anybody but negroes living between these cities, and the negroes had many boxes of tomatoes along the road to sell to tourists. We bought the finest tomatoes I ever saw for two cents per pound; that was all they asked for them. There are many tomato packing houses and the packers no doubt are buying tomatoes from the negroes for a song and they are shipping them up north and making a fortune on them.

Florida is not considered much for corn, but I never saw better corn grow any place than in one section down near the jumping off place. The corn looked to be much higher than a man's head—probably ten or twelve feet high—and such a dark green color that the land must be very rich.

We went out to a Seminole Indian village. There were about fifty Indians there. Some of them work in the packing house. We parked our car by the roadside and walked out to the indian camps among the jungles, and when I saw the Indians sitting flat on the ground in squads and looking so strange at us, it very near got my nerve. I tried to get them to talk, but they would only say yes and no. They were cooking out on the ground and we could tell the meat they were cooking was more than ripe—anyway we did not stay for dinner. The children about six years old and under had no clothes on. The Indians were all barefooted but the older ones had on clothes of many colors. While we were at this village a very large swarm of bees passed over us and looked as if they were going to settle on a pine tree, but they slowly moved on. I suppose the Indians have plenty of honey to eat. It looks bad that our government does not educate the Seminoles. I am told they are getting fewer all the time.

The State is building a new road that short time. They are now making artificial lakes. They think the northern people like lakes, so they are spending many thousands of dollars making them. The main street must be over 100 feet wide and the city runs out to the ocean front. In a few years Hollywood will be one of the big cities on the map.

As it is only eighteen miles to Miami, we decided to run down to go to William Jennings Bryan's Sunday school class. We were told that he teaches the largest men's class in the United States—5000 men. He teaches his class out in the Miami Park. But owing to being held back by the traffic we did not get to the park until he had closed, we thought we would go to the first church we could find for preaching, which was a Presbyterian church. After preaching I was told that Mr. Bryan and his wife were in the congregation, so I hunted him up and had a short talk with him on prohibition, and, while we differ in politics, we are together on prohibition. Mrs. Bryan has to be wheeled about in a chair. She is unable to raise her hands. Mr Bryan said she was not paralyzed but it was worse than being paralyzed as she suffered such great pain. She has been helpless for six years. They live in a fine mansion in Miami but of course Mrs. Bryan cannot enjoy it, so the poorest person with good health has the greatest blessing. Let us be thankful for our health while we have it.

Sunday afternoon we drove a distance of probably five miles across bridge to the Miami Beach. We could hardly get there and we could hardly get back. There were many thousands of cars going over and coming back and we would hardly get started until the city cop would stop the long double line of cars. We must have been one hour going that five miles to the beach. It looked to us like there were 100,000 people on the beach and there were thousands and while we were driving at a fast rate to make up lost time, at about ten o'clock as we were driving through a jungle section we saw three alligators cross the road in front of us. About an hour later while we were a long way from any town, three men were standing by the road; one of them stepped out in the road and waved us to stop and kept on waving—we could see him from the light of the car. Not a word was spoken to our car, but my son had presence of mind and threw on all the gas he could. We were going at about 35 miles an hour, and we must have passed by them at 35 miles or more per hour. We don't know what their business was; they had no broken down car there, and as there had been so many people held up and robbed around Miami, I believe they were robbers, but they had no way to stop us unless they killed the driver, and we went so fast that it would have taken a Jesse James to have gotten him.

We drove on our tour down and back to Orlando about eight hundred miles. We found everything all right in our bungalow, and we are renting our property and getting ready to to start back to West Virginia in a few days. We are getting anxious to see our old friends. James White wrote us he would stop to see us on his way home but I suppose he lost directions and could not find us. We hope he reached home safely.

We expect to stop off with our daughter at Richmond for one day and will run over to Baltimore, and make a short call at Washington, probably one day, then we will proceed homeward. The tourists are going north very fast—so much so that you can't get a Pullman without engaging it a few weeks ahead.

L. D. Sharp.

Early Seed

come the demand in Pocahontas Pocahontas Supt Cass expects to rs in stock. The s expected right ontain cars for J. S. Hickman and a s.

hool of the Marian Church took linnehaha Springs ll the party numety. Dinner r the spring, and ing was enjoyed to in the fine big wreck at the Kenow Seebert Saturle loaded cars were fic delayed several ise was a bad piece avy grade.

as the old man, at Armageddon, Ten Command- ise put in ten or y.

this part of the state.

Misses Mabel Fuller and Grace Stalting are visiting friends in Charlottesville, Va.

WHEN TWENTY TO FORTY YEARS has been added to YOUR life and you are unable to work and earn the money you get now, how are you going to get necessities and comforts you need for you and yours?

A GROWING bank account today forecasts something better than a mere existence in later years.

Why not today start a account with

THE FIRST NATIONAL BANK
Marlinton, W. Va.

said to be predominant in than three fourths of the necessary to ratify a nation- constitutional amendment, t is as yet without foot- y considerable extent in e., Pennsylvania, New and Nevada. As the pro- of the sale of intoxicating essentially a state mat- execution of the police hich is reserved to every ngress has seen the jus- oviding against it being with under the guise of commerce. As the ates Supreme court well otteries (188 U. S. 321, 321, 47 L. Ed. 492): not permit the declared he states, which sought heir people against the f the lottery business, hrown or disregarded ncy of interstate com- his applies with equal e prohibition of the xicating liquors. It the intention of Con- it its control of inter- ce to impair the po- the states but on the se it as an aid to the cing their home rule

DEUMED

uck, arch deacon missionary of the urch, claims with ns, to have reached Mt. McKinley, 20,- ore in height, on He offered praise erected the U. S. oot cross.—Liter-n there and wor- non the lofty peak; i it was, so near re him, man did s by day and ed in the lonely l on McKinley's the symbol of made the uni- nounced the me ceaslessly, and says to ise above the e fold close g;

WARM SPRINGS, VA.

Quite a number of our town people attended the Sunday school convention which was held at Millboro last Tuesday and Wednesday. They report a large crowd and an enjoyable time.

Mrs. Walter Ricks of Covington visited her parents, Mr. and Mrs. F. L. LaRue, the latter part of last week.

Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Gum and little son John E., spent last Sunday with Mrs.. Gum's parents, Mr. and Mrs. R. D. Rimel.

W. J. Pritchard of Frost, spent a week with his family here and returned to Frost last Wednesday.

Miss Willie Vines spent last Wednesday night with her friend Miss Annie Lupton Campbell.

Sam Mann of Augusta county, was the guest of friends here last week.

Mrs. D. B. Agner and grandson William Snider returned from several days visit to Mrs. Agner's daughter, Mrs. Allison, who lives in Covington.

Howard Campbell returned Saturday from Dayton where he attended school the past winter.

SLATY FORK

Very dry now and rain much needed.

W. T. Morgan has gotten an automobile.

L. D. Sharp and Miss Mariam Morgan were in Marlinton Friday night.

Miss Gladys Baughman is visiting her grandfather, Shell Hannah

Sam Moore passed through this part last week.

Miss Violet Sharp has returned home from Marlinton where she had been attending High School.

Miss Elizabeth Roads, of Ohio, who taught in the Marlinton High School the past winter, is spending a few days at L. D. Sharp's, Rev. Mr. Coffman preached to a large congregation last Sunday afternoon.

The railroad is being pushed on down the river. They are running trains both day and night.

Shearing sheep is the order of the day here.

Miss Ada Sharp is expected home the first of June from Boston, Mass., where she has been attending Conservatory.

LOBELIA

Weather fine; hot days, cool nights and is getting very dry. Corn is coming

ROYAL BAKING POWDER
Absolutely Pure

The only Baking Powder made from Royal Grape Cream of Tartar

NO ALUM, NO LIME PHOSPHATE

Notice, Contractors

IN THE MATTER OF BIDS IN CONSTRUCTION OF 258 RODS OF ROAD IN THE HUNTERSVILLE DISTRICT

Bids will be received by the County Court until noon, June 23rd, 1914, for construction of 258 rods of road in Huntersville district, near J. H. Buzzard's being a relocation of the Hillroad in the direction of Brown's Creek located by J. H. Kramer, said road to be 14 feet wide, and to be built according to specifications in lands of Hevener Dilley, Road Superintendent and approved by him. one-half in length of said road to be built in the present year, and completed by Dec. 1st, 1914, the remaining half in the following year, 1915. This arrangement to permit of the financing of this road without unduly burdening the road fund of the Huntersville district.

C. J. McCarty, Clerk.

Commissioner's Notice

Pursuant to a decree entered by the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County, West Virginia at the April term of said Court in the Chancery cause of Charles Friel vs Ira Shinneberry. Notice is hereby given to all parties in interest that as required by the said decree, I will proceed at my office in the town of Marlinton, West Virginia on Tuesday the 14th day of July 1914 to take state and report to the Court the following matters of account, to-wit:

First. A complete statement showing the liens and their priorities against the lands of the defendant.

Second. What lands the defendant owns in this Jurisdiction and a description of the same.

Third. Whether the said real estate will in five years rent for a sum sufficient to pay off and discharge the liens thereon.

Fourth. Any other matter deemed pertinent by the commissioner or required by any party in interest.

S. H. Sharp,
Commissioner in Chancery.

NOTICE TO LIEN HOLDERS

To all persons holding liens by judgment or otherwise on the real estate or any part thereof of Ira Shinneberry.

In pursuance of a decree of the Circuit Court of Pocahontas County, West Virginia

ANNOUNCEMENTS

FOR COUNTY COURT CLERK

To the Voters of Pocahontas county

I hereby announce myself a candidate for the office of County Clerk of Pocahontas county and promise if elected to serve the people of this county to the best of my skill and judgment. As you know I have had many years experience in this work and I would be glad to take it up again.

Respectfully,
S. L. Brown.

FOR CIRCUIT CLERK

To the voters of Pocahontas County:

I hereby announce myself a candidate for the nomination for the office of Circuit Clerk of Pocahontas County, subject to the action of the Democratic party in nominating candidates.

As I am engaged in school work now and will be for some time, it will not be possible for me to see all the voters of the county, so I shall ask you through the columns of this paper for your support and influence.

C. Forrest Hull.

I hereby announce myself a candidate for the office of Circuit Clerk of Pocahontas County, subject to the action of the Democratic Party.

Geo. D. Oliver.

Cass, W. Va., Feb. 23, 1914

We are authorized to announce M. Lacy Johnston as a candidate for the office of Clerk of the Circuit Court, subject to the action of the Democratic party.

FOR COMMISSIONER

We are authorized to announce J. S. McNeel as a candidate for Commissioner of the County Court, subject to the action of the Democratic

FOR COUNTY SUPERINTENDENT

To the Voters of Pocahontas County:

I hereby announce myself a candidate for re-election to the office of Superintendent of Schools of Pocahontas County, subject to the action of the Democratic Party's way of nominating. I promise, if nominated and elected, to serve the comb, and others.

e authority vested in the Commissioner of the t of Pocahontas County, ay its decretal order
e 20th day of Octoabove styled cause I my office in the rlinton, West Virginia
day of December, 1921, and report to Court the
tters of account, to-wit:
ist personal property be-
a. Malcomb at the date

What real estate belong-Malcomb at the date of the value thereof.
defendant C. S. Mar-n, amounts thereof, and es.
What debts are properly
gainst the estate of Wm.
the amounts of each,
d their respective priori-

time and place any party
ay attend.
J. E. Buckley,
Commissioner.

inferred from the evidence in this case that you brothers had been engaged in making moonshine liquor and that on the night preceding the murder of George Huffman you had a part of your whiskey stolen and we may gather from the evidence that you accused George Huffman and another of having taken your whiskey. In this you may be correct, yet even this being true it gave you no license to commit murder. The penalty in this case is severe, yet it is only commensurate with the crime that has been committed. I doubt not that the criminal annals of this county does not show a more deliberate killing as has been narrated by the witnesses in this case.

"This certainly should be a lesson to others who may be engaged in the [illegible] whiskey business. That the day of settlement will finally come, and should be enough to turn all those similarly engaged, to the paths of lawful pursuits.'"—West Virginia News.

THORNY CREEK

Quite an excitement was created in this section last Friday when an insane man was taken into custody by John Perry, W. F. Harmon and Summers Hoover. He gave his name as Walter L. Carnefix and said he son, in the Chicago Daily News.

SLATYFORK

Charley Craddock, Engineer on the G. C. & E. Ry., was painfully injured by being hit across the stomach by a log while working on a wreck. He was taken to the hospital at Ronceverte, where he is getting along nicely

Russell Dilley has sold his Ford car and purchased a new Maxwell.

Miss Creola Sharp, who is attending high school at Marlinton, spent Thanksgiving with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. L. D. Sharp.

Our school is progressing nicely with Glen Barlow as teacher.

Oliver Painter, Lee Burner and Russel Dilley are building a garage in partnership.

Mrs. G[illegible] at Hospital at Ronceverte with her husband, Charlie Craddock, who is in the hospital.

Earl and Irene Bryant, who are attending high school at Marlinton, spent Thanksgiving with their parents, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Bryant.

Senator Heflin (Dem., Ala.) made this prophetic declaration in a telling speech against the whitewashing of Senator Newberry:

"The way Senators voted on a question like this resulted in the re[illegible] of some of them as the Sen-

Treaty of Versailles wa
by posterity."
Cox, in D

HONOR ROLL: Pri
Stony Bottom School.
dridge, teacher. First
Bell Tallman, Anna
Edith Thomas, Maud
Moore, Frank Wilfong
Bearyl Bumgardner, L
Earl Tallman, Myrl T
Tallman, Harlan McLa
Rider, June Meeks, Or Second month—Va
Grace Wilfong, Anna
Edith Thomas, Maud
Moore, Frank Wilfong
Bearyl Bumgardner, L
Earl Tallman, Myrl T
June Meeks, Orval
age, Mary Bell Tallm
fong, Edith Thoma
Jesse Moore, Frank
Moore, Bearyl Bumga
Wilfong, Earl Tallman
Laughlin, Clyde Tallm
man, June Meeks, Geo

Co. vs Dorsey Freeman judgment $308.59.

State vs Pete Snyder, forfeiture on bail bond.

Bank of Marlinton vs R. R. Snedegar and others, judgment $1698.81.

State vs Lee Vint, not guilty.

State vs John Milam, guilty, sentence two years in pen.

Pistol license granted Paris D Yeager and Park McNeil.

State vs Roy Houchin, verdict guilty of murder in second degree.

State vs Ira Vandevender, confessed, $300 fine six months in jail.

State vs Matus Bobconic, guilty, two years in pen.

State vs John Rose, guilty, $150 and costs

State vs E. D. Burner, $50 and six months in jail, charge carrying a pistol. Bail pending application for writ of error.

State vs J. W. Shifflet, guilty, $100 fine sixty days in jail.

State vs C. P. Hamrick, No. 1 & 2 quashed.

State vs C. P. Hamrick, not guilty

N. B. Arbogast was [illegible] W. Goodsell's over Sunday.

Wm Widney, superintendent of the Pocahontas Tanning Company, is making some changes in the tannery.

12-13-1922

SLATYFORK

Grass is growing fine and it looks like summer was not far off.

We are expecting Professor J. H. Hall, one of the world's best music teachers, to teach singing school for us this summer. Everyone near should take advantage of this great onportunity to study music.

L. D. Sharp has been working hard getting up petitions to re-establisn a mail route from Slatyfork to Edray. Many years ago the people of Elk had daily mail, but now have no mail at all for a distance of twelve miles. Well to do farmers and heavy taxpayers live here, and during the war were heavy subscribers of Government bonds and War Saving Stamps, and yet they have been denied any mail service, we hope that this very important route will soon be established. Let us pull together. There is but one road from the main road down to the Slatyfork office The mail has been carried several years from Linwood to Slatyfork.

Our Sunday School is progressing nicely. We think the Sunday school should not close for the winter. Since we have had a few years of evergreen Sunday School we find it the thing. Our attendance has been good all winter and last Senday the house was full, with not a vacant seat left.

There has been a lot of moonshining going on on Elk. Some men are too lazy to work and so they make the stuff to rob men of their money, minds and health. The moonshener must quit his dishonest business or soon be rounded up.

I am herewith enclosing you a few lines suggested to me by a conversation I heard on one of our streets last Sunday afternoon between a minister of the Gospel and a couple of our local attorneys. J. M. MEADOR.
Hinton, W. Va.

What boots if if,
Within the pulsing womb of time,
A thousand thousand years
Man passed from stage to stage;
Or if, at God's command,
With single bound
He leaped from Mother Earth
A Man?

To Him who gave us life
A thousand years is as a single day.
His handiwork shows purpose and design.
I question not His wisdom, mode or plan;
Nor hath the Record said
He breathed in him the Breath of Life
And Man became a Living Soul,
Before he was a Man!

Science hath not shown
The Sun to change his course
In all the years;
Nor whence Orion's bands.
Polaris guided mariners of old,
And points the North today.
The Pleiades we view with raptured gaze,
The Shepherds saw and Poets sang
On old Judea's hills.

The fragrance of the Rose,
The Violet's tint

ERMEN

at you obsirements

fishing license which

The c accepted

War on Elk

Vol No 34 · 3-31-1910 Marli

War Recollections.

THE FIGHT ON ELK.

Company F. 19th Va. Cavalry was organized at Millpoint, Pocahontas county, December, 1862. A few days after we organized and before we received our arms, one of our company, Frank McKeever, deserted and went to Beverly and told the Yanks that we were in camp at Millpoint without arms and how nice it would be to capture the company. So some two or three hundred soldiers set out from Beverly to take us in. But a day or two after McKeever deserted we got our arms and had gone over in the upper end of Greenbrier county to try and capture a bushwhacker by the name of McMillion, and had been on the march the greater part of the night without meeting up with McMillion, and stopped in the after part of the night in Renicks Valley to get a little sleep and feed our horses. That night a snow fell about 11 inches deep. After we got something to eat, we saddled up and started on our return to camp.

When we reached the Top of Droop Mountain some one met us and told of the Yankees being in the Levels and had captured our quarters and one or two of the company who had been left in camp and burnt all the feed and provisions we had. So when we arrived in the Levels we were without shelter, feed or anything to eat. We scattered out among the farmers, got something to eat, and organized for a dash after the Yanks to try to even up with them for what they had done for us in our absence. I think we had about sixty men. Some of Capt. Marshall's company fell in with us after we started on our raid, and proved to be of great help. Lieut. Price took the advance with Will Pouge, Geo. W. Jackson, Joseph Hull and Henry Sharp with him, expecting to

When Capt. McNeel found that he could not open the door he gave it a kick and asked them to surrender. The Yankee Lieut. in command answered him by saying, "Surrender, no, never," and they commenced shooting through the doors and windows and we replied in the same way. A Yankee by the name of McWhorter, from Jane Lew, was shot and killed as he made the attempt to get out of his bed, and another Yankee was killed in the room. By that time the Yankee Lieut. cried out, "I surrender."

Capt. McNeel answered, "I asked you to surrender and you wouldn't, let them have it, boys."

Then he said, "I surrender with up-lifted hands."

Capt McNeel then gave the command to cease firing, and we crowded in the house, and while we were in the house Walt Allen jumped from an upstairs window and made his escape. Well enough he did, I guess, for it is hard to tell what might have been his fate had we gotten him.

All the boys did not know that Lieut. Price and his squad were down the road and some of them mistook them for Yanks and fired on them, killing Henry Sharp, which cast a gloom over our victory. We captured eighteen Yankees with their horses and arms—all of which we needed in our business. So we evened up pretty well for what they had done to us.

Frost

Plowing and sugar making is the order of the day.

J. W. Jackson moved to Frost last week. We are glad to see him back again.

B. B. Williams, of Cass, was around last week shaking hands with his many friends.

Geo. B. Ryder, of Highland county, was in this community

Joe Wooddell, of Greenbank

ton or Edray, but not fi them at either place we foll them to Elk. When we g where the road left the pike t to William Moore's, Lieut. noticed that some had taken road and had not returned.
waited there for the compa come up and when it got the called for volunteers to go him to Mr. Moore's and as nearly frozen, and we wer make the trip a-foot, I dismo to make the trip, thinking i way I would get warm; it wa my bravery that caused me t but just simply to keep from
ing. Well we were soon at Moore's and surrounded the and Lieut. Price called to Moore and asked him if he any one stopping with him f night. He said, "Yes, ther a couple gentlemen stopping him." He told Mr. Moor wished to see them, and we and brought the gentlemen which proved to be two Y
We went to the stable an their horses put the Yanks o string and started back. O the Yanks was Sargeant M
the other a high private, I be When we got back to the was good and warm. We se two prisoners back toward J and then Lieut. Price and h vance started on to Gib
When we got to the Moffett we all dismounted, hitched horses to the fence by the and Lieut. Price and his went on in front. When w to Polly Gibson's, Lieut
Price and his men passed b went on down the road to just beyond the house. Th of the command surrounde house. The Yankee picket had been on duty had gone the house and was trying t some one to go out and tak place; so there was no pick duty when we got there.
arms were stacked in one c of the room. We though would open the door and r over the Yanks as they lay a floor. Capt. McNeel tri open the door but it ha been used and a bed set a

THE POCAHONTAS TIMES

Entered at the Postoffice at Marlinton, W. Va., as second class matter

CALVIN W. PRICE, EDITOR.

THURSDAY, JUNE 17, 1926

Hearken unto the battle of Duncan's Lane. The story of that battle has never been printed before. It is ignored by all histories of the war. Until late years it was not a subject of frank and open discussion by the people of this county. Time cures all things. There are still living a number of men who participated in that fight, and I have talked with men on both sides recently and after so long a time this historic event which had been so nebulous came out clear and distinct and I will endeavor to state the case.

At the West Union school house at the foot of the mountain, on the road that leads to the Williams River country, in 1864, lived Henry Duncan, in a double log house on the headwaters of Stony Creek. The house was opposite the mouth of a draw or hollow leading off at right angles toward the south, and up that hollow lived William Beverage about a quarter of a mile distant. A passway was used up that hollow to reach the Griffin place, and the homes of people living on Days Mountain, and on over to the headwaters of Dry Run, a branch of Swago Creek. Part of the passway between the Duncan place and the Beverage place was fenced on both sides in 1864 as a lane. It was this lane that gave the name to the battle.

The State was formed in 1863, and in the early part of 1864 a regiment of state guards was formed at Buckhannon, and of this regiment Pocahontas county furnished one company, captained at times by Captain Sam Young, a minister, and later by Captain I. W. Allen. Captain Young preached at the sulphur spring on Stony Creek, (Ellis Sharp's) on May 3, 1854, and made an appointment to preach there again in forty years after. A great concourse of people gathered there in 1894 to keep the appointment, but the captain was the northern soldiers. Upon a council of war it was decided to take to the mountain and make a detour in the direction of Williams River in such a way that cavalry could not follow them. They realized that they were a small company of men in a country that was hostile to them, and that they might be killed by an ambushed force at any minute.

It turned out afterwards that the soldier at the bridge was not a sentinel, but was a deserter who was making his getaway to Buckhannon, where they saw him a short time after.

The little army turned up Price Run and from there climbed Bucks Mountain through the grass lands until they reached the fringe of trees near the top, and there they took some cold food from their haversacks and lay down to sleep without any fire whatever.

They were stirring before daylight and marched to the head of Dry Run and called at the house of Peter Beverage, a Union man, and there got something to eat, and then proceeded by the way of the Griffin Place, to William Beverage's place. Williams Beverage was a brother of Peter Beverage, but was a Confederate in sympathy, but was a non combatant.

Here there were bees, and the little army, feeling safe from possible pursuit, commandeered a bee gum or hive full of honey. It was the first week of November and the hive was heavy with honey. The soldiers made the farmer give them buckets and they proceeded to fill the buckets with honey, preparing for a midday feed.

In the meantime, the Confederates had been laying plans to capture the Union soldiers sent here in such a small force to beard the lion in his den. Captain J. C. Gay, holding a commission as captain under the Confederacy, with authority to guard the border was the ranking officer in this emergency, he augmented his force by summoning to his headquarters at his home at the mouth of Stony Creek, all southern soldiers who were at home on furloughs, and his command was made up of about half scouts and half soldiers on furlough.

Godfrey Geiger says that he and his brother Adam Geiger were called John Armstrong, Moffett Walton, John E. Adkison, William Kinnison, James L. Rodgers, received serious wounds. Moffett Sharp, shot in the mouth.

J. R. Moore, who was under fire from the first, says that no one was hit at the first fire, that is the firing that occurred while the Union soldiers were getting the honey for lunch in William Beverage's yard. I think this is correct. I think Bernard Sharp was hit in the hips with a mountain rifle ball while he stood behind a tree, returning the fire of the Confederates. He was a fine, tall slim young man, and his untimely death was greatly regretted.

The wounded soldiers were taken to a cave near James McClure's, under the shadow of Red Knob, and concealed, and they were treated with great kindness and consideration by the McClure family.

There was no one hit on the Confederate side. The Confederates turned back at Henry Duncan's and they took from his farm a bee gum and bees which they carried to William Beverage to replace the one that he had lost to the Union army. There seems to have been no cause for this other than Duncan was for the Union, and Beverage was for the Confederacy.

I have talked with Register Moore and Peter McCarty, soldiers of the Union, on one side, and Godfrey Geiger, soldier on the Confederate side. Godfrey Geiger was in some of the biggest fighting of the war. George McCollam was eight years old and he has a vivid recollection of the soldiers returning from the battlefield, shouting and victorious. He was at his Aunt Ruth Kee's on Bucks Mountain; George M. Kee, a wounded Confederate soldier being at home.

It is probably impossible for complete lists of the soldiers to be obtained at this late day and time, and the names here given are those furnished by survivers of the affair.

Union soldiers: Captain Samuel Young, Captain I. W. Allen Lieut. Wm. Kinnison, Corporal John Armstrong, William Hannah, William Gay, George Cochran, Clark Dilley of Ewings Battery, Jeremy Dilley, Sheldon Hannah, Clark Kellison, Newton Wanless, Moffett Wanless, James L.

The home guard m

-2-

have disintegrated. Col #1 continued

The dauntless Averell and his mounted infantry, like a thorn in the flesh and a rankling fire to the Confederates, had conquered and subdued West Virginia for the Union. He was ignominously discharged in September 1864. The county of Pocahontas in the fall of 1864 was controlled by the Confederacy. It was determined however by the West Virginia authorites to hold an election for President in this county, and arrangements were made to open the polls at Edray. And the Pocahontas county state guards company was detailed to bring that election off. They marched on foot from Beverly to Edray, a distance of fifty-four miles, coming in by the way of Elk River, and arriving a day or two before election. It was recognized that it was a dangerous expedition, sending one company into Pocahontas county.

The company camped near the headwaters of Elk on the way in, and one of the soldiers, Washington Neff, obtained leave of absence to visit his wife who was stopping at William Gibson's. Here he was captured by a squad belonging to Captain J. C. Gay's company of Confederate scouts, and was taken as a prisoner to the headquarters of that company, at the farm of Samuel Gay just above the mouth of Stony Creek. That night in attempting to escape, Neff was shot and killed. The prisoner had laid out Private Bennett with a stone and had been shot as he fled near the ford in Stony Creek.

This word had reached the company at Edray. Captain Sam Young was in command. Capt. I. W. Allen was there too. Nearly every member of the company was a Pocahontas man. Already apprehensive of the danger of being in the heart of a Confederate county, the death of Neff must have impressed them with the dangers of their position. The polls were opened under the oaks standing in front of the William Sharp house, near the big spring. The soldiers all voted irrespective of age and a number of citizens of the vicinity, and the vote was solid for Abraham Lincoln for president.

Aaron Moore was chosen as the messenger to take the vote into the northwestern part of the State, where the existence of the government of West Virginia was recognized, and the company of soldiers prepared to act as his guard. William Hannah was one of the commissioners of election but he had the uniform of a soldier. It was decided not to attempt to return by the pike to Beverly, the road now called Seneca Trail. The return was to be made by crossing the river at Marlins Bottom, by Huntersville, and the Hill country, by Dunmore and Greenbank to the Staunton and Parkersburg pike at Travelers Repose and across Cheat Mountain. The company marched four miles south to Marlinton and when they came in sight of the bridge they saw a Confederate soldier at the end of the bridge on horseback. This soldier saw the Union soldiers at the same time and whirled his horse and galloped back through the bridge. This was construed to mean that he was a picket and that he had gone to notify southern cavalry of the advance of

continued back to Column #2 on 1st Page

continued

was soon within rifle yards. The order to fire being given, a volley was let off, the result of which was a general scattering of the blue coats for shelter. Some went to the hillsides on either side of the hollow Some went down Duncan's Lane, and sheltered in and behind Duncan's house, and some to the knoll commanding the mouth of the hollow where West Union school house stands and in this way gave battle and returned the firing.

Aaron Moore with the election returns ran up the hillside, and Godfrey Geiger says that he would most certainly been killed if it had not been that he was in citizen clothes. the rule being to shoot no one not in a uniform.

At or about the first fire, Bernard Sharp, of the Union army, a son of William Sharp, of Elk, and a brother of Silas, Harmon, and Hugh Sharp, fell mortally wounded. He was shot through both hips. Godfrey Geiger says that he was carrying an army gun called a musketoon, which took a paper cartridge. That he went into the light with three charges and that he would have been out of the battle but for the fact that he got a supply of cartridges from the battlefield after the first volley, the Union ammunition just suiting his gun. Godfrey Geiger says that his was a long range gun, and that he saw Captain Young in the passage way between the two parts of the Duncan house and that he shot at him. That Captain Young told him afterwards that the ball cut away his clothes across his chest The bullet was recovered after the war from the log where it had lodged.

The two little armies having taken shelter continued to fire at each other for something like an hour and a half. and neither side making a charge, the Union soldiers gradually withdrew and made their way by little squads to the original rendezvous at Beverly taking with them the result of the election.

When it became apparent that the Union army had retired from the place, the Confederates went on down the lane, and came on Bernard Sharp, and carried him to Henry Duncan's house. It was apparent that he was near death, but they sent for a doctor and did what they could for him, but he expired in a few hours.

The Union soldiers wounded were

Continued back to Col 3 Page 1

T. S. McNeel F. F. McLaughlin

McNEEL & McLAUGHLIN

INSURANCE

Fire, Life, Health, Accident, Automobile, Live Stock and Bonds.

REAL ESTATE AGENTS

Town and Country Property, only licensed agents in the County.

Money to loan on farms

Your business solicited

Col 3 continued

it was not a case that was discussed freely in the olden days. It was only when the story of this battle was about to be lost to history that I gathered some of the salient facts in connection with it, and fortunately I was able to talk to soldiers who had been in it.

As a battle it does not rank high in the national issue to be decided other than it had a direct bearing on the election of Lincoln the second time. If he had been defeated, it would have been a long farewell to the greatness of America. But it was not in the plan of Providence for him to fail.

As a part of the travail of West Virginia in her birth throes such contests as these, occurring in the border counties, are of the greatest importance.

I have never been able to under-

continued

54

failed to receive their peace was declared.

I am glad to be able you the salient facts Duncan's Lane, as what might be expect the day's work from ginia State guards wh fight. and finished t who failed to receive pensation after the wa

(continued to page 3)

BABY C

Tancred S. C. June 15th and 25 per 100 prepaid, d livery. A limit Rocks and S. C. L. per 100. Last hatches

OAK CREST POU

Millpoint, W. Va.

YELK

Harvestig if still the order of the day here. Some are through while others are still making hay.

The Italians have left this section of railroad and gone to Cheat River.

Page Hannah, of Staunton, is visiting his father, S. D. Hannah.

Miss Ada Sharp will go to Buckhannon to attend the Wesleyan College this winter.

Forrest Gibson and Misses Allie and Mary Gibson attended the camp meeting at Denmar Saturday and Sunday.

Mrs. S. A. Jackson, who has been on the sick list for sometime, is improving.

James Hannah and daughter, Miss Eula are visiting at J. E. and S. D. Hannah's.

There was preaching here Sunday by Rev. Weiford.

Henry Shearer and wife, Elsewhere were visiting at Robert Gibson's Sunday.

Little Jimmie Hannah, whose hand was hurt in a hay fork last week, is improving very slowly.

Mrs. Kennie Dilley is improving slowly.

Mrs. Caroline Hoover and son and daughter were guests at Wm. Varner's, Sunday.

Henry Shaver and wife of M are at G. L. Hannah's.

We understand the schools on Elk will begin the 16th of this month.

Odes Gibson and family ar Elk now.

On Sunday night and Monday morning a terrible storm visited the Panhandle section of this state. At least thirty people los their lives. The property loss is very heavy.

Sept 8. 1917

Slaty Fork Item

Page 3

'59

Times.

JUNE 17

...uards of West ...ssioned and re... the volunteer ... a state guard ...ginia and pres... ...e state and to ...ary movement ...e state, was ...test peril and ...e troubles in ...ition, was the ...owerful Grand ...c organization ... And I can see ...n New Hamp... ...uld never hear ... and might not ... much consider... ...o faces death ...try. But the ...uard carried ...ng the four... ...ctive service, ... the discharge ... state guards ...d in a great ... of West Virginia ...alley of Virginia ...ue Ridge. In ...e guards were ...charge of the dan... Virginia, and in ...ire force of the ... Virginia, as the regulars stationed in the mountain state were called, were on the move to report to Gen. Hunter at Staunton in a movement against Lynchburg, Virginia, and from that to the end of the war at Appomatox, the Army of West Virginia, fought on the other side of the mountain, with the exception of a detour on a retreat from Salem to Martinsburg by way of Lewisburg and Charleston, from June 29, 1864, to July 18, 1864. The policy of West Virginia for the last year of the war was given over to the state guards, and I feel that they have not been given due credit for their courage and fidelity and effici...

CHARM OF A COUNTRY STORE

If you are passing through Slaty Fork in Pocahontas County, you might want to stop at the Esso Station and gas up for an excuse to have a gander at the store. It is owned by Luther David Sharp and he is trying to retain the quaint charm of an old-time grocery store. As long as he possibly can he wants it to look about the way it did when his father with the same first and second name started the store in 1925. The elderly Mr. Sharp died a couple of years ago at the age of 91. The present owner lives in Cincinnati where he is in the retail jewelry business and leaves the Slaty Fork managing to Eunice Gibson. She'll be happy to show you the store and the few mounted specimens of wild life that are there.

The senior Sharp left three other boys and a girl. They are Ivan of Nitro, Si of Slaty Fork, Paul of Port Neches, Texas, and Vi Markland of Richmond, Virginia.

"Hillbilly", Richwood, WVa, Sept 25 1965

CHURCH NOTES

...LINTON PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH

Harvey H. Orr, Pastor.

School 9:45

p m Junior Christian Endeavor
, m. Senior Christian Endeavor
Annual Childrens' Day service; lress by Rev. Dwight Winn, of

DIED

A telegram was receive day, announcing the deat dore Moore at his home i City, Kansas, on June 10, age was about 80 years.
ed was a brother of M
Auldridge, of Indian Dr
the late Aaron Moore, of
His parents were the late

William Sharp, the former [illegible]

I The Children of William Sharp (1740-1833) and His Wife Mary Meeks

THEIR SONS (married)

James - - Married Ann Waddell, 4-28-1800

John - - " Sally Mccollam 8-27-1804

* Andrew - " Nancy Drinnan 1-18-1806

William jr. " Elizabeth Waddell 9-29- 1798

THEIR DAUGHTERS

Nancy- Married Levi MOOre 1-21-97
Mary " Arthur Grimes 1-21-97
Rachel " Jonathem Griffin 8-12-1806
Peggy " Francis Wilson 5-14-1811
Rebecca " Alexander Waddell 12-25-1816
Jane " McCollam
Margaret " Kelley

* No record of Andrew except his marriage bond and mention in his fathers will.

178, 179

II The Children of William Sharp jr. (1772-1860) and his Wife Elizabeth Waddell

Their Sons

James Sharp - Married Althea Martin
Alexander Sharp " Mary Dilley
Jacob Warwick Sharp " Elizabeth McNeel
William Sharp 3rd.. " Rachel Dilley
 John Sharp " Sally Johnson

Their Daughters

Mary married David Gibson
Elizabeth " Hugh McGlaughlin
Martha " Andrew Dilley
Ann married Alexander Stalnaker
Ellen " Warwick "
Jane " James Hanson
Rebecca " Wm. D. Moore
Nancy " Jacob Cassell

 Dave Sharp volunteered to write Family History of William 3rd

 Charles H. Sharp volunteered to write Family History of John Sharp

by — "Ward Sharp"

William Sharp, the Pioneer Submitted to Pocahontas Co. History Book Jan '81

132

WILLIAM SHARP SR.
1740-1833

IN MEMORY OF WILLIAM SHARP SR. LEST WE FORGET.

The footprints of the name of Sharp have been indelibly imprinted on this land before the Revolution and most certainly before there was a Pocahontas County. This is a small attempt to trace some of these footprints that have traversed these lands for a period of over two hundred years. They have their beginnings in one pioneer by the name of William Sharp Sr. The underlined names show the line of descent from the pioneer to the writer. Each spouse is shown in parenthesis.

William Sharp Sr. 1740-1833 was the pioneer settler of the Huntersville vicinity and was the first to open up a permanent residence. It was located a few rods from the forks of the Dunmore and Huntersville road. Mr. Sharp located here about 1773. He saw service as a scout, spy and soldier against the Indians and the British. His affidavit made in 1832 indicates four short tours of service totaling more than two years and six months. These include an expedition against the Indians on the Muskingham River in the fall of 1764 to March 1765; service as an Indian spy during the summer of 1773 and summer of 1774; served as a scout and messenger from the summer of 1774 to December 1774; drafted early January 1781 and was in a skirmish against the British at Portsmouth, Va. where he was discharged in April 1781.

The nature of his services as an Indian spy was to guard Warwicks Fort situated on the headwaters of the Greenbrier River, to traverse the surrounding mountains and to watch the gaps and passes for Indians coming towards the settlements. Later he continued to guard the settlement forming on the Greenbrier River, reconnoitering the country between the headwaters of the Greenbrier, Tygarts Valley and Elk Rivers.

He came from Augusta County where he lived at a place then called Beverley Manor near Staunton. He was one of three children of John and Margery Sharp who were orphaned in 1750. The land records have several transactions relating to his holdings. In 1756 he had 115 acres patented to him on both sides of the Middle River of the Shenandoah. In 1769 there was a land grant of 355 acres on the Greenbrier River, in 1787 another 320 acres on the Waters of the Greenbrier, in 1787 another 270 acres on Ewings Creek, in 1791 another 320 acres on Brown's Creek. Some of this land was used to settle his large family on. His will dated in 1826 shows ten children. (This shows three more children than are recorded in Price's History.)

139

His wife was Mary Meek(s) daughter of John Meek. Their children were: NANCY (Levi Moore Jr.), MARGARET(John Kelly), JOHN(Sarah McCollam), WILLIAM(Elizabeth 1772-1860 Waddell), RACHEL(Jonathan Griffin), MARY(Arthur Grimes), JAMES(Ann Waddell), ANDREW (Nancy Drinnen), REBECCA(Alexander Waddell Jr.), JANE(Mr. McCollam).

John Sharp who married Sarah McCollam owned tracts of land on the west side of Allegheny of 255 acres and 82 acres, also 238 acres on the head of Lewis Lick Run. The family of four girls are as follows: ELLEN(Amaziah Irvine), MARY(Josiah Friel), REBECCA(John Duffield), NANCY(William H. Irvine). This line of Sharps ends here in the county but a descendant of Mary, Ann Dillon of Columbus, Ohio is writing the Grimes family history of Pocahontas.

James Sharp was a member of the court under the old arrangement, was high sheriff and was held in high esteem for his patriotism and strict scrupulous integrity. One story about him needs to be kept alive. He was an avid hunter, not only for sport but as a matter of business. While living at his first home on Cummings Creek, he had a very sensational adventure on Buckley Mountain. One evening while returning home he was passing along when a panther suddenly mounted a log a few yards in front of him. He shot the animal, but when the smoke cleared away another stood in the same place on the log. This performance was repeated nine times when he panicked and ran home. During the night the remainder of the pack followed his trail home and killed a yearling calf. Properly reinforced, he went back to the spot where he had fired nine times and there found nine dead panthers.

134

William and Elizabeth had the following family: JAMES (ALTHEA MARTIN), ELIZABETH(Hugh McLaughlin), JANE(James Hanson), WILLIAM(Rachel Dilley), MARY (David Gibson), REBECCA(William D. Moore), ANNA(Alexander Stalnecker), ELLEN (Warwick Stalnecker), MARTHA(Andrew Dilley), ALEXANDER(Mary Dilley), JACOB WARWICK (Elizabeth McNeil), JOHN(Sarah Johnson).

1762-1860

William Sharp Jr. There is the romantic tradition that William Jr. met Elizabeth Waddell at the home of Thomas Drinnen at Edray. Thomas had organized a congregation and one of the worshippers was William Jr. who came dressed in a coon-skin cap. When the young lady returned home she made some funny remarks about the homely young man she had seen at the meeting and his furry cap. Her mother said the young chap would probably be calling around the first thing she knew. Sure enough he did come and on a busy wash day. He found the young lady resting up, performing on the spinning wheel in short petticoat, chemise and barefooted. It was love at first sight and they became engaged that very day.

This couple at once settled in the woods near Verdant Valley (near Edray) and opened up a fine estate out of a forest noted for the tremendous size of its walnut, red oak, and sugar maple trees and reared a worthy family. He is listed as one of the most substantial and prosperous citizens of the county in its formative period. This Verdant Valley, which few people know of today, was located in the area of the Fairview church and school house. The homestead of William Jr. was very visible during the mid 1900's as the farm of Jacob Sharp, the brother of Dr. Ward Sharp of Russell, Pennsylvania. A son was William III, 1806-1882

John Sharp who married Sarah Johnson and lived at Fairview (near Edray) first, then bought on Jerico Road near Marlinton had the following family: HENRY(Elizabeth Moore), HUGH(Mary Jane Waugh), WILLIAM EWING(Laury Ann Malcomb), MARY(William Frank Dilley), MARTHA JANE(James Wilfong), NANCY ANN(Noah Erving Wilfong), JAMES ALEXANDER(Eleanor Wilfong), DAVID WARWICK(Amanda Beverage), SUSAN(Amziah Irvine).

William Ewing Sharp married Laury Ann Malcomb and lived at Fairview near Marlinton. Their family consisted of: MARGARET MATILDA (Charles H. Dilley), PAUL WARWICK (Mary Catherine Sharp), LUTHER (Died at age 2), ROSA ARIZONA (David Early Webster), MARION McCOY (Della Jackson), DENCY EDWARD (Gosha Underwood).

Paul Warwick Sharp married his first cousin, Mary Catherine Sharp. To them were born eleven children, including a set of twins: CHARLES JACK (Ora Belle Thompson), LANTY JAMES (Mary Vanreenen), MARLIE MATILDA (Cecil Curry), NELLIE ANN (Theodore Vanreenen), HAZEL ELIZABETH (1. Karl Elcessor, 2. _____ Russell), LAYTON EWING (Juanita Ramona Tackett), PAULINE CATHERINE (1. Hubert May, 2. _____ _____), OSCAR WARWICK (Margaret Noonan), AUSTIN McCOY (Fula Mae Underwood), SYLVIA BELL (1. Jack Herman, 2. Robert Schultz, 3. Granville Moore), NINA JUNE (Charles Waybright).

He made his living as a carpenter and as a teamster with lumber companies in the surrounding areas. In later years he settled down to a life of farming on the Jerico Road at Marlinton. As a pastime, he played the fiddle (violin). A number of his children learned to play string music, including the banjo, guitar and the fiddle.

His apple orchards were some of the best. Sunday at his house would find many relatives and friends for dinner, which was usually followed with horse shoe pitching, games, etc.

In his later years he used to sit by the hour with friends spinning yarns of bygone years in hunting, fishing and working in the woods.

Charles Jack Sharp married Ora Belle Thompson and they became the parents of fourteen children: JACK ARNOLD (Margaret Sharp), EARL MILBURN (Mildred Kirkpatrick), LEW WARWICK (Muriel Ann Bates), DEMPSEY THOMPSON (Jeanie Walton), CHARLES HEREERT (Nona Harris), CATHERINE ELIZABETH (Andrew Robert Baechtel), CRAIG ARTHUR (Betty Shinaberry), DONALD JAMES (Mildred Underwood), TOMMY DAVID (Garnett McCoy), PATRICIA WENONA (Joseph Lamoureux), BRENDA CAROL (Marvin Doss), LOUISE KAY (Joseph Roy), LESLIE DOUGLAS (Martha Jean Horner), GLENDA CHARLOTTE (Kenneth Slagle).

136

Charles Jack Sharp spent a considerable amount of time during his younger years around logging and lumber operations, since his father was a carpenter and teamster. While attending high school, he worked as a teamster in the summer and attended school in the winter. School at that time was held six months out of the year. He attended West Virginia State Teachers College at Parkersburgh, then taught for nineteen years in the rural schools of Pocahontas County. He was held in high esteem as one who could control students as well as parents in rather rough communities. Places of residences include: the old Jackson place on the Jerico Road, Woodrow, Fairview and the present home at Brownsburg.

He accepted a position with the Farm Bureau during the depression of the 1930's. In 1943 he accepted the position of manager of the Southern States Cooperative tore. After twenty years he took an early retirement due to ill health.

He was also a lover of the outdoors and of his fellow man. There are few ople who ever knew him that have been on unfriendly terms. He was an ardent hunter d fisherman. He was a crack shot, winning many prizes in shooting matches. He s one of the best wild turkey and deer hunters that ever walked into the woods. love for trout fishing will still go on if there is such a thing in the hereafter.

is information was compiled and submitted by Charles Herbert Sharp of Brigham , Utah with the assistance of Dr. Ward Sharp of Russell, Pennsylvania; Dave p of Cincinnati, Ohio; and Ann Dillon of Columbus, Ohio.)

The LUTHER DAVID SHARP Family of Slatyfork
(Spouses in Parenthesis), "Children in quotes"

- LUTHER DAVID "LD" SHARP, 1872-1963 (Laura Jane Morgan 1874-1932, daughter of Rev. Samuel Morgan of Edray). (His second marriage was to Mabel Hansford.) 3-20-1134
- His father was SILAS 1842-1899 (Sarah Hannah 1844-1908, daughter of David Hannah), "Melinda, Ella, Luther"--"LD".
- Silas' father: WILLIAM 1815-1888 (Rachael Dilley 1806-1882), "Silas, Hugh 1846-1923, Harmon, Luther 16, Bernard, Henry, and Mary Ella 6". "Bernard and Henry died as Civil War soldiers, perhaps on different sides. Family tradition says Henry was shot at Bob Gibson's place by his own (confederate?) men as a spy for the North. Luther, 16, a civilian, was shot by Confederate Jake Simmons. Silas, also a civilian, was captured the same day and marched to a Salisbury, N. C. prison. After 23 months and 24 days he and the other remaining five alive men were exchanged."
- Silas' grandfather: WILLIAM 1772-1860, (Elisabeth Waddell), "William, James, etc."
- Silas' great grandfather: WILLIAM 1740-1833 the pioneer, (Mary Meeks), "Nancy, Margaret, Rachael, Mary, John, and William." He built the first home in Huntersville, was an Indian scout 1773, fought the British in 1781, fought the Indians in Ohio 1761, and rescued their prisoners in Ohio 1764, and a messenger to Gov. Dunmore at Fort Pitt.

"LD's" children were Ada 1894-1956, Baltimore (John Johnson, Will Curtain), "Donald, Helen, Billie, Clara, Stanley"; Violet 1897- , (Rufus Markland, Richmond, Vice-President assistant, C & O.), "Rufus"; Ivan 1900-1975, Nitro, attended Wesleyan, a plant foreman, (Genevieve Orndorff, Arbovale), "Ralph, Ramona, Parkersburg, married Tom Shipley, Evan 1940-1975"; Creola 1904-1923; Si of Slatyfork, 1907- , who likes the out-of-doors and is an accomplished painter of wildlife; Paul 1910- , retired personnel director of U.S. Rubber Co. (Vonda Lowe, Katherine Milhollin) Port Neches, Texas, "Thayer 1933, Barbara 1935 married Glenn Smith"; Luther David "Dave" Sharp, Jr. 1916- , Cincinnati, Sylvia M Friel daughter of Dee and Mary Friel, Marlinton), "Linda Dee 1961, married Jonny Eduardo". Dave, a Wesleyan graduate, 1939, operated the M Slatyfork store, was a watchmaker, and as a Certified Gemologist, American Gem Society, operated a jewelry store in Cincinnati.

" had a most unique lifetime experience--seeing the development of modern conveniences t we take for granted. He saw his first train at age 12, experienced the exciting elopment of automobiles, airplanes, radios, telephones, TV, electric refrigerators, es, medical-surgical advancements, packaged food, electric lights, and the atomic bomb. started merchandising, buying fur and farming at age 12 and became a respected nessman in Pocahontas, running a general store, farming, dealing in wool, ginseng, raising the famous white lynn honey. He was a W. Va. Apiary Inspector, the first aster of Slatyfork, 1901, owned a water-powered ~~XXXXXXX~~ gristmill, had the first hone in Pocahontas as the line entered Pocahontas from Randolph on the way to nton 1898-1899. He owned one of the first three cars in the county, a 1914 Studebaker. s the first to import and turn loose Chinese pheasants at Slatyfork. He was a or of the Farmers and Merchant's Bank as well as the Pocahontas County Fair. ed his last deer at 89. He was asked by the American Museum of Natural History York to secure a Pocahontas ~~XXXXXXXXX~~ wild turkey nest at hatching time. done May 1906 and the turkeys and nest are still on display. He dearly loved and directed the Slatyfork Methodist choir that was invited to many song festivals a. and Virginia. He certainly was a credit to Pocahontas County !

ed by Dave Sharp 4171 Paxton Woods Drive, Cincinnati, Ohio 45209

Dave Sharp

sent to be inserted in the Pocahontas History book

SHARP 3

139

SARAH HANNAH 1847-1908 Married Silas Sharp

Compiled by Dave Sharp 12-15-80

The below lineage is taken from the "Pocahontas County History Book" by William Pirce (1830-1921) --plus family stories included.

1. David Hannah (Sr.) from Ireland, married a Gibson from Augusta County.
   Wife: Elizabeth (?) Practiced medicine---?

2. Joseph Hannah married Elizabeth Burnside and settled in "Old Field Fork of Elk, near "Mill Run" (Mill Run, I believe is near Marvin Hannah's place--?)

3. David Hannah married Hester Sicafoose from Crabbottom.(Virginai?) They became very religious afther their two children died--Joe and Otha of diptheria. Especially after Otha died, recovered after a vision of heaven, telling who he saw there, etc. (Story described elsewhere from a tape recording by L. D. Sharp, and of Allie Gibson

Their children were:
1. Otha
2. Joe (NOT IN this order)
3. Henry
4. Rev. George Hannah.
5. Mary, the baby mentioned in Otha's story of a vision, and who married Sam Gibson. They had one child named Stella who married a WADE Fisher, father of Rocky Fisher. Mary died and Sam remarried to (Emma -?) Buswalter of Linwood
   Born to second Marriage was Richard, Henry, Ruth and Archie.

6. Melinda married John Rose in Webster County. (I believe they lived down Elk River, as Dad when buying furs when 12 years old said he stayed at his aunt's house.)
   They had a son name Bob Rose. (He visited our home at the old house when I was small) a daughter, Stella, married Herbert Bonner.

4. Sarah Hannah (1847-1908) She married Silas Sharp, who was captured as a civilian by the Confederates who were operating in the Slatyfork--Linwood area one year. They considered him a northerner and he spent 23 months and 24 days in prisons in Richmond and Salisbury, N. C. and was then exchanged just before the war endedd

   Their children were:Melinda who married Ellis Hannah
   (1) Melinda: married Ellis Hannah. their children were Eva (Beale), Veo Hannah, (Lena)Baxter, Russel Hannah.

   (2) Ella: married Bob Gibson. She, we are told was named Mary Ella after Sarah's sister Mary. Hannah, or Mary Sharp, sister of Silas.→She died of diptheria at age of about 6 --?

5. -- (3) Luther David Sharp, Sr. who married → 1-16-1893 daughter of Rev. Samuel Morgan, Laura Jane Morgan, in the Edray Methodist Church. (Mother,(Laura), lived in the Edray parsonage.
   There children were:

6..... Ada (Johnson, Curtain); Violet Markladd, Ivan, Creolat, Silas, Paul, and Luther D. Sharp, Jr. (Dave)

SHARP 3

141

Years later, the baby Mary, who married Sam Gibson, herself had a daughter, Stella. Stella, perhaps 10, when Mary got ready for the two of them to go visit her sister, Sarah. Mary went in a room to get her wraps and ~~x~~ in a vision there stood two young men she didn't know. One said "don't be frightened, we're Otha and Joe. We've come to help bear your burdens. It ~~was~~ won't be long till you'll die too. Mary cried all the way from Sam Gibson's home to Sarah's. She dried her tears before going in. Stella told Sarah that her mother cried all the way. It was then that Mary asked Sarah to raise Stella if she died. Mary died shortly and Stella lived with Sarah.

A few years ago, Dr. Elizabeth Kubler*Ross, ~~x~~ noted psychiatrist, who has worked with many clinical-death cases, requested a transcript of Mr. Sharp's redordings of the incident.

References: Luther Sharp, Allie Gibson.

Submitted by Paul Sharp

(14)

DAVID MANNAH

and Otha's Vision.

140

(Spouses in parenthesis) David's children underlined.

DAVID, burried in Mannah cemetary on Elk, no marker. (Hester Zicafoose).

Linda (John Rose) a son Robert, a daughter Stella married Herbert Bonner. Stella 1980 at 90 in Elkins. Sarah 1844-1908 (Silas Sharp), mother of L. D. Sharp; Y (Margaret McClure) he and son Ernest moved to Artesia, N. M.; Otha and Joe died

141

Years later, the baby Mary, who married Sam Gibson, herself had a daughter, Stella. Stella, perhaps 10, when Mary got ready for the two of them to go visit her sister, Sarah. Mary went in a room to get her wraps and ~~a~~ in a vision there stood two young men she didn't know. One said "don't be frightened, we're Otha and Joe. We've come to help bear your burdens. It ~~was~~ won't be long till you'll die too. Mary cried all the way from Sam Gibson's home to Sarah's. She dried her tears before going in. Stella told Sarah that her mother cried all the way. It was then that Mary asked Sarah to raise Stella if she died. Mary died shortly and Stella lived with Sarah.

A few years ago, Dr. Elizabeth Kubler*Ross, ~~a~~ noted psychiatrist, who has worked with many clinical-death cases, requested a transcript of Mr. Sharp's redordings of the incident.

References: Luther Sharp, Allie Gibson.

Submitted by Paul Sharp

140

DAVID MANNAH
and Otha's Vision.

(Spouses in parenthesis) David's children underlined.

DAVID, burried in Mannah cemetary on Elk, no marker. (Hester Zicafoose).

Melinda (John Rose) a son Robert, a daughter Stella married Herbert Bonner. Stella died 1980 at 90 in Elkins. Sarah 1844-1908 (Silas Sharp), mother of L. D. Sharp; Henry (Margaret McClure) he and son Ernest moved to Artesia, N. M.; Otha and Joe died

142

STREET ADDRESS

CITY STATE

NO. 1 ON THIS CHART IS THE SAME PERSON AS NO.

ON CHART NO.

Sarah Hannah mother of F.M. Sharp

David Hannah

1 Sarah Hannah
BORN 12-15-1844
WHERE
WHEN MARRIED
DIED 12-21-1908
WHERE Slaty Fork.

NAME OF HUSBAND OR WIFE
Silas Sharp
3-2-1842-10-24-1899

2 David Hannah.
BORN
WHERE
WHEN MARRIED 21 Nov. 1843
DIED
WHERE

3 *Esther Hester Zica Foose from crabbottom
BORN
WHERE
DIED
WHERE

4 Joseph Hannah
BORN
WHERE WHEN MARRIED
DIED
WHERE

5 Elizabeth Burnsides
BORN
WHERE
DIED
WHERE

6 Sampson Zicka Foose
BORN
WHERE
WHEN MARRIED 1817
DIED
WHERE

7 Sarah Simmons
BORN
WHERE
DIED
WHERE

9 El 10 11 12 13 14 15
DIED
WHERE

GIVE HERE NAME OF RECORD OR BOOK WHERE THIS INFORMATION WAS OBTAINED. REFER TO NAMES BY NUMBER.

Wife of 1.

*Esther is given as marrying Hannah in Morton's History of Highland County p. 357

PRINTED IN U.S.A.
COPYRIGHTED, 1936, GENEALOGICAL SOCIETY OF UTAH

Page 2

Consolidated

The fifth school was a four-room brick school known as the "Seneca Trail Consolidated School" It had a gymnasium, a kitchen, furnace and running water !

Ira Brill of the school board promoted the building of this new school which opened in the fall of 1930. That fall we had a powerful football team of well-grown boys which included the Vandevenders, Beales, Hannahs, Wooddells, Gibsons, and Sharp. But, the team didn't have any uniforms. Hillsboro had been a winning team for years. Marlinton was anxious for some one to beat Hillsboro and sent their uniforms over to the Slatyfork school on the Reynolds Bus Line. The word got to us that Hillsboro heard about our extra large team. They called by phone canceling our only game scheduled for the year !

After many years it closed, about the 1950's, and the students were then bused to the Marlinton school.

The first principal of the school was Robert Eades, Other teachers were Paul Sharp (also a principal), Lucille Bright, Louise McNeel the present W. Va. Poet Laureate, Florence Howard, Becky Slavens, Ruth Cunningham, Mr. La Rue, Orda Hill, Hugh Moore, Mable McNeel, Mr. Neil Conrad, Wanda Lee Smith, Deacon Shinnaberry, and Josephine Wooddell.

Footnote: For a period, about 1923, L. D. Sharp and Page Hannah (SAM HANNAH) were the Trustees. It was their duty to hire the teachers.

Submitted by Dave Sharp
Dave Sharp, Cincinnati

Slaty Fork School No. 23

EDRAY DISTRICT

Pocahontas Co., West Virginia

April 29, 1927

VIOLET LITTLEFIELD,
RUTH CUNNINGHAM,
Teachers

Pupils

UPPER GRADES

Beatrice Shelton	Eva Hannah
Leola Simmons	Cora Hannah
Dorthy Hannah	Porter Hambrick
John Shelton	Kathleen Carter
Frank Carter	Steward McNeely
Arlie Hannah	Donald Johnson
Luther Sharp, Jr.	Verdin McNeely
Sarah Shelton	Mary Francis Cromer
Earl Carter	Ruth Simmons
Ruby Mitchell

PRIMARY ROOM

Lexie McNeely	Wanietta Bonner
Hubert Bonner	Richard Carter
Joe Carter	Elbert Cromer
Emma Cromer	Lyle Painter
Louise Painter	Arietta Higgins
John Victor, Jr.	Lughvan Victor
William Victor	Norman Hannah
Julian Shelton	Pearl Simmons
Helen Johnson

146

Slatyfork Schools --Continued Genevieve Sharp

This is the way I remember the teachers at the Slatyfork School (now the church)

1924-1925 Genevieve Sharp
1925-1926 Pauline Guyer
1926-1927 Violet Littlefield and Ruth Cunningham
1927-1928 Pauline Cuyer and Gay Hannah
1928-1929 Stella Conrad Finch ~~XXX~~ (my sister) and Gaye Hannah--Kerr 1929 and 1930 Charlsie (Charlise)Beverage & Gaye Hannah.
1930-1931 I believe the history book we just received gives Seneca Trail School the year 1930-1931.

I am not real sure when the two rooms came into existence (partition), But I believe Pauline worked on that the first year she was there and it came to pass that first year she taught or the following year.

I looked it up in the history book and they have it dated 1931-1932 when Seneca Trail started. So I am not sure who taught in 1930-1931 Maybe the Seneca Trail School came that year--1930-1931.

Dave: Doc Hannah taught one year at Slatyfork. It may have been 1923-1924.

Dave: An end of school year, April 29, 1927, Violet Littlefield and Ruth Cunningham gave the students a small booklet for the Slatyfork School #23 Edray District and listed the students. So the above years listed must be correct.

Upper Grades		Primary Room
Beatrice Shelton	Eva Hannah	Lexie McNeely	Wanietta Bonner
Leola Simmons	Cora Hannah	Hubert Bonner	Richard Carter
Dorothy Hannah	Porter Hambrick	Joe Carter	Elbert Cromer
John Shelton	Kathleen Carter	Emma Cromer	Lyle Painter
Frank Carter	Steward McNeely	Louise Pinter	Arietta Higgins
Arlie Hannah	Donald Johnson	John Victor, Jr.	Lughvan Victor
Luther Sharp Jr.	Verdin McNeely	William Victor	Norman Hannah
Sarah Shelton	Mary Frances Cromer	Julian Shelton	Pearl Simmons
Earl Carter	Ruth Simmons		Helen Johnson
Ruby Mitchell
(Teacher Littlefield) Violet		(Teacher Cunningham) Ruth

Dorothy (Hannah) Fitzwater said these teachers taught at the (church) school house: Ruth Moore (her first teacher, also Dave's), Charlcie Beverav Stella Fench, Genevieve Sharp, Gaye Hannah, Lila Orndorf Ruth Cunningham, (not neeessiarly in that order) And Arlene Judy taught at the new brick school--probably it's first year of use?.

Frank Hannah said the following taught school at the school that burned: George Bright (Frank's first teacher), Dave Baughman, Emmahh Howard, Lesslie Judy, Sadie Hannah, Mary Hannah, Eva (Hannah) Beale, Allie Gibson, Jessie Hannah.

Naomi Pauline Guyer, teacher 1927-28 May 1, 1928 "Year Book". Pupils: 4th grade: Hubert Bonner, Dick Carter, Mary Sage, "Waneita"Bonner, Mary Frances Cromer, Ray Sage. 5th: Arlie Hannah, Verdin McNeely, Luther Sharp,Jr, Don Johnson,Mattie Sage, Ruth Simmons,Catherine Wilfong; 6th: Porter Hambrick, Steward McNeeley, Chas. Smith; 7th: Kathleen Carter, Dorothy Hannah, Cora Hannah, Leola Simmons,; 8th: Reta Curr (Kerr)misspelle , Eva Hannah, Mazie Sage. (Dave apparently age 11 in May, and was 12 on June 8th, 1928 (Apparently a two-room school. Helen Johnson not mentioned so she must have been in about 3rd grade--?
(Edray Sub-district No. 23. Upper Grade Room. Sltyfork)

147

THE SLATYFORK METHODIST CHURCH

The first services apparently were held in school houses in the 1850s and 1870s. In the 1900s services were in the now-gone school house beside the Slatyfork creek, and near the present church. The charter members of the church of the recent 75 to 100 years were L. D. Sharp, Sam Gibson, Sam Hannah, etc.

Since about 1920 the present church has held services in the last one-room school house until 1930 when the same school house was turned over to the church, and at which time the school moved into the new brick building.

The members remodeled the church, changing the entrance to the now front, putting a steeple on it and dug a basement for a furnace. Charlie Beale, Ivan Sharp, Oscar Kerr, Eugene Hannah, Frank Hannah and others worked weeks digging the basement. Harvey Bright, a carpenter-cabinetmaker (also a watchmaker) was engaged in making all the benches etc. for the church.

L. D. Sharp was superintendent of the Sunday School for many of the years he was a member. Others who were also superintendents were Eugene Hannah, Ivan Sharp, Frank Hannah, etc.

Some of the ministers were Rev. Sam Morgan (1889-1894) (father of L. D. Sharp's wife, Laura.), Rev. Hill, Rev. Powers, Rev. Combs, Rev. Long,, Rev. T. M. Taylor, Rev. Clarence Peirson, Rev. Skaggs,, Rev. Crawford, Rev. Mitchim, Rev. Gum and Rev. Ezra Bennet.

In the 1930s and 1940s there were 60 to 70 attending Sunday services. With most of the lumber related jobs gone and many young people moving to the cities, the membership is now small.

Submitted by

Paul L. Sharp

Paul L. Sharp
723 Avenue D
Port Neches, Texas, 77651

Paul L. Sharp Book

The Marlinton and Elk Mutual Telephone Co.

Since 1899 Pocahontas county has had telephone service. The first line came from Beverly in Randolph county, entering Pocahontas county at Mace. A Dr. Bosworth built the line from Beverly to Marlinton, which was finished in August 1899. Later that same year the line was extended up and down the county. About 1910 the Marlinton and Elk Mutual Telephone Co was established. Each stockholder bought a wall phone and paid about $5 a year or the equivalent in labor. Some non-stockholders paid rent to use their phones. Chestnut poles were set and a single wire was strung between the poles. Charles McGuire, Sam Gibson, Otis Gibson and Jake Hoover were some of the repairmen or linemen. A magnetic generator was cranked to cause all the bells in all the phones on the line to ring. When the receiver was lifted off the phone hook two dry cell batteries began providing the power to carry the audio over the wire. There was a line from Marlinton which terminated at L. D. Sharp's store with 20 phones in between on the line. If you wanted to talk to some one in Marlinton, or a long distance call, you would crank the phone a "short" and a "long" and "central" would answer and connect you with your party. Many times "central" (the operator) would have to repeat every word both ways for a long distance conversation. A "short" was about one turn of the crank. A "long" was about 3 turns of the crank. Central ignored all other rings which were direct calls to neighbors on the immediate line. Each phone had a different arrangement (code) of "longs" and "shorts". If some one wanted to call, for instance, L. D. Sharp, he would crank two "shorts" and two "longs". Others on the line were supposed to not pick up their receivers when the phone rang for some one else. But usually there was one or more listening to the conversation. That is how they heard the "news"! There were many 4-way, or more, conversations. Mr. Sharp said a man came in the store in 1899 and heard him talking on the phone to George P. Moore at Edray and asked him if the wire was hollow to carry the voice! Apparently the phone was an exciting thing and it was used for amusement sometimes. Mr. Sharp said he and a preacher at Edray sang a song together 12 miles apart, Mr. Sharp singing tenor and the preacher soprano. There are many interesting pranks and stories about this 20-party line that is not printed.

Submitted by Dave Sharp and Raymond Mace
Cincinnati Slatyfork

149

Notes on the Elk telephone system --- by Raymond Pace.

(Concurred by Dave Sharp)

According to Price's History of Pocahontas County the first telephone line was completed between Beverly and Marlinton in August, 1899. This was known as the Bosworth line and was the first telephone line in the county. I do not know the name of the promoter and builder, except that he was a member of the prominent Bosworth family living in the Huttonsville-Beverly area.

Apparently the Bosworth line lasted only fifteen or twenty (?) years, and perhaps not that long. Probably during World War I or shortly afterwards another telephone line was constructed. This was, I believe, known as the Marlinton and Elk Mutual Telephone Company. It consisted of a single wire strung between chestnut poles. Part of the telephone owners using this line were renters and part were stockholders. During the 1920's Susie Gibson, Frank's aunt, left Elk and moved to Marlinton. We bought her share in the telephone company. My grandfather Sam Rider owned a telephone but he was a renter. It is my impression that the telephone line extended no farther than L. O. Sharp's place. Charlie Beale had a telephone, but anyone who desired to talk to him from Elk had to have his call routed by way of Cass and then to Linwood. Veo Hannah would probably know this.

The old telephone line gradually fell apart, and service was impossible. In the late 1920's, sometime after Rt. 219 was completed, a move was made to re-organize the company and build a new line. There were to be no renters. Anyone wishing to have a telephone had to be part of the company. A family could have a telephone by contributing labor or money. My father contributed labor. The line was a single wire strung between chestnut poles. A lineman or troubleshooter was appointed at the stockholders' meeting. I remember that Jake Hoover was lineman for a time, and I believe Charles McGuire was also a troubleshooter or repairman a one time.

Jim Baer (sp?) owned "central" or the exchange at Marlinton. Any call through another system had to be switched by the Marlinton exchange. At one time there were two Elk telephone lines. On the Marlinton side of

Continued Page 153 →

SHARP 3

152

The Marlinton and Elk Mutual Telephone Co.

Listed below are the "rings" (or codes) of the subscribers that were called "longs" and "shorts". L. D. Sharp's ring was two shorts and two longs. It was first used at the old home place and later transfered to the store building when it was built. Ivan Sharp who lived at the big house used two longs and two shorts.

Central - Telephone Operater	– —	Lake Reed	— — –
L. D. Sharp	– – — —	Charlie McGuire	— — –
IVan Sharp (Hugh Sharp	— – – —	Willie Gibson	— — – –
Gene Hannah Coal Scales	— — – –	Roy Shearer	— —
Seneca Trail School	— — — —	Amos Gay	— — – –
Manless (salon)	— – – – –	Nelia Mace	— — – –
Leu Gibson	– –	Jake Hoover	– – —
Lee Hannah	– – – – –	Helen Hannah	— – —
Sam M. Gibson	– — —	D
Sam D. Hannah	— — —
Veo Hannah	– – – –
Clark Hannah	– – — —
Fred Mullenax	— –

Raymond Mace furnished the following "rings":

Marlinton (Central)	– —	Robert Gibson	— — – –
Davis Mace	—	Sam Rider	— –
Harry Varner	— – –	Hugh Hannah	– – – –
Harry Shelton	– – – —	William Hannah	— —
Malinda Hannah	— – – –	William Varner	— — —
J. A Gibson	— — –	Dock Gibson	— — – –
James Gibson	– – –
Lottie Gibson	– –
Luther Sharp	– – – —	John Baughman	— — —
Slatyfork	— – – –	"He must have been on the Elk "Short" line as he lived at Marlinton"

B.S.

Violet Sharp

Elk Mountain there was a line known as the Short Elk Line. A telephone owner on our side of Elk Mountain had to use Central to talk to people on the other side. I believe the short line was used by people in the Edray part of the county. I am not sure whether the Short Elk Line existed after the new line was built in the late 1920's.

In the late 1930's the Federal Government became more interested in the Elk area, and a sub-camp of the C. C. C. was established across the river from us, on the spot where Floyd Gilford once lived. Then it was decided to rebuild the Marlinton and Elk Mutual Telephone system, with the government furnishing the material and labor. Consequently, a new line was built. New poles were erected and a double line was strungbetween them. Some years later, perhaps in the 1950's, the Chesapeake and Potomac Telephone Company took over telephone communication on Elk.

Telephone rates on the Marlinton and Elk Mutual Telephone service were cheap. If I remember correctly, the yearly telephone dues were four or five dollars. I am fairly sure they never reached ten dollars. Even then, there were some people who had to be sued or threatened before they would pay their telephone bill. Also, it must be added, free calls were discouraged. If a stranger stopped at a man's house to call for help in getting his automobile started, he was supposed to pay for the call. I believe it was a dime. I doubt that most people ever collected. It just would not be neighborly.

Here is a list of calls or "rings" from a paper I found among my mother's things.

Davis Mace	—	Robert Gibson	— — —
Harry Varner	— —	Sam Rider	— —
Harry Shelton	— — —	Hugh Hannah	— — —
Malinda Hannah	— — —	William Hannah	— —
J. A. Gibson	— — —	William Varner	— — —
John Baughman	— — —	Doc Gibson	— — — —
James Gibson	— — —	Willie Gibson	— — — —
Lottie Gibson	— —	Marlinton	— — —
Luther Sharp	— — — —
Slaty Fork	— — — —

must have been on short Elk line at the head of Marlinton

If I remember correctly, "Central" ring was changed in later years (Maybe?)

I am not sure which period of time is represented by the "rings" I have typed here. It must have been early in the 1920's. Hugh Hannah has been gone from Elk a long time. Perhaps he was part of the Short Elk system. Also, William Hannah has been dead since the 1920's. His name could have been kept on the list of subscribers, however. I am puzzled a bit. Something else puzzles me. Sam Hannah and Sam Gibson were not included in the list. Both families had telephones. Sam Gibson's "ring" was ____ - ____. Sam Hannah's number was _ ____ -. In the very early 1920's Page Hannah had a telephone, but I don't remember his number.

Sometimes a telephone owner would let his batteries run down. This would prevent him from getting a message to whomever he called. Then some good soul would relay his message. Someone was always listening. At times there were four-way conversations taking place. On occasion a tree would fall on the line, or the line would get on the ground. This always caused problems. A bad telephone would poison the whole system. An incident during the 1930's is worth mentioning. People's telephones all up and down Elk were ringing at intervals, but nobody could be heard talking. For a few hours on a day or so people ran themselves ragged answering their phones, only to find no one there. Lee Hannah told me that he informed Jennie that [redacted] Gibson was drunk again and was using the telephone. [redacted] did get that way once in a dozen years or so, but this time he was innocent. After a thorough search for the trouble, it was located on Lake Reed's (Jake Gibson's farm) place. It was summer time and a power line which was just barely above the telephone line got warm and expanded, dropping just enough to touch the telephone line when the wind blew or when the line got a bit warmer.

(over)

50

Here is more information which I copied from The Pocahontas Times, January 1, 1914.

"The directors of the Marlinton and Elk Mutual Telephone Company met Saturday. The officers are L. D. Sharp, president; S. Mc Dilley, vice-president and general manager; J. O. Gibson, secretary and treasurer. The most important business transacted was the cutting out of free phones after January 1; the extending of the short line wire down Elk wherever the extension of the company's business justifies it; the cooperation of the different mutual companies entering the Marlinton switchboard will be asked in order to install two phones, one in the C. & O. station and the other in the freight office".

This would seem to indicate that the old Bosworth line had been replaced by the Marlinton and Elk Mutual Telephone line sometime before.

(over) →

Our Pocahontas Co. Country Doctors

Dr. Cameron of Mace was a typical country doctor and he had perhaps the only Stanley Steamer car in the county. About 1934 my brother, Si, asked me if I wanted to go to Dr. Cameron with him for a check-up. Near the end of Si's check-up Dr. Cameron picked up his only and obviously many-time used wooden tongue depresser, and before Si could react, Dr. Cameron used it to examine his throat ! Half the stick was very dirty from holding it in his hand. The other end was clean from many previous tongues ! Dr. Cameron glanced at me and asked if I wanted him to check my throat. I promptly declined. He showed us some bent glass tubing fitted into bottles etc. and to a source of heat that he invented to use steam to cure T. B. in lungs. He said the steam would kill the germs but he hadn't solved the problem of injury to the patient ! Maude Hall of Mingo said he told many unique stories including this one. Dr. Cameron made a house-call and when he found the patient in severe pain he decided to operate to see what was wrong. He opened the abdomen and found the gut separated. He asked for a peeled potatoe and a needle and thread. He slipped the potatoe in the gut to hold it round so he could sew around the tear cleanly. With the gut sewed back like new, he slipped the potatoe to one side and crushed it with a squeese of his hand so it would "pass on through". He said the patient had a good recovery !

Dr. Jim Price was "Mr. Pocahontas County Docter". He had a typical country doctor's office right in town. After examining a patient he issued whatever pills or liquid medicine needed from one of the hundreds of bottles, jars etc. setting on tables, shelves and the floor. There was a pathway through bottles and jars on the floor from the door to his consultation desk. Vonda Sharp received an "A" on her college assignment when she wrote a loving account of Dr. Jim and his office. During the depression when banks were closing all over the country, it was reported that Dr. Jim, in order that his bank would be strong if there would be a "run on the bank", got a leather bag and rode to Washington, D. C. with some bonds and brought back about $60,000 of paper money in a bag. The bank emerged from the great depression in great shape.

SHARP 3

155

Dr. Cofer, the Slatyfork doctor about 1926 gave $5 to the student who memorized the most Bible verses during the year. The teacher reported to him that Donald Johnson won it and he was given the money the last day of school Donald carefully hid the $5 under his bed till the County Fair opened that summer. He took his $5 with him. His grandfather, L. D. Sharp, asked him about his $5. Donald said he lost it all on those gambling wheels!! Later, Donald, while riding a bicycle near the company store, ran into the back of the walking Dr. Cofer and blew out a tire, with no injury to Dr. Cofer. Dr. Cofer also removed glass from Donald's face, arms, and legs when Donald put a match in a bottle of gunpowder !

Other doctors at Slatyfork was Dr. Cox and Dr. Styers who had the first motorcycle in the area. A picture of the motorcycle exists.

Another noted doctor was Dr. Norman Price who ran a foot race with an Englishman from Randolph county to Marlinton, which story is printed elsewhere in this book.

Submitted by Dave Sharp, Cincinnati.

Editor: You may edit, correct spelling, grammar and remove any items you think uninteresting.

156

The Great Practical Joke in Reverse !
Slatyfork 1914

Hugh Sharp, a bacheler, who lived at Slatyfork had Mrs. Rachael Showalter doing the housekeeping and a man named Taylor Ramsey doing some farming on the place. Hugh loved his several hives of bees he kept inside his yard fence. Bee hunting was his sport. With honey in his glass bee-trap he would go into the woods until he found a tree with bees. He seldom cut the tree, but carved his initials on it to indicate that it was his tree. He worked with his bees without a veil over his face and claimed they never ever stung him. If they did he wouldn't admit it.

Every evening after supper he would always take a stroll past his hives to enjoy seeing them work. The two staying there decided to play a practical joke on him so they secured a "patented" snake" that looked just like a real snake and placed it at the mouth of one of the hives in a manner that looked like it was eating his bees. This day Hugh took his stroll and he noticed the snake a few hives up the row. He backed up and got a stick and slipped up on it with his stick raised. He suddenly realized it was a fake snake and knew that they were watching him. He did some quick thinking. He proceeded to turn around toward the house without looking up and after a quick "preparation" he did a wee-wee on the ground.! Well, that turned the practical joke around on them, as he knew they wouldn't tease him about the snake eating his bees ! And they didn't .

Submitted by Dave Sharp

Doc. to History Book - Not Printed!

Dave Sharp
4171 Paxton Woods Drive
Cincinnati, Ohio 45209

Editor: you may edit the story for Topical History. To shorten it you might leave out about his bee hunting. Correct any grammer. (Hugh Sharp was born in 1846.)

Send to History Book

Wm Sharp, The Pioneer 157

HE POCAHONTAS TIMES

ered at the Postoffice at Marlin
, W. Va., as second class matter.

CALVIN W. PRICE, EDITOR

THURSDAY, MAY 7, 1931

For President
OWEN D. YOUNG of New York

At a court held for the coun-of Pocahontas on the 4th day of ptember, 1832, present James Tallan, Benjamin Tallman, Thomas ill, William Cackley, Jacob Light-r, John Bradshaw, Robert H.
eale, gentlemen:

tate of Virginia
ocahontas county, ss:

On this 4th day of September 1832, ersonally appeared before the sub-criber a justice of the peace for the ounty aforesaid William Sharp, a re ident of the county and state afore-aid, aged ninety-two, who being first uly sworn according to law, doth on is oath make the following declaraion in order to obtain the benefit of he Act of Congress passed June 7th, 832. That he entered the service of he United States under the follow-ng named officers and served as here s stated: That he was drafted and nd went into service in a company ommanded by Captain William Kind; does not now recollect the name his lieutenant, but recollects that ensign's name was James Trim-e; that the company to which he elonged was attached to a regiment ommanded by Colonel Sampson
Mathews; that he entered the service in the early part of the month of January, 1781, and was discharged from that tour of service in the month of April following; that he was in a skirmish with the British at Portsmouth, Virginia. That he resided near where he now does, when he entered the service, in what was then called West Augusta. That he was drafted; that he marched across the Blue Ridge and directly on to Portsmouth, where he remained untill he was discharged. That he has no documentary evidence, but supposes that John Bradshaw knows of his having performed said tour of service. He was drafted and was in service in the summer of 1774 in a company commanded by Captain Apdree Lockridge in an expedition against the Indians; that a certain William Mann and himself were sent by Colonel Andrew Lewis with a message to Governor Dunmore, who was then at Fort Pitt, (now Pittsburgh), and did not return to join the army until the next morning after the memorable Battle at Point Pleasant.
That he has no documentary evidence and that he knows of no person now living whose testimony he can procure who can testify to his service in said campaign.

He went as a volunteer in the month of September, 1781, under Captain Charles Lewis, (the same who was afterward killed in the battle at Point Pleasant) in an expedition against the Indians on the Muskingham River. That he was in service said tour during the fall of 1784 and did not return home until the month of March, 1785. Lieutenant McClanachan belonged to Captain Lewis' company; he does not now recollect the name of any other officers that were out on said expedition except Colonels Field and McNeel; that they had no engagements with the Indians that tour; that the Indians came in and gave up the prisoners they then had.

He was also in service as an Indian spy during the summer of 1773, and the summer of 1774 previous to being drafted into service as before stated under Captain Lockridge, of which said service as a spy he has no documentary evidence nor does he know of any person now living whose testimony he can procure who can testify to his said service. He states that adding all his services together;
those when drafted; the tour as a volunteer and the various times as an Indian spy, will exceed two years and six months. He hereby relinquishes every claim whatsoever to a pension or annuity except the present and declares his name is not on the pension roll of the agency of any state.

Wm. Sharp

Sworn and subscribed the day and year aforesaid before me a Justice of the Peace for the County of Pocahontas, and I do moreover certify that the said William Sharp cannot from age and bodily infirmity attend the court.

James Sharp

And the said court do hereby declare their opinion that the above named applicant was a revolutionary soldier and Indian spy and served as he states.

The proceedings of that day is signed by Thomas Hill as presiding magistrate.

This William Sharp was the pioneer settler of Huntersville, and from him descend the Sharps of Edray district. The Sharp families around Frost are descendants of John Sharp, a native of Ireland, who settled with his family in 1802 on the Abram Sharp place at Frost. His wife was Margaret Blaine, a sister of Rev.
John S. Blaine, a pioneer Presbyterian pastor of Pocahontas county.
They came here from Rockingham county. However, Judge Summers
H. Sharp and secretary of State Geo.
W. Sharp are also descendants of William Sharp through their mother
Mrs. Amanda Grimes Sharp, daughter of David G. Grimes, who was a son of Arthur Grimes, who married
Mary, a daughter of the William Sharp, whose declaration of his service as a revolutionary soldier is under consideration.

William Sharp was the first to open a permanent residence at Huntersville. His home was near the present residence of George W. Gingar.
He was living here prior to the Revolutionary war, and according to tradition he came here from near Staunton. This is bourne out in his declaration that he went out in 1784 with an expedition under Captain Charles Lewis (of Staunton) to the Muskingham (Muskingum) River to bring back prisoners held by the Indians. I presume these captives were taken in the second Kerr's Creek Massacre. He came to Huntersville about 1773. Anyway, he was here in 1774 and went on the Point Pleasant campaign in Captain Andrew Lockridge company.

I recall that mention is made of him in the Chalkley Papers as Capt.
William Sharp, when he was delegated to open certain roads in what is now Pocahontas County.

His wife was Mary Meeks. Their children were Nancy, wife of Levi
Moore, Jr.; Margaret, wife of John
Keller; Rachel, wife of Johathan
Grimes; Mary, wife of Arthur Grimes mentioned above; John, who married
Sarah McCollam.

James, son of William, the pioneer married Ann Waddell. They settled on Beaver Creek. Their children were Mary, wife of James Lewis;
Margaret, wife of Jacob Civey; Martha, wife of another Mr. Civey; Nancy, wife of Robert Ryder; Ann, wife of Levi Cackley, Jr.; Rachel, wife of Robert Gay; Lucinda, wife of Jonathan Jordan; William, Andrew and James.

The last named, James, was the magistrate who attested his grandfather's declaration. He was a prominent citizen of his day, justice of the peace and as such a member of the county court, high sheriff and elder in the Presbyterian church. He was also a great hunter. It is told of him that when hunting deer in Buck ley Mountain late one evening he saw a panther mount a log a few yards in front of him. He shot the animal, but when the smoke cleared away another panther crouched on the log. This performance was repeated nine times, when the hunter became panic stricken and flanked out for home. Some time during the night, other panthers followed his trail to his house and killed a yearling calf. The next day with proper reinforcements, Mr. Sharp went back to the place where he had fired nine times, and there lay nine dead panthers.

James Sharp married Mary Burn-sides. He died during the war.

William, son of William, the revolutionary soldier, married Elizabeth Waddell. Their children were James who married Althea Martin and lived on Browns Creek; William Jr. married Rachel Dilley, and lived at Slaty
Fork of Elk; Alexander married
Mary Dilley; Jacob married Elizabeth
McNeel; John married Sally Johnson;
Elizabeth, wife of [illegible]
Mary, wife of David Gibson; Rebecca wife of Wm. D. Moore; Anna, wife of Alexander Stalnaker; Ellen, wife of Warwick Stalnaker; Nancy, wife of Jacob Cassell; Martha, wife of Andrew Dilley.

Mr. Sharp says he was a member of the regiment commanded by Colonel Sampson Mathews. Colonel Mathews lived at Staunton; his son Sampson married Mary, daughter of Major Jacob Warwick, and lived at Dun-more; their son, Sampson Lockhart
Mathews, is the grandfather of Judge
George W. McClintic.

Mr. Sharp refers to John Bradshaw as the only man then living who knew of his having performed the "tour" of service in the campaign that ended the war. John Bradshaw was founder of Huntersville, prominent citizen, and his name is among the magistrates sitting on the court the day
William Sharp's delaration was filed.
I will publish John Bradshaw's own declaration in a coming issue. William Sharp says he was drafted for the campaign to Point Pleasant in the company under Captain Andrew Lockridge. This Captain Lockridge was a considerable of a figure in the frontier fighting for a generation.
Cousin Georgianne Dunlap Arnold, of Oklahoma City, has promised to write us about the Lockridges.

I can well understand why Mr.
Sharp was sent as a courier through the wilderness for several hundred miles to Fort Pitt with messages from Colonel Andrew Lewis to Governor Dunmore. He had been with Captain Charles Lewis on the expedition to the Indian country ten years before. This commission showed the confidence in his integrity and in his ability as a frontiersman.

Attention is called to the fact that
Mr. Sharp says the place he lived in 1774 was in West Augusta, but at the time his declaration was made it was then in Pocahontas county. We all know the esteem in which General Washington held the people of this region for he said: "Give me but a banner to raise upon the mountains of West Augusta and I will rally around me an army that will lift my bleeding country from the dust."

If any body knows the last resting place of Captain William Sharp, I want them to send the word in.
Marlinton Kiwanis club will take the necessary steps to have the Federal government mark it with a suitable stone. I would just naturally suppose his bones are either in the old cemetery near the Huntersville Presbyterian church or in the McLaughlin burying ground on Howard Barlow's place, but I do not know.

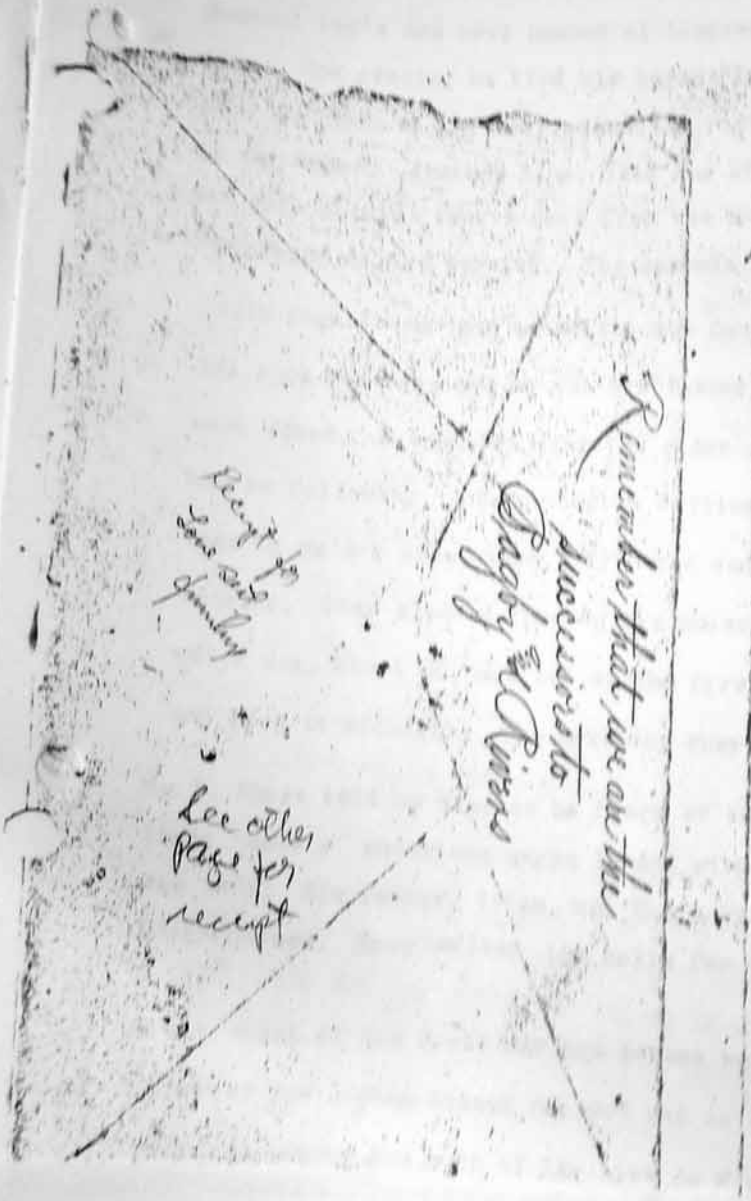
Pocahontas County's Beginning

156



Remember that we are the successors to Pagey & Rivers

Receipt for Lees-McRae Quarterly

See other page for receipt

Second Class Postage Paid at [illegible], W. Va. 24954
THE POCAHONTAS TIMES Vol. [illegible]

APRIL 17, 1980

History

By Jessie Beard Powell

Traveller's Repose
[Political History]
How We Came To Be In Pocahontas County

I sometimes think of and compare this remote section of Pochontas, the Upper Greenbrier, or Traveller's Repose, to an orphan. An orphan child is without natural parents, often has more than a normal number of adoptive parents, is tossed about from pillar to post, and is sometimes allowed by the courts to make its own decision as to where it will go.

We began as part of Orange County, Virginia. When Orange was divided in the fall session of the Virginia Legislature in 1738 it was split into

In 1796 the southern line of Pendleton was pushed southward a varying distance of four to twelve miles for no apparent reason. In that year also both Bath and Pendleton were enlarged by being made to take in the Upper Greenbrier Valley. Thus, their west borders were changed from the crest of the main Alleghany to Back Alleghany. This enlargement of Pendleton and Bath in the Upper Greenbrier Valley was by petition of the settlers there. The orphans were allowed to choose. Settlers of Traveller's Repose went with Pendleton.

In 1821 Pocahontas was being formed so the remote section of Bath and Pendleton became a part of the new county, Bath at the same time was diminished in size to the south by the lopping off of Alleghany County. It was intended by the Virginia Legislature that the western county be called Alleghany and the eastern county, Pocahontas. They were accidentally changed by the engrossing clerk. They would have been much more appropriate had they been named as intended.

Much later, in 1847, after the Staunton to Parkers-

CIVIL WAR STORIES OF SLATYFORK

159 Page 1

Pocahontas County was on the border between the North and the South and the Beverly-Mingo-Slatyfork-Marlinton-Huntersville turnpike seemed to be important to both sides. General Lee's men were camped at Linwood one winter 1861-62 and he was with them part of the time. One evening he tied his horse "Traveler" to a post and with two guards standing ou side the door of the still-standing SHARP'S log house ate supper cooked in cast iron kettles stil in the house. Another time, late one afternoon, the Confederates camped across the creek and each soldier took a rail from the meadow fence--stripping every rail--to burn all nig They found apples burried. The captain told them to pay Mrs. William Sharp for them.

Uncle Hugh Sharp told us of the two Confederates ambushed on the turnpike on the hill. The snow was deep and he and his father, William, was getting in wood when several shot were fired. A southern dispatch rider came galloping along with two riderless saddled horses following. He yelled to William that his two buddies had been ambushed and ask them to go see about them. With the snow sled and horse they found one dead and the ot wounded. They sledded them to the house and put the dead one in the corn crib and the other one, about 20, was put at the fireplace where he talked of his parents back in Georg and died at midnight. The next day they were burried him near the present cemetary.

L. D. Sharp told us stories he heard of the retreat of the Confederates from Linwood. I their haste a munitions wagon loaded with lead minnie balls broke a wheel in the creek was left. His father, Silas, and Uncle Hugh went up there on trips to bring back lead o their horses. They melted the balls for their own guns in later years.

At the start of the Civil War the issues were not clear so the Sharps and John M. Gibson father of Joe and Sam Gibson decided not to take sides but found out that this was impossi These men camped out part of the time on Middle Mountain at the "Pine Knob" under a rock cliff. They decided to get together for an Easter breakfast. Mrs. Gibson came down to the Sharps to see her husband. While they were eating Easter breakfast, one of the boys ran in and said the Rebels were coming. Little Luther, age 16, ran up the hill and was shot by Jake Simmons. About a dozen shot at John Gibson. Two men whose who's guns were empty ran after him. At the top of the hill he pulled out a "pepper box" pistol and said "Congester, I'll kill you". They skidded into reverse and Gibson escaped. While Gibson s running across the meadow, one soldier reloaded and laid his gun across a wood pile or aim and Mrs. Gibson cracked his head with a piece of wood. Grandfather Silas jumped nto a fence-rail goose nest. A soldier jumped over the nest and was reloading h...

SHARP 3

gun with a ramrod when Si hit him over the head with a boot jack. Si ran around the house and faced Jake Simmons who had just shot Luther. He surrendered. Later in the day while marching Silas along the road they captured Bill Hannah. The other man had a very small hand and when they were handcuffed together for the walk south, he showed Silas he could get the handcuff off. A few days later when the soldier on horseback taking them south had to stop for a "call of nature" and set his gun against a tree a few feet from where he was "sitting", Silas asked him to take the handcuff off and he'd make a run for the gun, but the other man was afraid. Silas was taken to Richmond and then to Salisbury, N. C. where he spent 23 months and 24 days in prison where thousands starved to death. They ate rats, cats and dogs at times to survive. In the 1920's " LD", son of Silas, stopped in at Salisbury and asked an old man with a long white beard where the prison was. He told "LD" that all the prisoners starved to death--to the last man. "LD" tried to convince the man that his father lived through it, but the old man told him that he couldn't have!

The captain in charge of Richmond's Libby prison was cruel even to his own men, who finally killed him. He issued an order that any prisoner that stuck his head or arm out the window would have it shot off. The guards under him had a plan. One of the guards would fire a gun outside, which he did. The captain ran and stuck his head out the window and they shot his head off--complying with his order ! Si told many times of the rejoicing of the prisoners when the captain was shot.

Silas had two brothers, Henry and Bernard, killed in action. "L. D." thought one joined the North and the other the South. It was thought that Henry , killed at the Robert Gibson place had joined the South and was killed on purpose by his own men because he may have been a spy for the North--which he might have been--? They reported that it was an accident, when his men shot him while he was on picket duty at night there on the road.

Uncle Hugh Sharp was a bee-hunter sportsman. He would find a bee-tree and carve his initials on the tree, rarely cutting a tree for the honey. He told the family he after the war that he planned to go "bee hunting" over the mountain and kill Jake Simmons for killing his little brother Luther, but he never made the move.

" L.D." has told us many times that his parent's family really didn't know clearly the issues and didn't know which side to join. That's the reason Silas Sharp, John Gibson and others didn't join either side and camped part of the time under a cliff at the " Pine knob" called "Sharp's Knob" just behind the Middle Mountain meadow.

W. VA. SCHOOLS

161

When Silas returned from sleeping on hard floors in prison he couldn't at first sleep in a bed. He was so skinny after his long walk from the south that Sarah, his future wife, didn't know him when he came by her house.

After the war William brought a civil suit against a Captain Marshal and others, and we understand collected $500 for illegally taking his son, Si, a civilian, and sending him to prison.

Apparently there were some Southern sympathizers at Mingo as there is a very old and beautiful statue of Robert E. Lee behind an iron fence at Mingo Flats.

I have on file more details of the Hannahs, Gibsons, Sharps and events of the Civil War at Slatyfork.

Submitted by

[redacted]s. Dave Sharp
4171 Paxton Woods Drive
Cincinnati, Ohio 45209

513- 871-4813

Sent to Hershey Book

Civil War 167

Huntersville Target For Federal Army Raid

The 1862 campaign in the Alleghany highlands in West Virginia opened on the first day of the new year with a strong raiding force from the Federal winter camp at Huttonsville, Randolph County, marching on Huntersville, then the county seat of Pocahontas County. Huntersville, lightly garrisoned by some 250 Confederate cavalry and infantry with a contingent of county militia, was an important center in the summer and fall campaign of 1861 when it was the headquarters of General W. W. Loring, who commanded the Army of the Northwest, CSA. Loring had been called, with his troops, to re-enforce Stonewall Jackson in the Shenandoah Valley; now its only military importance was as a supply center for the Confederate troops operating in that area, and also in the fact that it was connected with Warm Springs by a fairly good turnpike. This highway could be used as a gateway for Union Troops to Virginia east of the mountains, just as it was being used by the Southerners for their troops and for transportation of supplies funneled in from the central depots at Staunton and Warm Springs.

The Union high command at Huttonsville determined to destroy the center, though no Federal troops had penetrated that far into the Confederate-held mountain country. A task force was organized and at one o'clock in the afternoon of Dec. 31 Major George Webster, 25th Ohio Infantry, moved out of Huttonsville at the head of 400 of the men of his own regiment, headed toward Huntersville. At Camp Elkwater he [illegible] of range as quickly as possible. One of the men later cofessed that he ran that day only because he could not fly.

The battle of Marlins Botton, Greenbrier Bridge, or by whatever of the half-dozen names it has been called, was an extremely noisy affair, but entirely bloodless. Not a man was killed, and not an man, Union or Confederate, was reported wounded—it was all sound and fury.

The small brush at the covered bridge did little more than to halt the Federal raiders. Stopping long enough to detach a guard of fifty men to protect the bridge, Webster pressed on for the six mile run to Huntersville. Confederate pickets were encountered about two miles from the town, but after trading a few shots with the advance guard, which did no harm to either side, the pickets retired upon the main body of dismounted cavalry drawn up in line of battle about a mile from the town. Webster deployed a part of the 25th Ohio up a hill to the left to turn the Confederate right, and with the balance of his force moved up to make a frontal attack. Firing became general all along both lines, remarkable only for noise, but when the Confederates discovered the flank movement they fell back to their horses, hastily mounted and retreated to a position a half mile nearer the town.

Webster's troops crossed Knapps Creek and there he employed the same tactics as at the first stand; two companies of the 25th Ohio were sent to the right at the base of a hill to turn the Confederate left, while Major Owens with the shots, then fled to Warm Springs and Monterey.

Major Webster said in his official report that on entering the town "we found the place deserted, the houses broken open, and goods scattered, the cause of which was soon stated by a returned citizen. The rebel commander (who is not identified in any report) had ordered the citizens to remove all their valuable property as he intended, if beaten, to burn the town." The retreating Confederates did set fire to a large barn containing commissary stores before taking their hasty departure.

Webster's attacking force at Huntersville was about 600 men - the wagon and bridge guards and some stragglers accounted for the men missing out of the original 738 - but exaggerated Confederate reports said that he had 4,000 to 5,000 men. No exact figures are fixed for the number of Confederate defenders which, it seems, was composed of about 250 mixed troops, units not identified, and a few militia hurriedly called up the night before. In all the Confederate force probably had a strength of 300 to 350 men. In all the marching, countermarching, shooting and waste of gunpowder, Webster had one man wounded - shot in the arm. The Confederate casualty list is fixed at one man killed and seven wounded, in addition to the loss of stores - and that loss caused real suffering in the Confederate mountain camps the balance of the winter.

The considerable quantity of Confederate stores found in Huntersville were given to the flames because of lack of transportation to carry them away. Major Webster reported capture of 350 barrels of flour, 300 salted beeves amounting to about 150,000 pounds, 30,000 pounds of salt, and large amounts of sugar, coffee, rice, bacon, clothing, etc. The soldiers kept and carried back to their camp a large number of Sharps carbines, sabers, horse-[illegible] ing, and he left the flag flying as he took his departure.

After an hour and a half driving the Confederates out of the town and two hours in accomplishing the real purpose of the raid, Webster turned back toward the Huttonsville base, marching about ten miles to Edray before encamping for the night. The task force had had a hard day; it had marched 24 miles and had fought two engagements — or skirmishes —that were more noted for footwork than action. The little army reached Huttonsville on January 6th, having made a winter march of 102 miles in a little less than six days, penetrated the enemy's country thirty miles further than any body of Federal troops had gone before and returned with all men, horses and wagons intact and with only Private Oliver P. Hershee, 25th Ohio Infantry, nursing a wound in the arm.

At the time Major Webster's foray was counted one of the most successful raids, for it did more than scatter county militia at Marlins Bottom and rout a small force at Huntersville — the raid threw a tremendous scare into the Confederate command. Pocahontas historian Andrew Price said it "made their lines quiver from Huntersville to Winchester, and from Camp Allegheny to Staunton. Scouts rode headlong in every direction carrying dispatches. They seemed to have agreed on the strength of the Federal army as being 5,000 men instead of the 738 that it actually was."

Civic Club to Hold Sweetheart Ball

The Clarksburg Welcome Newcomers Club will hold its Sweetheart Ball from 9 to 12 P Saturday, Feb. 10, at the Hotel.

Persons attending w to the music of the To Quartet and a midr

Pocahontas Co's Beginning

Second Class Postage Paid at Marlinton, W. Va. 24954
THE POCAHONTAS TIMES
[475-640]
Vol.

APRIL 17, 1930

History

By Jessie Beard Powell

Traveller's Repose
[Political History]
How We Came To Be In Pocahontas County

I sometimes think of and compare this remote section of Pochontas, the Upper Greenbrier, or Traveller's Repose, to an orphan. An orphan child is without natural parents, often has more than a normal number of adoptive parents, is tossed about from pillar to post, and is sometimes allowed by the courts to make its own decision as to where it will go.

We began as part of Orange County, Virginia. When Orange was divided in the fall session of the Virginia Legislature in 1738, it was split into Frederick and Augusta. Augusta became that part extending 240 miles along the crest of the Blue Ridge Mountain (running North and South) and then West to the Mississippi. Augusta has been called the mother of Counties. Out of Augusta was carved four states, a considerable portion of Virginia, as she now is, and thirty-three counties southeast of the Ohio River, beginning with Botetourt in 1769.

Rockingham was carved from Augusta in 1778. In 1787 the German settlement north of "The Divide," that part of Rockingham west of the Shenandoah mountains, plus slices from Hardy and old Augusta was made the county of Pendleton. Scarcely two years later Bath was stricken off from Augusta and parts of Botetourt and Greenbrier. It took in that section west of the Shenandoah range and as far north as "The Divide," the whole upper James River Basin.

Pendleton was pushed southward a varying distance of four to twelve miles for no apparent reason. In that year also both Bath and Pendleton were enlarged by being made to take in the Upper Greenbrier Valley. Thus, their west borders were changed from the crest of the main Alleghany to Back Alleghany. This enlargement of Pendleton and Bath in the Upper Greenbrier Valley was by petition of the settlers there. The orphans were allowed to choose. Settlers of Traveller's Repose went with Pendleton.

In 1821 Pocahontas was being formed so the remote section of Bath and Pendleton became a part of the new county. Bath at the same time was diminished in size to the south by the lopping off of Alleghany County. It was intended by the Virginia Legislature that the western county be called Alleghany and the eastern county, Pocahontas. They were accidentally changed by the engrossing clerk. They would have been much more appropriate had they been named as intended.

Much later, in 1847, after the Staunton to Parkersburg turnpike was built through "the Divide," our neighboring county of Highland was created from the southern part of Pendleton and the northern part of Bath. At last, a meld of the Germans north of "The Divide" and the Scotch-Irish, south of it.

So, it would have been quite possible for a child to have been born to an early settler of Traveller's Repose in Augusta County in 1780, spend his childhood in Augusta, grow to adulthood in Bath, be married in Pendleton, and die in Pocahontas and never leave his own house.

163

Remember that we are the successors to Bagby & Rivers

See other pg for copy of furniture

POSTAL CARD - ONE CENT.
United States of America
THIS SIDE IS FOR THE ADDRESS ONLY.

Mrs. L. D. Sharp
Linwood
Va.

SHARP 3

...ERS W. VA. SCHOOLS

January 31, 1980 Dave Sharp

164

History and events of the Slatyfork, W. Va. Sharp family--Luther David Sharp, etc.

L. D. Sharp (LDS) was born June 8, 187? at Slatyfork, WvVa. in his father's house on the old county road crosses Slatyfork Creek about one mile above where Slatyfork Creek (...ounties into Elk River. He had two older sisters, Ella who married Robert Gibson, and Malinda who married (Silas)Hannah, father of Veo Hannah. Mary Estella Beard (Eva) Louis Lena Baxter

LDS as a child had light blond hair. He went to school in a log, 1-room, school house on a bank across the county road from the cemetary, at the edge of some trees and near the spring at the road. He watched his father and other men in the neighborhood build the school house, and he told us that his mother could see his white head bobbling along as he ran back to the house for lunch at noon.

He described his teacher Mr. "Dum-rather" as a very hard man with discipline. ← Montgomery Matthews

They got the basic "3-R's" of reading, writing and arithmatic, using slates instead of paper. His old slate used to be at the old house. "LD" as he was affectionately called by many including the family, did a lot of reading and educated himself to where he could carry on conversations and business deals with college trained men. At a young age (12) studied music under a teacher who taught shaped notes and through later years directed the Slatyfork Methodist Choir and they traveled much of W. Va. at singing festivals.

When "LD" was 12 years old he had set himself up in business and still worked on the farm. Before he was 12 some men working on a sawmill asked him if he could get them some handkerchiefs and Tobacco . I believe a drummer coming through gave him tips on how to order things.

And jewelry from J. Lind co.

At age 12 he got on a horse with some profit from a previous business deals, and went down Elk River to a family he knew of who had boys that trapped fur. He went to the house. The father told him the boys were in school and for him to go there and pay them whatever they asked for the fur. The father would not set a price. LD went to the school and asked to talk to the boys. They came outside and said they had MINKS SKUNKS FOXES B * and when LD asked how much they wanted for them they said a very low price (see Uncle Floyd story elsewhere)

e paid the boys for the fur and went back to the house to get the fur. The mother asked ow much he paid for them. LD didn't want to tell them, so said "I paid them exactly hat they asked". She asked again and the father told her to shut up, that if he paid them hat they asked, that was the end of it.

stayed at some one's home one night before coming back to his home. He said they had believe, ham and bread. They had no forks. Maybe a big fork and a knife to cut in the tchen, but none for the table. I believe this experience was on a Sales Trip.

owing up wasn't easy. It was hard work to provide clothes and feed for the family. has mentioned many times of when he was hoeing corn etc that the hard ground roots caused callouses and pain in his hands--that often he had to use his other hand open up the fingers on the other hand after a tough row to hoe.

a teenager, another country boy challenged him over some matter. In the middle of fight the other boy picked up a sliver from a board and hit him across the nose, aking it, resulting in a slightly crooked nose the rest of his life.

ther time when he was a young man, he ran through some elder bushes at the back of his father's house and where some one had cut off some of the bushes, one of the sharp ran through his left eye. Somehow, he was taken to John Hopkins Hospital. He the fluid, like egg white, ran out of his eye. The Dr. called in students to see his From whatever they did to him, he could see daylight through the eye, and had a e scar through the pupil. After getting a Studebaker car about 1926, he drove a car one eye until he was about 85 years old. He used glasses to read. But could see t distances without glasses. His hearing was good until his death.

...ERS W. VA. SCHOOLS

164

January 31, 1980 Dave Sharp

History and events of the Slatyfork, W. Va. Sharp family--Luther David Sharp, etc.

L. D. Sharp (LDS) was born June 8, 187? at Slatyfork, WvVa. in his father's house on the old county road that crosses Slatyfork Creek about one mile above where Slatyfork Creek empties into Elk River. He had two older sisters, Ella who married Robert Gibson, and Malinda who married ( )Hannah, father of Veo Hannah. LDS as a child had light blond hair. He went to school in a log, 1-room school house on a bank across the county road from the cemetary, at the edge of some trees and near the spring at the road. He watched his father and other men in the neighborhood build the school house, and he told us that his mother could see his white head bobbling along as he ran back to the house for lunch at noon.
He described his teacher Mr. Sam Mathes as a very hard man with discipline. They got the basic "3-R's" of reading, writing and arithmatic, using slates instead of paper. His old slate used to be at the old house. "LD" as he was affectionately called by many including the family, did a lot of reading and educated himself to where he could carry on conversations and business deals with college trained men. At a young age (12) studied music under a teacher who taught shaped notes and through later years directed the Slatyfork Methodist Cheir and they traveled much of W. Va. at singing festivals. When "LD" was 12 years old he had set himself up in business and still worked on the farm. Before he was 12 some men working on a sawmill asked him if he could get them some handkerchiefs and Tobacco . I believe a drummer coming through gave him tips on how to order things.

At age 12 he got on a horse with some profit from a previous business deals, and went down Elk River to a family he knew of who had boys that trapped fur. He went to the house. The father told him the boys were in school and for him to go there and pay them whatever they asked for the fur. The father would not set a price. LD went to the school and asked to talk to the boys. They came outside and said they had MINKS SKUNKS FOXES and when LD asked how much they wanted for them they said a very low price

He paid the boys for the fur and went back to the house to get the fur. The mother asked how much he paid for them. LD didn't want to tell them, so said "I paid them exactly what they asked". She asked again and the father told her to shut up, that if he paid them what they asked, that was the end of it.
He stayed at some one's home one night before coming back to his home. He said they had I believe, ham and bread. They had no forks. Maybe a big fork and a knife to cut in the kitchen, but none for the table.

Growing up wasn't easy. It was hard work to provide clothes and food for the family. He has mentioned many times of when he was hoeing corn etc that the hard ground and roots caused callouses and pain in his hands--that often he had to use his other hand to open up the fingers on the other hand after a tough row to hoe.
As a teenager, another country boy challenged him over some matter. In the middle of the fight the other boy picked up a sliver from a board and hit him across the nose, breaking it, resulting in a slightly crooked nose the rest of his life.
Another time when he was a young man, he ran through some elder bushes at the back of his father's house and where some one had cut off some of the bushes, one of the sharp ends ran through his left eye. Somehow, he was taken to John Hopkins Hospital. He said the fluid, like ege white, ran out of his eye. The Dr. called in students to see his eye. From whatever they did to him, he could see daylight through the eye, and had a white scar through the pupil. After getting a Studebaker car about 1926, he drove a car with one eye until he was about 85 years old. He used glasses to read. But could see great distances without glasses. His hearing was good until his death.

165

Page 2 The Sharp Family --Slatyfork, W. Va.

When LD became about 19 he went to see the girls, going in a buggy or horseback. Either at a party or a dance (square) Nelly Slanker jumped on his lap and embarrassed him by sitting on his lap, so he said.
He must have been about 17 when he planned to go up to see some girl living near his married sister Ella. Dad's(LD) mother SARAH suspected he was going to see her and sent a note along with him to his Sister, telling her to try to prevent it--for some reason. Ella lived about 4 miles up Elk River.

Dad met Laura Morgan, who lived with her parents, Rev. Silas Morgan, at the Edray parsonage. He went by horse or buggy to see her. He had her seen talked out of teaching school to marry him. When Rev. Morgan died, Laura's mother Edith married Mr. Wm. IRVIN ~~Mitchell~~

Dad had seven children: Ada, Violet, Ivan, Creola, Silas, Paul, and Dave, Jr.
Ada married John Johnson in Baltimore. Ada studied Elocution and performed in New York city, and knew a famous stage actress and exchanged letters for many years.
Violet married Rufus Markland of Richmond, Va. and had one child, Rufus, Jr.
Violet and Rufus came to Pocahontas County to get married. Dad had heard his last name but had never seen him before. When he started to introduce him in Marlinton to someone, he had to ask him his name. Dad laughed about that many times.
Evan didn't appear to be much interested in girls when he was a teenager, but did go up Elk to see a Hannah girl.
Then Ivan went up to Arbovale to a music school one summer and met Genevieve Ornderf. He immediately fell "head over heels" in love with her. He drove up there everytime he could get away. One time he put chains on both front and rear wheels of his Star car in order to get through the deep snow to see her.
They had three children, Ralph, Ramona and Evan. Ramona majored in music, taught school and married Tom Shipley. Ralph married Regena, Evan married Phyllis in Va.
He was fatally killed in a hunting accident at about age 34 Nov. 17, 1975

Creola died age 18 with a bleed ~~meningitis~~ pesion.

Silas Sharp still lives at the old homestead at Slatyfork.
Paul Sharp Married Vonda Lowe of Buckhannon, and they had two children, Thayer and Barbara. After Vonda died, Paul Married Retha Mitchell of Port Neches Texas.

Dave Married Sylvia Friel of Marlinton, W. Va. July 11, 1940, and adopted a daughter, Linda, in 1962, and live in Cincinnati, Ohio LINDA married Benny Eduardo, May 24, 1980 (12-19-61)

Ada's husband died. Her son Donald and Helen Johnson came to live with Dad and both went to school till on their own at Slatyfork. Ada remarried Wm Curtain and they had 3 children, Clara, Bill and Stanley. Donald lives in Portland, Oregon

When Dad got married, he built his house on to the same house he was born in, both houses sharing the same fireplace. The old house was taken down about 1940 andlumber from it was used to build an apartment on the back of the warereom of the "new"store on Route #219, for Dave and Sylvia to live in while they ran the store.
The old house that Dad built is still standing with the chemney, but the kitchen has decayed. The old apple orchard that must have been there when Dad's father lived there is still standing. Dad did some grafting of apple trees on the farm. Some of the very old apple trees are Pippin, Fallowwater, Red Astern,(and later a Richmond.) and (Red) Ben Davis, a hardy apple, but not much for flavor.
A story Dad told many times. His grandmother took the seeds from an apple and planted the seeds. She planted 7 seeds, but only 3 grew. She had 6 ~~children~~(boys). During the Civil War 3 boys died, and 3 boys lived. 1 girl 1 girl = 7 children

Found IN ONE of the Boys Books

IT seemed to be AN OMEN To her.

I understand the original of the Slatyfork Sharps was William Sharp who lived at Huntersville. His son William lived at Slatyfork in a house (probably log) at the edge of the meadow next to the big spring of water close by the route 219 bridge that crosses Big Spring creek. Apparently he moved, later on, a 1/4 mile up the creek to a log house still standing near the large 17-room house nowxx being used.

William had several boys and one girl Mary Ella (who died of I think diptheria) Henry lived in a house in a field below the Middle Mountain Meadow. Don't know where he was burried. Harmon Sharp lived in a log house at Slatyfork (Laruel Bank) where Big Spring and Elk River converge. The point on Gauley Mountain is known as X Sharp's Knob, perhaps xxxxx named after Harmon. — M William Luther Sharp was a 16 year old boy, who started to run up the path above where the railroad track now is, when JAKE SIMMONS of Bath County, Virginia, of the Confederate army shot him at a great distance, thinking he was of military age. We don't know where he was burried. Probably an unmarked grave in the Sharp Cemetery — ?

Another Son Was Hugh Sharp, who lived all his life in either the original house near the spring or the one near the large existing house. He lived there at least after his childhood. Hugh, after the war, threatened many times to go bee hunting over in Bath County to kill Jake Simmons for killing his brother, Luther. Uncle Hugh's sport was to take a small glass bee-trap to catch a bee on a flower and by letting the bee feed on honey in the trap and turning it loose to come back, and repeating it many times xx he could see which direction the bees went and he could find the bee tree. He had all the bees he needed, so in stead of cutting all the bee trees, he'd carve his initials on the tree signifying to others that that was his tree.--mostly sport for him.

Uncle Hugh loved his bees. When he gave Dad (LD) his part of the original farm to keep him the rest of his life, Dad built the 17 room house with timber sold from the land. Uncle Hugh would not let them remove the bees from around the old house when the new house was being built. The carpenters had to fight bees during the building. One man jumped off the second floor roof when a bee got to him. After the house was finished, xxxxUudle Hugh lived there, with a hired hand and a cook, Mrs. Showalter that Dad provided form him. Every day at noon after eating, Uncle Hugh would go out and walk around each hive of bees to enjoy the sight. (He always worked with the bees without a bee-vail on, and claimed he never ever got stung.) The hired man, Taylor Ramsey decided to play a trick on him, so he got a patented snake (imitation snake), and put it at the mouth of a hive, appearing to be eating the bees. Mrs. Showalter and the man was looking out the door or window to see the fun and laugh at him when he found out it was a trick. Uncle Hugh made his rounds of h the hives, when he saw the snake. He stepped back and got a long stick and slipped up on the snake with the stick raised above his head, when he realized it was a trick. He did some quick thinking to keep them from having the joke on him. He turned around, opened his fly and facing the house wee-weed on the ground.! They didn't tease him about it!

Some of the Sharp boys joined the North and others the South. One of them Henry Bennett with the South, was on picket duty not too far from the Slatyfork Area, when he was shot by his own men, who said they made a mistake thinking he was from the other side (at night). Someone said they were suspecious he was working for the other side and they delibertly shot him. And of course he may have been??????

The only other son I knew the name of was Silas, father of L. D. Sharp (Dad). At that time the boys lived in the log house with their father and mother (next to what is now the 17 room house). Some of the boys joined the North and others joined the South. And perhaps two or three, not convinced which side to join, didn't join either, and technically wasn't on either side. Silas, and a brother or two and perhaps a couple other men under the same circumstances who chose not to join either side, being afraid either side would capture them lived under a cliff of rock at the "pine knob" just on the other side of Middle Mountain Meadow. They stayed there when there was troop movement in the valley, coming in for food when necessary. Silas and a man ~~Thad Gibson, (Sam Gibson's father)~~ BARNETT was captured by the confederates. Silas ran down below the house and hid in a goose's nest. A soldier fired his rifle and was standing a few feet away using a ramrod to reload. Silas picked up a boot-jack and hit him in the head, stunning him, but they captured him. Another man there tried to run away, up toward the cemetary. The Captain gave orders for two soldiers to cathh him. Threw down their guns and chased him up the hill.

John Gibson
(Sam Gibson's father)

Was missing this

167

When he got almost up to the top of the hill he was out of breath, and stopped, turned around, pulled out a "Pepper Box" pistol (that Dad said might not kill anyone) and said "Gangister, I'll kill you". They turned around and fled, leaving him free. This may have been ~~RANDY~~ Sam Gibson's father JOHN. If so, he wasn't captured.
Silas and the other man was handcuffed and a confederate soldier on horse was assigned to walk them south to Salisbury, N. C. to prison. They walked many days. The two men said they were not in the northern army, but the army took them as prisoners any way. One day on the trip south, the soldier on the horse had a "call of nature". He got off his horse set his gun against a tree, unfastened his suspendors. The man with Silas had a very small wrist, and showed Silas once before that he could take his handcuff off that was holding one man's left arm and the others right arm together. Silas begged him to take his handcuff off so he'd be free to grab the gun and free themselfes. But the man was afraid not to take it off. So they went on to prison.
Dad has told us many times the years and months and days (about 2 years) he was in prison. (__ years, 23 months and 24 days lacking 6 days of being 2 years

Silas was in the prison in Salisbury for ~~two~~ about years ~~or more~~ before being transferred to Richmond. While in Salisbury, most of the men died of disease or starved. Silas made (with his knife?) pieces of "jewelry" and had a black woman who came in the camp prison to clean up, to take out and sell for him and bring food to him., whith may have saved his life. The men at rats and dogs when they could get any. A captain came through the prison one day. Some men threw a blanket over the dog and that followed him, and killed it. They cooked it to eat. Silas took one bite but couldn't swallow it. He carved his initials or name on the stone walls of the prison. He went to Richmond to stay until he was exchanged later in an exchange with the north of prioners. He was given a written pass to walk through lines to his home from Richmond.
Silas had, ~~I think, married~~ after MARRIED before his capture to Sarah Hannah who's father lived, I think in a log house next to Page Hannah's house and near Archie Gibson's house. The house was still standing in about 1935. Si Sharp, my brother, thinks the Hannahs lived in a house above the road above Frank Hannah's (Sam Hannah's). There was a house there that a Hannah lived in and they may have lived there first and moved down to the other house after that one may have burned.
When Silas got back home from prison, he went to bed [redacted], but tossed and turned and couldn't sleep on the feather bed. He had to get out on the hard floor and sleep like he did in prison! - for a while Silas's father, William married ~~Sarah~~ RACHAEL Dilly from I believe about Campbelltown. ~~Hannah~~ Rachael was of German descent(maybe from Germany?) and spoke German. Dad picked up a few words from her, but could not carry on a conversation in it. At the St. Louis Fair at about the turn of the centruy, Dad and Bob Gibson, his brotherinlaw, went to the fair by themselves by train. Each country had booths selling their merchanisise. Dad went up to a German booth that had German girls selling. Dad only knew one word, meaning "pretty girl". He said it to them, but when they responded in rapid German, he was embarrassed and turned heel and hurried away !

Apparently families had special pliers to pull teeth. Silas (grandfather) asked Dad to pull a teeth (maybe his last?). Dad was all excited, thinking he might fail or break it off. It was a successful pull.

Grandfather, Silas became sick, perhaps suddenly, complaining of his stomach. He died soon. Dad thought it may have been appendicitus, or cancer.

Was with Uncle Hugh 168

Page 5 The Sharp Family -- Slatyfork W. Va.

Grandfather Silas was in prison in Salisbury , N. C. So Dad (LD) on a trip to Florida about 1938 decided to stop in the city to see the prison that his father was in. Dad stopped in town and got out of the Nash car and saw a very old man sitting on a bench. Dad went to him and told him that his father had been in prison there and that he wanted to see the prison, and could he tell him how where to see it. The man told Dad "your dad didn't live through it. They all died. Everyone of them starved to death. Not a one lived." Dad told him again that his father lived through it, saying "I'm here, so my father must have lived" But he couldn't convince him that his father lived. The old man must have been a boy at the time of the war, or maybe he had been a soldier. Dad didn't see the prison.

During the War, General Lee's army was camped up at Linewood, and had a hospital on a little flat just below the 219 road, about half way up the mountain. Lee came by the Sharp's house about supper time and was invited in to eat. Uncle Hugh told many times of General Lee's white horse Traveler being tied up beside the house. Two guards were stationed outside the door on the porch. The log house, covered with clapboard, still stands, with the old stone chemney. Uncle Hugh was there, but was too young, or they ignored him because he didn't belong to the North's army.

One late afternoon, the Confederate army came there and camped across the creek in the meadow. They set up their tents and needed fire wood to keep warm and cook. Each man went to the rail fence and brought one to build a fire or fires. Every rail was taken. The soldiers found apples that were burried under dirt to keep from freezing. When the captain found out they took the apples, he ordered them to go pay the Sharp's for the apples.

1861-1862

Confederate soldiers camped up at Linwood one winter. It was a hard cold winter and the Sharp's heard that half the soldiers died of disease, but they were burried secretly. No one ever found their graves. Some thought they might have dropped them down some vertical caves in the area.

It seems the Confederates hurriedly retreated from up there when they heard of a Yankee army coming from Huttonsville. They loaded up their wagons and came down Big Spring Creek and then on toward Marlinton. One wagon loaded with lead musket balls broke an axle where the road crossed the creek at Linwood. They just left the load there. Dad said his father went up there ~~(with a sled or wagon)~~ and brought perhaps a 100 lbs of lead to meld down for his gun for bullets. ? on shoulder? — see story elsewhere

Uncle Hugh told about a Southern soldier being ambushed up along the old road. and wounded. I ~~think~~ another soldier was killed outright. Uncle Hugh and his father others took a sled up there and hauled him down to the house and made him a bed in front of the fireplace. He was mortally wended and he knew it. He told the Sharp's about his family in the South before dying that night. I don't know if any messages were sent south, or even if those there could write???? I'm sure Sarah (Silas's wife) could write, ~~but~~

After the war, Uncle Hugh thought it would be interesting to make a cannon and shoot it. He fashioned a cannon out of a hollow pole. Made ~~an~~ a round wooden ball. The story as I remember, he fired it and it blew up but the ball went through a wall of one of the houses.

In a letter of Si's to me: " Three of Uncle Hugh's brothers were killed in the war. One was "Little Luther", age 16 and one was Bernard. Don't know the name of the other one. (Henry)
Uncle Hugh and Uncle Harman who lived at Slatyfork--He later moved just out of Elkins..
There was one ~~12~~ year old girl (Mary?) died of Diptheria. Uncle Hugh had Diptheria too. Dr. told him to smoke a pipe." Ella

(179)

Was minds this

169

When Dad (LDS) was a boy of about 7, a black man ~~xxkingxxx~~ working on a saw mill or something took a liking to Dad, and with a knife whittled Dad his first and only toy of his life, out of a piece of wood. I think it may have been a figure of a boy.?

One summer when Dad was perhaps about ~~11~~ 12, he begged his father to let him ride with some wagons from the area going over to Millboro, Va to get supplies. There must have been 3 or 4 wagons and the men. One night after crossing into Virginia, they camped on some high ground overlooking a very small cluster ~~xx~~ of houses, that blacks lived in, or so they told him. They decided to have some fun, Dad told me, at his expense. They told him that these black girls liked to sleep with a white boy, and that they would come up at night when a person is asleep and go to bed with him. He didn't believe them. So they told him to look at~~x~~ his penis the next morning. That night when he was asleep, they unbottoned his pants, and rubbed charcoal from the fire on him. He said the next morning when he got up awake the first thing he did was look, and he was as black as he could be ! HIS UNCLE HARMON WAS ON THE TRIP

Harmon Sharp was one of them

When Dad was about 15,I'd guess, he and his father went on two horses up to Linwood where there was a store. It was apparently an all day job--go there buy some supplies and loaf a while before coming back home. They had some cider, which Dad said was boiled two barrels into one, and it had a kick to it that he didn't know it had. He drank a few drinks and then he and 3 or 4 boys there went down to the nearby creek in a patch of elderberry bushes where they were playing. One was whittling with a knife and accidently cut one of the boys just a little. Dad said it seemed funny to him beause he was drunk (and maybe didn't know it), but he was so lightheaded he could hardly get back in the store. His dad was ready to leave ~~from~~ FOR home, and said to Dad "would you like to have a glass of cider before we go home?" Dad said he didn't think he did, knowing he was already drunk. He didn't think he was ever going to get on that horse without his dad finding out he was drunk. He made it home ok. He said that was his first and last time getting drunk. All his life he never drank any beer or whiskey. He did smoke when he was about 20 but quit after perhaps 2 or 3 years.

Page 7. The Sharp Family Slatyfork, W. Va.

Dad was both a farmer and a merchant. He ran a store on the old road "over the hill" near the old house, which he build perhaps about 1900, along with farming. The product sold from the farm was wool, sheep, and cows.
Dad's store was about the only one in the area. later on the W. Va. Pulp & Paper Co had a store for their employees at Slatyfork. He bought furs, chickens and wool from farmers and shipped to Baltimore etc. He would buy up turkeys from farmers, pack them in barrels and haul them to Marlinton in wagons and put on a train to go to Baltimore where food brokers sold them. Usually he made out ok. That's a long way for turkeys to go unrefrigerated ! One batch he sent, maybe his last, the broker sent him a small check saying he peddled the turkeys all over town trying to sell them. He sold a few, but most of them stunk so bad no body would buy them ! ha.
Farmers would kill pheasants (grouse) and he would pack them in small barrels and sent to Baltimore. Another thing he bought all his life was gensang.
Dad was, I believe, the first to have a telephone. He was also the first around there to have a car, after telephones had been in. See phone number
One time some one up at the head of Elk rang a distress signal and everyone picked up their phones to see what it was about. Someone announced that a horse and buggy had run off and was headed down toward Slatyfork. People all along the road went out th the road to stop the horse and buggy only to find that it was one of those new fangled horseless carriages. Joke!
When a few cars got in the area, Dad ordered gasoline in barrels. They were hauled from Marlinton, and a hand pump was placed down in the hole after the cap was unscrewed. He later had, I believe a small tank put in with a hand pump to pump it into a car. I don't remember how the amount was measured.
Dad got a Studebaker sometime about 1918 (?) Maybe before that? In the early 1920's he or Ivan broke the axle housing on the rear end un near Ella Gibsons in a mud hole. Ivan made a wooden sled and took a team of horses up there, fit the sled under that one side, and pulled the car back home. He ordered a new housing. It cost what dad thought was too much --perhaps $150 when the car may have only cost $800--??
When he bought the car, he sent Ivan to Marlinton for I think a couple days to learn how start, run, and do minor repairs to the Studebaker. In the winter time, the car was jacked up off the tires.

About 1928 (?) the new highway came through, bypassing the store location on the old road. So Dad had a man KING in Marlinton to build a new store building where it is still in existance. Four new hand operated gasoline pumps with 10 galleng glass tanks at the top were installed. Dad had Standard Oil at t wo pumps, and Ivan had two pumps of Amico. It was big move moving furniture etc over to the new place by wagon.
Dad borrowed money from the Farmers & Merchants Bank to build the store. He also borrowed about $300 from his friend Sam Gibson. It was a struggle during the depression to not go broke, but finally after keeping some of us in school and college, he finished up the debt with some sale of timber. Ivan sold auto supplies in one corner of the store.
The store had 32 volt lights, run from a Delco generator. The house already had 32 volt electricity. Then about 1936 or 1938 (?) WestPenn came through with 110 volts.
Tourists began coming through so gasoline sales was reasonably good. Dad decided some "Tourists Camps" should be built, so old Camp 18 that the W. Va. Pulp & Paper Co left when they were finished, was torn down and used to make the camps. They perhaps more than paid their way. Then it seemed better to rent them out to people working for the company. Henry Gibson lived in one. Oscar Kerr in another. Others were...

The only one in exixtance now is the one Henry Shaver lived in, and his wife Lorraine still lives there.

(179)

(Page 178)

Slatyfork Sharps' Records

From the William Sharp's Bible Record.
Furnished by Ramona Shipley, Parkersburg, W. Va.

Copied from record pages between the New and Old Testoments. Xerox copies made.--copied from small Bible given to Rachael Dilley by her Father Martin Dilley on her Wedding Day.

Martin Dilley born Dec 27, 1779. Died 12-26-1851, age 71, 11 mo, 29 da; 26

Rachael Dilley born October 1815

William Sharp and Rachael Dilley married Sept 20 1838
(another date also entered at another place, but the ink is smeared and the year looks like 1832, which must be incorrect as the children's births started a ~~xxx~~ year after 1838).

William Sharp's children:

1. Martin B. (Bernard?) Sharp born June 14, 1839
2. Jacob Henry (Henry) Sharp born Aug 17, 1840
3. Silas Sharp born March 2, 1842
4. William Luther Sharp born Dec 17, 1843
   (The family knew him as Luther in his youth--perhaps to distinguish between him and his father, William. So he was the 4th William Sharp in line.) William IV.
5. Hugh Calvin Sharp born ~~xxx-1850~~ 7-10-1846
6. Mary Eleanor Sharp born Feb 11, 1849
   (She died with diptheria during the Civil War--or before the war. Family tradition is she was about 12 years old. She was burried to the left of the road on the rise just below the Sharp's Slatyfork store)
7. Harmon B. Sharp born 10-2-1850
   (He moved to near Elkins, died there and burried near there.)
   (Died with canger --of throat (?))

Luther Sharp above: Family tradition has been that Luther was about age 16 when he was shot. Date of birth and the dates of the first year or two of the Civil War indicate that he may have been perhaps about age 17.

see page 179 →

Dave Sharp
(7-14-82)

PAGES COPIED FROM SMALL BIBLE GIVEN TO RACHEL DILLEY BY HER FATHER, MARTIN DILLEY, ON HER WEDDING DAY.

Was miriade the 1 20 of Septemin
ber
1838

2 Evern and was burnd June the
the 14 the 1 1844

I acet was born
the 17 of August 1844

4th

5th.

Silvis Sharp was born the 2 day of March 1848

Mary Ann Sharp was born the 17
of August 1850

Clifton Dilley
was born the 27th day of 1775.
Rachel Dilley died
in the 74th day of
April A.D. 1851.
Aged 76 years 11 months 24 days

Copied from Page Eleven Old Testament

FRONT PAGE

Rachel Dilley
was born october
the yr 1815

1st Back Flyleaf

Wm Sharp &
Rachel was miriade the 20 of Septe
1837

Martin B Sharp
was born the 14 of June
1839

Jacob Henry
was born the 17 of augus t
1840

2ND

Silas was born the 2 of march 1842

Wm Luther
was born the 17 of desember
1843

Hugh Calvin
was born the 10 of July
1846

3rd

Mary Eleanor
was born the 11 of febuary
1849

Harmon Bolton
was born the
2 of october
1850.

Remember that this is the compass to guide your little barque
to the port of eternal Life

From Bible of William C. Morgan

From Bible of William C. Morgan 180

FAMILY RECORD.

BIRTHS.

Samuel C. Morgan was born July 8th 1847.
Edith H. Morgan was born Dec. 20th 1855.
Laura J. Morgan was born March 31st 1874.
Williams C. Morgan was born March 15th 1876.
Sarah V. Morgan was born Feb. 15 1878.
Edgar R. Morgan was born April 18th 1882.
Lena Florence Morgan
was born Dec. 17th 1896

BIRTHS.

Miriam Edith Morgan
was born august the 13th 1895

Georgia Virginia Morgan
was born Sept 2 1900

Laura Rachel Morgan
was born Feb 14th 1903

Samuel Aaron Morgan
was Born April 23d 1905

Jemima Rose Morgan
Was Born Jan the 12 1908

Jan. 12, 1908

FAMILY RECORD.

MARRIAGES.

Samuel C. Morgan and Edith H. Ramsey was married Feb. 21 18[illegible]

Laura G. Morgan + Luther L. Stark was Married February 16th 1922

William C. Morgan and Jemima A. Hill was Married Nov 4th 1897

18-A

STUDIOS, VA. BORDER

181 Page 1 181

REEL #1 June 1, 1949 Tapes of L.D.Sharp
Old Mill , Civil War storeies, etc. (If done over on Ampex, may be clearer)

Dad: ....Sheep dip killed 5 sheep. Dave, I'll give you a jar of syrup to take back with you--and a sugar cake. ...Im sending 6 to Pauls. Thayer gave to sweetheart and Barbara treated her teacher. ...152 quarts of syrup....

....

(Civil war through Slatyfork) ...they'd go through and rob neighbors. My father was in prison 23 months and 24 days. They starved them to deatth and haulded them out of the prison by the wagon loads. Going to Fla I stopped in Salisbury , N. C. and there was an old grey headed man. I told him my father was a prisoner there. He said "they all died, either starved or poisoned. Father said the meat was covered with worms. They made brothe. He shut his eyes and swalloed it.. The dead were burried in trenches. A dog followed a captain through the prisone. The men threw a blanket over it and killed it and ate , some ate rats. The skinned a cat. Father couldn't eat the cat. My grandfather (William) got him exchanged for rebels. He had exchange papers and started home. At a small geathering of southerners, the said "where are you going"? He said "none of your business." They said: If we gain the war we won't let you live with us" Si said: I'll give you to understand I won't live with you, They started after himn and he ran. He was too weak to run. They didn't follow him further. He walked all the way home to Slatyfork. If old man Bill Hannah had done one thing. Two men left over them in charge of the two. They got off their horses to a call of nature. "My father reached over and took one of the man's guns and pointed to Bill Hannah to take the other man's gun. He couldn't get him to take the gun. They never thought of killing those fellows (rebels) but we could have killed them and had nothing to worry about--he said. They could have gotten away. (Dad told us one time, as I recall, that Bill had a very small wrist and could get the hand cuff off his wrist that held the two together. Bill showed Silas once that he could take it off. And that Silas wanted Bill to take the hand cuff off so they could grab the guns to threaten so they could get away. Dad may have been mistaken for a moment about them putting their hands on the guns---???? -Dave)
Jake Simmons killed Luther. The Confederate army went through past the house. Jake was behind and shot Luther going up the hill. That's the same time they captured my father. My grandmother said "look there's a regement of soldiers and he ran down and jumped over a fence and sat down in a goos nest covered with boards. About a 100 of them shot at John Gibson (Uncle Sam's father) and this fellow who had a muzzle loading gun shot at John. and he set his gun down almost between my father's lets, to load it. He waited, till he poured the poweder in and went to getthe bulled in and he said he knocked the man and gun over and jumped back over the fence and ran back into the same old Jake Simmons that killed his brother, Luther age 16. Jake put a gun on him . He looked for a rock to throw at Jake but couldn't find one. The men emptied their guns at John Gibson. Two thraw their guns down and ran to the top of graveyard hill and was about to catch John, a powerful man--Sam Gibson's father. He had a pepper box pistol that I reckon wouldn't kill you. and they ran back down the hill and he got away, ha, ha. He pulled the pistol out and said "dangester, I'll kill you".
There was twice he (John) almost got captured. He went home and later on, a bunch of rebel soldiers went in there to John Gibson's place and his wife said to him "look out there the rebel soldiers are coming down here to the house" He broke to run and ran over the hill and the soldiers fired at him and missed again and one rebel laid his gun across a post and got a rest and would have killed him but his wife took a bootjack and knocked him crazy, and he got away. Later on during the war he took pneumonia and died. With all the getting by in the war, pneumonia got him after all.

like a dog running a deer

Civil war stories, Old Mill etc.

(Story about the two soldiers killed in ambush up on the old road:) Dad: They brought the soldier (that was still living) in and he died at the house (the same log house still standing) There are two of them burried up at the top of the hill at the school house. Just dug a hole. They were riding along the road and the rebels (I think Dad's memory got it mixed--they were Yankees that shot them) waylaid them and shot two off horses. They were one or two that got away. Maybe one of them was Walt Allen. (Walt Allen was a Yankee from over about Randolph county, I think--Dave) Uncle Hugh (a young man) thought so much about one of the men that was shot and lived a while. If they had had doctors like today, he may have been saved. (Another account of this story is elsewhere in this history of the Sharps--Hugh and his father William was cutting wood and heard the shots and a southerner on a horse running told them to go look after the men shot. They took a sled up and got them. They put the dead one in the corncrib and took the other in by the fire.)

I don't know where the graves were, but one time I was plowing there in the school house lot and a horse's foot fell down through the grave. I hated it awful bad.

Dad: Henry Sharp, an uncle, joined the rebel army, or be taken prisoner. So he joined the rebel army. One joined the yankees and one the rebels. Dave: Was the Henry Sharp meadow named after him? Dad: No, that was another Henry Sharp. Henry (uncle) was killed) A picket shot him (at Bob Gison place) They were suspecious that he was a yankee, it was thought. But he was in the rebel army and was on picket duty and a fellow shot him and let on like they shot him by mistake. The other one wasin the Yankee army and was killed. I lost three uncles and the only girl 12 years old of diptheria and she is burried down there on the left side of the road --about top of the hill Uncle Hugh knew where it was. I said there ought to be a monument. He said: "it's been so long ago it isn't necessary" It's there inside the fence near the road (near the sheep barn.) That's what the war cost my family. The war spread diptheria. One of her boys, Henry Sharp when he was killed had an apple in his pocket and she planted the 7 seeds of the apple (grandmother Sharp) out here (near the beehouse) and only three oft of the 7 threw. She gave Uncle Harmon Sharp one and it was planted down there at the McCjtchin Place and gave Silas one and it was right below the old house over there (old home place) and Uncle Hughs was out here in this garden, and they all had the same kind of fall apple. --a good cooking apple. But she thought that represented that when the war was over she'd only have 3 children left. Four of them died. We cut the one down over the hill because it was where we wanted to build the warerrom, I think. It was 40 years old, I reckon. The one here an Uncle Hugh's was near the warerrom.

Tramp Dad: I saw that tramp going by today at the schoolhouse. He was swinging his arm as hard as he could swing it, and the other arm was like a dead arm. I hadn't seen him for 10 years. --a little short fellow. (Dave: We'd seen him go by about every year for years--walking fast.)

Uncle Hugh's story about a greased Indian:

Dad: a Joe Lagger or something like that wanted to go back in the woods to where he'd hear no sound of a gun but his own, and ran on to these two Indians. I can't tell the story as it was. The Indians gave a squall and made for him and he may have shot and missed and they were on him and he threw one on the ground and was getting his knife out to kill the Indian and the other Indian got his knife out of a scabbard. He had to kill him to same himself and the other Indian almost got advanta e of him by getting his knife out of the scabbard. I forgot the details but I think the other Indian got away. It was one of the most stirring stories you about ever heard to hear Uncle Hugh tell it.

Uncle Hugh's pet deer: Dad: Uncle Hugh had a pet deer. Aunt Ella and I. It'd fight or run us everytime we came here to visit. We were going home across the hill and looked coming off the hill coming as hard as it could right after us, like a dog running a deer. We [illegible] could right after us, like a dog running a deer. We ran to the woods and got up on a leaning tree up higher than the deer could reach. A deer strikes with both front feet just like a man and cut you all to pieces with it's toes. We had hollered for Martha Hannah whox lived here then and she ran up there and got the deer by the bell collar and held her till we got over home (Dave: seems Dad said her name was Nell?) That doe knocked Nora Sharp down. Uncle Harmon's girl and would have beat her to death if didn't.....(not clear) (Dave: I think Nora married George L. Hannah--and she is burried in the Sharp cemetery)

Si talking about fishing..... up slatyfork creek.
Dave: Dad, isn't that where you built a dam and ran water around the hole?
Dad: yes, we got 53 fish out of it. Water was getting low, cavity in a rock holding about a barrel of two wof water, and ran a small stream--a inch pipe size. I stood there and studded it a good little while how to get those fish. A big lynn tree standing on the bank. I decided to go home and get my father to come and help pipe the water over the hole. We cut that tree down and stripped the bark off and the bark piped the water over past the hole of water, a sdistanceof about 20 feet and we dipped the water out and got 53 fish to eat. No restrictions on fishing then.

Deer hunting --- Deer salt licks

Dad: farmers killed deer at suck licks. Natural sulphur run out on certain places. Deer tear up the earth to get it. Then farmers made salt licks. Drive a stake in the ground and poor the hole full of salt. They couldn't get it all without digging down for it. It was either mornings or evenings that they came on to suck the licks. Dave: did you kill any at a salt lick? Dad: Yes, I did, on Gauley. One time over there a wild cat was at the lick. I sighted at it so long I was sighting on just the front sight. I was about to leave that day. The Englishman.... ...I thought I just sit there (Dave: He told the s tore another time:--he shot at the wildcat and it didn't know where Dad was and jumped into the treetop where dad was and scarxed Dad almost to death--just a boy). ....Saw the deer coming. ... I just broke it's back. I came a knat's heal of missing that deer. Lots of deer then. About like killing ground hogs now.

Bill Curtain War in Italy (not clear at all)... One thing, the let the Americans go in there, you see, read about the lost patalion. Carl Barnes was commander of that unit. Those rangers..... Crossed the highway and got in the heart of Rome.

Dave: The old Mill house needs a piece of roofing on it.
Dad: Well, Ive been trying to sell it. It's going to fall down. I offered to sell for $50 . When I sold it, xx the man came with a truck to get it and those old Kelley's (they lived in the mill house across the creek) took the box that goes around xhx to hold the meal in. It'd cost $25 to make it and they took it and burned it. They once rolled it out in the yard and Henry Shaver and I liked to not get it back in. They took it and burned it for firewood. I went there to sell it and there wasn't a thing in the world to hold the meal in so he wouldn't take it. . . . Brice Griffin ground meal for a half a day. Took half a day to grind a grist. Sam Jackson said he could eat it as fast as it comesout of the mill. Someone asked how long he could do that. He answered: " I could do it till I starved to death" ; ha, ha.

Might be clearer if redone on the Ampex reel to reel tape machine.

Stories by L.D.Sharp taped by Dave 6-1-49 Reel #2 Page 1

Voices of Dad, Otis Gibson, Si, Dave Ralph

184

Dad: something about the bee association (
Si: (to Ralph)(hunting) Did you go clear to teh Bob Gibson Place (all looking at an aerial view map) --are those skid roads?
SI: This is Slatyfork and he was supposed to go up this buck hollow that runs up to Joe Gibson place. He was supposed to go up here and come around thru here, thru a bunch of pines yonder on the point. Well eh got up there and cut over and looked down to Sam Hannah's from Bob Gibson's meadow. Then you came back from Bob Gibson's meadow thru there, huh?
Ralph: yes. Dad: Right here's where I was scared about out of my boots. I thought he had heart trouble. I couldn't holler him up and couldn't shoot him up and couldn't hear a word from him in the world . I worried and prayed and here he came up alive. Dave: You (dad) and Donald and I got lost up there coon hunting one night. Dad: Yes, we came down the roughest old hollow there ever was.--back of Page Hannahs' line. The roughest place you ever saw after night wasn't it.' We didn't know where we were and lost part of the gun. Came down to Page's apple orcard. Si later made a part for the gun--forestock. And John Woosley lost it again. He went down there watching for stealing corn where shucking corn (lower meadow). [redacted] was. When he started filling up a sack of corn, ye yelled to surrender and ran out and broke a rail at the fence and ran down over the bank and laid down., and Woosley lost part of the gun and he had to come back (home) because he was afraid he had something to shoot him with, ha. Woosley lost part of the 410 gun and couldn't shoot. Later on I told her about it. --caught him down there stealing corn. He smashed the fence flat. I said there was another fellow with him--old man [redacted]....his hogs. They worked on the track together. She didn't say a word. She knew it was true, We'd seen where he'd taken out loads of it before.
Dave: Didn't your dad catch someone stealing hay? Dad: No, it was Uncle Henry Hannah caught Hannah stealing Hay(on barn on Buzzard mt.) (made him pitch the hay back in the barn--Henry slept there to catch him)
Dad: Grandfather Sharp caught a man right out there in the corncrib. He set a fox trap through where they take corn out of the crib. He came to get corn and got caught. He went to the barn a cople times. He wouldn't holler at Grandfather. Finally he hollered: "Mr. Sharp, come out here. I tell you if you'll let me out of here, I'll never steal another thing as long as I live. Grand father promised him he wouldn't tell on him.
Dave: did he know who it was? Dad, oh yes, one of his neighbors, but he oulsn't tell us who it was. He promised he wouldn't tell. He let him out of the trap. I bet he had sore fingers, ha. Grand father was a man of his word. Dave: Do you remember him? Oh, yes, I was nearly grown when both of my granfathers died. Grandfather Hannah and grandfather Sharp and my grandmothers. Did you see yours? Dave: only grandmother Irvin.
Dad: Not preacher Morgan? Dave: no. Dad: Boy's I'd give $5 to (have you hear him preach?) He was one great preacher. He was the best preacher that ever preached on this charge and they sent him back here by the Dist. Supt. to the quarterly meeting one time when he was on the Lobelia circuit to preach and I never did forget his text. It was at Mary's Chapel. His text was the "Great Store House of God" He said the time would come as the human race needed the wealth, there was untold wealth in these hills and in the lands, and as the generations of the earth needed it it'd be unfolded (End of 1st side of cassette)
Ralph and Dad talking: deer hunting. Si: In Montana, a man killed a mule and brought it in to the checking station !! ha, ha. Dave: what did your father have to tell time? Dad: He had an 8-day clock. I don't know who got it. Maybe Ella or Malinda got it. It struck on every hour of the day. I think I took another clock over to repair at Wooddells and it was never fixed. He died and they closed th store. It may have been sold.
Either the original reel tape is not clear , or perhaps it would be clearer on the last Ampex player--to transfer to cassettes.

Tape #10 Sharp's Stories taped 8-21-49 by Dave Sharp 185

(LD, Ada, Ivan, Si, Dave, Sylvia, Will Curtain & Evan), Ralph)

Starts with Dad and Ivan singing songs. Dad: we can't all sing with one book. I've got the tuning fork there. I've got the tuning fork. "Do, me, do" I'm trying to get the sound. I can't see anything. Ivan: Wait, I've got something on my glasses. I don't what part are you going to sing? Dad: I'll sing tenor. Ivan: I don't know if I can sing soprano, or not. Dad: well, do you want me to sing soprano? Ivan: I usually sing base. Dad: here, somebody clean my glasses. Si: (talking about the tape recorder) said: everyone brags about their singing. Now theyLll know if they are telling the truth, ha.ha. Ivan: (wire recorder?) wire plays 15 minutes. (Ivan had a wire recorder) Dave: let's have some powerful singing. Dad and Ivan: me, so, do, me, do, me. (no pianot) "There's a glory in my sould, Then Jesus gets control. He lives with in my heart. Oh happy song ..... Si (joking) "... ....tape for identification. Have you used Mother Hubbard's little leg goos, ha. (pretending an ad after the song) Dave: You just heard LD, Ivan and Ralph Sharp. (Then with piano): several singing a song....."redeemed..... Dad: the title of this song is "Beautiful Home Somewhere". Looking at Pictures: Dave: look at the bees. Dad: those are Ivan's. Sylvia: Dave hived those bees.

Dave: Le's laugh a little bit, Ada.(Ada and Genevieve laughing.) Dave: Ada, who's that in the midddle? Do you know? Ada: ha, ha, yes. (About Ivan--discussion): Dave: ... Mary Roberts? SI; no, it was Genevieve at Greenbank. Si: Ivan And I ..... we got up there to that old ... He (Ivan) said if you'll get out close to the gate, well..... see THEM GIRLS. If you don't we won't, ha, ha. I wouldn't get out to open the gate and he turned around and came back home, ha, ha.

Evan: dann you! Genevieve: Evan I beg your pardon.... your saying. Dave: say nice words, Evan, ha (all laughed) Dave: I never saw that broken leg (Evan's) Genevieve: I had to keep him in bed for 3 weeks. He couldn't even turn over. At 3 o'clock in the morning he'd get awake and I'd have to read him a story.

Dave: Ada, I understand you used to speak over a radio WPBI in Baltimore. Tell us what it was about. Was it for a beer co.? Ada: No, no. ha, ha. Ada: I wason for 15 minutes. It wasdramatic sketches. different things each week and on for 8 weeks. Some interesting things did happen. The announcer said "I don't think I can go on the .... air. I didn't know what to do. There was no one else to take over. So I was trying to go on with the program and think up what to say in case he did colapse there, ha. But he went on through with it. Dave: You may have been an announcer if he'd colapsed. Did you have an audience? Ada: just a small one. In those days they sat in another room at that time.--the control room. Dave: what were the stories about: Ada: or, different things, Let me see. One I gave about Pappa and the boy. I don't know if I'll remember it. Perhaps Evan would like that. ada

Ada: "But it's not so agreeable about 2 o'clock in the morning when you're dead for sleep and you wouldn't give anything to hear pres. Truman speak. Well, this little boy woke up about 2 and said "Hey, Daddy. What? Did. .....What do you want? Nothing. Then go to sleep. I ain't sleeph Daddy. Well, I am young man. I'm not abit. Daddy if you was rich what would you buy me? I don't know. go to sleep. Wouldn't you buy me nothing? I suppose so. Then what would you buy me? Maybe a steam engine. would the wheels go round and round? Yes, yes, go to sleep. Daddy, if I was rich I'd buy sou something. Would you? I'd buy you some choc. drops and ice cream. No one wants to hear it this time in the morning. Go to sleep. Daddy, daddy, Well? what do you want now? Let me think-- I want a drink of water. No you don't. Yes I do, daddy. (thinking.. there'll be no peace until the boy gets a drink you get water) I don't want to hear another word from you tonight, young man. I can spell dog, daddy. No one wants to hear you spell it now. Yes, please.

SHARP 3

Sharp's Stories , taped 8-21-49 by Dave Sharp

C-A-T--dog. Is that right daddy. No it isn't, but nobody cares. Then it's D-O-G ? Yes, yes, now go to sleep. Then I'll be a good little boy, won't I? Yes, you'll be the best boy on earth. Good nite, daddy. Good night. -------Daddy, daddy -----don't you wish you had 2, 3 5 or 300 little boys??

Ada: I haven't done that one for years and years. (relatives laugh).

Si: I'm going to bed. You'd better too. .....

Si: (pretending to be a political candidate) "on this auspicious occassion, it is very gratifying to see your ignorant faces. (Si changing his voice, ha)I'll give you a dollar a vote for your vote" Dad: that's what they were trying to do. Dave: what are your planning to do this week: Ivan; well, I plan on making a little hay, taking off some honey, kill a few ground squirrels, whistle pigs and kill a little time. And visit a little with my relatives and friends, and then figuring on going back to work. Save a little of my vacation for deer season. I do like to hunt deer. I haven't had very much success as far asbringing in some game. A lot of exercise and enjoyment--just running through the woods toting a gun. Dave: what you doing ther e, Dad? Sleeping? Dad: finishing up a good nap. I didn't go to sleep last night till half past 1 o'clock, waiting for you to come in and you didn't get in. But made up for it this evening. Dave: Did you know we were coming in yesterday or today? Dad: I heard you were coming in to Ivan's last night. Said you phoned through and said where the key was at (to get in the house at Nitro.)..... I'd a ..... Dave: I told him to leave it under a cup on the back porch and he didn't like that idea much. Ivan: we were on a party line and I didn't want all the neighbors know where I was hiding the key. So I told him I'd leave it with his old girl friend across the street, Hattie Howell. (She went to Wesleyan same time as Dave) Dad: did you find anything to eat? Dave: they just about ate it about all up. wasn't much left there. (kidding) We went to the cellar and opened up peaches and pears and plums and apples (kidding) and we really had a feast. This is Aug. 21, 1949. ....(all eating at table). ..... Ada: did you have a lot of raspberries this year? Dad: a few. Had 40 gallons one year.....

(End of first side of cassette)

(Eating at table. all talking, not clear .....)

Genevieve: One of our cousins up home (Arborvale) Ed Arbogast's boy, came along in a car and we were out there making hay. Stella said "Ed you don't have any children yet?" He said "Well, we're still trying" ha, Ada: If at first you don't succeed, try, try again. Dad: Is that thing recording everything we say? Dad: do you want any berries? If you do go in there and help yourself. I'm going to shave. I've got to go to that funeral..... Dave: did you see Melinda out there a while ago? Ada: yes, yesterday, not t today. Dave: she can't hear well... (flame swallower) Dad: ..... gas in his mouth. Did you see that Ralph? He set that on fire and it went down his throat, then asit came out..... Si: alcohol alcohol flame.....and when they stick that in their mouth they generally let out a mouth of air to keep the heat going away, you see. Dad: As it came out his throat he lit a cigarette. (Dave (started to put a lighted match in hismouth) Dad: Oh, don't do that. Dave: I saw Bill Viering (at Wesleyan) chew up a razor blade and supposedly swallow it, but probably put in a side cheek.

Si: ..... he looked like he was drunk, this fellow. He was asked if he'd give him a push to get the car started. He said, yes he'd push him. She backed off about 20 feet and came a sailing and smashed into the back of that thing and smashed the bumpers right off and flattened the fenders, and nearly broke that fellows neck. ha, ha, ha.

 187

Si: (talking about a boy who lit seat of his pants and a gas flame shot out and breaches on fire--use wool pants instead of cotton. Ha,ha.
Si: talking about danger, that's dangerous !
Si: I wonder who reported the deer lick, salt lick back of the water fountain? (The game warden said there was one reported there. He was up there at 2 o'clock watching for them. Dad: Now if one comes there, they'll kill it. Si found the head of one where they dressed one up and left the hdad down in the hollow. A nice buck.
Will Curtain: Wasn't it old man Sam Gibson..... he could tell you right smart about deer. He was sick in bed and we went up there one time. Ivan: (or Si?): Yes, I used to like to go up there and listen to the bear stories. He'd sit there and smoke his pipe and tell the stories.
Indian Fight: (maybe later get a better or clearer version from the original reel tape instead of this cassette.) Dad: The Indian, had his hide so greased he couldn't hold him. Uncle Hugh would tell that..... Si, how was it? ..... He shot at the indian and he had a muzzle loader and before he could get another shot, the,indian,-s-there ware two of them ... (one?) indian going away. and he said he got him down and his hide was so slick with grease he oulcn't hold him and he said he (indian?) was reaching down to get a knife out of his scabbard, the indian was.... I can't tell you all the story but he finally killed the indian. The one he shot first was..... he noticed him just as he got through with the other one, he propped himself up and he was ready to shoot him(white man)..(/) Uncle Hugh used to tell that. It was interesting to hear him. It'd take him about ½ hour to tell that story about Joe Logst (or Louset?)
Dave: wasn't it uncle Hugh as a boy that was chased into a log by a bear?
Dad: That was Uncle Harmon. a long time ago, no, it was Uncle Hugh, by the way. Uncle Harmon told him a doe on the mountain had some young fawns in a brush thicket. That he heard them in there. He told Uncle Hugh to go up there and he could catch them. He'd been told that if you go in screaming and yelling and squalling that a fawn will lay right down and you can run right in and pick them up. And he dreamed he had a cane, a complete cane, with a knot on the end turned you know. The night before he dreamed something about being in a fight with a bear. So he went up the hill here. He saw a cane, and cut it, just carried out just like in his dream. So he went up to where uncle Harmon said he saw that doe that had the fawns in there. He got up there in brush , you know and he went jumping over top the brush and hollering and when he got in there, there was an old she bear that reared right up in his face , that had cubs in there. He went backwards and got out and started running. He ran down on the sugar flat, where there was at a big hollow log there and he ran in that log. Well that would be the place the bear would want him wouldn't it! ha, ha. I... would a climbed a tree. He was scared to death and didn't know what he was doing ! .... Uncle Harmon told Uncle Hughe that he heard the doe in the thick brush. Si, you've heard him (Hugh) tell about it. Si: yes, he told me "I saw if there was any running to do.....that Harmon, he knew that was a bear in there, ha, ha. ..... End of tape.

SHARP 3

Stories by L.D.Sharp, etc. taped 8-22-49 by Dave (Reel #11) Page 1
(age 76)

188

Ada, Ivan,

Stories: Otha, deer hunting, school house, bear,

Dad: Bowd (Boude) Hannah went out one evening to hunt the cows and he had his dog with him and he went back upon the mt. on Gauley. The dog came up on an old she bear and cubs. (Dave: was it before you were born? Dad: No. I was going to school, a chunk of a boy. The dog took for the vear and the bear took after the dog to run it from the cubs. When he saw the bear and dog coming he climbed up a pine tree. The dog r an to the tree for protection and the bear came to the tree and saw him up there. The bear went right up the tree after him and the dog ran away. It was a small pine tree. He shook the tree, it was tall and slim. He shook and hollered and they heard him all over Elk. Old man Billie Hannah, a mile away, heard him hollering. He said he knew Bowd was in distress. He got hisgun and hit for there as soon as he could. That bear, gave some knaws and drove his teet into the tree. They said he was scared nearly to death. And Billie Hannah got within about 100 yards, I expect before that old she bear left that tree. The dog ran off. The bear went after her cubs. He shook her off the tree. A bear can climbs a large tree, but it's hard to climb a small one. SI: was he the fellow that ran into a wild cat? Dad: yes, he was going before daylingt one morning up on the mountain after cows. He had his dog, maybe the same dog, with him, The dog was in front of him and this wild cat went up on a tree to jump on him and the dog happened to be in front of him and he jumped right off the tree on the dog. He said he had a cane with him It was a big dog and into it they went. He and the dog killed the wildcat. He said if he hadn't had the dog it would have killed him. Dave: Didn't you catch a wildcat in a trap? Dad: yes, up at the forks of Slatyfork creek, near Buck hollow. I saw a wildcat in my trap. The biggest one I ever caught or bought. I threw him across my shoulder and his front feet almost touched the ground. I'd gone up close to him and got a cane (stick) about as large as my arm. It was a dry stick. I got up to kill him the first licke. I was going to hit him with all my might and I hauled away with all that I had and he growled at me. When I gave him the lick, the stick broke off right above my hand and the stick went the other way. The stick was rotten inside. Boy's I went and got me a stick that I knew wouldn't break. I tried it. I went up again. He laid on the ground and growled gr-r-r-r. Everytime I hit him --about four times before I killed him. That wildcat had jumped in every direction trying to get out. The stake had gone down about 12 inches to the flat limestone rock. If he had jumped upward, there wasn't a thing in the world to hold him The hole was 3 inches across the top. But he had jumped and worked the hole big in the swamp. If he had jumped at me that stake would have come out. Ivan, it was in a muck near that swamp just below where you cross that swamp there at that appletree. I'd set the trap for coons.

Will Curtain: one time when we were up there hunting something came down that middle mt. like a streak of lightening. It wasn't any sheep nor deer. Dad: Over on Gauley, a boy there if clothes would have come off, they'd have come off. I was over there watching a deer lick and a deer dug a holee in the ground I expect 2 feet deep, where we had salt. I got down in an old pine tree top. I secured myself down in there hiding myself from the deer. It was hard to get in there and just as hard to get out. I looked across where the salt was, there was a big wildcat. --right at the deer lick. I don't know how it got there--it must have slipped around the other side. Those big ones they call catamounts. I sighted with my gun. An Englishman (there was an English settlement at Linwood to Mingo) was there with me and we wanted a deer so bad. He was watching another deer lick. I sighted and studied if I should shoot it. If I shot it I wouldn't get a deer. Finally I decied it was pretty close to time to leave there and I'll just kill it.

189

The wildcat came there looking for a deer, smelled around an looked. So I got down like this, you know --it wasn't over 20 steps from me. I cracked down on that thing--I remembered afterwards, --I'd looked at those sights so long, that I just looked at the front beed. That catamount didnt know where I was at. He wanted to get away from that shot and right into that pine top where I was and you never saw a boy come so! It scared me todeath! I came oft of there yelling at it. I didn't try shooting again. It wasn't trying to get me. But I didn't know it. Then it took off the other way. Boy I was scared! Si: Was you as scared as the time you shot a cub ear off a log? Dad: That was up on Slatyfork mt. I shot a cub bear off a log. There were 3 of them together. The were comeing down off the mt. I'd never seen a bear in the woods before. I saw what I thought was 3 black hogs, that I thought belonged to a man named Ben Varner. I was sure they were black hogs. Got within about 100 yards. I'd seen pictures of a bear. I'd never been to a zoological garden. They came down to about 50 or 75 yards of me and I saw they were bear. They just dropped down in the water and wallowed like dogs. They were hot because they were running. A man named Woods Dilley was after them back on the mountain. I thought I'll just kill them. I had a single shot Winchester. The jumped up out of that water when they got through wallowing . The old one had her tongue out. A big log ran right along besie a sugar tree and some beeches. I'd heard uncle Harmon Sharp say about bears. You yell "halt" to a bear and you yell "yenk" to a deer, and they'll stop and give you a chance to shoot. So just asthe bear passed this big sugar tree I hollered "halt" and she stopped that quick, and turned her head the other way--the sound echoed the other way. I could have shot her inthe neck. Si could have sot her neck off. But I moved back against a big tree about 2½ feet over.....(partly behind a tree?) I've heard if you shoot them behind the shoulders,in the breast orhead, it wouldn't kill them. But just about 6 inches of it's neck showed and I could have shot her in the neck, I believe. I was afraid I couldn't. There was a tree about 18 inches right behind the shoulders of the cub. I moved the gun back to the cub and shot it off the log. I kept trying to put a cartridge in my gun and dropped two shells. The old one thought I wasbelow there. She jumped off that log right toward me, if I was to drop dead the next minute. Sjumped right square off and trying to get away from me. She jumped as close to me asthat door. I just jerked my gun down like this. I got the shell just started in. Then she jumped 20 feet down over the hill. So as soon as I got the single shot gun loaded, I took off down below to head her off. Si: did you kill the cub? Dad: Yes, I killed it but I didn't get it there. She had run down to the road at Ode Gibson's (a recent man)--just below Ode Gibsons and she turned back to get the cub I'd shot. I could have stood there and shot for 150 yards where I saw them come down if I'd stayed where I was at. She rad now there and came right back up . Thiscub went over to the run where the water was. The blood had sprinkled the snow on both sides. I went on up on top of the high point and there was a laurel patch there. She wen in that laurel. Blood was flowing out on both sides on the snow. I went up in the laurel--she might have eaten me up alive--that cub eing wonded. I crawled thru the knob and I heard them break and run out. It had laid down there. I went down over the hill after them, but couldn't see them. So I decided to go down and get Ben Varner--they lived there where Shaw's lived (in recent years)--that old house. I said "Ben, I wounded abear up here and I want you to come up and we'll kill it. So Ben got his gun and went up there with me. He says you go around there and watch and I'll go up and take it's trail and follow it thru--blood on the snow. ..... I got on one side of the tree as he came up and I jumped out at him and scared him to death ! ha,ha, But he might have shot me. I shoul have had better sense.

SLATYFORK W. VA. SCHOOLS

190 Stories by L.D.Sharp, etc. taped 8-22-49 by Dave (Reel #11) Page 3

He said: let's don't go any further. Henry Sharp (lived on middle Mt.) has a bear dog. You go get that bear dog and we'll come back here in the morning. I said: well, all right. We came down to Ben's and then along the old road home. I told my father I shot a bear. Next morning it snowed about 6 inches that night. He said: "those bear won't stay on Slatyfork mt. They will go to Cheat tonight. Everything is snowed over and we're out of wood. I wouldn't go up and get Henry Sharp's dog for there isn't any use --you can't see anything and you can't get on the trail". My father told me that, which was right if you reason it out. So about two weeks later it set in warm weather and snow went off and Woods Dilley(?) ran across uncle Harmon. He said:" who killed one of those bear over there? I followe an old she and 2 cubs over the mountain and went back the next day and jumped them there on the Johnson Flat. S She had one cub. I followed them tillthey went to Cheat. Some one killed one" Dad: well, it was within 300 yards of where we left them. That was a loss.

Dad: Well, another time over on the other side of Slatyfork mountain I saw where it looked like someone had dragged a log right up over the roughest place across mossrocks. I wondered what had dragged all that moss, making such a road thru the brush. I took my gun down rright thereand went on up about a 100 yards and then up on top of the flat and there was a swamp there. They'd killed a sheep--an old bear was dragging that sheep. There were three others with her, 2 cubs and a yearling. All of them went thru that swamp. Law sakes a live, what a group of bear ! I went on up on top about 100 yards and looked and saw them eating on that sheep. There was a felled tree and she was laying on the other side of the tree. I saw her head on the other side of the tree. They killed the yearling the next day. It wasa 1/3 bigger than the cubs. They'd fight like pigs. If you've ever seen pigs sucking. One would knock the other one out and he'd run around and get another teet. That's the way they fought there and I stood and watched them with my gun this way--cocked for 15 minutesor more. Dave: why didn't you shoot one. Dad: well, I was waiting for the old big one. The wind was going strong across that way toward her. I thought she'd get up directly and I'd kill her first and then kill the whole bunch. All at once she got a whiff of me. They never looked up. If they'd looked and then ran I'd have shot. But the let that sheep go and ran for dear life ! The old big one, she just came up out of there and put her feet up on that log. I had the fairest shot in the world, I reckon. I drew the gun sight in to her neck and I never touched a hair on her, ha. I came home and sent word up to old man Bill Gibson. I told him the bear are killing all your sheep. They went in there the next morning with a bunch of dogs, and told Bob, my brother-in-law to come down here and tell me about it and for him and me to go right on to the top of the mt on this side and they'd go in on the other side of Slatyfork and take the dogs thru. So Bob, may have been disappointed because he couldn't go with them. He thought it'd be all over before we got there and he didn't come at all. So ..... they had gone down on Slatyfork (creek) in that pine patch (head of creek?) and they put the dogs after them and ran the yearling bear up a tree and they killed it. The (dogs) fought the old she clear up the mt. and held her until the men got pretty close to her and she'd break away and then the dogs would catch her. She went right on up to the op of the mt. where Bob and I would have been if he'd come on. They said they'd give him time to get there. So they only got to kill one bear. I've had the most expenerience not to get a bear of almost anybody in the country, ha, Dad: I've lost 3 deer right in succession. I killed one here about 3 years ago. I got it. Dave: you have a picture of it.

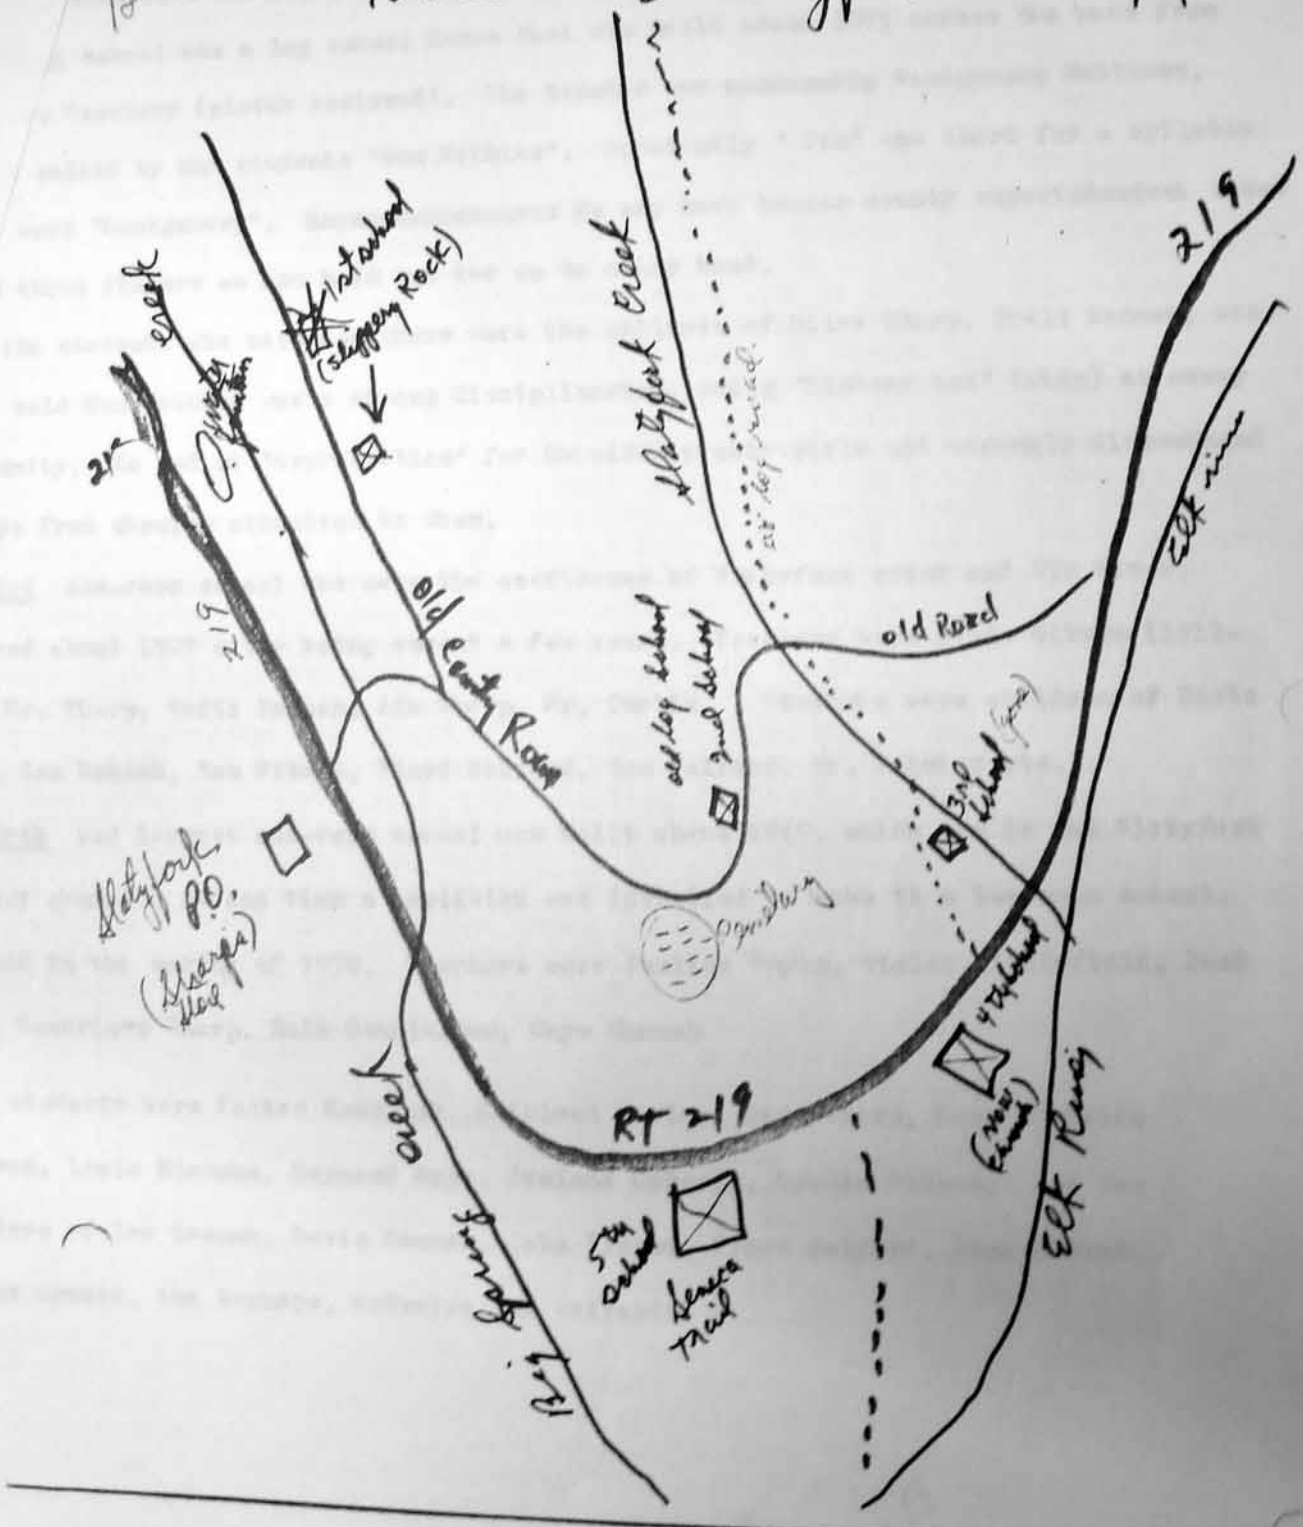
See 20-A

Schools of Slatyfork 143



The first school at Slatyfork that we know of was at "Slippery Rock" on the old county road between the present post office and the water fountain, and near a house called the "yellow house". Silas Sharp, his brothers and others in the community attended there. One day the teacher was whipping him and Silas said "that's enough" ! The teacher said "I'll say when it's enough!", but he didn't whip him any more.

The second school was a log school house that was built about 1875 across the road from the Sharp Cemetery (picture enclosed). The teacher was apparently Montgomery Matthews, but was called by the students "Gum Mathias". Apparently " Gum" was short for a syllable in the word "Montgomery". He may have become county superintendent later He had three fingers on one hand and two on the other hand.

Among the students who attended there were the children of Silas Sharp, Shell Hannah, etc. Luther said Gum Mathias was a strong disciplinarian, using "hickory tea" (whip) at every opportunity. He had an "appreciation" for the older pretty girls and strongly discouraged the boys from showing attention to them.

The third one-room school was near the confluence of Slatyfork creek and Elk River. It burned about 1927 after being vacant a few years. Teachers were Allie Gibson (1911-1912), Mr. Tharp, Sadie Hannah, Ada Sharp, Mr. Curtis. Students were children of Davis Hannah, Sam Hannah, Sam Gibson, Floyd Galford, Sam Galford, Mr. Painter etc..

The fourth and largest one-room school was built about 1919, which now is the Slatyfork Methodist church. At one time a partition was installed to make it a two-room school. It closed in the spring of 1930. Teachers were Pauline Guyer, Violet Littlefield, Dock Hannah, Genevieve Sharp, Ruth Cunningham, Gaye Hannah

Some students were Porter Hambrick, Kathleen Carter, Dave Sharp, Don and Helen Johnson, Leola Simmons, Raymond Mace, Evelene Coberly, Archie Gibson, and the children of Lee Hannah, Davis Hannah, John Victor, Floyd Galford, Page Hannah, George Cromer, the Bonners, McNeelys and Weiferds.

See 20-A

Dad: I've killed one at the top of the mt. at the (red) oak stand (I think at the right hadd corner of middle mt meadow--knob) Shot about a 100 yards. Didn't hink I'd hit it. Killedit dead. It ran around the hill and another fellow got it and took off down the mt. with it. A man came around the hill, they scared the deer up to me. He said "some one killed a deer out there--right out yonder. He shot one shot (my shot) and I came around there and he just grabbed it up and ran down the mt and I followed him a way down yonder and I'm justnow coming back up." Dad: I got up before daylight He came in here (store) and had it checked. He knew he hadn't killed it. There wasn't but one shot fired there. Well, the other year up on the mt I shot one right thru--too far back and it ran about 100 yards and fell. Blood just gushed out as far ast the other side of that box (in room). It got up and ran about 20 feet and fell again and a pile of blood. The next time it fell a fellow named Martin came and picked it up and he went down to the camps (hunters camping down below). He never got it there. I'd hurt my foot and had nothing but artic shoes on so I could hardly go. Henry Shaver came to where I was and let on, hesaid he was sick and wanted to go home, or I'd sent him to see. I'd gone out to wehre I'd shot. I just went there and fell down different times. The ground was a glaze of ice. You couhdn't stand on the earth. I had to hold on to hickory trees. There was one place around there if I'd of slipped i'd gone 30 yards right on to those rocks and maybe killed. I saw the danger of me slipping and I turned to come back to the fire. So that fellow got that deer. That was two of them. Then about 3 years ago I shot from one end of the meadowto the other (middle mt meadow) --the biggest deer. I took a two shots at him before he went to the far end of meadow. He turned around and I must have drawed the gun 6 feet over his back. I hit him plumbs as a dollar right in behind the ribs, and he fell and I saw him ther. I hollered for Lowell Gibson to come. The deer got up anwent over the fence and and around below following the does. He got over in that big hollow and slammed right into the bank There was a hole that big where that big gun hit him. But he was shot too far back. We found the deer later. Henry got the horns and they're out here. That was 3 deer lost.

Ivan: didn't you kill one there before? .....Dad:....I yelled: "I've got him, I've got him". Ivan came running thru the meadow. I shot that deer 50 yards--shot him right in there and went on thru the deer. Never found the bullet. That deer didn't fall. He dropped down abou 12 inches of the ground and ran close to the ground. He ranto the fence and jumped the fence and then tumbled down about 30 yards and died. Ivan and Ralph cam running. Ye yelled " you got him". That was a nice deer, I tell you.

Dave: remember the turkey you shot and couldn't find the bullet hole?

Dad: ha, ha. the turkeys were feeding with their heads down and I shot it plumb in the "back" part, and nevermae a hole in the turkey. It flew across the creek. I went over there and there it was laying. ha, ha.

Dave: told story of seeing a white wild turkey at head of Slatyfork creek. had a 25 Stevens single shot. Thoutht it wasa tame turkey because it was white. Then decided to shoot but had to shoot right handed (not used to it) and missedthe turkey. Dad: I did an awful foolish thing, at that same place. I heard a turkey putting a shine in that hacking. I slipped over to the briar patch that was in patches then. It's grown up now to big timber. An eagle(?) had a big bunch of small ones and was trying to catch them .... and up flew this eagle and he went within 30 or 20 feet of me, right on down flopping his wings. I had a shot gun, and if I didn't let that Eagle get away in order to get a turkey. That was really foolish. I could have shot his eyes out. Well the turkeys flew flew out and I didn't get any then, but I called ..... and I killed 3.

(End of first half of big reel to reel tape)

192

Starts: Si playing some on the piano.
Dad: (Regarding the old log shcool house on the hill): Dad: that's the "high" school I went to (high on hill!) where I got all my education. It fell 2 or 3 years ago. I can tell you how old it is. Take 3 off of 77 (1875) It was built 74 years ago exactly. I was 3 years old when they sent me up there to school. My father took me up there .... to finish it. George Painter and later on lived at Valley Head, built it, old man George and he used to live here on Middle mt in the Henry Sharp house. My father took me up there and I watched..... a little fewllow, you wouldn't think a fellow 3 years old would notice. He was shaving, you know, planeing planks to sela it inside. Planed it by hand. I'd see the shavings fly. I'd go up every day, my father would go, and watch him putting it together,--the old school house, and sealing it inside. I was three and Ella and Melinda would take me up there to the school house and they'd take a sheepskin for me to lay on.(during school). Idd lay there on the sheepskin asleep. At dinner time, mother told the girls she'd watch for me. I'd come home for dinner. I'd go in the mornings. She said she'd see the littl white headed fellow a running down the road.
Ada: it's amazing that you'd remember that. Dad: the reason I remembered the age, was twhat my mother always told me. Ada: now, did they eat their luch up there? Dad: well, Melinda did ..... and I did later on. Mother said i'd say I was coming home to "eat gravy" ha, ha. I was raised on gravy, ha. Dave: are those logs still up there? Dad: some are just as solid as can be. Dave: I wonder if one could build a camp out of them. Dad: those logs could last 200 years....
...that church over yonder (the old log church?) over a 110 years old, the back part of it, you can catch your hand in it.... all of it (rotten) It still stands. It's gonna fall down one of these days and kill a lot of people. It just rotted. It was never weatherboarded. 110 years. Rained, beating on it, just like on a log heap, and it's just as rotte. I said,"why my goodness alives, it's dangerous for us to be in here" But Jack Baxter(?) said "I believe the best thing to do would be to jacke it up and get congrete blocks and put it on., that's what I thought we ought to do." They have song services ther and they can't hm (pay?) the preacher. The people don't pay enough. Only about 4 there that pays. There was 100 people there the other night and they took up a collection and got $15 or $20. Only paid a little bit themselves. Dunbrack's daughter, clerk in Clifton Forge Grocery co, said she came up there and couldn't get in and she went back home. Dave: doesn't it have a little balcony in the back? Dad: seems like there is one upstairs. There were so many people there that I couldn't enjoy it. I couldn't get around.
On Pres. Roosevelt: Dad: He just ruined the country. That's what he was elected on. .... old Roosevelt and Truman. (Genevieve laughed) Roosevelt placed a liquor store on every corner in the USA. It's killed 10,000 people with it's advocating liquor. Dave: (kidding) well it balanced the budget. Dad: He "douced"(?) it ! Yes, he did, with 200 billion dollars in the hole. ..... there was never a man in the USA that was elected that was as ornery as he was. ... because the whole bunch of the are a bunch of drunkars and divorced people. Si: (jokingly) "now, we'll hear from senator Curtain", ha, ha. Mrs. Roosevelt was preparing to get a divorce when he was running for office and some of them told her not to as she wouldn't get in the whitehouse, if it caused him to lose the office, so I'm told (Later confirmed in James Roosevelt's book) Genevieve: don't you know that Mrs. Roosevelt came out here to see Dad ? ! Violet; yes, I heardd that. Si: (pretending to be Dad, who shook her hand) "I want to shake your hand", ha, ha. Mabel: she took Ramona up in her arms. .....Dad: I said "now watch out Ramona, thay might kidnap you. (before he knew who it was) I was scared. Mable: you didn't know who they were. Dad: No. and Jennibgs Randolph,...one of the fellows. There were 4 other senators and reporters along. And he (

(Randolph) said (whispering to Dad) "out there is Mrs. Roosevelt" Theysaid I had my shirt tail hanging out and my hands were (dirty?) and I ran out there among all of them and I said "It gives me great honor to shake the hand of the first lady of the land" ! ha. ha. ha. Dad: the reporters came in the store and asked me what I thought of Pres. Roosevelt (before I knew who was out there) I said "times are hard. Men work a while and then they shut works down and they'd hardly get money enought to live on." They said"well it's better than it was 4 years ago, wasn't it?" I said "no, it's nothing like it was 4 years ago, and it'll never get any better as long as they keep that thing there in the White House ! Judge Sharp said he read a paper out west about Mrs. Roosevelt stopping at a country store and the merchant told the reporters that times were hard and would never bet any better as long as they kept him in the white house ! ha. ha. Dave: we saw a report of it in that Roncevertе paper, They'd taken the clipping out of a Washington newspaper. They said they'd stopped at a Pocahontas Co. country store a and told all about it. We cut it out and had it in the showcase in the store for a long time. Ada: I'd liked to have seen that. Dave: It might be out at the store now. Dad: I don't care, I say just what I think. But it makesme almost mad to hear the name of old Truman and more yet of Old Roosevelt, because he threw this country in a ..... that we'll nver get over, and he fixed ixx.... I heard him say the night before he was elected that the first thing "I do I'll go after prohibition," and that's everything he did carry out. Wehen he got in there he changed everything in the world but the resurection of Christ and the birth of Christ, and he ould have changed that if he could. He changed Thanksgiving. Dave: (joking) What did you think of him asa man? Dad: A man with no principle. He wouldn't tell the truth unless he couldN't find a lie to tell. Is that enought Dave: (pretending to be a reporter) what is your name? Dad: It's L. D. Sharp, and he's a republican! ha. Si: was it necessary for him to add that ! ha, ha. Dave: now we'll have an announcement by our station manager. Si: That doesn't necessarily represent the viewpoints of this station. These are political viewpoints only. and we try to give both sides of al l questions. We will now hear from Senator Curtain and get his viewpoints on him. We ask youu, ladies and gentlement to tune in next week. Now have you bought your grow-pup dog food this week. Now a mixture of this willput an end to your .... It's a wonderful dis. We have atestimoney here of the ones that have eaten it, and here is Mrs. Ada Curtain, ha, ha. Mrs. Curtain has barked all night, ha, ha.. Mrs. Curtain is that true? ha,....and Mr. Will Curtain, said Bow wow, bow wow. Dave: Mrs. Curtain will give us your testimony? Ada (barking) bow, wow. ha, ha, ha.

(starte other side of Cassete (Side 2)

Si playing the piano Dave: Now Mrs. Curtain with one of her poems:

Ada: If I'd known this morning how wearily all the day the thoughts unkind, the trouble behind that was sad when you went away. I (would have?) been more careful darling. nor give your needless pain. But we hurt our wown with look and tone, we might never take back again. We have smiles for the stranger and a kind word for the one time guest.
But xxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxxx but all for our own a bitter tone, though we love our own the best. How many leave the house in the morning and never come home at night? and hearts have broken for harsh words spoken. that love can never set right. (perhaps an oritinal of hers?)

Another: by Ada: this one is a little Canadian Lullaby:

My pretty brown baby with eyes like the sea. When the sun touched the top of the wave. What for you play.... with me.....
You wanta do just as she do? Oh, little brown baby speak up and tell me. An you say. ..... brown eyes.... something to say. but... on your lips will keep moving all day. Oh, little brown baby, the pride of my life. What will you be when you grow up You'll get your wife , work on the farm ... All over the county to roam Idd rather you'd stay where you are my ..... just on the farm ... All over the county to roam I'd rather you'd stay where you are my ..... just a little brown baby to me. To love and to cherish through all the day long. No joy comes so great that I see.

But its true .. done went He push along the edge. He make no ..except to you. It's hard to think that someday we be dead. It seem very strange but its true.
Ada: Now this is my interpetation of a little girl:
You're as ... and as cold as a stone little cat. The done throwed you out and left you there all alone little cat. I'm stroking your fur but you don't never purr, and ..... where little cat. Why is that? Did they posion your stomach inside little cat? Diad they pound you with bricks or beat you with sticks, little cat? Tell me that. Do you hurt very bad, when you die? Why didn't you run away and hide little cat?
There's tears in my eyes, aause I most always cry when a pussy cat dies, little cat. Think of that. And I'm very sorry, besides..... ... burry in the soft groudn, little cat. Why I tucked the green grass all around , little cat. They can't hurt you no more..... . so sore.
So just sleep quiet like a cat and for-get all the dicks.....
Another: Sometimes in the quiet evening, when the shadows creep from the west. I think of the twilight songs you sang, ..I'M the boy the....
.. you loved(best? best?)..... Little boy with the ... of head.. thats long long ago was (thine) I wonder if you sometimes long for that boy, oh little mother of mine. But now he's come to man's estate, grown stalworth in body and is strong. You scarce would believe that he is the lad you hushed with your slumber song. The years have altered the form and the life, The heart is unchanged by time. ..... only thy boy as a goal. Oh, little motherof mine.
Another: They had been married just 3 weeks and on her honeymoon. She was a very energetic young lady and had married a young man noted for his lack of noble qualities. One night while they were on the honeymoon the groom was awakenedby sobs from the bride. "What's wrong, what's the matter"? "Oh, I've just had such a horrible dream" Well dear, adream isn't anything to cry over. What did you dream? Oh, I just can't tell you. Oh, I dreamed I was over to Marlinton, and I saw a sign in a window that said: Bridegrooms for sale, boo-boo. All the lady s were going in and I went in too. Well Dear, what's the matter,, what was it all about? Oh, there such good looking husbands there, that sold for $10,000 a piece. Well did you see any there amonth t ose $10,000 crowd that looked like me? That's the worst of it. You were with the ones that were tied in bundles and sold for 30 cents a bunch. boo booo.
Dave: Turn on your radio next week and hear some more poems by Mrs.
Ada Curtain. Now we'll have our midnight horrow program. Now Genevieve please laugh. Genevieve and Ada started laughing hilariously for two minutes!! (Si playing the piano)
Dad: Story of Otha Hannah dying: Well, he took diptheria and died. About two weeks before that one of the other boys, Joe, a mischeevious boy died of diptheria too. The parents were uneasy about him because he'd never been converted. They thought he might be lost (to hell) Otha was dead maybe an hour and he came too. He said he'd been in heaven. Aunt Martha Buzzard who'd been dead for years. She witnessed all over the county and shouted all over the church. He said: (Otha) I saw Aunt Martha Buzzard. He knew her and a number of people I knew of. I saw a boy that lived up on Elk, that took the Lord's name in vain and he was in hell.
The Savior showed me he was in hell. The Savior asked him "why did you take my name in vain"? He was in the flames of fire, suffering and tormented for taking his name in vain. He was lost. He said it (heaven) was the most beautiful place one could imagine. After a good while he said to his mother (Mrs. David Hannah) I'd like you to fix something to eat. I want to eat with you. She prepared something and told him to come to the table. He went to the table and he sat there and didn't eat

why. She went ahead and ate and asked him why he didn't eat. He said "while you were eating the Savior fed me on light loaf, milk and honey" And he said of a small baby there (Mary, who married Sam Gibson), I can ~~xxxx~~take the baby and put in the fire and it won't burn or harm it. He wanted the baby to show them what he could do, but they wouldn't give it to him. He said I can take this handkerchief and throw it up against the loft and it'll hang there. He threw that handkercheif up against the loft and they said there looked like the differeence of a knife blade between it and the loft, and it stayed there until the next day. Grandmother Hannah (Hester), had a small baby (Mary) and didn't go to the funeral(the next day.) She asked them what time they burried Otha. They said about 2 o'clock. She noticed that handkercheief laying across the back of the chair at 2 o'clock--at the time they put him in the grave, the handkerchief came down.

Otha said, I can show you where heaven is.(this was after he came back to life) He went outside and showed them back in yonder and siad that's where heaven is. It was all lit up (after dark) , the whole heaven. "Now, this is the way Papas coming, down this way. He'd (David) been to a sale (on Elk) The said a light lit up like a flashlight, the way he was coming. After a while he arried home. Otha told him all about h heaven and all he'd sen. He'd never seen Aunt Martha Buzzard. Some people say we'll know peio;le in heaven. He saw her and knew her. He'd never ~~xxxxx~~ met her in his life. She died before he was born. (His father, David said:) : well, son you've come back to stay with me. Otha said, "only for a short time.. I can't stay. It's too beautiful over there in heaven. " I'll tell you what you bought at the sale. He told him of everything he bought. You bought a colt and you were going to give it to Sarah and me.(Dad:"that's my mother"). He said that that is right. So he finally at last said: "I'd like to lay down before the fire. Make me a pallet before the fire." He lay down there and never moved a hand nor foot. They looked later on and he was gone. I got ~~xxx~~ ahead of my story. He said to my mother (Sarah) "can't you see the Savior and Joe? They're just as plain as can be. Here goes Joe and there's the Savior right there in the room. She couldn't see them with her natural eyes. He (David?) was uneasy about Joe, but he was saved. He was a mischievious boy, nothing mean about him, but he'd never confessed. Of course, he believed from his training. (Dad quoting the Bible?): "Ye who believes in me shall not perish" All the family were great Christians, and one was a preacher. My grandfather lived so strict after that that he wouldn't eat anything cooked on Sunday.

Otha

My mother said to me when I was a boy, "don't whittle with your pocket knife on Sunday or you'll lose it." Oh, they were strict. We were taught if you take something the good Lord sees you. They taught us not to lie or steal. And you'll never prosper. Along that line of thought, when I was going to school, there were two boys that stole everything they could get their fingers on--pencils etc. They're old men now, about my age, one is 3 years older and they have hardly clothes enought to bury them. We all had the same chance. Our fathershad farms about equal. My mother said if you steal something you'll lose some other way. Those would steal and they've had a hard time of it all through life. I've worked hard. The good Lord surely has baken care of me.

Lassiters: "one of thme is in Calif. and one was sentenced to thepen on account of not registering. One in Jail wrote me a letter last winter --in calif.

March 24, 1977

19

Mr. Dave Sharp
Sharp's Jewelers
3049 Madison Road
Cincinnati, Ohio

Dear Mr. Sharp:

This is a very belated thank you note for your letter which you had sent to the University of Chicago, last fall. I had left the University nine years ago, and they as well as I were flooded with so much correspondence, that we were unable to catch up with all the letters.

I very much appreciated your sharing the incident of your father with me, and I would naturally very much like to listen to the tape which your father made 20 years ago about this little boy.

Yes, we are convinced that our findings are the truth, and I do wish more people would be aware of it. Do share with me as many details as you have. It would be greatly appeciated. In the meantime, you have my correct address which is listed above.

Again, my apology for this terribly late thank you note.

Cordially,

Elisabeth K. Ross, MD

Elisabeth K. Ross, M.D.

EKR/uz

197

[redacted]

Mr. & Mrs. Dave Sharp
4171 Paxton Woods Drive
Cincinnati, Ohio 45209

[redacted]

197

August 8, 1977

Dr. Elisabeth K. Ross
1825 Sylvan Court
Flossmoor, Illinois 60422

Dear Dr. Ross:

At your request I am sending a taped recording my father, Luther D. Sharp, Slatyfork, W. Va. made about 15 years ago, facts his mother and father told him about his mother's brother who died while his father was 4 miles away at a sale. Dead apparently a few hours.
One side of the tape is about 4 minutes of my father talking. I listened to the larger tape machine (and recorded this cassette from it) and typed very close to his conversation in the tape to make it easier for you to understand the poor quality of my re-recording.
The other side is also about 5 minutes of a cousin, Mrs. Allie Gibson who heard the same story from her mother who was a sister to my father. I had never heard my cousin ever discuss the story before, before my brother Si, got a recording of her recently. You'll hear my brother asking her questions about it in the recording. --basically the same as my father said.

I've heard my father tell the story many times from the time I was a child till his death. Briefly: Othey took diptheria. His father went to a farm sale 4 miles away. Othey died while his father, David Hannah, was at the sale. When his father returned at night, Othey told him what he had bought at the sale, saying "you bought me a poney" among other things. While his father was at the sale, Othey died, came back to life, told his mother about what all he saw in heaven...aunt Martha Buzzard, Christ asking a man why he took his name in vain, saw his brother Joe who had died shortly before of diptheria, etc. Othey said he could take the baby that his mother (Sarah's Mother too) was babysitting for (baby named Mary, I believe, who married later on married Sam Gibson) and put it ing the fireplace and it would not be harmed. He threw a red bandanna handkerchief up to the ceiling and said it would stay there, which it did till 2 o-clock the next day when Othey was burried and it then fell across a chairback.
When Othey's father, David Hannah, came back from the sale, he asked Othey if he came to stay and Othey said no, that he just came back to tell how beautiful it was in heaven.
Mrs. David Hannah had supper ready when he got back from the sale. They all sat down to eat. When through David asked Othey why he didn't eat food on his plate. He told his father that his Savior had fed him light loaf, milk and honey from the breadbox. (light loaf was delicacy then--usually cornbread) The family said the breadbox smelled of honey for a long time after that. The boy asked for a "pallet" (pillow) to be put down by the fireplace so he could lye down. He lay down and soon he quietly passed away. This is my recollection of the story my father told many times.

Use the enclosed typed sheet to help you hear or understand the side of the tape that is weak which is my father's voice cassette-taped from an old tape on a roll
There is a recording on each side of the tape--just short recordings.

If there is anything further I can help you on this, please let me know.

Sincerely,

Dave Sharp

PS You wrote me March 24, 1977 that you'd like to hear the tape of my father, but hunting up thetape and getting one from another branch of the family seemed to take time.

198 Stories of L. D. Sharp, 77 taped Fall 1949 by Dave Sharp Page 1 198 1/2

Starts with "abel reading a letter from Paul about Vonda in operating room. He called back to a neighbor in Borger who said Thayer and Barbara were getting along fine. Four-pint blood transfusion. Got her a ponsetta. Anderson Hospital. He got a wire from Violet--they are going to Ivan's for Xmas. Love Paul.....

Dad: ..... I see a coon on that limb and I told Lowell to try it. Coon Hunting Lowell said he moved a little bit. Next shot he shot him out. Went down to the back of the cellar and put my head up against the cellar, ~~xxxxxxx~~ after hearing dogs barking when I got to the old school house. I decided the dogs were away up the creek. We went to the top of the hill yonder--went down and across the creek and went up there to upper end of that meadow right from that big walnut tree and he treed that coon a ¼ of a mile from where we were at. Best coon dogs I ever saw. I believe better than when I was 12 years old. Well sir, he'd lay in the top of the tree and Lowell said "he'll fall in the creek, what'll we do about it?" I said I don't know. I'll just shoot it lightly and maybe he'll come out. I shot once and missed. I backed up far enought, I thought the shot would sprinkle him, but he didn't move. Next shot and he fell in the creek. Si said: "why didn't the dogs go in and get him when he fell in the creek?" Dad: I don't know why. But the creek's deep, Si. SI: The dogs can swim can't they? Dad: the water's awful rough up there. Pretty near knock the daylights out of a dog. I was on one side of the creek and he hung on until he was plumb dead. And then he let all hands and feet go and came straight down and he hit that water like a chunk of a calf. And I hollered and hissed the dogs and everything and the dogs ran to the water and wouldn't go in. Uncle George (Mabel's uncle) and Lowell was on one side of the creek and me on the other, but we couldn't see where it washed out to one side or the jother--clear down to the bridge. It was dark. . If he were stiff he'd lodge (against a rock) but he was warm and should roll out on the bank. He certainly was a big one. I hated to loose him. Oh it was the finest night I ever saw. I expect we scared out 8 or 10 from ~~xxx~~ mother's apple orchard. This one was a big one. I wanted Jr. in on it. I'd give a price of a coon and some extra if Jr. had been along. But it's hard work. I got tired looking along the creek. But he hung up there (in tree) until he was as dead as four o'clock, as the saying goes. Si: I'd like to see a good coon fight in the water where a dog goes in after him. Dad: They'll drown every dog, they say. I only saw one dog go in ahole of water in my life after one. That was the other dog I had when I caught those 26 one winter when I was 12 years old. I set it down in a diary. Set down everything I killed that year. It was at that hole where Pennington's lived (below church). Treed it over the hole and I shook him off and he fell in that hole of water and that yellow dog swam in. It was daylight when I got there. I heard him from over here and I went clear over the hill and down and he was there below Will Gibson. It was daylight. He seemed to sit in the water. The dogs swam up to him and he sat up on his hips and he just pulled his feet up like this and poppted that yellow dog's head under the water and he got strnagled and had to scramble to the shore. I hissedhim back in but the coon knew to stay in the water. And then I shot him

Chineese checkers: Dad: when Mabel got playing good enought to beat me, I quit.

Old cellar over the Hill: Dad: Henry has potatoes inthere. We put 15 bu. of apples in there and some one stole them all--all but ½ gal. and 2 or 3 bu. of potatoes. It was old H..... T... I guess. H. .. got a buggy rake ~~xxxxxxx~~ tool and drawed the steeple (for lock) He carried them out on his back. I have a pain at the ball of my right heel. Hurts right into the bone

Apparently when Dad was a boy: Dad: ... cow had a calf with two heads and had it mounted. We were talking and he said to the calf to speak to this little boy. It spoke to me and I thought it was the calf talking, ha ha. I don't see how they can do that, do you? --standing over there and talk to you over here.

Dad: ...Hannah boy killed a bear. We went up to the head of Slatyfork creek and heard the dogs going around the top of the mt. and I decided no bear was coming to the head of the creek and we came out of there and came around to home here and they heard Mazie Hannah phoning to head of Elk that the bear was coming around up there on the Gibson place. and we jumped in the cars with our guns and Uncle George went up here to the Sam Gibson place. There were a whole bunch of us there watching and tourists coming along and wondered if we were watching for a gangster. But here came Si around directly and said they already killed a bear up there at Ellis Hannah's. We all went up there and Si took some good pictures. The Boys that was an awful big bear. His arms were bigger than an man's arms. One bite and he'd kill a sheep.

Dave: what time will you get up tomarrow? Dad: about 6 o'clock. I get uncle George up, so he can get out at 7. I got up at 15 to 3 mornings to go coon hunting. One morning I went over the hill and the dog was dragging a big coon. That night he went over and we killed two and one got away. Gee, believe me, I had a load. I went down to the old wagon house and got a piece of wire and ran through their ham strings, you know and put them across my shoulder. I'd go a little piece and have to sit down and rest. The fun was all over when I killed those two coons. Aren't allowd to kill but two coons at a time. Very good thing the other one got away or I might have violated the law and I might have overdone myself carrying them in.

Dad: Old Jack was barking at the hog pen at Henry's. I was going up to the sheep and I called him away. He was back there barking to beat the band. I went up there and he had two coonstreed up two trees. Loraine was coming to help pen the sheep. After we shot one out I had Loraine --it was before daylight--to see with a flashlight and she said yes there's another.....

Dad: Then Keith Shaw was coming up from the church and said a coon ran across the road right down there. Lowell and I went down there and by the noise of the car and lights it ran up a big oak. Lowell said he saw it and shot it out. That last one made 20 coons. You take 20 coons and the clean out the cornfield and tear it up like a bunch of hogs. [redacted] Sharp said hogs aren't equal to beavers. He said he had 15 acres of corn on the river. He said a hog couldn't hold a candle to a beaver. They cut the stalks off and carried them off in to the river. He didn't mind telling me. He said he shot six of them. Dave: Is that the same [redacted] Sharp that killed someone? Dad: It was his boy, I found out. One of his boys shot a hole throught the top of Gay's hat.(gamwarden?) Gay would never go back in that country after that. He [redacted] says that's the best place to hunt because the gamewardens never go back in there--you know after he got shot through the top of his hat ! ha, ha. But that Gay, g when they came over to kill those bear, he came and asked and wanted to know who went up there bear hunting that day. Jake Mace went up there because the bear killed his sheep, and he went up there and caught him without a license on his own place. Took him up before a justice at Huntersville and fined him $20 and cost. I would have carried that up. Dave: They change the law so you can kil a bear for killing sheep? Dad: Si and I changed that. We really did. We wrote to the Times and the Times took it to the Clarksburg papers and Cal Price wrote how awful the bear was. The next thing, a rule came that Pocahontas county and a couple more, there would be no law on bear. Si wrote the best piece you ever saw. The Clarksburg paper gave Cal Price credit for writing that piece, you know.

(This sheet should have been immediately foolowing the story about the two-headed calf--near top of page 2 --I overlooked one ~~xhunk~~ one hand-written sheet when I typed it.) 199

..... (not clear)... Dad: ..... She's biggest liar I ever heard. They put them out over there at Duncan's house. She had twin babies. One named Lee after Lee Gibson and the other after Fred Hefner.

Dad: I was so tired I could hardly make it in. The roads were so bad--muddy and slushy and slick. I had that coat over all this winter ~~xhunk~~ clothes and I got so hot. We had a lot of fun though. I'd liked to have had Jr. along. Dave: "let's go out tonight". Dad: I got up 15 minutes till 3 o'clock and got that big coon. I don't have vitamens enough, but Lowell will go with you in the morning. He's got vitality enough, he'll jump right out of bed and go. 4 o'clock in the morning is good. Early at night and late in morning. They must retire at 12 o'clock. You can hardly catch them then. They travel just after dark and then again in the morning again. It seems that's the way they do.

Dad: I was almost eaten up one time. I was 12 years old and went down on Gauley to where a man named Curry had a corn field. Uncle Harmon Sharp went there a few nights before that and caught 7 coons. So I went down there and there were no coons in it. So I went out on the top of the bank, and built a fire. I had a dog I had so much confidence in. A 12 year old boy to go down there and camp out. I laid down by the fire and about 11 o'clock whe down in a laurel patch the dog was fighting something down there. And directly he was hollering like he was dieing. I waited for him to come back and I got scared. I went down through looking for my dog and couldn't find him I hit it right on down to Elk River and waded across the creek . The water was low and I hit for home. He rant into a bear down in there. The next day about 1 or 2 o'clocke in the afternoon he came in with his whole side torn out. You could see his insides. After so long a time he got well. That bear might have eaten me right there and you'd never seen your daddy . ha, ha, ha.(about five laughing with him) He almost killed that dog.

(Dave: Yes, I guess if that bear had killed him, we would never have seen him ! ha.)

Dave: are you going coon hunting? Dad: Yes, I'm going over and start the dogs. I ain't able to go over the hill. Get Lowell and you all can go over the hill You've got a lot of vim. You'd have a good chance to go up to Uncle Sam Mc Gibson's place. Just drive the car up there and get out and go under those apple trees. The creek might be up so high that if they came off Gauley Mt. they can't get across the creek. I'll take Jack and Shep over in the maddow. Get your shoes on. You and Lowell go along and you two can go on over the Hill. .....(not clear)... girls
Dad: ...(about a girl he knew using perfume) ..etti ... a box of..... a smell, gives you a perfume. It smells pretty and there's catnip in it. And she wanted in to that and he asked her if that's how she smelled all the time., and she said "yes sir, that's my natural smell", and he'd never go back to her any more ! ha. ha. ha. story
Another story: .....Dad:.... and she stepped in where some one had dumped, you know, over at the church and I could hardly stand it and I never liked that girl after that, ha, ha. Si: maybe she didn't wipe. ha, Dad: I never could like her after that. Everytime I'd think of her I'd think about that, ha. In church .... on the way, and walked to church and in the church and they smelled that.
(other side of cassette) Dad stalking a deer in a laurel patch on "bear pen ridge" on Gauley mt. Dad: ...right in the laurel patch. I walked right on out and the air was drawing from the deer to me. I walked to a birch tree, I remember it as well as yesterday. I stuck my head around. I could have pitched my gun right on top of that doe's back. Well, I cocked the gun. I'd never shot from my left shoulder in my life, ha. deer
I got the prettiest sight you ever say. I was just looking at the front bead. I never once thought of it till it was all over. I drawed the bead right on the middle of the deer and pulled it off and never touched the deer. I bet I shot a foot over it. Well, it went out of there like lightening. I jumped off in the laurel patch and fired a gain at it as it ran through in the brush, but didn't have a chance. Well, the next morning I said to Billy Marcus(?)"let's learn to shoot from the left shoulder. I could have killed that deer if I'd learned to shoot from the left shoulder. We went out and you've never seen the shooting we did (practicing) Bill got so he was better than I was. But Uncle Hugh shot all his life from his left shoulder. (Dave does too !) I was never closer to a deer in my life. That deer was eating laurel. It had it's hind leg toward me. Dave: You shot at a turkey the same way.
Dad: Ha, ha , yes the same way, ha, ha. I saw turkeys with young turkeys in the creek meadown one time, I had a mt. rifle. Had to load everytime. The turkey was going along picking grass hoppers in the grass. I picked out the largest one in the bunch. The young ones were nice size--in the fall of the year. She had her head down, facing the other way and when the gun cracked she just wentoover the bank were we treed that coon the other night, and flew across to that walnut tree. The others flew away. I went over and picked that turkey up and there wasn't a hole in it,! ha, ha.--only a natural hole, ha, ha. Si: so you shot it right in the mouth ! Dad: yes, ha, ha. That's the way to shoot a turkey--you don't tear it up, ha, ha. I've done a lot of hunting in my lifetime--ever since I was 12 years old. I'm 77, going on 78. I got so I could shoot that mt. rifle right along. YOU'd have to pour in poweder and then put the bullet in and get the ramrod. It fit right under the barrel. Put a cloth wad in and then the bullet and push it in with your knife--butt end and cut the cloth off right at end of the gun, and when you got to the bottom you begin to hit the ram rod like this and when it commenced to balance back you know you had it down on the poweder. gun

..... (some missing)....Dad: ....we'll go up to the peach orchard. Si: "I'll just call that --you're thru with the coons".--you're the one that made the bet". Dad: Like, Jr. last night, I told him I'd bet $100 against 2 cents that the dog wasn't on the porch (gone coon hunting on his own)--oh, yes, I didn't collect the 2 cents did I ?

SHARP 4

Si: I think you all will have to produce a coon hide to make sure you got a coon. Lowell: we'll get one tonight or tomarrow night. Dad: Lowell has enough experience to know that dog wouldn't go away back up there unlessa coon was there. There's no way to prove it because we didn't get the coon, but I know he ran the coon from that apple orchard. Si: (kidding) I'm satisfied in my mind that he was just running a fox up there and he ran far enough he decided he wanted to rest and he barked to fool you, ha. .....(Snowshoe rabbit) Dad: yes, wool on the bottom of their feet and their tracks as big as a dog's track. The first one I ever saw and I don't think I saw one since. Will Morgan saw this thing and he shot at it and I went to Will. He missed it. He said "I saw the biggest panther". I asked what color it was. He said "it' right white and as big as a sheep, I asked where it was. He said "it' right on up yonder--I knowit's a panther" I never heard of a white panther in my life. I slipped along and he yelled: "wait, wait, I see it". I shot and when the guncracked down it went. I went up to get it and held it up and it looked every bit that tall (demonstraed it). That was his "panther", ha. We brought it out to home. The biggest part of them is their feet. White as snow, with long ears. SI: They'll get brown in a frying pan". Si: you know, that cold winter in 1917 you know how cold it got? It stayed about zero about all through Dec. and Jan. We caught a weasel over at the high rocks over on Slatyfork that was as white as it could be--just like they do in Canada. We've got it mounted and it's out here in the store upper window. Dad: I saw where on crossed about 15 years ago, thru yonder at the meadow, round top of the hill. Oh, I've seen 100's of tracks in Gauley up there at the high top, I never ever ate one and never saw but that one and I killed it. Dad: ... . tie my shoe string. When my boys are here I want to make use of them. (Attempt to tape Dad and have him on the movie at same time (on front porch?) L.D.: usually Friday is my lucky day but I hunted 5 days and didn't have any luck. I was about to kill a deer on the 5th day. I was crawling up to the deer and another man scared it away, so I missed having good luck on Friday. So Sat. I went back to my old stand. The deer was coming in a different direction to one of my by-standers. He shot about 6 shots and crippled it a little bit. It ran away from him. I shot about 200 yards and broke it's let. Another fellow said "go down in the brush, there's a big deer there on the left side of you. That ohter fellow didn't go in the brush so I took off down there as hard as I could down in the hollow and I brought him down. He was a 6- prong buck. Now if you want to kill deer and want a partner, you take Lowell Gibson. He's a real chum and a real hunter and if I take him with me he usually gets game. Dave: (kidding) where's Lowell? Dad: He's right here. Come over here Lowell. He and I are hunters together. He does whatever I tell him, ha, ha. ha. Dad: After I killed that fine big deer I sent Lowell back up to my stand where I'd been standing for 5 days and a big deer came thru there and he shot 6 shots and the last shot he brought him down. It was an 8-prong buck. Boy's did we have luck that day ! We had two to bring in. It was a job bringing those two in. Boy's we did have venison! ha. Coon hunt:--Dad: Why, we had quite a sport killing coons. One night wen there was no one here my coon hunting partner wasn't here so I wanted to go hunting so bad and started out and went over the hill to the other farm and the dogs put 3 coons up a tree. I killed one and it jumped 25 feet down over the hill. It got away in spite of everything.I couldn't get the dogs away from the tree as they knew other coons were in the tree. So I shot out the other two. Believe me, I had a load carrying those coons home, I wished my chum had been there to help. Those dogs are just pups, but really good coon dogs. They won't bark when tracking.

(Mabel's experience at the bear chase) Dave: did she run? Dad: The dogs were coming toward us. She ran to the car as hard as she could run, jumped in and suth the door. They rant two deer out and came about 20 steps from us.

Dad: we used to have lots of turkeys. Back on the mountain there must have been 50 head of them. I followed tracks up on the flat and I thought no one within a ½ mile of me. I crawled up over the bank and was picking out the biggest one to shoot. But a man came up on the other side and went "bang, bang" and away went all the turkeys. I was spited enough to choke him a little bit. ha. Another time I was up on the mt. and was calling turkeys and about 15 of them came in a row across the flat as hard as they could a calling and cutting. I banged in with the shotgun and knocked down four of them. I ran up there. One jumped 15 feet high and I could have shot it. I was so excited with it jumping. It finally jumped up and out through a hole in the trees and sailed and fell ¼ mile down in Buck's hollow. I went down there and looked the country over and couldn't find it. So I went back up and I had three nice young turkey gobbleers, about all I could carry out of there. We can't do that anymore because we don't have the turkeys. They're as scarce as hen's teeth. Used to hear gobblers in the spring of the year. You seldom hear that now. Hunters and red and grey foxes about finished the wild turkeys. I'd like to recall back when my young days for a little while to have the sport like we used to have among the wild game--turkeys, deer, etc. Fish !, we used to have fish to galore. My goodness, you could go and catch a basket full of fish in just a little while. But we can't anymore. They stock the streams every year. But if you get the limit of 10 or 15 you've done awful well. So, back in our day we had really more enjoyable life than we do today with all our automobiles and air planes etc. We do, of course, have a few deer and most too many bear, but still that's not like plenty of turkey, fish and smaller game. Dad: another time hunting turkeys, I called up 7 big gobblers. I had agun that I hadn't used very much. I called them up to about 20 steps of me and planned to kill half of them, and the old gun wouldn't go off. I tried both barrels. They had their necks almost crossed each other--lined up. Their old beards looked about 10 inches long. By then the started "cutting"(danger signal) and saw me and flew out. When they got about a 100 yards, the gun went off as fair as could be. I felt like taking the gun around a tree, ha. I never had a better chance in my life and to think that old gun would do me that way. I broke the gun down that way (demonstrated) and brought it back up and it didn't cock, you see. It wouldn't cock half the time. They flew when they heard the gun clicking. That was the gun I got from a candy company for ordering a large shipment of hard candy. It wasn't wroth a dime! That's some of your give-away stuff. ha. Well, Im to go over the hill. I may take some corn over and feed those turkeys. If the water wasn't up so, I'd go in the car. ..... (not clear).... Dad: ..... life's ..... where we expect to meet again. Like Martha Gibson, I was talking to her , I had to leave, and I said "we hope to meet again" She said: we will meet again. I'd talked to them at the market (sheep?) . I hadn't seen them for 35 years. Talking about (age?) I said this world is good enough for me. I'd just like to live here always. I'd heard a man at conference a few years ago giving a testimony --a preacher. One fellow said he'd like to live always if the Lord would permit it. I like life. The fellow replied, I'm not caring much for living on, for according to what we believe and preach, why it's better for us beyond when this life's over. I said that's true too, but I just like life. He replied "I'm different. I'd like to go anytime.". He didn't live but about two months after that. He took sick and they took him to the Marlinton hospital and he passed over. His name was False. He said it was better on beyond.

Dad: my mother told me that just a few days before she died--I said to her, "mother, you're going to kill yourself tending to that colt that got it's leg broke. You'll take pneumonia and die. She said: why do we worry about xhank that, Luther? It's better on beyond after this life's over. She took pneumonia and did die. Winters Gibson wasthere when he was a christian and she had him to sing the most beautiful song. I forget what it was now (she apparently requested it) There was never anyone who had a better mother than I did. There was never a more devoted christian. She was permitted--gave witness to ..... her brother, Otha, died and came to life and he told all about Heaven and who was in heaven. Told them how beautiful it was. The Savior took him all over heaven and let him look down into hell. He said a boy on Elk, a wicked boy, and the savior asked him "whid did you take my name in vain?" --he was in the flamesof fire. He told what boy it was. Otha said: "Joe's saved. He's here with me, can't you see him? (Joe apparently had died shortly before Otha with diptheria). --and there's the Savior. Dad: Joe was a mischevious boy and never joined the church and was never converted. Maybe never had the chance. He was raised by Christian parents (David Hannah) They were uneasy about him because he was so mischevious. He died about a week or 10 days before that. That is what made the family such devored Christians. One of them, Uncle George, became a preacher. Otha could pormore miracles. He said "I can throw that handkerchief up against the loft (ceiling) and it'll stay there" He threw a red handkerchief up there and it , they said, looked like just a space of a knife blade between it and the wall, and stayed there through that day and night and next day when grandmother askded what time he was burried--she had a small baby (Mary)(and couldn't go to funeral) and they said about 2 o'clock, when they put him in the grave, up there above Marvin, ah (uncle) George Hannahs--that's the Hannah graveyard. She said she noticed the handkerchief laying across the back of a chair. He (otha) said: I can take that child and put it in the fire (fireplace) and it won't burn". They wouldn't let him have the baby to put in the fire. Otha said "I can show you where Heaven is. They (his mother etc.) went outside and he said "up there's heaven--right back of Sam Hannah's--the whole heaven's lit up. Otha said "up this way, Pap's coming. He called him pap. He was coming home fromx a sale (up Elk) He told grandfather (David) everything that he bought at the Sale. Among the things, you bought a colt for Sara and I (brother and sister) Grandfather said "yes I was going to give it to you and Sarah (Dad's mother) David said "Son, you've come back to stay with me?" Otha said "no, it's too beautiful over in heaven. I've come to stay only a little while. I wish you'd make me a pallet before the fire". After about an hour or two. He laid down on the pallet before the fire and didn't move a hand nor foot. Just like going to sleep. That is what made them, well they were good Christians anyway. Grandfather (David) wouldn't eat anything cooked on Sunday. I don't know if it wasbefore that or not. It had to be cooked on Satur day. You know, when it rained manna from Heaven to feed the Iseralites they could only geather it one day at a time. If they picked two days at once it would spoil. If they geathered it on Sat. it would stay good on Sunday to eat.

George commented that he heard a preacher say "a man who fed stock on Sunday wasn't a christian. I disagreed with him" Dad: your're right. Because He spoke one place: "Who is it that won't pull the ox out of the ditch?" When they went through the field plucking corn or wheat, you know, some of the people critized them--the deciples plucking wheat(of grains) because they were breaking the sabbath. and he said: "I am the Lord of the sabbeth and which of you if the ox fell in the ditch wouldn't pull it out on Sunday? That means that things that have to be done, I think , possibly, it would be more harm to let the stock to starve and suffer than to feed it. YOU'd be doing a righteous act.

(End of 2nd half of reel-to-reel tape. Start on 2nd reelto-reel. --the first side. ------Cassette #4B

Otha

SHARP 4

Dad: Hanson Doyle said "I saw Jesus, I saw him face to face. I know Him,. I've met him". (Dad apparently telling of a vision he himself had): Dad: I said"I had the same experience." but I didn't tell it. Vision: I was out here on top of the hill about 5 years ago and an aunt I hadn't seen in years, Aunt Lear(or Lehr) Hannah. There was some other woman , came up from the old school house and coming up the hill-- I watched them and there was aunt Lear. I'd forgotten what she looked like--uncle George Hannah's wife. She'd been dead for several years, and she said "Luther, look yonder, look yonder". and for 2 or 3 years I couldn't speak of that without crying. It's hard to do it yet. I looked around and I never saw the heavens so beautiful in my life. There came the Savior with the most decorated stars(?) I ever saw on this earth--all around on his wings and crown. The most beautiful stars you ever saw in this world. He came on and there were two others in behind him. I wasn't to know who the were. I believe was my first wife, Laura and daughter Creola. They were decorated. You've never seen soldiers decorated that could compare anywhere. And I wondered aboutabout---they got Christ's picture on a pocket handkerchief(?) and I wondered if that was a picture of him on it or not, but it is. Talk about a personality--the finest personality I ever looked on the face of. And I kind of had a fear--entering in to the presence of God--a poor weak sinner likeme., and he came on down to top of the grave-yard hill---there was no timber there at all. And I said "shake hands with me" and he reached down and shook hands with me. (Dad weeping). It was no dream It was a vision. Aunt Lear called my attention to it. She said "Luther look back yonder. And then when I woke up. Aunt Lear and this other woman was walking in their ordinary clothes like when they were here on earth. She said "Luther look yonder". The sky was decorated with stars of various colors, gold, silver and came coming closer till they came to the graveyard. The speak that people are not permitted to look on the face of their creator. I've already had that privilege if I never see him again, and I shook hands with Him.

Saw Jesus

End

205

Tape begins at Ivan's at Nitro Xmas A.M. 1949--message to L.D. Evan: "Merry Christmas, Grandad" --giggles. Genevieve: Merry Xmas Dad & Mabel, and Si and all the little ones. Rufus: Merry Xmas to you Dad. We all wish we could be there with you this AM. And Si I hope you are feeling fine and enjoying Xmas like we are down here at Nitro. We've Just had a wonderful time. Violet: Well, good morning good old Dad. It's so nice to be here at Ivan's this AM, but it'd be so much nicer if we could all be up there with you and Si. We've been looking at some pictures and some we had of Paul and Vonda, and we've been thinking of them down in Texas, and I am sure you are too. We wish you you're having a peaceful happy Xmas up there and the new year will bring you peace and prosperity. We hope you'll all come real soon down to Richmond and we'll all have a nice family reunion together. God Bless each one of you is my prayer. Ivan: Merry Xmas Dad, Mable and Si and those about you. Genevieve and I would like to be up there with you. It happens to be Sunday and Xmas up there with you.....(?).... We played it to Dad Xmas night: He laughed happily about it. Dave asked about hunting: Dad: I started in on Monday morning at 4 o'clock and hunted all week. Saw several does and on Friday my lucky day, I saw a deer at a distance and I had to back out from where I was and go about a ¼ a mile around to get up on the deer and got down and crawled and had everything going my way, and I had about 30 yards yet to crawl and don't you know that big deer that was feeding was in a fair opening and Henry Shaver was watching from a distance when we first saw it. And a scroundrel, I don't really know what you'd call him, ha, came up on the other side and when I got up to lay my gun on the rail fence to shoolt the big buck it was gone. That'show he scared it andran it away. I lost out and lost faith. Then on Sat. I went out and Henry Gibson asked if Lowell could go along. I said "yes, I need a partner, and so Ivan, Ralph, Evan was back on the mountain and I think they ran the deer to me. I shot and broke it's leg and followed it's track about 300 yards and that time he laid there! a 6-prong buck and he was a dandy. Well, just after killing it I looked and saw 4 deer going across the ridge. One was large. I told Lowell to go back up to where I wason a stand and I'd follow the deer around and go across at the head of the other hollow, as I wasn't allowed to kill any more. When I got over there they had gone through. Just now I heard Lowell commence bang! bang! bang! He shot about 6 shots and the last shot hit him in the back bone and dropped him down. When I went up ther he had an 8 point buck, a dandy! If you don't call that luck I don't know what you'd call it! We'd hunted all week and then on Sat we had our first luck after seeing so many does. ha. Uncle George here (Mabel's uncle?) 1st day of the season he wasafraid of getting shot. Wouldn't go in the woods so he sat up on the mountain and some one ran a big buck by him and he dropped it. He came to the house and said "Henry, come up here quick. I got him--I got him !" I hollered for Ivan and Evan came by him and helped carry it in. It was the best luck we've had for years. I gave Ivan the head and hide and horns. And he is having it mounted. And Uncle George is giving him his (Dave: these must be the two deer heads of Ivan's mounted on one board--?) I didn't know Ivan would mount them so I messed up the neck of Uncle George's.

.....Si telling about someone backing into Frank's car etc. and about Dumire in 2nd world war.

Dave: I hear you killed some coons--? Dad: Well sir, I caught our limit. We have the best coon dogs--most any night you can get a coon. We go over to the apple orchard acrossthe creek We don't go so far from the house and over on the other farm (old home place). Dave: can't we go tonight? Dad: This is Sunday night !--my boy. Don't you regard the Sabbath and keep it holy? ha. ha. SI: (kidding) Dad's dogs hunt on Sunday. He made us go to church on Sunday but he doesn't make the dogs go!

Dad: I went over the hill one night by myself and the dogs treed a coon up a wild cherry tree beyond that barn (the big red barn?) I went up there and there were 3 coons. I shot one and one jumped out 25 feet from the tree--near the wagon house. The dogs knew the coons were in the tree. I tried to get them to chase the coon but they'd run back to that tree. and It got away. But I shot the two out and you should have seen the dogs fight them. I had the awfullest load. I hunted up a wire and tied them together. I was worn out when I got home.

SI: talking about army tank binoculars etc.

Dad--telling a story of the Civil war that was on the Edison Phonograph (Dave hasthe phonograph and the record) --about the colored man "darky" in the army. They asked the darky that was enlisting in the armh hom many battles he'd been in previously. Darkey: Well, Ive been in thousands of battles. Enlister: there wasn't thousands of battles. Darkey:, well, Ive been in loo(s of battles..... Well I know I've been in two battles. Recruiter: what were they? Darky: the battle with my wife and the battle of Bull's run. Recruiter: I bet at the battle of Bull's Run you did some running? Darkey: "Yesss Sirrrreee ! When the ordered retreat I sure ran ! Recruiter: what about the battle with your wife? Darkey: Oh, I surrendered ! ha, ha. He then said to the captain: I want you to do me one favor. I don t want you to put me in the cavalry---so, when the captain say's "retreat^!", I don't want a horse to hole me back in the retreat." ..... some not clear..... Gum Mathias SI: ...Gum Mathias.....then Si telling about a teacher going up on Elk ... and Sandy (or Andy) wouldn't study. Parents told teacher to make him study anyhow. He said "I ..... him once but id doesn't do a bit o good". So the next morning he (teacher) said we'll all study now. Andy, get out your book and study. He said Andy wouldn't open his book. So he went back and caught him by the top oe his shirt and he said he just shook him almost out of his clothes, tore all the buttons off his shirt. He set him back in his seat and Andy opened up his book and he studied from then on. The teacher stopped by the home and they asked him if Andy studied? He said: didn't Andy tell you? They said "no, he never tells us anything. The teacher said he studied fine. I just shook him till all the buttons fell of his shirt. Them old lady said: "that's alright, I'll sewe them back on". ha, ha.

Dave: Dad, did you know Gum Mathias the teacher?

Dad: I reckon I did know him ! Si: "wasn't you and some other boy going to whip him one time"? Dad: Davis Hannah, Joe Sharp and I---we saw him about beat the daylights out of other kids. He had a stick about 20 inches long---he'd cut on it as a regulator (a ruler?) and he used it to prop up the window. He'd just jerk that out of the window and grab a youngen' and blister him right ! ---almost wear him out. So we three made it up that if he jumped one of us we'd join to gether and we'd lick the old man. We were in our teens (1s?) ha, ha. One day....he always would court some girl (student) --pick out some girl to court. Gum Mathias had 3 fingers on one hand and two on the other. (Dave: Raymond Mace wrote me the same thing !) Dad: He had high shoulders. A head as big as William Jennings Bryant. Smart enough and all like that. One day we were out there playing draw ball.. and they threw, you know, the ball to the other side and whoever was hit it put you out .. and so I doved for it and someone missed it. He yelled: "you jumped behind that girl to keep from getting hit"! He talked so independenat and mean. I looked for the other boys but neither was there that day. I said "Gum Mathias, I didn't do it ! I wasbeginning to think about the girls too, ha. He said: "don't you tell me you didn't jumpe behind that girl to keep from getting hit." I said no sir I did not. Dave: did he do anything to you? Dad: no, he stopped there.

↑ Gum mathias

Shotgun Haystack 207

Dad telling about being nearly shot on a haystack:
Dad: I went up in the meadow to feed the calves. Took Albert Hannah along. He was a boy that came from school. (both 12 or 13 ??) I took my gun along with me There were snow birds ou in the snow. While I was throwing the hay off the stack I told him to kill one of them. All you had to do was to barely touch the trigger on that gun. So e wiggled around trying to get a sight on a bird.--we didn't have English sparrows then-- I hadn't seen one till about 60 years ago. I said: reach me that gun and I'll show you how to kill one. He was reaching the gun up to me. I had a hold of the stack pole and reaching down to him He hadn't let the hammer down and he touched that trigger and the bullet went along the side of my temple and I just fell. I was numb. Wjen I got over that numbness I felt my head to see if blood. I remember it as well as yesterday. I said "Albert, you've shot me" ! He said: "don t you tell Paps, he'll whip me to death"! I asked him if he saw any blood and he said he didn't.

Skunks

Story of Dad stomping a skunk to death !
Dad: I was coming up from the Porter Morre house (mouth of Slatyfork creek --up that steep path--side of the hill near Sla yfork creek. I'd been down to Uncle Harmon Sharp's one night. I heard something coming above the path in the leaves. Skunks were worth about $2. Money was scarce. It was a skunk. I jumped on the skunk above a cliff of rocks and my feet slipped ,,,where the bank is awful steep. I landed at the bottom and broke my lantern globe. I was hurt so bad I thought I'd lay there a minute. I'd gone 20 feet--rolled down to the bottom By the way, I felt something digging under me. I'd caught that skunk sliding down there and I had it down tight and it couldn't do a thing. So I raised up just a little bit. I got off as soon as he started kicking and s cratching. Oh, land of merchy, it threw that scent all over me and I got up and stomped that skunk to death. ha, ha. Those boots I had on they stunk every time I'd warm them up--(Dave: I guess before the fire place that winter) and I'd think of that old skunk , Ha. Well, I got the skunk alright! Another skunk story:
Dad: My father and I, we tracked some skunks in down the creek bank -- back under a big flat rock. We got a mattock and went to digging. We built a fire in below it trying to smoke it out. You can't smoke them out or we didn't that time. We blew the smoke back under that rock. So we jumped in and thought we could dig in back behind that flat rock. We dug down. My father was digging and told me to watch below. He said: I'm coming through on it. The mattock broke in to it here. Now you watch there with that stick. I was watching. The smoke had strained my eyes. He puched down in there and instead of the skunk throwing it out his way he filled my eyes full through that smoke, Ha, ha. Great lands'. The reason the dog wallows and rubs his head in the grass, it's not the smell. it butns just like fire. I strained my eyes to seea dn it was about 10 feet to the creek. I made about five jumps into the creek and stuck my head right down in the water to get it out of my eyes. I washed and rubbed it out. My father finally killed the skunk.

Hugh & bear

Story of Uncle Hugh chased by a bear !
Dad: That's when Uncle Harmon Sharp said he heard an old deer and she had fawns in there (up on the mountain)(in a brush thicket) Uncle Hugh, just abboy, went yp there on Sunday morning. He had a dream that night that he had a fight with a bear and he had a cane with a knot on it. He'd get deer and raise them. He wanted to get one of those fawns. With a young fawn you squall and holler and they'll stay down. when they are a few days old. You can run up and catch them. He went up there and there was an old she bear and 4 cubs in there ! He'd cut this cane off as he went up the hill just like he(d dreamed of. I t had a knot on it, just like in the dream

SHARP 4

208

He then heard the noise in the thick brush, so he made a jump in there a hollering to catch the fawn. Instead of a deer it was an old she bear ! He kept saying "akh, akh, akh" and backing up and putting up a brave face to the bear till he got outside. and he said he ran down over the hill. He was just a boy. He saw a big hollow log and he said "I just piled into that old log and went in as far as I could go---if that bear had followed me that was just where she would have wanted me" ha,ha. He made the bear think he was brave until he got out of there.

.....Dad: Everybody has an influence on some one. I was watching a baby in it's mother's arms. The little fellow yawned. I stopped in the middle of my talking and ywwned. So I said: "Everyone has an influence . You may not think so, but yous do." I said pardon me, but I watched that little baby and it had enought influence over me to cause me to yawn. They all laughed."

More deer hunting--not clear: on the mountain--Henry Loraine, Lowell.
--telling strategy etc.

1st car

Dad driving his first car home : Dad:
It was in 1915 that I bought my first car. (Ivan thought it was 1914) You can count it up--15 from 49 is 35 years. I went over to Marlinton fair grounds (to learn) and drove it around two or three times. Then they took me out (out of the fair ground) and started home. and Mr. Burr who was with me--and another fellow was following us in another car---we didn't have good roads then They were muddy

(They turned Dad loose there at Campbelltown and Dad started home on the old dirt road) (Tape is blurred but here is some of it): ... I drove down to Charles McGuires place .....(someone) in a wagon. and the horses started hollering (with fright) I stopped, and they held the horses. I was afraid the horses would jump out in the road , you know. I cam on down to Page Hannahs, ... ha, ha. (Dave: I remember him telling that he had to back up on a curve there with great difficulty.) ---and he came on home.

(from Reel and Cassettes #8)

(LD, Ivan, Genevieve, Dave, Evan) Sat, Dec 31, 1949

Starts Dad and Ivan singing. Then eating at the table. Singing "Little Star of Bethleham" . Then Ivan saying the blessing at the table. (blurred) Ivan: "Our dear heavenly Father we thank thee for thy goodness and kindness, and watching over us and taking careous and permitted us to assemble around this family table again. Bless this food to the good of our bodies and bless our fellowship together and at last save us in they kingdom, we ask it in Jesus' name. Amen." Ivan: Everybody help yourselves. Violet: thank you. Sylvia--wanted some of the hot bread. Dad: help yourself..... (a lot of it unclear).....

Dave: are you going coon hunting tonight too, Dad? Dad: you've never heard of "LD" to fail ! --only that time I wasn't there, ha. I go over here (meadow across the creek)(corn) when nobody else goes. I have to go by myself. Ivan: have you got any sideboards for my plate? Dave: Evan, are you going coon hunting tonight, too? Evan: yes! Dave: aren't you afraid of coons? Dad: well we have a slim cha ance..... Dave: Ivan did you hear about one coon falling in the river? Ivan: yes, I heard about that. Dad: I hated that, I believe that was the biggest coon this year. He fell out of the tree asdead as a door's nail. Eunice asked me how that term got started--she'd heard it all her life. .....

Dad: Jr. won't drink any mild from his Dad's cows, he's afrait it isn't good like Cinti. mild. I believe he's afraid of the milking (Henry Shaver's milking--unpasteurized). Dave: Ivan's a traitor to his country--he's drinking tea. Ivan: my wife, "Eve" persuaded me. Dad: Is there any ice for my mild? Dave: If it hadn't been for the Boston tea party, maybe we'd be drinking tea. Dad: How was that? Dave: didn't you study that in histroy? Dad: no, I didn't. Dave: The British taxed the tea to payfor their soldiers over here and we didn't want that, so our men dressed up like Indians and threw all the tea off the ships into the sea. Dad: They did? Dave: then the revolutionary war started. Ivan Taxation without representation. Dad. Then the didn't let us send representives from this country?

Dad: Do we have any maple syrup? Genevieve: here's some apple butter. Dad: Ivan and Jr. do you want some of this maple syrup? Dad: Jr. go there in the delco house, there's a whole case of honey brought back from the time the other day (trip peddling in Randolph?) and get you some of that honey. It's already in cartons. Ivan: If you're going coon hunting, better eat a lot. The dogs are barking to go now. Dad: oh, those dogs can bark ! (Eunice came in kitchen) Genevieve: Hi, Eunice. Come in..(Everyone said"happy new year" Dad: come eat with us. ..... (she finally sat to eat) ..... (food mentioned at the table: strawberry jam chicken, ham, cottage cheese salad, apple butter, beans, pudding, cheese hot bread, cranberry, etc.

Mable: I'd like to take Dave & Sylvia to church tomarrow. Dave: are you having a contest? Mable yes. ..... (calendar shows it to be Sat, 31st '49) (William Morgan) Dave: is Edgar still living? Dad: no, Edgar has been dead for years. Will's still living. Ivan met him at the Ramsey reunion. I didn't get to go ..... He looked old. You've seen Uncle Will , haven't you? Dave: yes. ... Genevieve: Ivan wanted to get Dad some tires, so I thought they ought to have something for the house, so I got some fostoria. ..... Ivan: Plymouth is going to put out a cheap car, something like the Crosley. Dad: what do you call cheap? Ivan:, oh, about a thousand dollars. Genevieve: Kaeser-Frazier is making a cheaper car too ..... (table talk) Dad: I was fishing up at Eula (Russel-Kyle) Hannah's and I had a ..... and the old bull came at me bellowing and I brabbed a rock and I hauledaway and hit him right between the eyes. I told Eula that I hit him.....

(Evan must have cut his own hair) Mable: we almost had to get him a whig. Dad: turn your head around and show what the"barber"did. Evan: Si trimmed it off. Mable: I remember Ralph cut his one time.

210

Dad:; Thayer did the biggest. (on his.) Eunice: Lowell cut his one time.

Dad: Ivan, one time, a little fellow, sat down to get his hair cut on the old house porch. I had the clippers. Then I had to go from the old house down to the store A fellow hollered "Hello" at the store. I said sit there Ivan while I go wait on him. When I came back he'd started in right here and he cut up to there. So I had to cut his hair all off short to straightedn it. Dave: Remember the time that Si and Paul cut Donald's hair off short? There was a circus over at the old place (in upper creek meadow) They just shaved to top of his head to look just like a bald-headed man. He was just a little boy, about like Evan, and they left just a little hair around above his ears. Dad always said we had to go to church, but he wouldn't let Donald go for a month. Dad: He'd attract too much attention with everyone laughing, you know. I scolded the boys about it. ha, ha. Mabel: Dave, you cut Freda Phares' brother's hair off one time. Eunice: wasn't his name Jim? Dave: This Rhea up here that carries the mail. His boy came down and had me to cut his hair. I just cut a road through the top.

Hair Cuts

Dad: the only time I ever had to whip Jr. in church --you were a little fellow and pinned a clothe on a fellow's coat tail, ha. ha. And I gave him an awful good whipping over that. ha, ha. He was an awful mischevious little fellow ..... he was about the age of Evan.....
(coon hunting talk): Dave: You're not going to take a gun are you, Evan? Evan: if dad will want me to. Dave: Give him a shotgun! Evan: (knowing i was kidding said) "hu hu " Dad: you don't have a light gun like a 22? ..... Dave: Dad you might as well ride over there with us.....
Dad: We may go to Cinti and stay a few days, ha, ha. Ivan: I was thinking why didn't you and Mabel come down to our place for Xmas and then come up with Dave and Sylvia. Dad: We just couldn't get away, if we had 100 invitations.....we know we have an invitation all the time, so we don't need an invitation. Ivan: If you'll come down I'll bring you back any Friday or night. Dad: This was awful dangerous wasn't it,--Dave coming in? (snow on roads). Two years ago it snowed 15 feet deep up on Middle Mt. meadow. Ivan: these tires will help you an awful lot. Dad: I bought two tires---knobby treads. Ivan: yes, they should be on rear together.
End of the big reel #8 .----

If the cassette is turned over it will be garbled until last 1/3 and it may repeat what is on the first side?
Some of it may be clearer than other side.
There is some talk about the first cars (after the war?) If so, this tape may have been before 1949--maybe 1947 ?? (At one place Dave said: "it was about Auguest when we got it. They started making them about Feb. or March....) So..????

The box the #8 reel was in is dated "Dec 31" Then Mabel said she wanted Dave & Sylvia to go to church tomarrow (Sunday) indicating it was Sat that the tape was made. The onlly Saturday Dec. 31st is in 1949. so ....

Dad, Ivan, Otis Gibson, Ralph? Lowell? Si Reel #6 (A)
(1st half of LD and 2nd half of reel 6 is of Friels)

Dad: a fellow told me, he came here wanting to buy sheep and said someone told him Marvin Hannah wanted to sell all the sheep he had this year, because they had abortions and wer all losing their lambs. Some ewes lose their lambs before their time. .... cause cows too. ...should take that ewe from the other sheep. It's a disease. Ivan: (or Otis)?: Veo has lost 4 calves this year. Dad: He only got 5 calves. He had nine and lost 4 of them Otis: The Mace woman down ther, she lost twin calves. Dad: I feel sorry for her. Who's cow had twin calves? Otis: Nelia Mace's? Lately? She was telling me one of hers. Dad: Nelia Mace's? Lately? She was telling me Otis: here last week "I was down at Harry's and ..... and she lost 5 cows. Dad: Well, she lost three when ..... well there must be something wrong ! Si: what was wrong with Veo's calves: Ivan: Veo's not lost any before, Si. Dad: I think he lost two last year. Ivan, well last year he lost one, but well he just had a bad time of it. We lost two last year because of carlessness, and this year I set my head to there wouldn't be any carlessness. If we had losses it wouldn't be our fault, and we never lost a one out of 11. .....

Dad: He said she wouldn't jump three rails.... bought her and took her home and put her in a 8-rail fence and she cleared it ! and went back on old H. Schearer and told him you said she wouldn't jump a three rail fence. He said: "she won't, she won't --she'll just step over it ! ha, He wasa pretty slick drader. He sold a horse to a fellow. He was asked how he pulled. Schearer: Oh, that horse with a wagon, when you come to a hill he's right there . The man bought it. When he got to a hill he "was there" ! He bocked and wouldn't pull a lick . ha.
Dad: With a buggy rake she backed all over the field. If we had the rakes pointing the other wah ! ha. That old big grey mare, weighing about 1500 lbs. Do you remember her, Si: Si? No. Dad: I don't know who we got her from. She wasa bay mare. She wouldn't run off or kick, but when you put her in a buggy rake she'd commence backing, backing. You couldn't make her go foreward. I didn't keep her long. I traded her off, ha.

..... in a wagon, And when she started in a wagon she'd pull it all. But when she got to a steep place or a heavy load she'd just quit. She'd been spoiled. Dave: Your Dad cut a horse's foot out of the log barn. Dad: That was Black Sam's (negor's) horse. I can show you over in that old barn now where he chopped that hors's foot out. I'd like to show to show it to you sometime. (Dave: Dad showd we boys the notch chopped out of the log in the log barn near the old store building, beside the road). Talk about an axman--there never was a better one in this country ! He chopped left or right handed. That horse got down in there and rolling and ran his foot thru the barn in between the logs. Black Sam came to stay all night, him and Marge. He was a colored man. And sir, when that horse put it's foot between the longs there was no way in the world to get him out. We couldn't lift that big ole horse up and he (Silas) took an ax and..... Black Sam said "oh, Mr. Sharp, Mr. Sharp, be careful, Mr. Sharp" Dad: He just chopped one side and turned to the left side and chopped. You could hardly see an ax mark on either side. He chopped that horse's foot out of there. The horse walked awy asif nothing had ever happedned to him. That ole darkie, I can hear him yet saying "Oh, Mr. Sharp, be careful". Si: Where did the live? Dad: They lived down here at the Pogue place (below Slatyfork).
Dad: Another black man: One day I was hungry and they had the sheep penned. Isn't it wonderful how children can remember? They had the sheep penned over across the creek at the head of that meadow and there was a rail fence clear around that meadow and they built a pen there and was shearing sheep. I wanted something to eat so my mother sent over here to her house (? old log house--bee house now?) for a piece of bread. And Black Marge, she brought the mail (??) over, you know. the sandwich for me to eat. And I told mother "I ain't going to eat that bread, cause looks at her hands, how black they are" My mother tried to fix it up you nnow so it wouldn't make her feel bad, ha, ha. Mother said "oh, her hands are clean, they are just that color", ha, ha. And I didn't eat it,! ha, Dave: who was the black man you scared? Dad: he was the one that helped build that concrete bridge over the hill. I said "how do you do Mrs. Hannah" and he thought Mrs. Hannah was right there and scared him almost out of his boots, ha, ha. Dave: what was he doing? Dad: "What was he doing?" I knew you'd come to that, ha, ha. Dave: did his pants get wet? Dad: there was no one (Mrs. Hannah) near him, ha. (The black man was taking a leak) Hexx was a stranger to me. I'd never meet him before. That's why he thought there really was a woman right there ! ha, He nearly jumped out of his hide. He said "Oh, mista Sharp you scared me, you scared me ! ha, ha. Dave: Didn't you get scared one time when Joe Gibson's wife came down the path in the woods from their house on the mountain and you didn't know it? Dad: No, that wasn't me It was some other fellows. Well, she ran on to a couple"other fellows" that was working along there, ha, ha. and scared them. I can't tell you exactly how that was. If you'll turn off themachine I'll tell you how it was, ha. (("someone" had a call of nature on Buzzard mt. path and at the same time Mrs. Gibson came down the path and he had to pull his pants up. Then walked and past her saying "Hello, Mr. Gibson" -n-neither saying anything else--ha.)

Dave: One time you went to a church (Elk or Edray?) and went to the wrong out-house and 2 girls were in it. Dad: If you want to hear it on your machine, I'll tell you howit was, ha, ha I went to the toilet and looked in there and there were two ladies in there and it scared me nearly out of my booots, and I backed out backwards and through the excitement I threw the button (lock) on the door outside and they couldn't get out. I went on over to the other toilet in the corner of the yard and came back and they were hollering and scrambling to get out. I got another fellow to go and let them out, ha, ha. ..Then I told one of the girl's brothers that I was awful sorry, ha, ha. *They coouldn't sing. They belonged to the choir. *they were shut up!

.....oh, a lot of funny thingshave happened.

Mrs Gibson: Uncle Luther, being up there to Ella's and you wore a plug hat that time. Remember about it? The dog got the hat and he had the rim around his neck & ha. Dad: ha, ha, ..dog, tried to catch that rim you know. I went to see Lena Kennison, a school teacher, and that dog, --Bob, you know, he nearly died laughing--he ate the top out and slipped the rim over his head and he was trying to catch that rim! ha, ha Dave: was it your dress hat? Dad: Oh, yes! I didn't have xx any other ! And then I went down to Bill Varners. Bob had loaned me one of his hats and I went down to Bill Varners. And when I went to leave there I started looking for my plug hat, a "bee gum" hat--that was the style then. They were as hard as a bone, but were nice. And so when I started looking for my hat when I left and couldn't find my hat. I said:"I don't know where I laid my hat" Someone said: "I thought you wore this one". I just happened to come to my senses and thought of Bob giving me that hat. I hadn't looked at enough to knowit. I said, ha, " "oh, yes, sometimes I wear one one time and another xxxxxxxx time the other hat. ha, ha.

Dadx Well, I got me another one (hat) and I was going over to Ellis Hannah's (Melinda's husband) and had s grey mare that was just as frisky as she could be and as pretty as a speckled pup. The wind started to blow and my hat jumped off and hit her on the hips and she kicked it in the air and she kicked the whole top out of it, ha, ha, ha. (Ralph and Lowell laughing, too) Next time I bought a hat that a dog couldn't chew the top out of nor a horse kicke the top out of. ha, ha. Boys, I had xx some bad luck &

Dad: I went to xxx see the same girl, school teacher and I left there--

Dad: I went to see the same girl, school teacher and I left there--didn't have an overcoat. ...left there after night and I had a pipe. I smoked ~~xxix~~ a pipe. I didn't have any gloves. I don't think it wa cold when I went up there. And I put my hand on the pipe smoking it to warm my hands, and by the way it burned all out. So I got out the bag and filled the pipe with tobacco. Then I'd blow in and out to ~~xxxx~~ set it on fire from the bottom and in the meantime I sucked (nicotine) amber down my throat. I never got sicker in my life. When I came to the spring there at Frank Hannahs, I thought I'd die nearly. I rolled off the horse to get some water.

I aimed to roll of right at the spring as I didn't think I could walk. I got some water and got back on the horse again. Instead of going to the house (their house?) I rode out to the old barn. I remember as well as yesterday. I rode in under the shed and rolled off off and started vomiting. If I hadn't vomited that nicotine, it would have killed me! I believe it would. I never was sicker in my life.

I heard of a woman one time whose husband took colic and they wanted to give him something to vomit him and she took the amber from a pipe to get him to vomit. It was granmother Hannah or someone telling about it. That wasn't very far away. I forgot who it was. She gave him the amber from the pipe and it killed him in five minutes. If she'd given him strictnine it wouldn't have killed him quicker. It killed him dead ! They called it cramp colic, but in those days it might have been appendicitus.

(This tape was done when John Dee was 3 years old. This was mentioned in the other half of the tape that was of the Friels)

Readers Note: Most every story is copied verbatim--word for word--quoted. Very little was not verbatim. It will be obvious where it is not berbatim. Also, extra information or explanations have been put in parenthesis--for instance:"(Elk or Edray?)"

One reason it is verbatim, even if some of it is uninteresting, or superfluous, is that it gives the mood of thinking of the old-timers, and an insight in to their lives. Future generations may appreciate the detail.

SHARP 4

...mistake beargrease!

Dad, Si, Ivan, Dave.
Stories: selling honey, Hugh snake-bees, Davis Mace, Sally McLauglin-(mare)
Dad: either spoil the rod or spoil the child. Genevieve: you can't use a finger on them. Dad: you have to use judgment. How many licks did you give Ron?....Dad: ..... Friday Night. Ivan: ....at conference. Dad: Good land of Mercy ! No use to send my pants to the cleaner. Dave: maybe you should try to eat slower. Dad: I don t know what. Well, I get in a hurry. I et hungry and my mouth won't open enough....
Dad: that bull didn't look very good.... I didn't buy him for looks. I bought him for service. He's well marked. Ivan: He has all the qualifications of a registered and maybe he'll give better service.
Dave: Tell us about Sallie McLauglin. (she having the mare serviced on the road to Marlinton when she met the man with the stud). Dad: No, it wouldn't do, ha. .... say something else and the conversation will be "yea, yea and nea and nea" you have to be careful what you say.
Dad: you asked about Sally McLauglin. She had Al Bench (?) along with with her (on a trip)and he couldn't read nor write. At a restaurant he didn't know what to order. He couldn't read the menu. He'd say I'll take what ever Sally takes. So they afterwards had that for a by-word.
Dave: Didn't you go with her? Dad: Or no. That was Sally Gibson. She was too old for me. (Note: Dad wouldn't tell on tape about Sally. Her father wanted the mare serviced by a stud that some man was bringing over to Elk. Her dad sent her to Marlinton on the mare and told her for them to service the mare when they met on the top of Elk mountain. She held the mare while the man had the stud service the mare. Then she got on her mare and went on to town.) Dave: tell me about the time they put a snake at Uncle Hugh's bees. Dad: No, that's too funny. Well, Taylor Ramsey had a patented snake and he put it at the bee gum and put the head at the hole of the hive, and Uncle Hughe thought it was catching bees as he came around looking at his bees. He saw that snake there and he got a stick and slipped up, you know, and slammed down on the snake. He knew they (Ramsey and Mrs. Showalter) were watching him and knew he was beat (joke on him), why, he turned the thing on them ! ha Dave: how did he do that? Dad: I couldn't tell that, ha, ha. (uncle Hugh did some fast thinking. He turned facing the house and opened his fly and tinkled on the ground --in front of them They didn't tease him about the snake !) ha.
Dave: Uncle Bob looked alright today. Whad did Dr. Eddy (Cincinnati --there fishing) say about your heel? Dad: he looked at it but he didn't know any more about it than I did. Ha (Dad heard his voice on the recorder for first time) Dad: forgive me if my voice sounds like that ! Now you talk and let us hear your voice. ...
Dave: did you find your "traps" (strictmine) in your drawer? Dad: I'll pay you for it. Dave: you already sent me a check for it. Dad: you didn't cash it. Dave: the banks down there said it wasn't any good.
.....Si: (to Dad) you give me enough to pay for that treasurer's book and we'll call it square. Dad: there's $15. Si: no... Dad: this is yours. Si: well go ahead... you I don't want to take that. Dad: take that, it's yours. Si: did you take out for .... (day's work?)? What do you pay them? Dad: $2 a day. Si: well, there's half of that.
Si: well, I don't want to do that. I didn't go along. Dad: Carnegia in New York. A fellow (at train station) asked if anyone would carry his suitcase up to the hotel. Carnegia said "yes, I'll carry it up for you" He carried it and charged him a quarter or 50 cents. He said: I might need you again sometime. Where do you live? He said: "I'm Carnegia, they call the steel magnet." That fellow said in the paper that as long as he lived he said he'd never ask anyone to do anything for him that he could do himself. ha, ha. I've always told my boys if anything is offered to them to take it, ...and I giveyou (Si) that. Si: I know but right is right. (Dave: I don't remember which won out ! ha.)

2

Dad: down the valley (Tygart) they plant their corn by and and they ploy both ways--criss-cross. Si: well, I think we'll have to get down to doing it that way. They use hand planters. They don't have to furrow it. Just take a tractor and a board and measure and put a spike down at each place, see? You drag a 2x4 board behind the tractor. You sight the tractor down thru yonder and sight it. Dad: Then you drop the corn by hand, don't you? SI: then you turn and go the other way and there are your checks, so you just take the hand planter and stick it down in that square and open it. That's the way Veo Hannah does. Dad: that's the way the did nown Tygart valley. Si; you dont have to stop and cover the corn. Kyle and Charlie Beales all checked their's off. Dad: then it wouldn't have to be hoed? Si: Archie Gibson takesthe tractor and harrows 2 rows at a time and plows both ways and there's nothing to do (hoeing). After it is planted, your biggest work iis over. Dave: we used to get down and dig weeds out with a hoe, and hoe and hoe., and between morning and noon you'd only get down to one end of the field (one row) --then it'd be dinner time. Si: well, they only got it hoed once over in here-(across the creek) Si: Down in Tygard balley they raise corn with less labor and sell it for 65¢ and 75¢ a bushel on ears. Dad: and they have corn pickers to run through.

Dad: I asked Lowell if he wanted to work this morning and he said he didn't think so. Si: Sweckers was down and said they'd planned on going fishing with him today and it rained. Dad: are they having a ball game up at Shaws tonight? Ralph said he wanted to go with Lowell up to Keith Shaws.....

Dad: That fellow up on the mountain (Point mt) at the mines looked like these Nelsons. He (George) was in there (store) an at last sold 2 lbs of honey at 25¢ (per lb.)--in order to get out of there, he said. There was a beer joint right acrossthe road. A young fellow about 25 and a fat fellow came up and said "Howdy do sir, howdy do sir, don't mind me, I'm just as drunk as a hog" and he turned around and walked off, reeling. .....Dad.....about 20 years ago.... investigated and found he bought stricting there at the drug store and Dr. Cammeron saved his neck. Dr. Cameron made oath that she didn't die of posion. She'd been put away (burried?) of course that finished it. (who???)

(Jessie Hannah postmaster--retired-- wife postmaster--Jesse still worked --$80 pay retirement --moved to Elking etc.) (Mr Morrisons's son, etc. (Davis Mace) Dad: I was up there to see Davis when he wasso sick. Si: I was up there to a shooting match. Dave: I was there with you that time and we didn't get anything. Nelia had the match. Dad: Davis was a handy man to have. He was an awful good man. Si: he was a good ole boy. Dad: No body could say any harm of Nelia Mace. She was a good neighbor. If she told a story, she'd tell you who told her so if it wasn't true you could trace it back and see she was clear. I douldn't blame her. .....

.....(apparently Paul or Dave hadn't written Dad for some time when away to school and apparently Dad had written in his letter an old saying that was used in such a situation--"you wouldn't even write to your grandmohher" Dad: I said "you wouldn't even write your grandmother" and he thought I meant it, ha. ha. He said: why, Dad, you must have been miskaken. It must have been Ivan, because I don't remember my granmother..... ha. ha. --it was an old saying. --like Henry Shaver has said: "you wouldn't eat your granmother's cooking". ha. --Dad. (Cars hard to get.) Si: it's been 5 years since the war (broke?) and they..... .. why, Bill Miller's has been trying to get his car and can't get it.

End of first half of Cassette

(Apparently Dad had a sore heal) Si: (joking) get some of that bear grease in there.... It might do it. Dave: how do you know it's bear grease? Si: cause Sharp (Cliff's boys?) rendered it out of a bear, ha. Dad: you can tell cause it smells like it. Si: you can't mistake beargrease!

216

Dad: I'll put some on my heel. Si: put a little on your ear.(sore ear). Dave: Didn't uncle Bob Gibson say it cured his asthma? Si: you know, no germs could live or stay near his ear in that grease; ha, ha.
Dad: to show you I have faith in bear grease I'll put some on top of my head (a cut there?) That's the finest thing for rheumatism I ever tried. My knees was so.... that I could hardly get up, down or any place, and it cured my knees. Yes sir !
(Apparently Dad want to Randolph Co selling honey) Dad: Boys, I had the best hog meat today ! I went to that restaurant--it was 12 o'clock when we got there (Huttonsville?)The boys (Ralph and George--Mabel's uncle) took two hamburgers. I said I'll take ham. They ordered 2 hamburgers. I ordered one ham sandwich but they brought me two. I could n't bite it off and I asked for a paring knife. She found one after a good bit, ha, ha., and I used it. It was good hot lean ham. They enjoyed their hamburgers. I told Ralph he'd better get another glass of milk, so he did. I asked the waitress if there were any girls around there that we could hire that we needdd one at our place. She said "I'm from Mill creek." I asked if she had any sisters that wants to hire out. She said, I had one but she went to N. Y. to her brothers. There were 10 of us in the family and they are all gone and now i'm gone. I'm 13 years old. Si: 13 years old.! ha, ha. Dad: and when the woman made out the bills she skinned out (left). She'd asked who to make the bills out to. I told her to me. She left the girl to bring the bill to me. She (woman?) took a pound of honey. deducted that off. Si: let's see--a pound of honey off--left 72 cents. Dad: It cost me $1.58 with 30 cents off. George said "she charged you awful high, didn't she? Si: what kind of hamburgers were they? Dad: just ordinary hamburgers. Si: they must have charged 25 cents a piece. Dad: They wer big hamburgeers. Si: they used to not be over a dime. Dave: Odie Johnson used to charge a quarter for a hamburter, but he'd give you a big one. What happened to the 13 year old girl? Dad: she brought the bill out and I said $1.58 cents and 30 cents comes off that and she said I already took that off. The ham sandwiches were 25 cents each and the milk must have been 4¢ glass.
(The only Monday in the summer of 1950 was in August)
Dad: this is Monday isn't it? No paper.....
(Dad was sitting in the car and Vonda shut the door on Dad's hand)
Dad: .... and after a bit I got sick. I said "Imm awful sick" and Paul trained in first aid ran to his car and got a kit and gave me some amonia. I fainted away. I didn't know a thing. This up here (demonstrating?) will be worse than that, I believe (2 different cuts?) Dave: did you loose your fingernail? No. it was up on the hand. See there, I guess that's the cause of it. Dave: what is that thing right there(a bump on a finger knuckle)? Dad: well, I guessthat's what started it. Si: that's what we've read about in the papers--some people get them--some kind of arthritis. Dave: maybe you could put some bear grease on it. Dad: Yes, I did. Dave: what are you going to do with that linement? Dad: put on that there. Dave: does it hurt? Dad: now it doesn't hurt. Dave: then why put linement on it? Dad: Old man Ervin, made Ervin linement that smelled just like this and there was a cancer or something like that on a bull's jaw and it took it right off. If it took a cancer off a bull's jaw it ought to take this off my finger. ha, ha, ha. Si: that's not a bump on a bull's jaw. ha, ha. Was he a doctor: Dad: Oh, yes, he was a veterinary doctor. ha, ha. Si: he was a bull doctor. I wouldn't want him to work on me. ha. Dad: He'd doctor anything. He got this bull off of me and cancer came on it. Well, he didn't get it "off" of me, but I sold it to him. ha, ha.---ha if you want me to explain it to you so you can understand it. My boys are a little hard to understand things. ha, ha.--you have to make thingsplain to them, or you can't get them to understand, ha, ha. Dave: what are you going to do about the linement on your fingertonight? Dad: I'll let it dry a little bit and in the morning that thing will be gone--just like that cancer on that bull's jaw. ha. ha. Si said: And so will Mabel.; ha, ha.

Honey

cont'd hamburgers

Stories by L.D.Sharp 6-14-80 (Reel #12) taped by Dave 217

that's bull's jaw. ha. ha. Si said: And so will Mabel ! ha, ha.--smell of that linement and that bear grease ! ha, ha. ha. .....
Dad: she was ready to leave this evening when I came in (late from Randolph co.) ..... I know what we call supper is dinner in the cities. ..... Dave: did you eat in Mill Creek? Dad: no, it was in Huttonsvile.
Dad: Ralph, George and I found out something about Mill Creek. We turned down in the lower end and crossed around and peddled hone to every house on every side and got back on main street. .....
Dad: well, we went through a good part of the city above the road --out toward Pickens. We went ou there about 50 yards and Ralph and I was standing on both sides of the road. .... Ralph said to park here and then you can go up yonder to the bank. I told him that I usually sold honey to the cashier in the bank. So I went up to the bank and I said I didn't expect you'd want any honey because I sold you a case last fall. I wanted to come in and see you anyhow. Another big fine fellowin there. He was in an office space by himself. He said he had plenty . He was awful nice, clever and nice. The other fellow said I believe I'll just take a pound of that honey. On my way back to the car I stopped in at the next house and the lady said "I'd like awful well to have honey. My husband is an insurance agent and he just left to go up to Valley Head. I'll see but I don't know if I've got any money or not. She hustled around and she had 14 cents. I said for her to take the honey anyway, that we'd be coming by here some time and collect. While you're at it take two of them and I'll have something to stop Bor, ha. She said""if you don't care I'll just take two. She gave me the 14 cents and just as got me paid here the man came in, ha. He laughted. He said I'll just pay for it. I was wanting to get the honey sold. By the time I got back, my boys were gone. Car was gone. I walked away up there and sat down, for ¼ hour. Ralph came up in the car and said"do you want a ride? ha. Now we went over some ground, I tell you ! I didn't see brother Brady.
Si: were they (state) working any of the convicts today. Dad: there were about 15 but they had no stripes on them--running a bull dozer etc.
Dad: Ralph said let's go to the penitentiary (to sell) I said we will--they've got to eat, wouldn't doubt but what we can sell them some honey. I said let's go on down and stop there on the way back, but we forgot to.
(Ice Cream) .....Dad: ..... ice cream. Dave: who did? Dad: Ivan did. four pints of ice cream he won. They had a guessing game.... they had some sort of social and he guessed with in a few beans of the number in a pint cup---~~1,200~~ 1,300 andsomething, and he got 4 pints of ice cream free, ha. Ivan said: I know my beans, ha, ha. Dad: I bet he counted a pint of beans before he went there, ha.
.... Dad: if you gave an old ewe two tablets it'd cure her. That surely fixed a $25 ewe. Ralph: maybe she was going to die anyway. Dad: no, she was getting along pretty good. Dave: then Iouldn't have given her pills the. Dad: well, I wanted to clean out what was ailing her.
.... Dad: he'll weigh 800 lbs. Si: he's mowing that grass up there. He'll fatten up. Dad: I paid $175 for him. A cow that size won't bring much. let's see, a 1100 lb cow would bring 15 cents a pound.--maybe $150.
Dave: what can you buy a Jersey cow for. Dad: $500. Si: you're buying a name... Dad: they'd cost $200.... Dave: what ill that old cowom mine bring? Dad: $150 to $175 and the calf $75. Dave: why don't you sell that cow and add a little extra and get a jersey? Dad:.... Dad: boys, that calf I bought from Ivan is really a cow. She's a heffer now and gives a gallon and a half at a miling. I wouldn't take $200 for that heffer.
(End of conversation)

[illegible] ha watched till out of sight.

218

Buying fur, Hatfield gang, Millsboro, Beverly, Last one living Passenger pigeons, old log school house.

(Dad watching Ralph Tiger Jones fight on TV.....)
Dad:"If I weren't so tired I'd go over there to the end of the meadow and start shep. He'd tree a coon right away. He's going to whip that white fellow. He's about got him.... Now, he's about got Jones. Pretty even fight... He's tired." ...(Jones won.)
(Dad playing the organ and doing very well !!) Dave: that's good Dad. Dad: ha, ha, ha. Dave: What's the name of that song? Dad: I don't know--it just came in my head, ha. Dave: who was that woman that shocked hay? Dad: Ronald Pennington's wife. The besh hand I ever had, in the hayfield in my life. She'd run from one shock after she shocked it to the next windrow to get started again. Yes, and the whole day long. She said she learned from Mr. Tyree when she lived there.
Dave: Paul, Dad has a "talk letter" to send you. (this was intended to be mailed to Paul and Vonda, but got misplaced)
Dad: Hellow Paul, Vonda and children. It'd be better to hear you say "hello Dad" and greet me with a kiss. I hope you are all well and enjoying God's richest blessings. I can't stand much hard work anymore. I feel I'm slipping down the evening side of life, but I'm enjoying life and I'm so glad my children are all Christians and seeking that eternal home where we can have a great homecoming xomeday. We'll not be so far apart and be together always. I'm looking forward to that happy day. We gathered 35 gallons of strawberries and our gardens is coming on nicely. We have our sheep sheared and have sold the wool. I made out a little check for your's and Thayer's wool. We're having several bee swarms. One big swarm went off yesterday, but that happens every year. Our Sunday school is holding up good--we have about 60 and that's good for Slatyfork. Well, I've been working hard to build up our church and have at least a few stars in my crown..... saved through our works. ... through the precious blood of Christ, can we be saved. So live close to Him and trust Him and our meeting won't be so far off.....I Ivan and Genevieve and Evan came in a little while ago and Sylvia and Jr. are here to say hello to you. Each of you have our sincere prayers that God will be real good to each of you. So goodbye till we meat again. Lot's of love, from old Dad.
Dave: Paul, I went fishing at the Mill about 3 times and caught a few small ones. We've been here a week--came up Sunday and going back tomarrow, Sunday. I was over to the Friels yesterday and Kerth and I fished down on Greenbrier river, but didn't catch any. I came back to Slatyfork and went over the hill and nailed some boards over the front windows of the old house where someone threw rocks through.
Si: Paul, Vonda, Thayer and Barbara Jane. Dave can't shoot any better than he ever did. Ha, He can make the groundhogs fly. Take care of yourselves. Come up when you can Goodbye.
Ivan: Hello Paul, Thayer, Vonda and Barbara. This is your brother Ivan. I'm getting older. But my youngest son talks courser than I do, so folks on the phone sometimes want me to tell my mother about the affairs of the church etc. Evan and I went over on Dry Branch and fixed some fence. This evening we came up Elk River from Charleston thru by Bergoo and up by Granville Brady's (dry branch) and took the truck part of the way up on the hill. Anyway we worked until after dark and came on over here and ate supper and see the folks and have a good time talking. We wish you were here with us. Best of joy and happiness to you all. Good night.
Dave: I'm having trouble with theforward speed on this recorder.--It slips. I have to rotate it with my finger to keep about the right speed. While I was here we hived about 10 swarms of bees. We doubled up some swarms in order to get enough bees for one hive. (End of 1 side of big reel)

... watched till out of sight.

Dave: this is Oct. 23, 1961. I'm up here seeing Dad, doing some hunting and looking for some chestnuts. I'll see if I can get some stories from Dad. Dave: Dad, tell us about the first money you borrowed and starting in business. Dad: I didn't have any money at all and I borrowed $30 to buy three calves from a neighbor. I borrowed from John B. Hannah for a year and I bought the calves. No, he wasn't a relative, but his son married my sister later on. Considering money then he had plenty. He trusted a 12 year old boy and I invested in those calves and sold them the next year and had $39 profit. I neighbor boy said "Let me have part of that money and we'll invest it in buying furs" He said he noticed at the Edray post office a price list that was away above what people was getting for furs. So Igave him some money and we both bought furs and I doubled my money. So I stared buying fur from that day on and I made double on every shipment. So I finally saddled up an old horse about 20 years old and went all over the country (county) buying furs. Believe me, you don't find many boys 12 years old that would do what (Eddie?) and I did to get started in life. The trip down Elk River: I went about 20 miles on the old horse to my aunts, Melinda Rose (Sarah's sister and stayed all night. Then went down further to a home where they had some prime minks. The old man wouldn't sell them to em. I told him I'd pay him what I could afford to pay. He said "you've got to go 2 miles down to the school house and buy them from the boys. Whatever they take is OK. So I went to the school house and called out the boys and asked what they wanted for the minks. One said "I'll take 25 cents a piece for the mine" I asked the other and he said "I'll take the same for mine" I said "what about the coon hide and skunk. They asked about two prices for them !! -- more than I could get. I said "alright" and paid them for the furs. I came back up and took the hidesoff the boards and put in the sack. The old woman asked me how much I paid for them. I said "I paid them all they asked", ha. I waited till I got the furs in the sack and then I told her I'd paid them 25 cents for the minks. She said "you didn't pay them anything" ! The old man said "now you shut up. This boy said he paid them all they asked for them. ha, ha. So those minks brought me about $3 a piece. From then on I bought fur for 25 years. I finally had 6 men buying fur for me all over the county. That's one way I got my start in business. Yes, I kept going back down Eld river buying fur. I went back to the same place and asked the old man if he had any furs and he said the boys had some. He said to come on in and look them over, so he let me buy them from him!

Dave: Did you pay the $30 back? Dad: Oh, yes, I waited a year. I went back to pay old man Hannah. I didn't know anything about interest or money, ha, ha. I said "here Mr. Hannah is your $30 and thank you for it", ha, ha. He said "that's alright " ha. ha. Dave: maybe he didn't expect any interest from you. Dad: No, I doubt if he'd a charged me for it anyway. , as he thought a lot of my father and mother, ha, ha.

Dave: what about the Hatfield gang? Dad: Well, they wrote me a letter and told me to put $500 in a box up at the old school house and signed it one of the gangs. But"they" weren't the gang. It was a man, they found out later, was a teacher. Down in Webster county. (Doddrill?) was a teacher at one time. He was planning to get this money. I took a box and put it at the school house where they said to put the money--"if not, we're coming after you" So I put the empty box at that place. I went with another fellow and watched for them to come, but they didn't come late in the night. We went up the next morning and there was his trank and he threw the box away about 30 yards from the school. People thought the Hatfields were coming. .....

Dave: you told about the first car coming through here. Dad: it came down Elk by one of the neighbors. 2 of the boys were down working in the field. They'd never seen a car before. One said "look yonder, the horses ran off and the buggy is still going," ha watched till out of sight.

Dave: Where did you see your first train? Dad: I went to Millboro, Va when I was 12 years old with another party after a load of salt--Johnny Slanker, after a load of salt for Hugh Sharp. It was the first train I ever saw--in Millboro. There was another fellow along with me and he went into a saloon and wanted a bottle of liquor and the man said "you're not of age" and he yelled "....give it to me etc. (fast talking) and the saloon keeper gave him the bottle of liquor and he held on to it--(pulling it from the saloon keeper). Another fellow went to Millboro and ..... like I was, and said to the conductor: "I want to take a 25 cents worth of ride". Dave: did you ride it too? Dad: No, I wasn't with that group of wagoners. So that fellow got on to take a 25 cent ride and thought he'd just go few 100 yards, and they said it took him 2 days to walk back, ha, ha. .. He had his horses there ready to haul a load of goods. DAD: there were many funny things that happened away back then. Dave: Whose wagons went to Millsboro? Dad: Everyone, about, in Pocahontas went to Virginia after salt. Farmers, there'd be maybe 3 or 4 wagons with sheets and lay on the ground (at night) Dave: what if it rained? Dad: We'd put the sheets over the wagons, like a covered wagon. and we had blankets. We'd take our food with us in a box to do us 4 days to a week. Sometimes it'd take a week. Others about 4 days. Back then we had some pretty tough times. When I wasgrowing up, we had 3 things for food. We had meat and bread for breakfast, and bread and meat for dinner, and had both of them for supper. ha, ha. And we got along just fine. We could go out and catch a mess of fish or kill all the turkeys we wanted, and there were plenty of deer. I believe the farmers enjoyed life just as much asthey do now with the airplanes and automobiles and the fast life we have today. They'd go to a neighbor's house and spend all day and enjoy the day toghether. Now we're in too big a hurry , only to say howdy-do and goodbye. Dave: You used to take wagons to Mill Creek didn't you? Dad: It was Beverly. I used to haul my .....goods from Beverly (meaning it was shipped by rail to there)) We had our own wagons and horses. One time, another fellow was ..... my horses and wagon. There were two other men's wagons too. One for the store at Linwood and one for Sam Woods at Mingo. Sam Woods had about 4000 lbs of goods and Frank(Hamilton?) (at Linwood) had 2000 lbs and I had about 2000 lbs but mine wasmostly all wire fence. They had about 25 cartons of jars. They stopped near Elkwater to stay all night and they saw a big storm coming and they decided to go up on the hill to stay all night at old man ..... and stay all night. So they put the horses in the barn on the hill on the right hand sid e of the river and they went over to -Coggers?-- There was a cloud burst at Mingo and washed a big heap of logs near Sam Woods store and took away.....the bank, and it came down the valley and washed away the old Stalnaker house that had been there for 50 years, but no one living in it. It picked up all th ree wagons and carried them all away. The had a time getting the wagons back together. They'd find a wheel here and there. But mine, the wire was within a few 100 yards. They got my outfit back gogether again. People said they saw those jars going through Elkins floating on the water. Sam Woods lost about 4000 lbs of all kinds of merchandise. I think I lost a barrel of sugar. The wall of water was from one side of the valley to the other. A man who lived up on a hill went over to see about the flood near our wagons. He heard the roar coming and there was a big pine log about 4 feet over laying over in the field. He ran as hard as he could run to escape and the water to his knees when he got to the bank and he saw that 30 ft long log float away. If my driver and the others hadn't gone to that house to sleep that night, they would have all drowned and the horses too ! It washed the saddle off the manger of a horse(house?) over on the bank or hill, a few100 yards away. I've gone thru many a hard spell in life, but the Lord has been good to me, as I look back over life.

Wagons - flood

(age 89)

Dad: Out of 250 people my age, when about 12 years old, from Mace Mt. to top of Elk Mt.--I figured up sometime ago, of families then, every last one of them have been called away, but L.D. Sharp. I'm the only one that's living of my age. Dave: we hope you live another 98 years. You're a 89 this summer. Dad: well, I like life. I'd like to live forever if the good Lord would leave me. I have ..... and a pretty tough time for a few years. (cancer of prostate. He may or may not have known he had it. If he did he didn't tell us). But I'm not complaining. After the 8th day of June, I'm going on 90. According to nature I can't stay here many more years. Many of the young people possibly may go before I'm called. But one thing sure and I'M certain of, I'm trying to make preparation for my eternal home, so I can be with my mother and father, sisters, former wife and daughters. I'm looking forward to that day to a homecoming and I'm expecting each one of my children to meet with me there on that homecoming day. I'm so glad they have all accepted Christ in early life and I trust they are living true and faithful

(End of 1st side of cassette)

It may not be far off that L. D. will be on the other shore. I'm praying that the Lord will spare my life for a few more years. I'm glad Jr. and Sylvia came to see me. I can't express how I love my children. I can't treat them as I'd like to treat them--by not having or enjoying health like I am. I'd like to be more jolly and go on the mountain (with them) and take a little hunt,--squirrels, and pheasants with Jr. when he was here. According to my health I'm not able to do that. But I'm thankful to be able to go. ..... After death we must meet the judgement. I advise my friends to accept Christ and be saved so we may meet again on the other shore.

Passenger Pigeons: Dave: You used to tell us about pigeons. Dad: Oh, there were thousands of wild pigeons. Thousands come in in one bunch. They'd light right down on the ground and scratch through leaves and eat a ways, they'd fly over the ones ahead of them and start scratching leaves again. .....

...we'd shoot among them sometimes with a musket loading gun --loaded through the muzzle. We didn't have any shotguns then. Still maybe a half a dozen would fall as they flew over. P.....

Pigeons used to roost on trees on Gauley and they nearly broke down a whole pine patch. Thousands and thousands of them. My uncle went in there to see about them. Hundreds of them killed when limbs broke off the trees. (Uncle Harmon?) You can hardly believe it. T Thousands in one cluster of them going through the country. I haven't seen a pigeon for years !

Buggies: Dad: Yes, Ellis Hannah, my brother-in-law bought the first buggy in this country. I had the first cart. I went to Greenbrier county and took a horse with me and bought a 2-wheel cart. I used that for several years. Dave: what did you use it for to ride in? Dad: courting ha, Dave: did you go to see mother in it? Dad: yes, and I married while I had that. I wasone of the first to buy an automobile in the county. There were 3 and I was one of them. I bought a Studebaker. We had muddy roads full of chuck holes. You couldn't go 50 MPH like you can now. (bought it about 1914-1915) Between here and Marlinton, one time, I had 3 flat tires--sharp rocks in the road. (Singing)--Dad: Yes, we've sung at several homecomings in the past few years in different counties. One had 15,000 people. Yes I've been choir director at the church for severa years. When I was 12 years old my father went me to a singing school and when the school was over they elected one person to lead the choir (group) for three months. Different ones were elected--Harry Jackson, Bob Gibson, Ellis Hannah, and that boy "LD, 12 years old wre elected for 3 months. I can remember it as well as yesterday. I got up before the congregation and my knees just as yesterday. I got up before the congregation and my knees just bumped together--I was so excited. But now 10,000 people doesn't have any effect on me. At one of the homecomings they just had our group of singers. Someone from another church told us they enjoyed our singing and wanted us to be at their homecoming. Once we had about 8 in the choir and we went to the Indian Draft church homecomming.....

222 Stories by L.D.Sharp 10-23-61 (Reel #"61") taped by Dave Page 5 222

Dave: Did they teach you to keep time when you were in singing school?
Dad: Oh yes, and we used shapped notes and I use them yet today. I can read the shaped notes off faster than the round notes. They've envited us to some homecomings lately but I'm not able to go--been sick. I can't carry on like I did. I guess I'll have to give it up, I reckon.
(Land inheritad) Dave: Didn't your parents give you some land and some to your sisters? Dad: They gave me a tract of land where we lived (the old home place over the hill)--over at the old place and gave each of them (sisters) 200 acres of land. The only money my father gave me in my lifetime--for he wasn't able to give me any--he gave me $50. He sold some timber and gave each of us, Ella, Melinda and myself $50 each. Melinda got her land over on Slatyfork (up the mountain from Slatyfork creek above Lowell Gibson's present camp) , and Ella got the Alum Rock place (on left side of Slatyfork creek--there's powdery alum (vein under a cliff near the creek 1 or 2 hundred yars above line fence) --200 acres there.....Melinda got hers back on top of the mountain (Buzzard?)
Dave: Who owned the land on Elk where Ella lived. Dad: Old man Billy Gibson. Dave: Who owned that place where Harry Varner lives. Dad: that was part of the same place. I've been there a many a time. Ella married old man Billy Gibson's son, Robert and they lived at that place (Varner place?) for several years until old man Bill giave them the Bob Gibson place when he (Bob?) built up there. I went to a dance near there when I was about 18, and I slipped off from home. There were 36 there at the dance at old man Jim Gibsons and every last one of them are dead except L.. D. Sharp ! So I've been thankful the good Lord has spared my life as long as he has. (Story of the dance in another section).
Dave: Didn't your dad help build the old log school you went to? Dad: Or yes, I was only 3 years old. I saw them building that house. My father took me up there. You wouldn't think one could remember back till he was 3 years old. But I heard my parents speak about it so much. I saw them building that shhoolhouse and I saw old man Painter selling it inside and running a plane. I saw them making the blackboard. Ella and Melinda was older so they went to school a few 100 yards from home. They'd take the 3-year old kid there before it got too cold several times. They'd take the blanket (another place in these series he mentioned a sheepsking) for me to lay on. They had long benches about 10 feet long on both sides of the schoolhouse. I'd come out of the school to go home and my mother would watch for me. She could see the little white headed boy coming running down the road for dinner. I'd said "I'm coming home to eat gravy with mom. ha, ha.
Dave: Dad, I thank you for these stories. I'll keep them and it'll be nice to play them back from time to time.
(end of #"61" tape and end of Cassette-(side 2)

Stories and history of the Slatyfork,W.Va. Sharps by L.D.Sharp, taped 10-5-54 by Dave Sharp 0-54)

227

Excerpts from a taped, intended, letter to Paul and Vonda in Texas, by"LD", Si and Dave.
Dad on History: Grandmother Hannah said our forefathers came from foreign countries-- German, Englis, Irish etc. I was 12 years old when my father let me buy a mountain rifle-- muzzle leader. That first year I kept a diary of what I killed and remember distinctly I killed 16 grey squirrels, 3 wild turkeys and I forget how many pigeons. There were pigeons s'ore ey the thousands and 100s of thousands and reared like a train coming. But that is over. I've been hunting the past (82 years of age) One time back on Slatyfork mountain I saw 3 pretty black hogs coming down the mountain that I thought belonged to mr Varner, Ben Varner, and when they came closer, I saw they were a big bear and two cubs and they came down in front of me and wallowed in the little run and I had a single shot Winchester. I kept my eye on them and thought as soon as they got up I'd try to kill one of them I'd shoot the old one and maybe have a chance killing the others. So when they came outt of there they jumped on a big log and ran about 20 steps from me and I hollered "halt". I'd heard my father say at a bear you had to holler "halt" to get them to stop. There was a big tree, right as the bear jumped beside this tree I hollered "halt" and it wassn't like a deer they finished their jump right then. She stopped behind the tree and I could only see a part of her. I moved back (in the other direction?) there was a tree beside that one. There was a cub on the leg and I shot and it fell off down over the hill. There was quite a bit of snow on and I tried to get another shell in and kept trying to put the shell in with my fingers, single shot, and the old big bear jumped off that leg dst as I get the shell going in the gun, right off toward me. She thought the sound was below. She lookded down the hill. I could just see her neck where a little bit of her head looking down the other way. The sound echoed down the other way for her. She jumped within 15 feet of me and I just jerked the gun down and fired at her and missed her. But I was scared nearly to death. And she ran down over the hill and I ran around the hill to head them off at--I knew they'd come off at the highway (old road) and they'd likely come around to where there was a pine patch where they usually cross. I stood there a good bit and then came back to where I was at and went down to where this one fell off the leg and there was blood all over the ground on both sides. They'd come back and went right up the hill where I could have shot at them for 100 yards I reckon. while I was standing down there waiting for them to come around to me.I went up on the little flat, there was a laurel patch there and I went in. I ventured into that laurel patch , and I saw where the old big one and the other cubs had stopped there with this one that had laid down that was badly wounded. So I heard them tear out of that laurel patch. There was blood where the cub bear laid. So I went over about 200 yards and got sshaky-like. and I went down to Mr. Warners and told him I thought I'd killed a bear and for him to come up and help me take a stand, so he did. He took a track and told me to go up on the ridge and when I went up there, the bear had already gone through. So he said don't go any further. We'll go back home and get Henry Sharp's bear dog and come back in the morning and we'll go after them. So he was scared and didn't want to go any further. --because....I'd hid behind a tree and jumped at him and got his nerves ha. ha. ha. I came home that night and we were out of weed and my fahher said we'd have to get weed , and itsnowed about a foot that night. He said "why, these bear would go for 10 miles tonight. You'd never find them" He talked me out of going back the next morning. The fellows who followed them from Clever Lick, Woods Billey, he asked about 2 weeks from then " who killed one of these cubs" ? He'd followed them over there and went back the next morning and they jumped up on the Johnsen's flat, just a few 100 yards from where we left them, and there were two of them & knew someone killed one of these cubs . It snowed all over this dead bear and I lost my first kill.

I've had quite a lot of exeerience in my 82 years of living and hunting from the time I was 12 years old and killed quite a number of wild turkeys. One time I was over on Gaulley where there were plenty of deer. I killed 7 deer in 3½ days hunting. Of course, I've killed a deer each year until last year. I got my dear almost ever year till last year. Ifailed last year. They allowed killing does and fawns the last 2 years and they've about killed most of the deer out of around Slatyfork. Hardly any deer around here any more.

I've had the great sport fishing. I've caught a great many of trout. I enjoy hunting very much, but I'm getting most too old to get over the hills. I've not been very strong lately, so have to hunt around on level land, mostly. I haven't been able to find any turkeys yet., but we hope some one runs some through that I might have a chance to kill one.

Dad telling names of parents etc.: My father was Silas Sharp, my mother was Sarah Sharp. (Silas called her "Sally") Grandfather William Sharp, Grandmother Rachael Sharp (was a Bilby). There were 7 childre of William. There were 3 of them killed during the Civil War.--3 boys. My father was captured (as a civilian) and served 23 months and 24 days in prison in Salisbury . N. C. They stared them to death there by the thousands and I was going through there going to Florida and there was an old man there and I was talking to him and asked where the prison was and he was pointing out that the prisons were more like barns., and he said they all starved to death and what wasn't starved was poisoned. I said "no, they weren't--my father was exchanged a few days before the war ended and that he lived --he lived through all that but said thousands of them starved to death" he said; "oh no" this old man, he's getting old and childish said "no, no, there wasn't any of them that got out--every one of them died , my father didn't die they poisoned them" ha, ha, He contradicted my story of my father living through it. . But it was terrible what they went through.

David Hannah was my grandfather Hannah. Grandmother Hannah's name was Hester. They had a large family. There were two of the boys that died during the war with diptheria. Cut their family down.---mother's brothers. One (another) was a preacher. They were all very religious . George P. Hannah was the preacher (brother of Sarah, Dad's mother.) I think I had one of the best mothers that ever lived. I guess most everyone also thinks the same about theirs". My father was a great man, a good man, a good religious man. My mother was outstanding in every way. She was good to the sick and anyone she could help. One thing I'm grateful for is that I had good Christian parents.

My Dad's (Silas') brothers were: Henry, Bernard, Harmon, and Hugh and one sister, I think her name was Margaret, but she died with diptheria during the war. (burried below the store, left of the road on the high bank). The 3 boys that were killed was Luther, I was named after him., Henry and Bernard. Margared was 12 years old. Took diptheria. It sure was a hard stroke on my grandparents to loose that many of their family--four out of 7. Only three lived through the war. One of the boys was found with an apple in his pocket and my grandmother planted the 7 seeds from this apple and only 3 of them grew. She gave one of the trees to uncle Harmon Sharp and one to my father (Silas) and one to uncle Hugh. These trees grew up and bore fruit for many years. It lookedd like they represented --to show that just 3 lived through this seige, the grea t Civil War.

My first wife's name was Laura Morgan and she was a preacher's daughter. There were about 5 in in that family--Bill Morgan, Edgar Morgan Ninnie Morgan, Lena Morgan and Laura Morgan, my wife. (Edith was the mother of the children).

My sisters were: Ella Gibson (Mrs. Robert Gibson) and Malinda Hannah (Mrs. Ellis Hannah). Bothe were older. Malinda was 5 years older and Ella 3 years older. Malinda lived to be 85 years old and Ella must have been about 80. They lived about 4 miles from Slatyfork (on Elk) When I was a boy there was quite a number of people living on Elk and Linwood and out of maybe 200 or more there was, two years ago, only 6 of them living along my age and they've all died off. (End of first side of large reel tape).

In the past 2 years theyve dropped off and now I'm the only one that's left of these my age--about 80. I'm 82. I'm the only one that's living of that great number of people that lived here on Elk. Whole families have passed on. So, I'm going yet pretty strong--not like I used to, but I don't know how long the good Lord will leave me here. But I hope to live on so to meed these great many people I knew in my boyhood days.

Meeting Laura (mother): Well, I went to a pichic, first one I'd ever been to in my life, and my wife had visited this picnic with another girl, so I took a fancy to her actions, and meeting with her she seemed to talk so nice. I asked her if she'd take a ride with me in a swing, ha. ha. So that was the beginning of our courtship at this picnic, the first one I ever attended. After I was there with her there a few hours, I thought one day I'll write her a letter--a nice letter and see if I might have a date. And so that was the start of my courtship as best as I can remember. It was near Linwood--about 3 miles from here. The first time I ever drank lemonade was a t this picnic, ha. I thought it was something wonderful ! There hadn't been any in the country up to that time that I knew of. I thought the girl was more wonderful (than the lemonade) ha, ha. And she was so nice and every time I went to see her I thought she was the "only girl on the beach" ! ha. and finally we got married. I won the battle. To see her I had to go horseback them. Didn't have any cars, and really no buggies in this section of the country. I did win out even if I did go slow, ha, ha. Yes

Typed 3-28-80

225

Yes, I did have competition, but I was the best looking boy, ha, ha. ha. (joking). No, I don't mean that, ha. Any way my winning ways (joking) must have had something to do with me winning her. Because she was so fine. She was preparing to teach school. I changed her mind after we long and she became a great housekeeper.

had a nice family of 7 children. And one of the greatest things of all is that.... there was one of them, only about 16 (18) (Creola) just finishing highschool took sick and came home and died....but one great consulation is as I started to say is that my 6 children living, they've all established families except one who is not married and they are all Christians, living for that heavenly home we might someday enjoy. Countless ages of eternity together and it gives me great joy to know that they are all living for Christ.

buggy

Mode of traveling when a boy: Horseback and "footback" ha, ha. We either had to walk or ride a horse. I never had an automobile untill about 1915. Well, I don't know... a few years before that I bought a buggy and maybe a couple of them,---I were them pretty well out--about 1900. They didn't cost but about $100 to $125 and maybe not that much. We ordered them from Cincinnati from a factory there.

The first automobile I'd seen, a Dexter fixed up some kind of a meter on a buggy. He ran about 6 miles an hour. He drove around a few times here on Elk with that meter. I guess he fixed it up himself, to run that buggy. He had some kind of a steering arrangement. I'd seen him once or twice--maybe 3 times.

first one that came down Elk, it came over a hill and 2 neighbor boys, they yelled "look the horse ran off and there away from the buggy and the buggy is still going yet. Look a t it going yet" (probably an appropriate joke for them to tell on that occasion !).

They didn't have telephones then. My first telephone was around maybe 1900 or ? (1993-1994) People thought it was something wonderful when we had the phone put in and one about 12 miles away (at Edray) Some asked if the messages came in to our phone over a hollow wire. I told them it was a solid wire. Phones must have been cheap then. You could buy a pair of shoes for $1.25 that'd cost $6 or $8 new. Coffee cost.... we sold coffee a t 12 cents and 15 cents when we started the store. Now it cost $1 to $1.25. Flour sold for about $4 a barrel in wooden barrels. Your dollar was worth something then. I think we were as well off then as we are today.

End.

PS Dad's children were: Ada (married John Johnson and then Will Curtain), Violet (married Rufus Markland) Ivan (married Genevieve Cruderff of Arbovale), Creola who died at age of about 18., Silas of Slatyfork, Paul (who married Vonda Lowe of Buckhannon, and after her passing married Ketha of Port Neches Texas, and Dave who married Sylvia Friel of near Marlinton.

Stories & History of the Slatyfork W. Va. Sharps

Stories and History of the Slatyfork, W. Va. Sharps, by L. D. Sharp, taped 12-25-59, age 87 & 6 mo
(Taped by Dave Sharp) 226

(Dave: who were the first in Pocahontas county to own automobiles?) The first I knew of was Ace Barlow at Edray, Bowd Hannah on Elk and L. D. Sharp, myself. We bought the first few cars I know of in this county and they were Studebakers. Later on people began buying the Fords and different makes of cars. (Dave: Did you have any trouble with them running in the ruts that the wagons made?) That's all they had to run in, you might say, because of dirt roads. They weren't very wide and the wagons cut ruts in the roads. They had a let of trouble with the blowing out by stones and the bad roads. We had dirt roads. We had to keep them up. Each farmer worked, I believe 3 days or 5 days a year free to keep up the ruts such as we had. The government didn't pay any money for to keep them up. Farmers had to keep up the roads so they could travel. (Dave: what about gasoline in these days?) We didn't know anything about gasoline until we got the cars, and then we got the cars. Then someone in Marlinton set up a gas station and furnish us with gas. We'd get a barrel at a time. That's about as much as I'd get when I first started handling gas. But these others buying cars, ones already had them. Bowd Hannah was about as close to me any one else. He'd buy 60 gallon barrel at a time. We had ordinary pumps in order to pump it out into our cars. That was a pretty rough way to get along. We thought it was something wonderful. (Dave: what about that telephone line, which way did it come in here the first time?) It come throught from Randolph county. Dr. Bosworth was the first to come through and built the lines. There was one phone at Dr. Cameron's (Mace) and one at Mingo at Sam Woods store and I took a phone and so did George P. Moore at Edray, and Marlinton was the next place they were supposed to have telephone service. (Dave: could you call Marlinton from here?) No. We could call the office there, but didn't have any regular operaters to call for us. Yes, the phone line went on through to Marlinton. And they had a contract with some of the people at Marlinton to pay so much money to Dr. Bosworth for bringing the line throught to Marlinton. Yes, I think those were the first phones out of Marlinton (back thru to Elkins, I guess he meant) (Dave: In other words the line ran this way instead of down Greenbrier River). I don't know how long it was before the line went on down through Greenbrier county and up also up through the head of Pocahontas county--not very long after they found out what a great blessing it was to have a phone and talk over the wires. Different ones asked me how you talked over it, saying "The wire is hollow isn't it"? I said "no, the wire isn't hollow. Electriety in the wire. They could hardly believe that. And they were so excited they, at Edray, the preacher wanted to sing a song and he'd sing soprano and I'd sing tenor. So we sang over the telephone 12 miles away! He sang one part and I sang another and we thought that was wonderful. We sang together and 12 miles apart. Oh, it was hard to make people believe that we didn't talk through a hollow wire, ha. ha. (Dave: what about the first automobile that came down through Elk from Marlinton?) Yes the first one came down throught by a home up here and a couple boys out in the field and it came down the road and one of them hollered: "Look yonder, a horse has run off and with a buggy and it's going yet. There's no horse to it--it's torn loose--and it's going yet". ha. What a great laugh about it later on. They couldn't believe it possible that something likem that could go without horsepower. (Dave: didn't someone on Elk call on the Party line that a horse ran away and for them to stop it?). No. not that I know of, ha. ha. I don't remember. (Dave: where did you kill your first deer--back there on the mountain?) I couldn't answer that. I think it was back on Slatyfork, and Uncle Hugh Sharp, I killed a fawn. He said it belonged to his pet deer, Nanny. He had about 12 or 13 pet deer and he said "thats one of my deer you've killed, I believe. He didn't care about me killing it, but he said that one was one of old "Nannies"(name of his deer) fawns that I killed. and It might have been, ha, ha. I don't know, ha. ha. I wasn't looking for any brand or name. (Dave: what kind of gun did you kill it with?) I don't know--I can't answer that. I had, I think a rifle I got. I had a rifle and a muzzle loaded rifle--that's the kind of gun I had first, and it might have been it. (Dave: what di d you do with that gun?) I just don't know at all for my life what ever happened to that gun. It'd be a relic now, wouldn't it? (Dave: How many pheasants have you killed this year?) Well, it may be against my religion, ha, ha, ha. I don't know what the limit (Dave: say if the limit was 40 how many did you kill?) If the limit was 40 I guess I killed something less that that, ha. ha, I missed several, though. Well, if you're going to take me to court--to to take it down (tape it) for the fact, it was 13. Well now, don't take me to court and have me fined, ha, ha. (Dave: you'd say before the judge

(226)

Typed 2-28-80

ories & History of the Slatyfork,W.Va. Sharps by L.D.Sharp,taped 12-25-59 age 87 & 6 mo. 227 over there in court that you killed 13?) Ha, ha, well if I went before him I'd have to say it. I won't swear to a lie, ha. (Dave: how xix many did you kill last year?) I didn't get any last year. I only got 2 squirels. I had to go to the hospital (prostate operation ? and I didn't get to take a stand for a deer. So I missed last year. I had the priviledge of shooting at one this year, but it stopped in a big patch of brush--too thick to get the bullet through to it. I thought I might kill it anyway, but missed. And my gun got clogged up (jammed) and I couldn't get any other shots and it got away. What is that flying over there? Violet. I saw a robin out there. (Dave: yes it is. It's Dec. 26th) It flew down in the pathway and up in that tree and then flew over in the garden. (Dave: Violet, do you know this gentleman sitting here? who is he?) (Violet: Well, this is my father, my very devoted father) (Dad proudly laughed, ha, ha, ha.) (Dave: how many Christmases have you seen?) XXXXXXXXXXX(Violet: I just can't say that, I'd rather not, but it's been several. But this is the first Christmas I've been in here since 1917. 40 years since I've been to Slatyfork,for Christmas.) Dad: You see, the reason she doesn't want to tell her age, she lost her husband and looking for another, ha, ha, ha. (Violet: well it'd be awful hard to find anyone as good as he was. So I think they're very scarce). (Dave: how many of your kids were in here this time, all of them?) Well there was Violet from Richmond, Va.; Paul from Texas. Ivan and Genevieve and their son from Charlesten, and Si living here with me. IT's xxxx a great joy of having them with me for the Christmas holidays and celebrate the birth of Christ. It's been about the most enjoyable hellidays I've ever spent, I think. It's going to be very sad with them going out tonight and along in a few days--next week. It makdes it very sad to have them to leave us. We pray the Lord to take care of them. We commit them in to His hands to take them back safely to their place of abode or living,-- where they work to make a living. We're awful glad to have them. I cannot express in words. I can hardly think about it without shedding tears. If they all left at one time, I don't believe I could stand it. Some are going tonight aand tomarrow and next week. They'll drop off gradually and I'll live it through, but it's hard to give them up. We'd like them to stay on and on, like we used to have them around our fireside and our house, and we enjoyed their presence day in and day out. The way circumstances are, they're scattered far, and so we're certainly thankful to the good Lord that they have been with us and giving them health and strength to make thejourney--coming in to see old Dad and xx meet together and be together. I can't express in words how I appreciate it. (Violet: you know Dave and Sylvia are here too.) Oh, pardon me, Jr. was handling this machine (tape recorder) and I forgot, ha, ha, ha. I call him Jr. Dave and Sylvia pardon me. There is som many of them I have so many children, ha, ha, ha. I think of them as much as any of my children. That was just a slip of my mind. I was past 21 on my last birthday, so you may know why I'm just forgetful--being that old--past 21. If you ask how much past that, I was 87 the 8th day of June, last June. 87 years and 6 months, since I came into this world. Don't seem but a short time. Don'tx seem but a few years since I used to go to school up there at the top of the hill--about 80 years ago,,(school across old road from cemetary)--when I was first going to school--past 80 years ago when I first went to school. But it don't seem but a short time. So if any of you hearing me talking, If you think you'll live to be old and it'll be a long time for life. But it'll slip by before you know it, if the Lord spares your life, it'll be over before you know it. So it doesn't seem long since I went to school and lived with my mother and dad and sisters. But according to nature and all, like that, I can't expect to be here that much longer. So the main thing I think is for each one of us to live for .....

.... when least expected, and we find that is true. When one of our loved ones who goes out in just moments of time, so many people dying of heart trouble, and one way or another. (Dave: what's going on?) (Ketha, said : we're fixing to eat phesant) (all laughing and talking at one time) (Violet: Bet your fingers out of there (apparently they were weighing themselves on a part of bathroom scales) Dad: He's recording all that. (Ketha: Dave what are you doing?)(Genevieve: he's recording--we'll play it back.) (Ketha: I weight weigh 135) (Genevieve: I do too.) (Dave: How much do you weigh Paul?) (Paul: I weigh, with this heavy underwear and shoes 219 lbs.) (Genevieve: Violet wants to weigh her shoes.) (Dave: How much is that Lila?) (Lila: 140 even) (Dave: Come on Violet, comeon Helen) (Genevieve: come on Si, Dave , Evan .....(Dave how much do you weigh Evan?) (Evan: 155) .. .. (Helen? 126) ..... more talking. (Si is now playing piano over in the parlor. It's far from recorder so low volumn on the recorder)

227

Stories & History of the Slatyfork, W.Va. Sharp's by L.D.Sharp, ta ped 12-25-59 age87 & 6 mo.

(Dave: Dad, lets get some recording of your singing. When did you start?) Well sir, I started singing when I was 12 years old. My father sent my sisters Ella, Malinda and myself to a singing school. We went to two terms. I forget who the professer was that taught the singing school, up at the old log school house below Mary's Chapel Church (on Elk). That was the only church on Elk. They had the singing, preaching service and all the meetings in this old school house. And after they had the school closed, they decided to let the leaders carry on the singing. So they decided electing leaders for 3 months. And in electing, they elected Bob Gibson and Elis Hannah (maybe father of Russell Hannah?) and Curry Jackson and Dave Gwinn and L. D. Sharp, just a boy 12 years old. So I had more nerve than I had brains, ha, ha. So went ahead just the same. It came my turn. I remember it as well as if it were yesterday when I went up on the platform to lead the singing. My knees shnoock so, I could hardly keep them from bumping together and it was hard for me to stand on the floor.. I was awful bashful. But I've kept on singing all those many years. I'm 87 years old the 8th day of June. and I've been leading choirs ever since a boy 12 years old. And now it has no effect on me. I've been before a few thousand people leading our choir from Slatyfork. We've had a good many choirs in the last 60 years and we've had some awful good ones. It doesn't make me afraid or nervous or anything. I can go before these thousands as well as I could , or better than I could when I was 12 years old among my own friends and neighbors. (Dave: haven't you been superintendent of Sunday School many years?) Oh yes, I was superintendent and taught Sunday School. I've gone to church every Sunday I was able to go that I remember of since I was quite a small child. When I was too small to go, of course my mother and dad took me. They were both devoted Christians. And they'd take me to church when I was so small. I believe in that so much. The Bible says bring up a child when it is young and when it's old it won't depart from it. The trouble today is that so many people don't pay any attention to their children. Just left them grow up among all kinds of charcters and it's bringing it's results to most of the yong people. So many of them are going astray.....

I enjoy life, even at my age. I'd like to live on, if it's the Lord's will. But I know according to nature I can't live many more years. I've thought over it a lotm of times--several years. Three score and ten, but if it is his will I'd like to live just forever, even though I have lots of trials and troubles and disappointments and sorrows, Yet, I enjoy life. But I know it's better on beyond. (Dave : your dad's name was Bill?) William. (Dave: how much of this ground did he own around Slatyfork--most of it?) Well, Grandfather Sharp owned about 2,000 acres, and then he bought the place for Harmon Sharp (at the forks of Elk River, Big Spring Creek and Lawrel Run running off Gauley mountain). My mother and father sold live stock and helped pay for it. He promised to buy them a farm where it was level . Instead he bought him a tract of land just across the hill from where he lived--several hundred acres, but it was all in green timber. And my father had to go in that green timber and clear out fields to lay out his corn and wheat, oats and things that took care of us through life---food. My mother made clothes and my father made our shoes and we had an awful hard time of it, but we had plenty to eat such as it it was. We didn't have any canned fruit. It was all dried apples and dried berries, but they dried an awful lot of fruit. We didn't know what a can was. I didn't see a can when I was a small--like the cans today. But there was nothing better than a dried apple pie! We liked the way we had to live. We enjoyed it as much as we do now with all our conveniences, automobiles, etc. (Dave: what kind of lights did you use?) We had candle-. They killed a beef and used the fat, I mean tallow. They had candle moulds--makes six candles at a time. . And we thought we had a wonderful light when one had a candle light. They had flints back in my earlier days, where you had a flint rock and they had a spunk (soft dead pith wood in logs) and they would strike that flint and it knocked sparks in that spunk and set it a fire and get the fire started that way, and my father and mother had little twists of paper on the mantle that they'd reach and get one of them and put it in the fire and light their candle with it. We didn't have the conveniences of this day and time. (Dave: did you have to make your own sugar?) We made our own sugarx. My father and mother told us when we made it, we had to make, I think it was, a 100 pounds of maple sugar and then we could have the rest of it made up in molasses. And we children would work hard because we liked the molasses so well we'd get that 100 lbs of sugar. We had to have that before there was any molasses made.

228

Stories & History of the Slatyfork, W.Va. Sharp's by L.D.Sharp, taped 12-25-59 age 87 & 6 mo.
(Dave: what about mineral rights on the land?) Yes, I own the mineral rights. It'd never been sold. My father gave 400 acres: 200 to Elbn and 200 to Malinda. Ella (sold) kept her mineral rights. On her piece of land there was an alum rock and there were nugets that looked like gold or silver. They may become valuable some day. (That alum rock is a few 100 yards above the Sharp line on Slatyfork, Greek, just across the creek and up against the bank about 20 feet.), but she sold the land. But she may have kept the mineral rights. (Dave: Dad, --about the old mill down here. Did you have it built?) Uncle Sam Gibson and Tetrick a man named Tetrick. They got the land off of Uncle Hugh Sharp. He gave them the land to build the mill. And didn't charge them a penny for it. They built the mill and then ran it for a good while and they had an "up and down" saw attached. They sawed a lot of lumber there. They had a place to run up logs, and they could saw lumber. And could grind their grists if they wanted to. Finally at last, Brice Griffin bought it off of them for just a song and he ran it for 10 or 15 years, I expect. Couldn't grind over 15 bushels in a day's time. When they first had the contract the man who put the mill up contracted, guaranteed to grind so much an hour. They ground flour ..... The old mill rocks are down there yet, laying out on the ground. --The corn rocks and the flour rocks. (Dave: didn't Willie Gibson have a key for it and worked there?) He may have. Brice Griffin died. In his Will it was to be sold and the money to be given to his mother. Others bid against me. I didn't want anyone to get in there that was undesireable and it was up to me to buy that land back. The Mill was was gone down from the few years standing there. It wasn't used any more and it cost me $500 to get that piece of land that Uncle Hugh Sharp gave to Uncle Sam Gibson and Tetrick. I've given that land to Silas Sharp, my son. (Dave: did you run the mill some yourself?) No. I never. I had it run. I take that back. I got old man Elbon and his son Charlie to remodel that mill. I'm forgetful. I bought 50 bushels of wheat from Sam Moore at Edray and I ground all that wheat into flour. And I ground corn to meal. I didn't grind any for other people. I may have had Brice Griffin run it a while before he died, but i'm forgetful (he couldn't have had Brice, as Brice died and it was sold at auction to Dad--?) I didn't grind for others. You got a gallon out of a bushel for toll (for grinding it) So it didn't pay me to grind for others. (Dave: was it Henry Gibson's father, Sam Gibson that built it?) Yes, he and Tetrick ..... they built the first mill. There was a corn mill over at where Barney Showalter lives (Bill Gibson place across the creek from the church.) Andy Hannah, took it over from his father John Hannah who had it built. He ran it for years. I remember taking corn there to grind.
(Dave: did you buy any mill stones?) Yes, I bought from old man McLaughlin who had a mill for 40 years, I reckon. There's where i got the last corn stone and the flour stone--I bought from old man George McLaughlin over above Marlinton. Had them hauled over and had Elbon's put them on the mill to grind. They cost several hundred dollars (new) shipped from foreign countries--France. But I didn't pay much for them. They were doing him no good. I got them very cheap. If someone wanted to put in a mill they'd be just first class--corn meal and flour. People and times a re too fast now, you know, to stop to grind any corn.

Chas Elbon

229

History, Stories, Thoughts and Advice--Taped of L.D.Sharp 8-29-59 by Paul L. Sharp (Copy 1)
AGE 87 --Dec. 1980----Re-taped on Cassette and typed by Dave Sharp

In the presence of Paul, Ketha and Violet, Dad was asked to sing and did: " When the Roll is Called Up Yonder". Then they ate supper. On tape: Si played some good piano music.

Dad: Well, I was 12 years old when my Dad sent me and my two sisters to a singing school. And after we went to two singing schools, they elected what they called chorus leaders. They elected different ones for 3 months, and in electing the offices they elected the little boy 12 years old--that little boy was L. D. Sharp. The first time I got up before the congregation I couldn't keep my knees from clapping together. I could hardly stand on the floor. And I served out my three months and when it came another term (turn) I was elected again. I'm 87 years old and I've been singing and leading groups of singers since I was 12 years old,,and since that time going to different counties,, taking our groups. At one state song service they said there were 15,000 people there and getting up before large congregations didn't have any effect on me. I got so it doesn't have any effect to get up before large congretgations because I have been used to it. I often think how hard it was for me to stand before the congregation to lead the first songs I ever tried to sing. We've gone to different counties and gone over into the state of Virginia to a homecoming and were called to Greenbrier county to a homecoming 2 years ago, and they wanted the Slatyfork group of singers. So we took our group to this homecoming. We thought there'd be several groups of singers there. There were several preachers there and a very large crowd--some from California. To my surprise and disappointment, you might say, they depended entirely on the Slatyfork choir. We got a great deal of praise and I was very proud of our group of singers because they did a good job. I love to sing. I hope to someday to be able to sing after this life is over. I do the best I can here, but I'm looking forward to the day that I can really sing when I join the choir in heaven with the angels. (Knowing Dad and his intense love of music, that is exactly what he is doing now!) I'm looking forward to that day. I enjoy attending church and helping with the singing. We've done it several times at home comings this year, and we got a wonderful lot of praise at them, and I believe they really did enjoy the music--our singing.

Paul: Could you say some things about your family?

Dad: I have a whole lot to say about my individual family. We had seven children in the family and they all accepted Christ from the age of 8 to 12 years old. I'm certainly proud of that. And I'm proud of my father and mother of the lives they lived. Because I don't know what would have happened to me if I'd had parents like a great number of people have. They never attend church and live wicked lives. But my father and mother when we were growing up, they were so strict on us that the first pocket knife I ever bought, my mother said: "now don't use that pocket knife on Sunday or you'll lose it, ha. ha. and I believed it for a long time. I'd use it during the week and on Sunday I'd lay my pocket knife away. So I'm glad when we retired when the day came to a close, that my mother (I had two sisters) would say "come here and say your prayers before you go to bed" and we'd say our little prayers, as children commonly are taught : "now I lay me down to sleep, I pray the Lord my soul to keep, and if I should die before I awake, I pray the Lord my soul to take" So, then, we learned to bend our knees while we were so young, and I'm so proud of that, so proud of our early training. The Bible says: Bring up a child when it is young and the way it should go, and when it is old it will not depart from it" . And I'm glad my children are following the steps of their mother and their father and trying to live for Christ, and it gives me great joy to think of the great homecomings we attended during the past years and this year, But I'm looking forward to the day when we'll have a great homecoming that will be worth while!--that we'll all meet together at that great homecoming after life is over. That'll be the greatest joy of anything a person can think of.

So many parents never take their children to church, never bring them as they should be brought up. A number of families, as many as 12 at Slatyfork who never attend church. It hurts me that the parents would bring up children so irreverant, not to love their Lord and master while they're young. So I'm certainly thankful that my children came a long distance to visit their old Dad and loved ones here. They haven't been able to come all at one time. But Paul and Ketha and Violet are here now and others have been coming. Before this, Junior (Dave) and his wife and Ivan and his family and Will Curtain (Ada's Husband) has been in visiting us. So we certainly do appreciate that. One thing we grieve about is that they take such a short stay and we hate to see them leave us without staying longer with us--for we enjoy their company so much. As I understand it, Paul and his wife and Violet are going to leave us in the morning and it makes me feel sad that they're leaving us. We'll be very lonesome after they leave, because theyve been such company to us.

231

History, Stories, Thoughts and Advice--Taped of L.D.Sharp 9-29-59 by Paul Sharp
Re-taped on Cassette and type Dec. 1980 by Dave Sharp

Copy 1

Paul: what about your father etc. He was in prison once.

Dad: ha. ha. He'd done no crime or anything like that to get in prison, ha. People'd think he had done a terrible crime. No. It was the time of the Civil War. He was living in his home, living a quiet life, harming nobody. The Rebel soldiers came and captured him when he was just in his prime of life. He really wasn't on either side. The people didn't know which side they should join at the beginning or out-break of the war. So they took him to prison and he served 23 months and 24 days in Salisbury, N. C. where they starved thousands to death. I had 3 uncles who were killded during the Civil War. Bernard Luther, and Henry. Luther was only 16 years old and the Rebel soldiers came running down the valley and his mother yelled out "look out, yonder comes the rebel soldiers"and this boy took to the hill back of our (this) house and only 16 years old . Old Jake Simmons was following behind the group of soldiers that were running down the valley and he shot this 16 year old boy and killed him. It was the same time they captured my father and took him to prison. The other two boys were in the army when they were killed. One was a rebel and the other was a yeankee. (Dad may have told us one other time he wasn't sure one was a rebel).

Paul: You were right here on the border between the North and South, and your family tried to remain neutral and couldn't do it. Dad: And they really didn't know. I've heard them say: at the time when it (war) broke out they didn't know which side they should join! --some of them. My grandfather (William) was a republican--after he lost so many (including Luther) of the family in the war and because of how my father (Silas) suffered as he did in prison. They were Republicans dyed in the blood--they surely were Republicans all their lives.

Grandfather Sharp (William) and grandfather Hannah(David) --their foreparents came from the foreign countries. They were Irish, German and Englis. My grandmother could almost trace them , as to speak" to Adam. She often time told about them coming over here. We've got all kinds of blood mixed in our veins--Irish, German and English. During the first World War when they were so down on the Germans I said to a traveling salesman: "I've got some German blood in me, what do you think of that?" He said: That's pretty bad blood, pretty bad blood!" ha, ha.

I've spend 6 winters in Florida and traveled quite a bit. I've been here 87 years the 8th day of June, and I thank the good Lord for taking care of me down through the years. I've had troubles, sorrows and disappointments. I've been only to one dance in my life. I chose to go to. You should keep good company: A girl I'd been corresponding with was as pretty as you may, a speckled pup, ha, and she came to my home, rode a horse up , horse-back. They rode horse back the. No automobiles, even no buggies, and persuaded me to slip off and go to a dance. So I went off up to the dance (on Elk), and the people from all over the country geathered to Elk, a certain section of Elk. They called it protracted dances. The best I counted, there were 36 people there, and were healthiest people in the county. I never saw such a time in all my life and I never expect to see , nor want to see another like it. Talkm about drinking ! A fellow played a banjo . Another played a violen. The banjo player got so drunk during the night and I was going around trying to promenade. I'd never been on the floor before and he through out his feet and I fell over his feet and fell in the floor. I was a bashful boy of 18. Oh, I was so ashamed of that! I almost pulled my girl in on me. I had to hold her. I didn't fall clear to the floor. The thing I want to bring out is that every one of those 36 that was there that night has been called into eternity. I'm the only one that the Lord spared a life. I give credit to the Lord for taking care of me down through the many years. I haven't tasted whiskey for 50 years. When I was a child we didn't have a doctor any closer than 23 miles. They had hardly any medicine. So when we were sick the people in the country would give us a little ginger in a little whiskey as a medicine. I never even tasted beer. I'd rather see a salon in the community than a beer joint. They call them beer parlors and I hear they even have ladies any more to go in and wait on the people, selling beer. I see in the paper where 45% of the people killed in car accidents last year was because of drunken drivers. I think the time has come when every Christian should do everything he can to stamp out the liquor traffic. It'd be a great saving of life for the country. Liquor is ruining so many families and causing so many deaths.

I don't know what else to say about my life. I'm going along pretty strong at my age. I've had quite a bit of sickness this past winter--operated on (prostate?), but I've scraped out of that. I'm going to stay as long as the Lord sees fit to leave me here. I'd like to live always if it was the Lord's will. But you know after one's death, then the judgement.

231

232

History, Stories, Thoughts and Advice--Taped of L.D.Sharp 9-29-59 by Paul Sharp 232 Copy
Re-taped on Cassette and typed Dec. 1980 by Dave Sharp

We are told that death comes a thief in the night, when least expected. So we are commandedy to be ready and not wait till death comes. We must have on the wedding garments, have our lamps trimmed and ready to enter into the marriage feast. No matter when the summons comes we should be ready. That's my advice to every individual and not wait till they are old to accept Christ. Because after they get to be 50 or 60 years old it is almost impossible to get any one to change their lives. It seems the older they get, the harder it is to amend their lives. So I sinsit on parents to bring children up the way they should go ,-- take them to church--not send them. Take them to church every Sunday and live close to a Christian live. Let their influence live in the family they are bringing up.

Paul: What about the roads and in your days. ?

Dad: We had mud roads. Weren't very wide and were kept up by each farmer who worked 4 days a year in order to keep up those roads. We had no buggies. Most people had wagons because they had to go to Millbore (Va) about 60 miles for salt and roofing and supplies. There wasn't any salt or sugar to amount to anything (here) and they went to Millbore. They (his parents) had mills and ground the wheat people grew and ground flour. Women these days wouldn't try to think about making light bread out of X flour like we had to live on. It was the best we could do. I owned a mill after I grew into manhood. (Last used about 1920. Remains can still be seen --1980-- submerged dam-leg, rock foundation and the rock side-dam.)

Paul: In the past you've talked about inventions, transportations in the early days.

Dad: Well, back in my boyhood days when there wasn't a buggy in the country and I was one of three who bought the first automobile bought in Pocahontas county. (A 1915 Studebaker) (The enameled licence plate in the store window possibly may have been the plate for it??) I remember the first buggy that was bought by my brother-in-law. I bought a surrey--a two wheel surrey, the first conveyance I ever had. A good many people don't know what a surrey was. It had two wheels and a skeleton seat, big enough for two people to ride in and we thought we had a wonderful way to move along with x one horse. I went about 40 or 50 miles to where a man was advertizing and selling these surreys and buggies. I rode a horseback to go get it with the harness on the horse (to be ready to pull it when I he got there) and I had that until my first courtship, ha. ha.

There were no telephones in the county. I was one of the first to have a telephone. There were 2 or 3 in the county when the lines got through first--just to try it out. (I believe that Dad in another taping said that Marlinton had no phones, and they got their phones after the line was brought through from Randolph County by Slatyfork. It was extended on to Edray and Marlinton. There were probably one or two in the Linwood area before the line got down to Slatyfork. First ones in the county??) Someone who came to my home one day and I was talking 12 miles to Geo. P. Moore's store at Edray. They had one. One fellow said to me: "How do you get the message over the line to Mr. Moore's store? The wire is hollow, isn't it?" ha, ha. I said: " no it isn't hollow" ha. ha. He thought we were talking through a hollow tube over the telephone wire.

We had no docter any closer than 23 miles. No hospitals. If anyone got sick,---most mall the farmers had different kinds of teas. They had teas for different sicknesses. They had peneraall tea and different names for teas they had. My mother (Sarah) had a half a dozen different kinds of tea hanging up there (attic?) dried, and If any one got sick --she was a great hand at going to visit the sick. She'd geather ups some of these teas and take with her.

(Joke??) When I was x quite small we had three changes of food a day. We had Bread and meat for breakfast. Meat and Bread for dinner, and both of them for supper, ha. ha. We enjoyed life, I believe better than today. We could go out and catch a basket full of fish in a few hours, and there were plenty of deer and wild turkeys to galore. And bear, plenty of them--too many of them. They killed our sheep. They did more harm than good. But I velieve people were better satisfied. They'd go visit a home and stay all day, and families would come to visit my father and mother and stay all day. There was no rush, and now if they go and stay just a little while in their automobiles, they're up and gone. We're living in a fast age and many are losing their lives by living in this age of automobiles.

232

History, Stories, Thoughts and Advice--Taped of L.D.Sharp 9-29-59 by Paul Sharp
Re-taped on Cassette and typed Dec. 1980 by Dave Sharp

Courting — We rode on horseback. I did my first courting riding horseback.
Paul: How did you court riding horseback?
Dad: Ha, Ha. Well, I managed to get an awful nice wife--your mother, a preacher's daughter (Laura Morgan) I fooled her and got one of the best girls in the country for a wife. I give credit to my children for being what they are to a great extent for having such a wonderful mother. She was a preacher's daughter. I don't take any credit. I give most of the credit to their mother. Her father was a Methodist circuit rider. He rode horseback. He didn't have any buggy. He preached at nine different appointments (country churches) on the Edray charge. He lived at Edray. (In the same present parsonage building) he had to ride horseback or not get to his churches. It looks like they'd (circuit riders) get a greater reward than ministers today who stes in an automobile and a few minutes after the church service (be at another church)--go all over his charge. Could do it in a few hours. In that time it'd take maybe a half a day to come from the Edray parsonage over to Slatyfork to preach.
Paul: what did you say you went to Millbore for?
Dad: We went to Millbore to get salt, sugar and such things as that. There was no salt in this area.
(About 1884)-- The first time I was to Millbore, I went with Uncle Harmon and another fellow. ..... to take his horses and wanted me to go along. I was 12 years old and it'd take us almost all week. We had a box to carry our lunch in and we'd sleep out at nights. When night came on we'd drive to the side of the road and camp over till morning. We took feed to feed our horses. It took us about all week for this wagon trip. Didn't have any buggies. There was no other way of conveyance.
(Dad told me,(Dave), a story that was not recorded on tape about this trip, when they camped near a negre town in Virginia, and when they pulled a trick-joke on him I may tell it elsewhere in this booklet being compiled.) see "Jan 31, 1980" page 6
RR — A couple fellows--a railroad came through Mountain Grove (Va)--they thought they'd like to try that train out. So theywent to the donducter when the train pulled up and said: "We'd like to have a quarter's worth of ride" The conductor knew they didn't know what they were talking about and he gave them a quarter's worth of ride, ha. He took them on the train and it took them 3 days to walk back, ha. ha. Well that taught them a lesson! They knew not to take over a dime's worth of ride the next time, ha. ha. I guess someone else in their group took care of their horses while they were gone.
Paul: Dad, you've seen a lot of new things--inventions...
Places at Fair — Dad: Telephone, hard surface roads, automobiles, T V, airplanes. I rode the first planes that came into the county at the County Fairs. One fellow came in there and made quite a bit of money barnstorming ("Scotty". He'd go behind the barn and take a drink between rides in his biplane. He got killed in Ohio stunting, --I believe flying under a bridge.) People would pay to take a ride over the town of Marlinton and sometimes pretty well all over the county, but not too far because he wanted to get back to get another load of passengers.
Paul: Did you like to fly?
Dad: I certainly did ! Paul: Would you rather live now than back when you were a boy?
Dad: I really believe we had more real enjoyment than we do today--even with all the inventions, telephone, TV, radio People are not satisfied today. We're looking for more inventions and goint to the moon(it was predicted). I haven't thought much about that trip! ha.ha. Paul: Do you have anything to say now before you sing for us? Dad: Well, all I have to say to those who may listen to this, be good and live from day to day, as we're commanded. Be thanful. Realize where our good blessings come from--God. Trust in him and you'll never regret it. Paul: Thank you Dad, Now what song do you want to sing?
Singing Songs — Dad: Well the title of the song is " Jesus is the Way"--a wonderful song. I hope anyone who listens to it will pay attention to the words, the meaning of the words. (Mable played the piano whild Dad sang solo. Another song : "My Faith Looks up to ~~THEE~~ Thee". Another song: Trio: Dad, Paul and Mable--"Beautiful Home Somewhere". (Dave: Icouldn't tape the music!) ha.

Dave: There was a lot of Si's fine piano playing on Paul's reel tape which was not included on the cassette copies made by Dave. After taping Dad's voice I did go back to Paul's reel tape and picked up (on last 1/4 of 2nd side of cassette) Si playing piano, and with a little comedy-conversation played the tener banjo, guitar and accordion.
And Dad's singing is on the cassette where indicated in the transcript.

History and Stories of the Sharp Family, by Luther D. Sharp, taped 6-13-67 in the presence of his children, Si, Ivan, Dave, Violet, his second wife, Mabel, and Genevieve, Ivan's wife.

Mable and I went to the Mary's Chapel graveyard. I looked all through it. There was old man Jim Gibson, Cousin Wm Gibson and other old people I thought was up about 90 , 95 years old, and there, they were 70 & 80 years old! Just for fun I told Mabel, "let's get out of here, let's get out of here. I'm the oldest person in here"! ha. ha. 234

Yes, Uncle Hugh was 77 years old--on the tombstone 77 years old. (He said to Ivan:): "Ivan, wasn't he converted?, Ivan, didn't you talk to him and he accepted Christ?" (Ivan: "yes, ... that was on his deathbed".) He was a mighty fine good man, but never joined the church. (Dave: We're all here except Paul") I'm awful proud of it. I appreciate it, you don't know how much. (Dave: you're 90 years old a couple days ago) I thought sometime ago that I wasn't going to reach 90. I prayed to the Lord to spare my life. (regarding age referred to years and days:): Better to have it even years, you know. It takes right smart paper to print that, and you'd have it in the paper no doubt, but it doesn't matter about it. (Violet: "approximately 5,000 Sundays--?) They made a mistake. Did you figure it up how much it is? (Violet: I don't guess they count the Sunday you were born") Dad: Oh yes they took.....(?) . (Violet: "four thousand,six hundred eight...(.?) Dad: Ha, ha.

(Dave: If you counted those.... before he was born that would make some more") Dad: ha, ha I don't regret it. The greatest heritage on earth is father and mother. Raise them up in the way of the Lord, When they get old they won't depart from it. That's history, and I'm no exception. That is time. He's recording every word I say.

I'm happy my children got in to my birthday, and my son's .....?... was born on my birthday. I said ('d never have any children named after me because it'd mix up the mail so and getting mail and letters . So the way Jr got his name, he was born on my birthday and after he was born my wife said to me "this is your birthday and this is your birthday present and I'm going to name him Luther David Sharp". I said allright , that's all right, ha, ha. She'd gone down to the jaws of death presenting my son, so she could have her wishes! That's how come Jr. got his name, Luther David Sharp. After I'm gone I guess he'll ..... his name .....?) (Dave: They can call me "LD" then.) ha , ha.

Yes, it was nice you to stop by and see old Dad. ....?....Christian Life that's the remain(?) of faith and family. That's my faith. .....

Thinking about having ... .prepared, I never heard my father go to bed in his lifetime to go to bed without having prayer. Lets all of us bow and have a silent prayer. (silence) (The following has to do with two hitchhikers he picked up on Elk in his car.).....this one fellow, he told me, I asked what was he doing coming out of that hollow up there and Lake Reed was up there getting lumber, and we sent truck up (hitchhiker: why, we were up there hauling lumber and broke the truck down and we're going on to Marlinton to get some parts") And in no time when the other wouldn't tell me where he was from.....hesitancy in answering, I figured out when I hadn't gone a half a mile, I knew who they were. And so I was scared out of my senses nearly. Went over to Marlinton, said to myself, now ..... If they demand me to go on by, I'm going to fly right on by over in the city and raise ned if they holler for me to go on. I came down hurried as fast as I could across the bridge. They yelled " we wanted to get out back there" and I'd run them all the way across the bridge and let them out. And here a couple days later police caught them in Huntington. Dad was asked if his father made their shoes. .....pair of boots a time or two. (Dave: where did you get the leather?) Got from McCarty down at Hillpoint. Killed a beef and they'd send hides down and he'd tan it and get it back in a year's time. Got leather all the time that a way. (Dave: didn't he (his father) make shoes for all the family?) Yes all the family. He had lasts for all of them (Dave: did he make shoes for others too?) No. I don't know where he got his lasts. (Genevieve asked: did they make different size shoes?) Yes different lasts ..... for size of our feet. (Dave: Did he ever make any pegged ones?) Yes, all he made was pegged shoes. He'd punch a hole and he made the pegs too. Made of maple. Sawed off about half an inch or one fourth an inch, you know , off right on through like that. He'd sharpen off at each side first, I think and all he had to do was sharpen each one on the other side. Oh, he could make them as nice as you could buy them. He was a mechanic, mechanically inclined. But I never got .... as most of my boys did, who take after my father. He made breast pins when he was in prison at the time of the civil war. He was in there 23 months and 24 days, lacking six days of two years, and he made breast pins and made a couple breast pins and sent them back to mother who he was courting before they nabbed him and took him into the starvation prison.

234

235

They starved them by the hundreds and by the hundreds, starved them to death. At Salisbury, N. C. (Dad on way to Florida about 1939 ?) and we stopped (Violet: wasn't he in prison in Richmond too?) Yes, before they took them all to Salisbury, N. C. and an old man (sitting on the street) had a long grey beard. Henry and I and your mother..... I said where was the prisons at---my father served 23 months and 24 days, lacking 6 days of being two years. I said they didn't have prisons, they just had just like barns scattered all over this country here. He said they starved to death and what they didn't starve to death, they poisoned. And I said my father was traded for rebel prisoners just a few days before the war ended, and he said, Oh no, there wasn't a one that escaped. Every last one of them starved to death, or was poisoned . And I said my father lived through it and I am his son. He wouldn't give up. I couldn't make him believe. My father said "I saw them every day, wagon loads of soldiers and saw them digging trenches through the fields and just throwing them in and dirt over them." Well, one thing about the rebels were starving even their own men. didn't have food and of course prisoners of the yeanked army. Why, a good way to get rid of them so wouldn't have to feed them, you know. (Dave: didn't he sell some of those breast pins he made to get extra food, but how did he get extra food if they didn't have it?) I don't know how he got these (? black hides ?...) made beautiful breast pins. (Dave: did you ever see any of those pins?) Oh yes, I've seen them. My mother kept the first few (?letters?) I don't know who which one of the girls got them, --Malinda or Ella. He said that they died off there with diptheria and said the old black woman that gave medicine for diptheria, that he got on the right side of her and told her to give him two doses of it. She doubled the dose. He said them out every day and burried them , And said there was a captain that was so mean to the prisoners and the prisoners threw a bag over a captains dog that followed him in. They then killed that dog, and ate that dog. And said they begged him to eat some of it and illled a cat and begged him to eat a bite of it and he said , I think he couldn't swallow it. And he said he didn't get any more in a week than he could eat in one meal. Said they had skippers (worms) all over the top where they had boiled the ham and said we just turned it up and drank it. (Dave: How did he come back home?) I started to tell you a while ago: why the captain that was so mean to the rprisoners , and somebody shot outside while he was in there going through among the prisoners, and he went to the windown and stuck his head out to see who it was that shot outside and they blew his head all to pieces. He said the prisoners rejoiced over this., because he was so mean to them... He stuck his head out to see who shot , so they blew his head off.. (Dave, did he walk back from Salisberry N. C?) Yes, he said he went by a town after his release--got his release. Grandfather Sharp (Wm.?) and Wamsley had (they or this?) yankees had Wamsley's son and Captain Marshall's son and Grand father's Sharp had traded. Got traded sons out of one prison out of the other. Just a few days or weeks before the war was over. Said they were going by a town and they said"how did you get out" and he told them he was released, and said traded.....? And they said "if we gain our independence, we won't let you live with us". He said:"if you gain your independence I'll not want to live with you!" , and they came out, started out like they were going to .... He said I put down the best running I could do I ran but they stopped and didn't follow. Yes , they was mean (souther rebesl) (Dave: I guess they were kind of mean on both sides,?) Well, I don't know about the Yankees, Iguess the yankees..... treated the southern prisoners better? anyway. My grandfather Sharp(william), after the war was over, he brought suit against Marshall. Capt. Marshall he was a captain, but had men through here. Old funny name (. . .) had captured my father (Silas). He brought suit against him for several hundred dollars. (apparently Marshall was a rebel) It was in court for years. He came to my father's house over there. Called him out. They wanted to see father to sign a compromise. (Dave: What was that in regard to?) Capt. Marshall and Wamsley , they came to see him. (Violet asked a question(?)) No. They wanted him to say something so when they go into court that they could get it released, you know. (Dave: what did he sue for?) Because they took his son (Silas) away from home here when he wasn't in the army. He wasn't bothering them at all, you know. They find a young man the thought he was a yankee and they took him to put in prison and starve him to death. Whether they meant to or not, they didn't have food for their soldiers, they claimed, but they did starve them to death by the 100's and 100's of them. I couldn't make that old man believe all my telling him about my father lived, that any of them got out at all. Oh, my father said it was awful, awful life. (Dave: Gen Lee camped up here at Linwood, didn't he?) Yes, they came through here on our land and the fence around that field was all rails, and they said .....few thousand of them , they took from one side to the other and brought those rails and put them right up through that field yonder from one end to the other and started a fire and camped there and burned all the rails up in the 10 acre field. They camped at Linwood a great long time. (Dave: didn't someone go up there and haul back some lead bullets that was left by the rebels when a freight wagon broke a wheel in the creek?) My father and Uncle Hughs went up there and had all they could carry on their shoulders— a 100 lbs, I suspect, or 75.. all my life we melted those rebel bullets and made bullets for our guns. We put them behind the chemney over there (at the old home place--at a chemney about 50 feet below the present old house) I've gone there and got them & There was a pile as big as a half a bushel or more than that where they were piled there in back of the steps. Uncle Hughs brought the same over here (at the log house next to thenew house now in use) . It was all they could carry. Lots more left there. They carried out all they could. (Dave: did any of them (Sharp's) go up and visit the army at Linwood?) They wouldn't bother them up there. Mrs. (?) (Yeagart? ??...) different times talked about " there goes Gen. Lee's horse many times. (Dave; did she say that?) I think he was kinda courting her, you know. She was a girl. Gatewood was a colonel in the army in the rebel army. (Dave: In the rebel army? I thought maybe if colonel Gatewood would have been in the northern army) No he was in the southern army. (Gatewood lived at Linwood on the bank beside the road. It was dismantled about 1970 and a modern house built there) (Dave: that must have been the reason they camped at Linwood.) They knew about where the union army was, and they had some over in the valley, you see.(Valley Head-Mingo area) It was at Elkwater where they had their fight. (Dave-1980: I thin there is a stature of Gen Lee beside the road on Mingo Flats yet).

Jake Gibson acted crazy and ..... he was in the [illegible] army down there and he ran to the river and their army was then on horses. The captain was on a horse and they galloped past him and he ran to the river and the river was up deep and he couldn't swim and it was too deep and the captain galloped up to him and he [illegible] fired a shot or two and ordered him to surrender and he says: "your're an brave soldier--not a hair of your head will be hurt, then he an (Jake) shot at the captain and hit the horse and killed the horse out from under the captain. The captain ordered them to shoot him. They shot Jake Gibson all to pieces. He was a brother to old man Bill Gibson, old man Jim Gibson. He would have saved his life. That was foolish, when he didn't have a chance, he should have taken a chance on getting away again, shouldn't he?! His brothers were old man Bill Gibson and Dr. Gibson--they were raised up here on Elk. Is my bed made honey (Mabel) (Dave: you're 90 years old. You better get some rest) I have to get up so many times at night is what gets my .(strength?). WENT TO BED. X NEXT DAY: (Dave: who built the old house down here that we call the honey house?) Grandfather william Sharp. The first house was down at Eva Sheltons. Just at that apple orchard. (at the mill damn spring). Way back in my young days I've seen the chemney rocks. They hauled them away later on. And they came up here and built that house(what's standing of it?) and then built another above here, a new house--later on after later years.(Dave 1980: I don't know which he means) Had to haul the logs around to Andy Hannahs where Barney Showalter lives (across from the church). Old man Hannah had an up-and-down saw mill that was run by wa ter, where he had a mill dam where people took their logs there and he sawed them into lumber. And they got lumber to build this house--I mean that second house(Dave: I don't know which one it was unless it was the addition added on nearby and moved out of theway to build the present new house, and which log house covered with clappord that Si Sharp sold to a man in or near Elkins who planned to re-construct it over there--about 1976 or 77.) (Violet: why did they use wa ter at the saw mill--to float the logs?) Had a mill dam there and had a place the water ran through on a wheel and that started the grist mill a grinding and they ground all our corn into meal for years and years. Then we built one (a mill) down here. Will Elbon built one down here. Uncle Hugh Sharp gave Uncle Sam Gibson and somebody else the land--that tract of land--5 or 8 acres, to build a mill dam. So they got Elbon from down at Webster Springs. He was a millright man and .... .? But I got old man Elbon and his son Charlie to put in the burrs and ground flour. The box up in the wagon house--that was in the mill. We groudd wheat there for years. And Brice Griffin tended to the mill. Those rocks (burrs) are still there yet. (Violet: Did you get some of the meal for rent?) Well, I had Brice Griffinm make a Will, so if he died that it was to be sold and the money be given to his mother. And Brice agreed to it and I drew up the will and had witnesses sign it. Later on..... he died and they put it up for sale. And here comes this fellow from up at Cass down there and it up on me. Uncle Hugh gave him the land to build themill. I had to pay $500 to keep that fellow from buying it and keep him out of down here. (Dave: you've gotten $500 worth of fishing out of it) Many times more than that of pleasure. I got pleasure of a thousand dollars or more just fishing. I'll have to go to bed now. Good night.

NEXT DAY: (Dave: did Uncle Hugh save those service trees up there?-on the flat) Oh yes, he cut down the other trees and left the service trees. (Dave: These chestnut trees, we used to pick them up and a nuts here when I was young) You could pick them up by the bushel. (Dave: what did they use them for, bread?) Well, they'd eat what they wanted to eat. Didn't make bread out of the m. I bought them by the bushels here 50 - 60 years ago and shipped to one of the cities, I don't know which. They'd lay on the ground and you could pick up a bucket full in no time. But some blight struck them and killed all the chestnut trees, I reckon all over the United States, and it about put the squirrels and turkeys out of business. They just feeded on them. That was an awful loss to our country. Wild turkeys feasted on them. There were so many wild turkeys, and they just died off--xx starved to death. (Dave: wasn't there one or two rebelx soldiers burried up at the top of the hill?) He was burried just to the left hand side of the road. I was plowing there and the horse broke through in on it. Looked down in one. (Dave: who shot those rebels--were they rebels?) I don't know if they were rebels or yankees. I think they were Yankees killed. Joe Gay and Walt (Allen? Apple?). (Dave, 1980 Uncle Hugh said they were from the South) (Dave: didn't uncle Hugh say they brought one of thense men in here to the fireplace in the old house?) Yes, Uncle Hugh thought so much of him--stayed with him till he died. He was shot up there at the "flatrocks" (near "yellow house"--near the new water fountain up on the old road). (Dave: Didn't those rebel soldiers take all the apples the family had?) They come there where they had them burried in holes, you know. Lee's army came over there and commenced taking apples. It was Grandfather Will Sharp's place. They commenced to pick them up and the captain told them to stand back and handed them out to them. They went across the creek to the meadow and took rails from each side and brought them up the middle and piled them along the center for 100's of yards and burnt every rail.

Seems like the captain told them to pay for the apples. They camped across the creek that night in that meadow and burned every rail. (Violet: whad did they burn them for?) Keep warm--Lee's army --through the night. (Dave: what did you use to start fires?) Shavins, had no lampoil, had no lamps. Candles was only thing I had to study my lessons with. Beef tallow candles, and sat by the fire and enjoyed it as much as we do now with electric lights we have now. Martha Jane Hannah was so " close" and "tight" and I was up there to visit my sister (Malinda?) she was married and young boys gathered around there and in a room there , I bet she had 150 candles piled up in a room. She'd light candles for her husband to read the Bible and before the'd say prayer, she'd get up and blow it out before we'd get down to pray! And remember, we always had let the candle burn, and their children studying their lessons, going to school, and one of them would get up there and punch the fire up so it'd blaze up and turn their books up sideways so they could see to read--I can still see it. She was that "close" in saving her money. My mother made our candles. I think the mould for them are out here in the store showwindows. I've seen my mother make a many a one. We had slates to write on. We figured arithmatic on slates at school. Oh, there's a big change, we got along just as well. We enjoyed life just as much as we do now,--I believe more. They'd go on a visit to neighbors and stay all day. And they don't do that now. They had log rollings. They'd come from all around--from 5 or 8 miles around--gathered for those log rollings and help roll up the logs that the man had cut through the winter time to raise crops next year. Most all of them would clear a patch of land and put in corn the next year. That's the way this country was cleared off, and then they'd call them in and move those logs into heaps and burn them up. Oh, they burned thousands and thousands of dollars worth of valuable timber--cherry and.... and I've seen where they rolled up big popular trees, you know, when lumber wasn't worth anything then. Then another man would have a log rolling and they'd all go and help him. They'd divide off with leaders. Each man would have 5 or 6 men in his crew, and each would see how fast they could roll up those logs. I remember when that field " around top of the hill" (right side of Slatyfork creek and below the old county road) had a log rolling for that. And John Gibson, he's a powerful man, he'd get spikes under a log and 5 or 6 men carry it if they could. I can remember it as well as if it were yesterday, carrying log man, he'd get spikes under a log and 5 or 6 men carry it if they could. I can remember it as well as if it were yesterday--carrying logs out of that swamp over there. The man would have the trees cut up in logs ready then(for log rolling) They enjoyed life just as much. They killed a wild turkey about any time they wanted to.(that was his great sport). Deer were plentiful. And fish, i've seen my father , he made his flies, I've seen him so down Elk river and come back with a basket full of fish. Creeks were alive with fish. (Dave: how old was your dad and mother?) He was 56 and mother 62. Ivan has the honor... .... for getting Uncle Hugh to accept Christ. He was a good man but never had gone to church. But Ivan talked to him just before he died, and he accepted Christ. Isn't that right? (Ivan: ... a day or two before out on the porch??)(Ivan: he said "everything was straightened up all right --I accept the Lord") That's all we need to do. "If ye confess me before men you shall be saved" --and I risk my life on his word., for his word is true. (Dave: how many people did you say was gone from Elk to Mace your age or over that gone?) Well, from top of Elk Mountain to top of Mace Mountain the best I could count there were 253. They didn't have any jobs away from here and they stayed at home, and none of them would leave Pocahontas County or even Elk. And they married 1st and 2nd cousins--a whole lot of them, cause they didn't get out to meet with other children. Yes there were 253 of them from my age and above have gone into the enteral world. Molly Slanker was the latest one--about 2 years ago. She's from Pennsylvania--she died. She was about a year or two older than I was. Lots of people younger than me died, but those 253 were my age or older. But I don't know that it's any great blessing to live to be so old. If you're ready to die and pass off at any young age, why they spend a lot of chastisements and trouble through life. I've had a pretty hard life of it--up's and downs. (Genevieve: you've had more ups than downs) I guess that's right. But if I had the privilege, Ivan, tonight, to set back to two years old, to live my life over again, I'd say " no". I don't want to live it over. ..... But I wouldn't want to live my life over again and go through what I've gone through with. Oh, I've had a pretty hard time of it. Lots of sorrow--my mother and dad, sisters, my wife and my daughter and (them)leaving out, leaving me.(they'd passed on, he means.) Have to bear it though. That'll be a great homecoming, won't it!? And we don't know who has to go next. Should be ready and not worry about it. When the Lord calls us, why , I know we have on our wedded garments to enter into the marriage feast. I ...In the Bible some of them had made no preparation and when they went to go into the marriage feast why it was over with before they could go in. You know they gave that explanation. How easy, if we'd realize that Christ lives within all of us. "If you confess me before men, you shall be saved!"-"and I'll confess you before my Father who is in Heaven. I go to prepare a place for you and I'll come here and receive you unto myself. I go prepare a mansion for you" He promised a mansion up there for us. And it says it's never been told to man yet the great joy of heaven. The great joy we'll have in Heaven when we get through the pearly gates. That's his word. My father died so young. Finally, he was so tired he said "make me a a pallet down before the fire,"Sally" ~~the wife Sarah~~, " Sally" and I'll try to lay down". She laid the pallet before the fire (fireplace) and he laid down and he hadn't laid there, I don't think two minutes, he called "Sally, Sally, Sally" and by the time they got him up to his desk he had died right there. He suffered untold pain. Dr. Cameron said he had cancer, but we had no sign of it. But he had those awful bad spells, he couldn't lay down. It might have been appendicitus. If now, he'd been operated on and saved. (Dave: how long was he sick?), Oh, he had the cancer 12 months or longer, that he was bad. (Dave: what did your mother die of?) Yes, she took pneumonia and died. We had a mare that had a colt and mother was looking after it in the cold weather and the colt got in the fence. I told her "mother it's so cold you're exposing yourself. You'll take pneumonia and die. Why, she said: "why do we want to stay here, it's better on beyond" and by the way in a day or so she took pneumonia and lived just a short time. (she died Dec. 21, 1908) And I said to her "did you see this evening the beautiful sunshine with the going down of the sun?" She answered "I look at my heavenly home every day. There isn't a day but what I look and view my heavenly home." She's the one (Sarah) who had the brother (about age 10) who died and went to heaven and told all about the beauties of Heaven and all (the people) he saw there, and so on. And came back (to life) and performed miracles--threw a handkerchief up to the left and it stayed there till 2 o'clock the next day. And said I'll show you where History and Stories of the Sharp Family, Slatyfork, W. Va. by L. D. Sharp;(taped 6-13-59 62

Heaven is", and went out and my Mother and all of them, the whole heavens turned the Otha prettiest light you ever saw. (The boy, Otha or Othy said:)"now up this way pap is 239 coming" He'd been to a sale up on Elk and had been gon all day, I reckon. And said a light like a candle showed the pathway where Grandfather(Hannah). Grandfather (Hannah) came home and Otha told him he'd died and had been in Heaven and told about seeing Aunt Martha Buzzard. She'd shout all over the church. She died before he was born. And told(of) different ones. Said "the Savior took me over and showed me the pits of hell, and there was fellow on Elk that was so wicked and said Christ asked him " why did you take my name in vain"? . And he said it was so beautiful there. Grandfather Hannah asked him "Did you come back to stay with me?" "I just came back just to tell you about heaven. You're worrying about Joe who died at 12 years old and had never joined the church. There he is!!
Can't you see him !--and there's the Savior!--just as plain as xx can be. The Lord has saved my brother!" (Later:) "I'm just going to stay a short time. He then begged for Aunt Mary (illegible) to put her in the fire and said
"not a hair of xHair will burn" and of course they wouldn't give her to him as she was just a baby. And he told Grandfather Hannah after so long of time "Iwish you'd make me a pallet down before the fire. Before that though he said I want to eat with you before I go. She got some food on the table and he sat there and sat there and she ate. And when they got through they said why didn't you eat with me. He said "the savior feed me on light loaf and milk and honey all the time you were eating."(Dad told us other times that the family could smell honey in that breadbox for a long time after that). He said "there he is right there, can't you see him?" Then he asked Grandfather Hannah about making a pallet before the fire after so long a time. And he laid the pallet down and Otha didn't move a hand or foot and never gave a groan. That made them all.(?christians)
.... And, Uncle George Hannah became a preacher. Grandfather Hannah wouldn't eat anything cooked on Sunday after that. I think Otha had diptheria. It killed so many of them on Elk.-- Arabaugh's(?) and 5 or 6 old maids and bachealors--killed everyone in the family and killed the only sister my father had. What was her name?--Martha? (Dave:
I think it was Mary) She was burried down top the hill on the left hand side of the road (Rt 219 below the store). (Genevieve: was it your mother's brother that died and went to heaven?) Yes, he went to heaven and came back and performed these miracles. When he came back a--at the two-story house, there above Frank Hannah's above the road(Rt. 219).
I was there a time or two in that house when I was a child. And he went out and showed them where heaven was. He threw the handkerchief up and xxxx said it will stay there on the loft (ceiling) and it'll stay up there and when he threw the red bandana handkerchief
, I've heard different ones of the family say and it looked like the spaceof a knife blade between it and the ceiling and it stayed there the rest of that day and Grandmother
Hannah had that baby and didn't go up to the Hannah graveyard up there at George L Hannah's up where the graveyard was then.(Veo Hannah's place) She asked him what time xxx did they put Otha in the grave. (~~Oh!~~?) And grandfather told her " at two o'clock" when they burried him She said, " I noticed at 2 o'clock that handkerchief was laying across the back of the chair. I've heard them say, and I know it to be a fact, they said it looked like the width of a knife blade between it and the loft. Oh, God gave him the power to perform those miracles. Genevieve, did your mother die with a heart attack? (Genevieve:
she must have) Wasn't she singing "I lay down my cross and take up my crown" ?(Genevieve:
I'll change my corss for a crown" --as soon as she got through singing that song she was gone. END

Dad told us previously that Otha told his father, on his return from the sale that he bought him (Otha) a colt.

* David Hannah's house

Where the tape was not clear, I put dots ..... and question marks ????? If someone can decipher the tape better later on, it could be changed, or filled in.
This was a tape Dave Sharp, his son, made in the summer of 1959. Paul Sharp also has a tape of Dad. I may also have another one misplaced just now. 62

Aunt Mary (Some name) buried (Jim Gibson), 239

SHARP 4

Stories and History of the Slatyfork Sharps

by Dave Sharp

240

Skunk

One time Dad,(L. D. Sharp) as a boy living at the"old place" over the hill, came home at night with a lantern up the path along the sideof the hill (left of the Slatyfork creek about 400 yards from the mouth of the creek, when he saw a skunk just in front of him. He couldn't let it get away so he jumped on it with both feet. His feet flew out from under him and he rolled 30 feet down the steep bank,bruised, so lay there a minute to get his breath. He felt the skunk under him and he jumped up and down on it tillhe killed it. He broke his lantern globe. He said he got more than enough from the pelt to buy a globe, But his mother made him leave the clothes outside thehouse until the odor left.

I, Dave, was given by my fa ther, Uncle Hugh Sharp's silver, 18 size, William pocket watch. Uncle Hugh may have bought the watch, or it may have belonged to his father, William. As I remember the story, the watch was droppped in the mill dam when they were working there late one day. They were only able to get it out the next morning. They wound it up and it started running. Dad said it probably was waterproof from the grease on it from Uncle Hugh wearing it, ha.

Dad always took us boys fishing on the first day of the season. He was a good fly fisher. I've seen him cathh two at once several times on flies. He said he took mother fishing once and he told her not to stand over the hole as the fish would see her. He laughed and said she caught the largest of all they caught. He took us deer hunting and bear hunting. One time he had me back up on Slatyfork mountain and the dogs were barking chasing a bear over on the other side, He listed a little bit and said: "that's the sweetest music ever made--dogs yelping after a bear"! He perhaps killed 50 or more deer in his lifetime, but I have never ever heard him say he ever killed a bear. He shot at, at least, one, up on the mountain. The bear had cubs. He sighted and when he pulled the trigger, he knew later, he had the rear sight on her, but not the front sight. He thought he'd have a fight with her.

When he was about 80 we children presented him for Christmas a trophy with a plate on the front engraved "The Greatest Deer Hunter in W. Va." and our names engraved on it. He was very pleased with it. Later, when he was unable to climb the mountains (age about 89) he sat in a chair up Slatyfork creek in a blind, went to sleep, woke up and saw a deer and shot it. It ran across the creek and fell dead. I think Ivan came down to where he was and brought it over to the road.

One time when he was over on Gauley, deer hunting at a deer lick, he hid in a tree top about 50 feet from the (salt?)lick. It was getting late in the afternoon when a "catamount" (wildcat?) kept smelling deer tracks at the licks and wouldn't leave. It was getting almost dark, so he decided to shoot the cat as no deer would come to it. He said he sighted and sighted, but didn't have the front sight up in the rear sight when he shot. The cat didn't know where the shot was from and the only place he could go hide was that tree top, so he made 3 or 4 big jumps toward Dad in the tree top. Dad said he jumped up and yelled as loud as he could, and the cat went the other way! ha.

Another time, he was hunting over there with, I believe Sam Higgins. The other man was on a stand up the hill. Dad was "driving" or hunting around the hill below when he saw a deer running by. He shot it and it fell down. Dad set his gun against a tree and stepped one leg across the deer, got a hold of its horns and to see where he hit it, when the deer jumped up quickly and started to run. Dad got off and away from it and grabbed his gun and shot it dead. He said later, it would have been funny if he had held on to its horns and rode it up through the stand by the other hunter. ha. ONE ANTLER HAD A BULLET NOTCH - IT STUNNED THE DEER.

Another time he went fishing with (Jackson, I think, over on Gauley. The boy was only about 11 years old. They camped on the bank of the creek, but it was actually an island when the water was up high. They built a fire, and it started to rain very hard and the creek got high. They heard a "catamount" whining in the woods. They were afraid to move over where the cat was, and afraid to stay on the island because the water may wash them away. As I recall, they kept the fire going bright to keep the cat away. (They may have moved over on higher ground and rebuilt the fire --?)

Another time hunting(or fishing) over on Gauley, they camped out (no shelter) and they told bear stories before going asleep. Dad's had came off and he was feeling around for it about 2 AM, when his hands came upon another fellowes head. He thought a bear had him and he jumped up yelling, ha.

Johnson Hayes(Jackson) the fellow that worked for Dad. He once told Ronald to get this [illegible] Shaw out of the piggin' what is it Shaw?

240

Stories and History of the Slatyfork Sharps (Dave Sharp) 241 CK

Uncle Hugh had, I think, about 15 pet deer at one time. When he was a small boy of about 12 one of his older brothers saw a bear with cubs up in the ~~saw~~ laurel patch, but they told him that they saw a deer with fawns up there, so he sneaked up there, perhaps to capture a fawn. When he got in the bushes, he saw the bear and she took after him in protection of her cubs. He ran down the hill and crawled into a hollow log so she couldn't get him.

Later on when he was grown and when Dad was perhaps 12 years old, he had the 15 deer. All he had to do to get a buck deer was to wait till a buck followed his most beloved deer, named, I think "Nellie" One time Dad and Aunt Ella was coming from over the hill (the old place) and were going through the meadow, when this deer who I believe had fawns CR Rock Vlz and protecting them, took after them. They ran to a small creek and climbed up, in it till Uncle Hugh came to their call for rescue.

One fall when Uncle Hugh was, perhaps above the service patch of trees, when men were deer hunting when he heard a shot. When he got out to where he heard the shot, there lay his pet deer with her bell that she wore around her neck. The man offered to pay for her. He then offered him the meat, but he told them he couldn't eat his pet deer.

The limestone cave below the railroad track, up the road, opposite the waterfountain on route 219 has been known for years as the Hugh Sharp Cave. I was told that a deer was tracked in there once. Maybe went to entrance for shelter. Uncle Hugh is supposed to have his name written inside some place. I have seen names one the walls inside but I don't recall seeing his name, but it is a big cave.

Captain Mundy and Uncle Hugh were good friends. I faintly remember a story about Captain Mundy coming up on an indian in the woods and they fought to the death?. The indian was mostly naked and greased and Captain Mundy could hardly hold him to throw him down. I don't recall the outcome of the fight.

Captain MUNDY lived at one time in Buckhannon. As I recall, Dad and I drove to Mrs. Mundy's house in Buckhannon when I was in college. She was old, and may have been younger than him when she married him??? ??

Ramona Shipley has Ivan's colledtion of old deeds. Among them is one of 1860 when William Sharp, Sr. deeded 2,020 acres "for love and $5" to his son Willaim Sharp, Jr. ~~I think~~ she also has a copy of a 1931 Pocahontas Times giving an account of in 1832 of William Sharp, age 92 petitioning the State of Virginia for an army pension for Indian scouting and fighting against the British in the revolutionary war. Perhaps she could make us some copies of these. She did.

I heard the story, I think Dad told, that Uncle Hugh went up ~~Elk~~ to see a Rider girl up the hollow above Jim Gibson's on a Sunday. Some boys knew he was coming and tied a string across the path up to the house, near the house. They pulled the string and he fell embarrassing him, and he never went with any girls after that.

Uncle Hugh used to go up to the upper meadow, up the creek from the new store, to feed the cows hay. When the water got up too deep to get across, he would walk on stilts. One day in the winter his stilt hit an apparent submerged cake of ice and he slipped and fell in the deep water.

This reminds me of the time Dad had Austin Galford to cut a limb of a locust tree over ~~xat the~~ "old place" that hung over the hole of water near the big barn (now gone). He climbed up there with a saw or ax and stood on the limb and cut it off and he fell in that hole of water. They described his yell as "Oussch!!" when he fell in the water on that winter day.

T I'd heard that Uncle Hugh didn't like flowers. Perhaps they planted some that he thought was in his way. One day when they went to church, and when they got back they found the flowers wilted, as if hot water had been poured on them.

files ~~Uncle Hugh~~ had a sugar tree orchard ~~back up on the flat~~ and he worked it on Sundays. His ~~mother~~ wife SARAH, ~~Emoncel~~, told him he would lose by working on Sundays. Dad said that for about five Sundays in a row he had misfortune. Spill all the Syrup. Log trough Sprung a leak and lost all the sugar water, etc etc.

Dad Said when he was a boy, they relied on sugar from sugar trees for sweetner. They had to get 100 pounds of sugar (maple sugar) and then they could make maple syrup. They used wooden spiles to get the water from the trees. And had small wooden troughs at each tree to catch it in, as they had few buckets. There was a sugar camp up on the flat. Dad had a sugar camp over at the old place just below the meadow there at the creek.

241

Stories and History of the Slatyfork, W.Va. Sharp's (L.D.Sharp)

242 242

Granddad, Preacher Morgan was driving along in his buggy on a steep mountain road, when a pheasant flew up and scared his horse and the buggy up-set over the hill and broke his leg and a gallon jug of mollasses. He was taken into a neighbor's house and put to bed. A woman who donated the molasses came to see him and worried about the lost mollasses. Granddad Morgan took phneumonia there and died. Probably was in a cold room. Grandmaw Morgan then married "Wes" Ervine up the "Brush Country", and inherited his 20 acres. The Morgans had Laura, Lena, Minnie, Bill and Edgar Morgan. Grandma was a Ramsey from Greenbrier County--(Ronceverte?) Maiden name, Ramsey. ----Si Sharp

Dad, L. D. Sharp, sold the timber on the Hugh Sharp place after Uncle Hugh gave him the farm to take care of him the rest of his life. With the money he built the large 17 room house. Kennison from Hillsboro (Perhaps a brother of a Kennison girl "LD" went to see when she taught school on Elk near Aunt Ella's-I think she taught school). contracted to build the house for $5000. When it was finished she told Dad that he broke even on it. Dad gave him 10% more--$500. Uncle Hugh moved into the new house, (from the log house which is still standing,) which was built about 1916- 1918. Mrs. Rachael Showalter from Linwood stayed there and cooked for Uncle Hugh. Uncle Hugh had his bee hives moved inside the new fence of the house. He hid his money in the lid of one of his bee hives. We heard that someone found out where it was and took it. He had a bee hive with a glass window to see the bees working. Ivan said that Captian Moundy made it for him. They were good friends and bought some land together, or received it as a grant from the State of Virginia. Uncle Hugh had several large round hives made from hollow logs that are still in storage along with the glass windowed one. The Log house was build before the Civil War, by William Sharp, father of Hugh. His first house was just inside the fence at the big spring at the mill dam. Si said the old barn below the store was there before and during the civil war. Uncle Hugh apparently told Si about it.

---Dave Sharp

Dad told a story that his father, Si told him Either grandfather Si or his father, William had been missing ears of corn out ot the corncrib at night. He decided to set the wolf spring trap in the corn crib. One morning at daybreak he was going by the crib on the way to the barn, and through the corner of his eye he saw a man caught at the corncrib and pretended not see him. The man yelled out "Silas" (or was it "William"). He went over, and he said to let him out of the trap and he'd never do it again. He begged that it not be told because he was so ashamed. Dad said he never did tell what neighbor it was that stole the corn.--he kept his promise not to tell.

--Dave Sharp

Another time, Silas was loosing hay out of the barn on the mountain. He slept up there a night or two and caught a man, that I believe said was _____ Hannah. He also promised not steal hay again, but no promises was made about telling about it.

--Dave Sharp

Dad and Uncle Bob Gibson went to the St Louis World Fair in 1904. Dad's grandmother, Hester knew some German because her parents were from Germany. Dad knew one word, which was German for "pretty girl". Among all the different booths (Italian, English, etc.) there was a German booth selling items. Dad walked up to a group of girls in the booth and said his word. They immediately started talking in German. He said he was so embarrassed that he turned around and hurried away., ha. --Dave

There is a large limestone cave between the road and the railroad at the waterfountain that has been known as the "Hugh Sharp Cave". He had been in it several times, and may have originally found it. Si, Paul, Dave and others have been in it. A creek runs over a waterfall in it. Paul took pictures of it with a flash back in the 30's.

On Gauley Mountain, is a knob known as the Sharp Knob, and probably named after Willian who bought land in that area for Harmon. It is near the fire tower area.

242

David Hannah, father of Sarah Hannah, wife of Silas Sharp , lived in a log house where Page Hannah lived, and in recent years where Archie and Cora Gibson lived in a newer house after the log house was removed. Frank Hannah said that David sold the place to Frank's father, Sam Hannah, before David moved to Buck. Apparently David died there and was brought back and burried in the Hannah cemetary on Elk. Tradition is that David was burried in an unmarked grave in the Hannah cemetary.
There is some confusion about where David lived all his life. My father said that David lived in a twostory log house on the left of the road--across from Sam Hannah's (Frank Hannah) house. Said he had been in the house. And Dad also told me one time that his grandfather lived there at Page Hannahs. Dad said the two story house burned. So maybe they rebuilt down at the Page Hannah place.
Ivan in his tapes (recorded elsewhere in this book) I believe states that David lived on the Dilley place in a log house that burned down, and where Otha died and had his vision of heaven. (Ivan's tape also said Anna Leha (tape not clear--was it Aunt Leha?) was the mother of Josie Lewis and Edna Foster of Minton.)
--Dave Sharp

Frank Hannah told me the story about Blaine Sharp, that "LD" told us many times. Blaine lived near Sam ~~XXXXX~~ Davis Hannah's, I think. He often times came down and stayed with Sarah and Si at night. Blaine, brother of a Henry Sharp, was a t Sarah's house when it got dark. Sarah, forgetting that Blaine didn't sleep in the extra room the night before, just told him "Blaine, you can sleep where you did last night". ha. Blaine "who was not very smart" said " It's dark, but I've got a good bed at home and I'm going there" ! ha. It may have been Allie Gibson instead of ~~Sam~~ Frank that retold this story to me, but I'm pretty sure it was Frank. ---Dave Sharp

Ellis, Bowd and Sam Hannah were brothers---Frank Hannah
A sister married John Beverage. Another sister was Nancy Dilley.
Bowd Hannah lived near the present rt 219 road above Sam Hannah's house.
John ~~XXXXXXXXX~~ Gibson was Sam and Joe Gibson's father . -- Frank Hannah

Andy Hannah was father of John Hannah. From one of Dad's tapes.

George L. Hannah ran the "Yelk" Post Office on Elk where Don Hannah now lives--in the same house. Si said Aunt Ella ran it when he remembered the P. O.
Hugh, Lee, Clark and Fred Hannah were brothers--sons of Sheldon Hannah.

Allie Gibson said she taught school at Slatyfork in 1911-1912.--in the school house that burned about 1927 when the Carter's (working on the new road-building) lived in it. It was located about 200 feet from the mouth of Slatyfork creek, on the creek bank.
Ada Sharp also taught school there, perhaps about 1913-1914 ? ↓ Taught Si

When the road (now 219) was built about 1926-1927, they (Battershell Construction Co.) used a real steam shovel fired by coal or wood and operated by Mr. Carter, father of Kathleen seen in a school picture. The shovel dumped dirt in wooden dump wagons pulled by mules to a dumping place--a low place in the roadway, pull a lever and the dirt fell through . Mud was very deep and they whipped the mules with big long whips. They worked them sometimes without a collar pad and the shoulders were bleeding and red like hamburger. Several died in the flat area just up the creek where they were tied up at night. After the road was dragged flat, loads of creek rock was hauled to the road and gangs of men with sledge hammers cracked the flat rocks into fist size rocks. then smaller sizes on top and later they hauled limestone crushed rock from over Elk Mountain etc for a topping before the tar on top.
A groups of shanties were built out of rough lumber between the roadway and where the old Slatyfork creek road crossed the creek.

The Sharp Family Slatyfork, W. Va. 244

I asked Ivan to write some of the Civil War history he remembered being handed down to us.

May 7, 1974 Ivan L. Sharp: (copied from blurred carbon copy hand written)
My Dear Brothers: Please excuse the carbon copy some may get. Thanks Dave for you two letters. The Civil War history on my part has been hit with something like modern scrapmal. It is very hard to put the pieces together in proper order. It was a hit and run bush-whacking gorrilla warfare except the General Lee march which camped over in your meadow across the creek from the store using the rail fences for fire wood, and they stayed some days at the knob at Gatewood farm at linwood, then at Mingo Flats. (Dave: I believe there is a General Lee statue at Mingo Flats). The Union army came in force. In hurried retreat some cannons were supposed to have been concealed up in those sink holes up there about the Rhea Place in hopes to come back later and get. Which they may have done. The ground hogs dug out from under a big sand rock at the Rhea Place a small piece of war equipment (38 or 44), parts of a pistol. Probably hid there by the Rhea boys. ? Back to our ancestors: Jake Simmons and Walt Allen (spelling?) were the culperts that did the most damage to the community (Dave: I think Simmons was from just over the Virginia State line.) I think Uncle Luther about ~~14~~ or 16 was the one Jake Simmons killed while he was running up the mountain road back of the old house. Uncle Hugh showed me where they dug the bullet out of the shale bank. Uncle Bernard may have been killed in the Dropp Mountain battle. A group of Yankees did camp at the pineknob. I think our grandfather, Silas, and Jake Gibson had come in with others to the house for food to take back, evidently leaving most of their guns at camp. I thing there were others along. The Confederate group came while they were home. Granddad hid in a box like goose nest about the old wood yard. A confederate had just shot at some of the others running away and was reloading his musket gun at his feet but had not been see as he thought, so out he came knocked this man down and started around the house but ran into a gang and had to surrender. Was taken prisoner to(Salisbury) Salsbury S. C. (or was it N. C.) where about 95% died of starvation. After 23 months and 24 days he was one of the prisoners exchanged. They thought he would die anyway but was given a pass. He managed to get home. On the capture event one fellow got away about the old school house (where LD went to school) or cemetary. Two fellows was after him with empty guns so were running were losing ground. One said to the other "take my gun and I will get him" but in the race Gibson (or Hannah) pulled out a pepper box pistol and shot at the would-be captor. He stopped the chase. One of the Yankees died fighting rather than be taken. was offered for bravery life, but refused. Some ammunition was made in the cave back of the mill dam. Sulphur, salt peter and lead and rock alum was used. Mary (Dave: Uncle Hugh's sister?) a young girl about 10 died and was burried on the bank where you enter Paul's "calf house" meadow (below the store)(Dave: The highway may have gone through it'). Bernard and Luther may have been burried at the Sharp graveyard. (no grave markers.)
There evidently was a lot of people living up the hills and down the valleys thosedays around there. Uncle Henry (lived) near the sheep shed on the Middle Mountain. Uncle Harmon Sharp below the company store at Slatyfork, his children: son Talbert lived with Uncle Hugh, then moved to California. had son Richard about my age, a girl Mabel. Maybe others, "but" or "had" had a host of daughters, Amos Dilley, George Hannah, (Sam Gibson), (Tom Liverty) and Cora went west. --
We are living one day at a time. No fruit or cherries, Love and Prayers, Bro Ivan.

I asked Si in 1976 something about Otha Hannah, grandmother Sarah's brother about 10 or 12 who died (diptheria?) and briefly and came back to life and told about who he'd seen in heaven etc. Si: "Otha Hannah--mentioned "Aunt Martha Buzzard" who he'd never seen and one or two others he'd seen in heaven. He threw a red Handkerchief up against the ceiling where it hung about an inch from the ceiling--until after he died a second time--about the time they burried him (Perhaps in the cemetary up at near Harry Hannah's farm home) --the handkerchief fell down across the back of a chair rocking chair. He died of Diptheria. He told his dad, who had gone up Elk to a sale what he'd bought.--One thing was a colt he'd bought for Othea."

Interview of Mrs. Forest (Allie) Gibson in 1980 by Dave Sharp on tape recorder.

William Sharp's sister married David Gibson and lived where the Bob Gibsons orchard is. Bernard Sharp, killed near Bob Gibson place was burried in the Moffett cemetary on toe of the butt (hill) in front of the Jim Gibson house, during Civil War.
George Luther Hannah, ~~a minister, son of David~~, (that's where Luther Sharp got his name) married Emma McClure and she died down here in the church and she was burried behind the Droop Mountain Church. Allie's storym about Otha having died and going to heaven and returning to talk to the family was the same as down Dad's side of the family. I told Allie that Vee Hannah's daughter Evelene told me the same story came down Melinda's side of the family. Allie said: Otha todld the family that Joe had gone to heaven and that any of the rest of you that want to can go too. Otha said if you want to see where heaven is I'll take you outside and shew you and he whewed them the heavens were lit up beautiful. Mary (sister of Sarah) was a baby, who later married Sam Gibson and had one child, Stella who married a Fisher.
Many years later when Mary's child, Stella, was perhaps a teenager, Mary in getting ready to go down to Slatyfork to see Sarah, her sister(Mrs. Silas Sharp), went into a bedroom to get some wraps to wear and saw two men in there in a vision. She didn't know them and one said "don't be frightened--we're Otha and Joe--we've come to help bear your burdens, and it won't belong till you'll go (die)." Mary was aunt Mary. Mary took Stella on behind her on the horse and went to grandma's and she cried all the way from uncle Sam Gibson's home down to Slatyfork creek and dried her tears up before she went to the house, and Stellam said: Mommy cried all the way down till we got to the creek. That's the day Mary asked grandma (Sarah) if she'd take care of Stella and raise her, and ~~XXXXX~~ Mary died a short few months after that. (Dave: I've heard Dad tell about Stella being rais ed there with him. I always thought Dad raised her, but I suppose Dad meant Stella was raised by his family--his fa ther and mother.) Grandma Sarah lived till about 1908.
Dave: who was William Sharp? William always lived over on the Uncle Hugh Place. William owned all the Slatyfork country. They always had a mill there at Slatyfork. (Dave: I was told by Dad that there was an older smaller mill dam there. We could see one of the dam legs, half submerged, about 30 feet above the later dam legs--where the old dam was.)
Silas gave Ella and Melinda property up Slatyfork. We still own the mineral rights to that 242 acres. We had a nice orchard up there on the place (above LD's line on Slatyfork) and a freeze came and killed most of the trees in the country and I don't know if any are alive now. (I remember 2 or 3 trees across the creek from the present Lowell Gibson cabin)
Stories about the Sharps: I can tell you one about Silas Sharp. He didn't join either side in the Civil War, because the Confederates had come in and killed his (younger?) brother Luther, 16 and a civilian, right there at the house. He wouldn't fight on either side and they sent him to prison down in Richmond and he nearly starved to death while there. He said they killed rats and cats and ate them. They'd threw a cover over a cat when they came in with a guard and ate them. Silas said he never could eat a cat but did eat rats to keep from starving. When he came home he was so poor and thin no one knew him--not even his wife-to-be Sarah, who he soon married. After he married grandma, Sarah, she later said she didn't know him when he came back. I guess they were classmates together before the war and things like that. He fell in love with grandma and was married and had "L. D." , my mother Ella and Aunt Melinda. I've heard them tell about Silas sleeping on the hard ground in prison and when he got home he couldn't sleep in a bed very well for a while--slept on the floor.
I can tell a story of later on after he (Silas) was married. He had such a good sugar camp and when sugaring seanson was on he liked to make sugar and syrup. One time he went to sleep on Sunday and burned up his syrup. Grandmother wouldn't help him on Sundays (Sarah's parents wouldent even cook on Sunday--Dave Hannah). The next Sunday the same thing or similiar, he lost his syrup. Do you remember, Dave? (I said: I thought it was uncle Hugh who was wrned if he made syrup on Sunday he'd loose everything trying to do it on Sunday, but apparently it was Silas, and Dad tole me one time the wooden trough sprung a leak and lost all the sugar water, and another time he spilled it.) Allie said: and the 3rd time he said: " this is one time Sally's (he called Sarah by "Sally") prayers won't be answered, and he was going home with two big buckets of syrup and on his way home stubbed his toe and on a briar and spilled most of it and said: "I'll never try it again" . Allie assured me it was Silas instead of Hugh.

2) Interview of Mrs. Forest (Allie) Gibson in 1980 by Dave Sharp in two different interviews. (1)

246 (2)

Allie: I know something Sarah did. LD was going to see a school teacher and he came up to my mothers(Ella), to see a teacher who was boarding with mother. Her name was Lena Kellisen from Millsbore and was teaching school across the road from mom's. He'd come up several times on Sunday to see her. Someone (his mother Sarah) put some bread in his pocket so when he got off his horse at the barn he threw out the bread from his pocket and the chickens were running around with bread in their mouths, and that was a joke on him. (Allie implied that LD was embarrassed and didn't go see her any more.)

It was the same Kellisens from Millsbore that built Dad's big house. (Henry)

Henry Gibson was killed up here on Elk, near Robert Gibson's house and burried at the Moffett's cemetary, on the hill in front of Jim Gibson's big house, across the road and up on a high knoll. (Jim Gibson was father of Forest, Winters, Summers, etc.)

There is no markers up at that graveyard. Not even of my granddad. (which granddad?)

I don't know where young Luther was burried. Otha was probably burried over at the Hannah cemetary where Marvin Hannah lived and now owned by Harry Hannah. Joe Hannah and wife Elizabeth, father of John Hannah was burried in the Hannah cemetary. I saw his marker.

The Indians crossed through above here (mountain) and came down through here.

"Jane" Hannah was a daughter of a pioneer and married to Joe Barlow and lived at the Barlow place (on Elk Mt.). She was a sister of David. (David Hannah)

Uncle George Hannah was the son of David Hannah and died in Minton and he was a preacher and preached at Buck, W. Va. and died there and burried there. He was keeping grandma Hannah, his mother, and she died down there and is burried at _____.

Most of the Hannahs were burried at the Hannah cemetary on Elk.

Melinda Hannah married John Rose in Webster Co. Their daughter Stella died last year at about 96.

Rowd Hannah was Sam Hannah's brother.

Otha's father, David, went to a sale (Martha Buzzard's? --recording weak) to get a horse but brought a cow home instead, I think. Othat told them before his father came home, that He'd bought a cow. Otha threw a handkerchief to the ceiling and it fell across a chair at the time Otha's body was lowered into the grave. He said he could put the baby (Mary) in the fire and it wouldn't hurt her, but they wouldn't let him. (Otha died)

'80 Grand father Silas would take us on his knee when I visited them. Ada and a bunch of us and Violet was smaller. And he'd sing "Hobbie horse and two little girls riding a saddle" "Hobbiedegig, hobbiediegig, two little girls riding a saddle".

William Sharp's sister was Mary Gibson--David Gibson's wife.

David Hannah must have been burried over here in the Hannah Cemetary. Aunt Hester Sieafoose Hannah, David's wife) is burried at Buck, W. Va.

Rev George Hannah was the minister. Son of David. He was not George L. Hannah.

Rev. Geo. Hannah took careof his mother, Mrs. David Hannah, at Buck.

He and his mother were burried there.

Instead of the story told in July: Mary Gibson and her daughter Stella planned to go to Slatyfork to see her mother Sara Sharp. She went in a room to get her wraps to go and there were two men standing in there and she didn't know them and they happened to be her brothers, Otha and Joe. They said "We're Otha and Joe, You've had a lot of troubles and we've come to help you bear them.--she'd been sick. She was only a baby when they died and she didn't know them. She (Mary) cried allthe way down to Grandma's. Stella told her grandma that her mother had cried all the way down. Stella told her grandma about the vision. That was when Mary asked Sarah to take care of Stella and raise her and she did, (Mary died soon after that). We all thought a lot of Stella. Stella was really mom's step-sister, you might say. She wasn't adopted, though.

Stella married a Fischer and died in Elkins, and had a son named Rockey.

Uncle George Hannah's wife died in the church. He married Emma McClure from Droop--she was burriedthere. Aunt Mag Hannah and Edith Calahan--all burried in Droop Mt. Cemetary--tombstones.

George L. Hannah was John Hannah's boy.

David and John were brothers. George L.(Luther) is the one that had the post office at Yelk (near Marvin Hannah's, where Don Hannah lives--the same house). There was a post office near Charleston named Elk, so they spelled it Yelk by adding a "Y" to it. I suppose the first post office in the area was there. (I believe she said the post office was there in the 1800's.)

David and John's parents, Joe and Elizabeth(Burnside) were burried in the Hannah cemetary.

John P Hannah's mother was a Burnside.

246

Interview of Mrs. Forest (Allie) Gibson in 1980 by Dave Sharp , two different times. (3)

247

Othe and Joe probably had a double vault, and probably burried in the Hannah cemetary. (I couldn't find a stone of Othe or Joe in the cemetary).

Dave: If Joe Hannah was burried over there in the Hannah cemetary then that would be in the early 1800's--? Allie: Yes, they were burried over there (near the present cemetary) and later an apple tree in the orchard grew up where the old cemetary was and they took the monument or stone up and put it in the cemetary and left the grave burried there. There was nothing they could do about it. The stone is a little square.

John Rose married Aunt Melinda Hannah. Robert Rose was a son of John Rose.
...and Stella Rose died last year at about 94. She was married to Harmon Bonner

Dave: I've heard that a lot of people stopped in at the house of Jim Gibson and he fed a lot of people. Allie: " They always cooked a 1/2 bushel --Potatoes, beans or corn. The big pot is still back there now. We made bread --2 pans of bread. I don't know how he (Jim) provided it all. He'd been a millionaire if he hadn't let people steal from him. He bought a lot of timeber land down in Webster County near Webster Springs--all that-- and didn't get reserved one iota of minerals--coal, and they mined all that land.

Where did the land come from where Uncle Bob Gibson lived.: Did the Sharp's have anything to dowwith it? Allie: That was Gibson Land all the time..
The land on Slatyfork (Creek) running up to the top of the mountain (near Laurel Run of Slatyfork creek), my mother, Ella, owned over 200 acres and aunt Melinda's land came in between mom's and another piece of propterty where it was flat down at the creek and we put out apple trees there one year (across from Lowell Gibson's new cabin).
Dave: There used to be some apple trees there a few years ago,--maybe still there.)
The government owns the land but mom reserved the mineral rights.
Ada and I went up there once and fished at the hole of water near the apple trees.

helped mom with the dishes etc. and helped her some in the garden. My sister, Florence, went out with the horses in the woods iwth the men. She could harness up horse as well as a man could. She worked with horses and skidded logs. Once a man asked her where he could "do his business" (BM) thinking she was a man and she said: " right over there" ha.

summer 1980
Frank Hannah: Harmon Bonner was a brother of Lee Bonner, Walter of Hubert and Jannetta Bonner — Dave went to grade school with them they lived in Harmon Sharp's old log house across the creek from where Big spring enties into Elk (Slatyfork)

247

Dave: they put the telephone line through here in 1898-1899. Tell me about it. Allie: We kids imitated the line by putting elder bush poles in the ground and trung strings on it. Dave: Dad said David Hannah lived just above Sam Hannah's place --beside the present road when Otha died and saw his vision. He said it was a log house, two stories. He said he'd been in that house when he was a boy and he said it burned. Didn't David Hannah live there before he moved down to the log house at Page Hannah's?. Allie: I never heard of him living up there near Sam Hannahs. Dave Who lived in the old house there near Sam Hannahs? Allie: Aunt Leah Hannah stayed there--Bowd Hannah--bee, I wonder what those people's name was. The Gibson house was an old log house up the hollow (at Sam Hannah's?--Dave) Dave: I stopped there and the old chemney rocks are still there between the old and new road. Allie: seems like the Browns lived there. I'll tell a little story. Grandma Hannah (Hester) was there to visit and she said Elmer Rider was a little boy and he visited there and there was a Rider lived there then--Elmer's daddy. He said he got a hair in something (eating) and she was so mad at him for saying loodly "gotta hair, what am I going to do with it"? ! Grandma told us kids, you know, "what that boy should have done was take that hair out and said nothing about it" It must have been a Rider that lived there because Elmer was there. (Dad told us the story about the boy and the hair, but I never remembered who it was--Dave).

Dave: Ivan, in one of his t pes he made said: "David Hannah lived in that log house before it burned." Allie: that isn't the same house. That's the one over where Archie (page Hannah's) Jim Jackson lived there (Archie's place) , after David lived there--in my time. My mother (Ella) stayed there with uncle Henry and aunt Mag when Ernest Hannah was born--he moved to New Mexico. (Dave: Frank Hannah said Davie sold the place to Sam Hannah before he died.) Allie: when David died he (~~Henry~~ ~~or~~ ~~Henry~~) left (what?) to George and Henry. Henry only had one boy and afraid he'd get in meanness and he kept moving like "a turkey gobbler"--jumping from place to place. Then they must have sold the place to Sam Hannah. George and Henry were to look after their mother, Hester. Uncle (George) was a minister and moved a lot and Uncle Henry was a merchant and he just went from place to place--Arbovale, Renick's Valley, and so many places. He married Mag MCClure. She's burried at Droop. She came back after Uncle Henry died from New Mexico and came back to her sisters and died down at Bee..... (?)

L.D.'s Courting: Allie: A school teacher was boarding at Mother's and uncle Luther was going with her (Lena Kennis(on)?). He'd been coming up pretty regularly to see her. Had to go horseback. So grandmother or Stella down there put some biscuits in his pocket. So when he got down off the horse at the barn, whe, he threw the biscuit out of his pocket and the chickens just scrambled for it. Embarrassed him. It may have been Lena Kennison. Mom had a picture of her. I was only about 2 years old when Luther and Laura married. Laura said she thought I was the cutest child she ever saw. She took a likening to me and we were always like mother and daughter. I believe even closer. I always thought so much of her. My father, Bob Gibson (wagons) went to Huttonsville to the train to bring Uncle Luther groceries etc. One of Suzie Rider's brothers or her father was drowned in the river (Tygart). I think he was a Brown. Dave: Dad told once of someone drunk and drowning in Tygart River. Allie: that was him. Suzie's father I think. He was a Brown. I wonder where the Brown's came from and the Jacksons?

Allie: .....Martha Hannah. That must have been the John Hannah's famuly. Forest's grandfather was ..(John?) (David and John brothers?) ... Where the Hugh Hannah house is--was- -a log house. I never remembered Forest's grandfather except when he was burried. I remembered. I wondered why that woman was sitting on the bed crying. I was a child. It was Aunt Mandy Hambrick with one of Lee Hambricks little ones --baby one. One.

Dave: Dad said when he visited up there, this woman (Martha Hannah?) would put out the candle ~~and~~ till the prayer was over to save candles.
Allie: I was the last baby that that woman took care of. She was a midwife--a doctor. Name Polly Hannah, She was a daughter of Dr. Sharp up in that section(?). She (Polly) was married to John Hannah. They ~~liv~~ lived where Hugh Hannah lived--just above Veo Hannahs. That's the Hannah's h's that Luther viited and she put out the candles during prayer. David and John Hannah was their son. John was going to a dance one night and he said the devil was in the shape of a dog and he ran around the fence. When he went to go over the ~~a~~ fence, that dog would be right there. He said it wasn't nothing but the devil. So he just went back home.

Stories by Dorothy (Hannah) Fitzwater: May 6, 1981

Blain Sharp lived down here at the old place (a house just 100 yards below her present house) and going over to visit your Dad and Mother. He lived here with Henry Sharp He visited Luther's and it was time to go ~~to~~ to bed, and Mrs. "Aunt Rachael" --Dad (Davis) called her aunt Rach. She said "Blain, you can slee where you did last night" (thinking he'd slept there last night). Blain said "it's a long ways to go but I can do her, and he got up and came back over here. They said it was so cold. (Dad's story about this elsewhere in stories) Dave: Dad said that someone was stealing some little things from his store and decided to talk to Blain about it. He said "you shouldn't be taking things" Blain replied: "Tee Hee, it's a good way to get things without paying for them. Dad said he couldn't keep from laughing, the way he said it. ha. (With Blain laughing, Dad couldn't be serious with him as he planned.)
Dorothy: John Slanker and Molly Slanker's mother was a Hannah. I think it is in theold history book. There were several David Hannahs. Dad (Davis) and L. D. Went to school together (log school) and Dad went to his store around there.(There was a circus there once. LD had some kind of a tent and told dad to take careof it and he went off and talked to his girls (teenagers?)
Dorothy: John Hannah was the Hannah that had slaves. He lived, I guess down here. Grandpa Hannah---Shell Hannahs father (?) They were burried just below the Hannah cemetery. They moved it because of water. --- moved them back up on the hill. Whites and Slaves both. Grandpa Hannah was burried down there. He was the one that jumped the ditch as reported in the history book.
John's boys were Andy and Bill. Uncle Andy Hannah married a "White" girl and so did uncle Bill Hannah--married a "White". and they used to say that two of "black John's" boys (he owned slaves and they called him "black" John). married white girls . ha.
(Dave:) Mrs. Marvin Hannah told me this store a couple years ago (1980)
Dorothy: There was another John Hannah that didn't have slaves. Bill Hannah's wife was Sarah. Andy's wife wad Udora.

Allie Gibson --Teaching Slatyfork 1911-1912 Pto. 250

I taught school at Slatyfork 1911-1912. The Trustees were L. D. Sharp and Sam Hannah. I stayed at my uncle LD and Aunt Laura's from Monday evening till Friday morning, for ~~K~~ $11 (I think) a month. I helped with the bed making, dish washing and the like, I helped around the house and store if needed. As far as I remember, I paid $11 for board. I loved them very much. I'm sure they all had an education suitable for their day. I remember Mandy Irvine tripping and running and doing the work at William Sharp's. I don't recall my great grand--Grandparents (Wm and Rachael Dilley). Uncle Hugh was there.
All I know is David Hannah and Hester raised their family at the Sam Hannah's house were James Jackson raised their family. I know my ~~family~~ mother stayed there when Uncle Henry and Aung Mag lived there and took care of Earnest Hannah--I think she was 14 then.

Sam Morgan preached at Mary's chapel
Yes, there was an old house where Frank Hannah said on Boude Hannah place just opposite the Gibson place in the corner (Corner? .....
.....
I think Grandma Hannah (Hester) told me Elmer & Pennick Rider, parents lived there.(Elmer's parents? It was just a vacant house to me. (It's gone now? .

That was Silas Sharp that slept in a rocking chair. He didn't lay down for six weeks. The night he died he asked Grandma: "Sarah"--his wife: to fix him a pallet by the fire. She helped him down. Then he said " help me up" He died peacefully then--just went to sleep.
I didn't know of any of the Sharp's owning slaves.
Ellis Hannah died in 1915 by an accident.

Joe Gibson's children stayed at Bob Gibson's--and went to school.

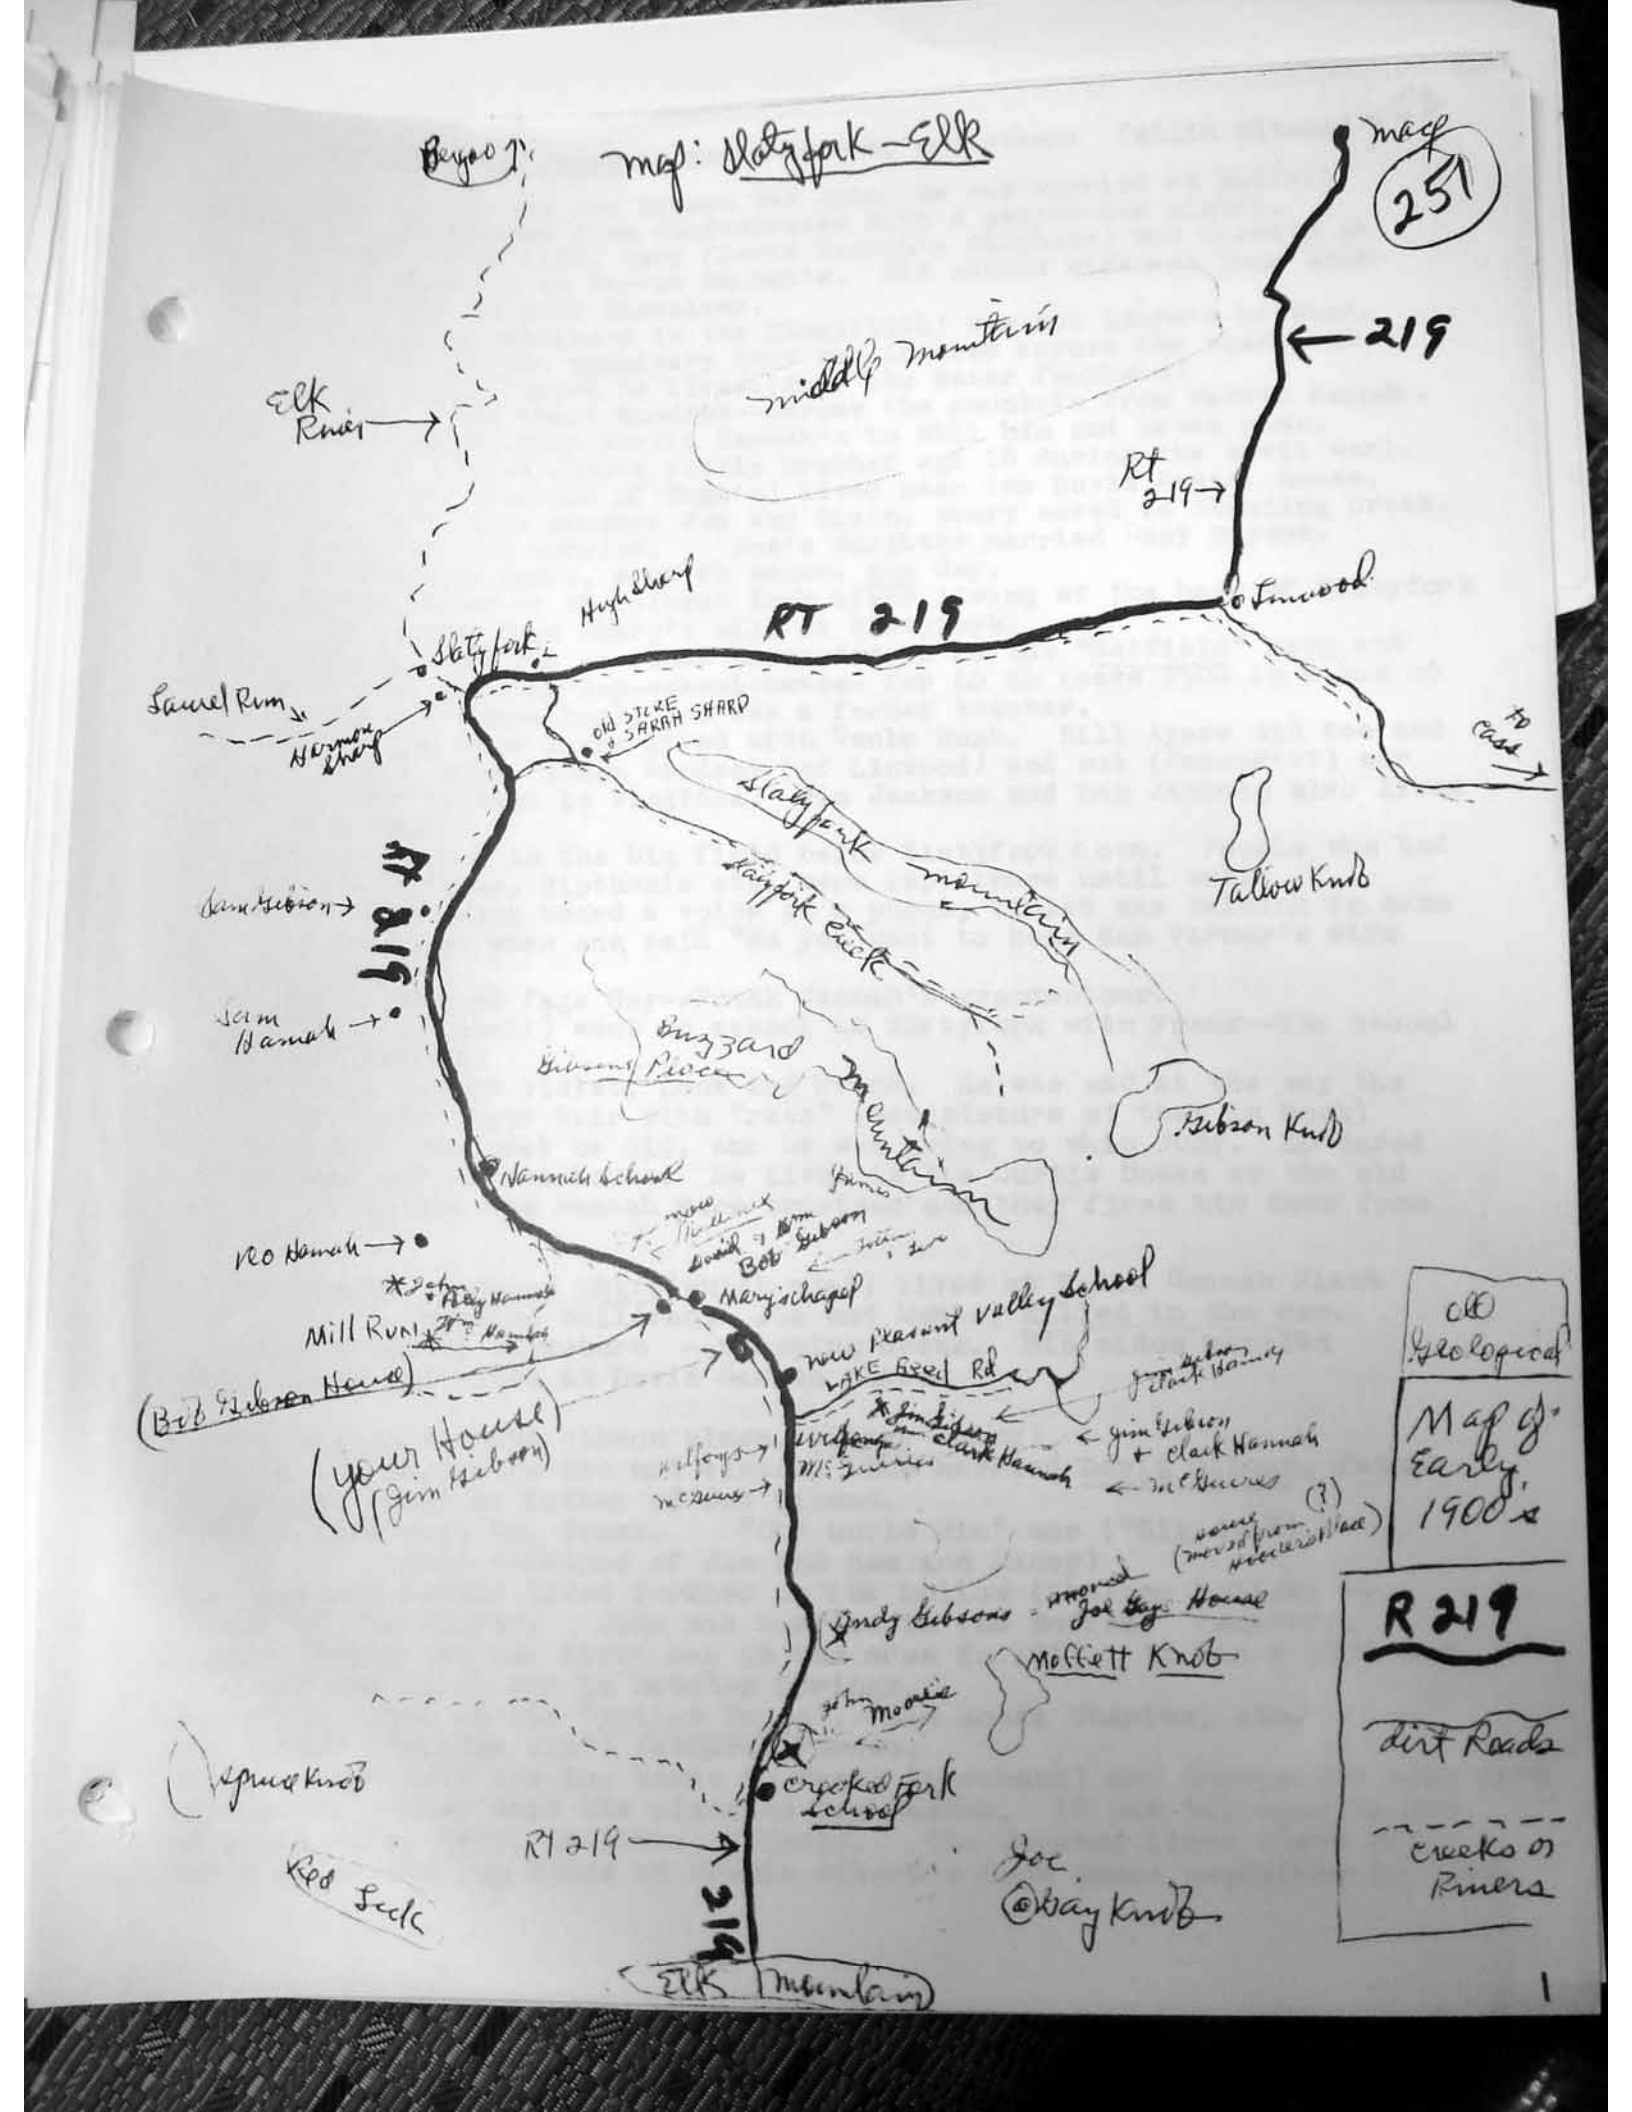
Nancy Rider? Anthony Creek....

Silas Sharp: I stayed with them what time he was sick and had a fly bush to keep flies off of him ---6 weeks he never got out of his chair. He had abench or something like a table on a high chair to put his arms on and his head down to rest. Stella Gibson was there. She could help grandma take care of him at night.

Students I taught: Jesse, Fred, Frank, Dock Hannahs, Ivan Sharp, Willie Hoover, Willie Harmon Gibson, Clyde Galford (just visited)--under 6, Crayde Ogukkuos Richard Gibson, Henry Gibson, Bernard Galford, Paul Hannah, Violet Sharp, Roxie Galford, Viola Jackson, Eula Galford, Beula Galford, Bessie Hoover, Velma Hoover, Maude Phillips, Bessie Higgins Creola Sharp, Emily Hoover, Ruth Gibson, Emma Hannah(Gibson), ~~Lucky~~ Lucy Hannah (Jackson) Bessie Higgins, (daughter of Sam Hisgins)

I remember mother (Ella) telling about the log school house at the cemetery. Teachers: Gum Mathews and Mr. Byus.→He had been left on a river bank to die and some folks found him and named him "Byus" meaning finding him by us. Mother said he was a good person and teacher. He prepared to preach and just preached one sermon and he died. I never asked where he was burried.
Uncle Ellis was driving to town in a wagon & Veo was with him. His horses got scared and he was thrown out and was taken to the Marlinton hospital, where he died --just lived through the night. Russell was at Richmond at school He came on home. I was at Richmond at the time to see uncle Harmon Sharp, his daughter was Lena Liesty--was at the hospital with her father. Harmon said "you are Bob and Ella's daughter"--he knew me. But I had left on an early train for Washington and didn't know about Uncle Ellis dying till later.

SHARP 4



map: Slatyfork–Elk
map 251
219 middle mountain
Elk River
Rt 219
Rt 219
Hughart
Slatyfork
Inwood
Laurel Run
Harmon Sharp
OLD STORE SARAH SHARP
to east
Slatyfork mountain
Slatyfork creek
Tallow Knob
Jim Gibson
Sam Hannah
Buzzard
Gibson Place
Gibson Knob
Hannah School
Bob Gibson
Marjschaapl
Mill Run
(Bob Gibson House)
(your House)
(Jim Gibson)
new Pleasant Valley School
LAKE Creek Rd
Jim Gibson
Clark Hannah
Jim Gibson + Clark Hannah
McElwees
Wolfongs
McElwees
Mc Curtis
Andy Gibsons moved Joe Gay House
Moffett Knob
John Moores
Spruce Knob
Creeked Fork School
Rt 219
Red Lick
219
Joe
Bay Knob
Elk Mountain
old Geological Map of Early 1900's
R 219
dirt Roads
Creeks or Rivers
1

Miscelleanous Facts by Frank Hannah, and others (Allie Gibson)

The father of Sam and Joe Gibson was John. He was burried at Moffett cemetery. He escaped from Confederates with a pepper-box pistol.
Sam Gibson's first wife, Mary (David Hannah's daughter) was burried at the Hannah cemetery at Marvin Hannah's. His second wife was Emma Showalter, a sister of Dick Showalter.
The W. T. Morgan mentioned in the Times(1914) was not Laura's brother. He was a clerk at the commisary that was located across the road from the "yellow house" where he lived.(near the water fountain)
Jake Simmons lived about Woodrow--across the mountain from Marvin Hannah. Hugh walked across from Marvin Hannah's to kill him and he was gone. (Jake Simmons killed Hugh's little brother age 16 during the civil war).
Henry Sharp (no relation of Hugh's) lived near the Davis Hannah house. He thought the had a brother Joe and Blain. Henry moved to Stamping Creek. His brother Joe got married. Joe's daughter married Lacy Bryant.
Henry's daughter, Mamie, went to school one day.
Buck Galford lived at the Gibson Knob after living at the head of Slatyfork creek, and he ran Hugh Sharp's mill at Slatyfork.
Henry Doddrill was the one that pretended to be the "Hatfield" gang and left a note ~~in the old log school house~~ for LD to leave $500 in a box at the old school house(log). He was a former teacher.
Dan Jackson and Noye Ayers lived with Uncle Hugh. Bill Ayers did too and got in a fight with Hansen Lindsey (of Linwood) and cut (Hanson's?) ear about off and he went to Virginia. Jim Jackson and Dan Jackson also lived with Uncle Hugh.
The Pest House was in the big field below Slatyfork town. People who had contagious diseases, diptheria etc. were kept there until well.
The first time Frank heard a voice on a phone, Violet was talking to some one at LD's house when she said "do you want to hear Sam Varner's wife on the phone"?.
Effie Moore married Page Gay--Frank Hannah's grandmother.
Lena Morgan (Mitchell) went to school at Slatyfork with Frank--the school house that burned.
Lesslie Judy taught Violet, Lena and Frank. He was mad at the way the two girls fixed their hair with "rats" (see picture of them in book) and made L.D. mad that he did, and he was going to whip Judy. LD dared him to come out of the house. He lived in the Curtis House at the old place. L. D. And Sam Hannah were trustees and they fired him from his job.

Allie Gibson: Bernard Sharp(which one?) lived at Davis Hannah Place (married children: Joe and Mamie) Killed in the war.
They moved to Hillsboro --Stamping creek. His widow married Henry Sharp and lived at Davis Hannah place.

Henry killed at Robt Gibson place. (Henry Sharp)
William and Mary were bro and sister. She married David Gibson, father of William, who was father of Bob Gibson.
David's sons were Wm. James. "Old uncle Jim" was ("Big Jim") (John --father of Joe and Sam and Nancy)
Joe Gibson's father lived further up the hollow (Shelton Hollow) -- back of the church. John was burried in the Moffett Cemetery.
Forest Gibson had the first car in the area in 1913. It was a 1909 car. He had the first car in Webster Springs.
Tom Beale lived at the "yellow House". His sons: Charles, etc.
Jim Gibson ("Little Jim") fatherof Forest.
David Hannah left the log house to Henry (merchant) and George--to take care of Hester, --they sold the place to Sam Hannah. It had belonged to Sam Gibson's wife, Mary, daughter of David. Jim Jackson lived there after David died--the log house at Archie Gibson's (now gone) --picture in book.

Frank Hannah Interviewed by Dave May 1, 1981

Dave: (I asked him something about the first sawmills.--there was one half way from the mouth of Slatyfork to the old store place.)
Frank: ...on up the hollow next to the store (perhaps he means the one half way?) I was pretty small. Maybe that was when the cut the lumber for that new house Si livesin. There was a mill up Slatyfork between the old school house and the old store (that was the half-way one) I remember them cutting those big hemlocks trees. We'd go up there sometimes during noon hour, I think There was a saw mill near the school house later on (1930's)(Dad sold timber and had it sawed). Dave: There was also a saw mill up the creek above the old store place when Dad was a boy. (On Sundays he and others would push the cart up the creek on the tram rails and ride it back, and may have wrecked oncee?) The old boiler was sold for junk during the second world war. Si said the builder had a kiln near the new house when it was built to dry boards, and he thought they may have sawed the lumber for the house and planed it.
Frank: Kellison from Hillsboro built it.
Bill Friel, I think was the brother of Suzie Rider. George L. Hannah was married 3 times. First wife was a McClure. He fell out with them at Mary's Chapel church and said he'd never go back there again. His wife was there at church and died there. So he had to go back when she died. His second wife was Nora Sharp, daughter of Harmon.
Frank: Eva (Hannah) Beale taught at the Slatyfork school that later burned. Little Bill Gibson down there was full of mischief, like rest of us We got some dynamite. There was an old hemlock tree that fell across the road and some one had cut it out. We bored a hole in it and poured the dynamite in it and a fuse to it. On Friday evening Eva's father (Ellis) came down after her with the sled. We lit that thing and looked up and saw him coming on the sled and He had just about time to get to the dynamite. Some one ran back and pulled the fuse out.
Frank: (Phones) I don't remember the first time I heard a phone conversation. One time I was down at your Dad's. Violet picked up the phone and some one was talking and she said "you want to hear someone talking?" I said "yes". I remember that Sam Varner's wife was talking to someone. That was before we (Sam Hannah's) had a telephone. Your Dad, John Gibson and some others had phones on the old line.
Otis Gibson used to live up the hollow. He was sick. One winter my mother would go up and sit with him . He had some kind of rheumatism.
Dave: Did Lena Mitchel (Laura's sister) go to school here? Frank: Lena went to school with me at the school house that burned. Leslie Judy taught there when Lena and Violet went. This picture of their "hair-do". He got mad at them for fixing their hair. They rolled it up around like a "rat". (see picture) He jumped on them about it. It made your dad mad and he was going to whip old Judy. He was going to feed the sheep one morning and Judy was in the house (the Curtis house?) and L.D. dared him to come out. He had his feed sack and some grain in it and laid it down in the road. Judy lived across the creek from L.D.'s store in the Curtis house--the house that was up off the ground (now gone). He wooulдn't come out. He taught two schools down there. He taught one school Your dad, L.D. and my dad, Sam were trustees. My dad said to LD "we ought to get rid of him and get someone else. LD said let's try him one more year. They tried him another year. But they all fell out with him.
Frank: Roy Rider went up to the spring one evening to get a drink. He came back and said "do you all want a dringk"? If you do, better go now or it'll be too dark to fine the spring. He made out like Sam was working us too late, ha. (Story about the Hatfield Gang) L.D. was instructed to put a box with money at the school house. LD put an empty box there but they didn't come that night. The second night the came and got it and threw the box down. They thought it was Henry Doddrill, a former teacher that did it.

Frank Hannah Interviewed by Dave May 1, 1981

Dave: (I asked him something about the first sawmills.--there was one half way from the mouth of Slatyfork to the old store place.)
Frank: ...on up the hollow next to the store (perhaps he means the one half way?) I was pretty small. Maybe that was when the cut the lumber for that new house Si livesin. There was a mill up Slatyfork between the old school house and the old store (that was the half-way one) I remember them cutting those big hemlockx trees. We'd go up there sometimes during noon hour, I think There was a saw mill near the school house later on (1930's)(Dad sold timber and had it sawed). Dave: There was also a saw mill up the creek above the old store place when Dad was a boy. (On Sundays he and others would push the cart up the creek on the tram rails and ride it back, and may have wrecked oncee?) The old boiler was sold for junk during the second world war. Si said the builder had a kiln near the new house when it was built to dry boards, and he thought they may have sawed the lumber for the house and planed it.
Frank: Kellison from Hillsboro built it.
Bill Friel, I think was the brother of Suzie Rider. George L. Hannah was married 3 times. First wife was a McClure. He fell out with them at "ary's Chapel church and said he'd never go back there again. His wife was there at church and died there. So he had to go back when she died. His second wife was Nora Sharp, daughter of Harmon.
Frank: Eva (Hannah) Beale taught at the Slatyfork school that later burned. Little Bill Gibson down there was full of mischief, like rest of us We got some dynamite. There was an old hemlock tree that fell across the road and some one had cut it out. We bored a hole in it and poured the dynamite in it and a fuse to it. On Friday evening Eva's father (Ellis) came down after her with the sled. We lit that thing and looked up and saw him coming on the sled and he had just about time to get to the dynamite. Some one ran back and pulled the fuse out.
Frank: (Phones) I don't remember the first time I heard a phone conversation. One time I was down at your Dad's. Violet picked up the phone and some one was talking and she said"you want to hear someone talking?" I said "yes". I remember that Sam Varner's wife was talking to someone. That was before we (Sam Hannah's) had a telephone. Your Dad, John Gibson and some others had phones on the old line.
Otis Gibson used to live up the hollow. He was sick. One winter my mother would go up and sit with him . He had some kind of rheumatism.
Dave: Did Lena Mitchel (Laura's sister) go to school here? Frank: Lena went to school with me at the school house that burned. Leslie Judy taught there when Lena and Violet went. This picture of their"hair-do". He got mad at them for fixing their hair. They rolled it up around like a "rat". (see picture) He jumped on them about it. It made your dad mad and he was going to whip old Judy. He was going to feed the sheep one morning and Judy was in the house (the Curtis house?) and L.D. dared him to come out. He had his feed sack and some grain in it and laid laid it down in the road. Judy lived across the creek from L.D.'s store in the Curtis house--the house that was up off the ground (now gone). He wooouldn't come out. He taught two schools down there. He taught one school Your dad, L.D. and my dad, Sam were trustees. My dad said to LD "we ought to get rid of him and get someone else. LD said [illegible] let's try him one more year. They tried him another year. But they all fell out with him.
Frank: Roy Rider went up to the spring [illegible] one evening to get a drink. He came back am said "do you all want a dringk"? If you do, better go now or it'll be too dark to fine the spring. He made out like Sam was working us too late, ha. (Story about the Hatfield Gang) L.D. was instructed to put a box with money at the school house. LD put an empty box there but they didn't come that night. The second night the came and got it and threw the box down. They thought it was Henry Doddrill, a former teacher that did it.

Quotes from Raymond Mace

My mother, aunt and uncle attended the New Pleasant Valley School just a short distance from Allie Gibson lives. Before then, there was the "Old" Pleasant Valley School on the hill near Mary's Chapel Church. For quite a time your Aunt Ella used the building as a chicken house. Then when her house burned, the building was moved across the road and incorporated into the new home which still stands.

Summer of 1921: we lived up Slatyfork creek in the sawmill shanty, and I played on the old boiler.

Jake Gibson married a daughter of John Friel of Indian Draft, son of Jeremiah Friel. My great-grandfather, Wm Thomas Friel a Confederate soldier survived the war only to dwown in Tygert's Vally River near Elkwater. His grave in an abandoned cemetery overlooking Conley Run.

Anecdotes about the Sharps: According to the story I heard many years ago, LD set up his first store in the back room of his home. His first stock of goods was ink. One cold winter night a good part of his stock froze and burst. The youthful merchant was almost wiped out. However, the economic law of supply and demand went to work, and the price of ink doubled. Another: Your great-grandmother (Rachael) made a shirt each for Hugh and Harmon. To be sure there would be no mistake in ownership, according to the one who told the story, she said sh would just mark one with an "H" for Harmon and the other with an"H" for Hugh !

Easter Gibson: I heard he was namedd "Easter" because he was born on that day. His mother didn't know the exact date of his birth, and so he celebrated Easter Sunday as his birthday nom matter what month or date it happened to be.

The Pocahontas Times Jan 1, 1914 "The directors of the Marlinton and Elk Mutural Telephone Col met Sat. Officers are L.D.Sharp, President, S. McDilley vice-res. and gen. Mgr. J. D. Gibson,, sec and treas. The most important business transacted was the cutting out of free phones after Jan. 1; the extending of the short line wire down Elk wherever the extension of the company's business justified it (Mace: probably the W.Va. Pulp & Paper co.); the cooperation of the different mutual companies entering the Marlinton switchboard will be asked in order to install two phones, one in the C & O. station and the other in the freight office"

Mail service: The Times told of a lack of mail service in the Elk community in the very early 20's. About 9 miles of Elk had no mail service. (Dave: a letter to Ivan (at Buckhannon?) from mother said a package would be carried horseback to the Clover Lick PO.--no mail to Marlinton.)

Jake Simmons belonged to the 19th Va. Cavalry. He was probably one of the several Randolph County men belonging to it.--?) He was a 3rd Lieutenant.

Donald Johnson's gunpoweder accident: Donald was trying to ignite the poweder and then mud-cap the bottle before the powder furned !

Airplanes: Paul or Si conducting parachute jumps out of barn with unbrellas. --Donald or Dave--? Archie Gibson discussed the glory of flying.

War is terrible: Frank Hannah told me, after the war, Joe Gay and Walt Allen would get off their horses and fight if they happened to meed on road.

Automobiles on Elk: I seem to remember that L.D. sold gas from drums which he kept in the barn before he installed a gas tank to the front and left of the old store. I remember quite well the gas tank in front of the (old) store. It had a cylindrical bowl with gallong gradations pained on the side. The bowl had to be filled by hand and was fed into the car by gravity. In my memory I can see your mother filling the bowl for a customer.

Si Sharp's Recollections --- Capt. Mundy --Doc Lowe Murder on cassette 1982 Feb Harmon Sharp's

255

Capt Mundy told Uncle Hugh that in a battle in the Civil war, some of his men were down under the brow of a hill and hisother men were back shooting over this hill at the enemy over on the other sid and they killed one of their own men. He said he thought it was from a misfire or low poweder charge and one of the men under the brow of the hill was shot in the back. But it was just an accident--one of the thingsof war.

Capt Mundy and Uncle Hugh had a squatter's deed of some kind for a lot of land back on Gauley. (Dave: that deed is Xeroxed elsewhere in book). That was the way you got unclaimed or unsurveyed land back in the early days. If no one claimed a patch of land you wrote up a claim and after you kept it so long it belonged to you. But I guess some one had a prior deed or claim to that property. Evidently his claim wasn't good. I think Ramona has that "claim" from Ivan's papers. I suppose Capt Mundy wrote it up. I didn't know that claim existed until after Ivan died.

"Doc Lowe"-- Along about 1890 or before that, there were a copple of young fellows that came in to Uncle Harmon Sharp's at Slatyfork and went up to the head of Laurel Run and built a cabin there. They wore six-shooters on their hips. They didn't socialize with any of the neighbors. They'd come out to the store and had money to buy supplies. They were there about a year or so. They didn't work at a job. They probably hunted some. They seemed to be hid out up there. One morning one of the fellows came down to Harmon Sharp's who lived across the creek in a big log house at Slatyfork. He said "I had trouble up at the house last night and I had to kill my partner. We fell out and I knewwasgoing to shoot me. We sat up all night. He was sitting backwards on a chair with my arms up on the chair and he was sitting over in the corner and we were waiting for the other one to go to sleep. I dozed off and I heard the click of his gun when he cocked it. I knew was going to shoot and I fell off sideways from that chair and pulled my six-shooter and shot him, but he shot as I fell off and the bullet hit the back of the chair where I had my arms on. I got off it just in time" . Well, Harmon's went up and from the best I can remember, they brought him out of there. His name was DockLowe. T think he was burried here at the Sharp cemetery. --probaly one of those on the back side that had just a rock for a stone. Anyway, they just took his word that he shot in self-defense. There wasn t any coroner's investigation or jury. I asked Allie Gibson if she knew anything about it. She said she knew about it. She was little girl then. She said she heard about "Old Dock Lowe" getting shot. But what Uncle Hugh said, I understand he wasn't a very old fellow. It was a supposition at the time that they were outlaws and were hiding out from the law till things cooled down. I asked old man Will Gibson (the one at Slatyfork?) about it and he said he knew where they had the cabin up there. It was before Uncle Harmon moved from Slatyfork. G. C. & E. Railroad came down here and offered Uncle Harmon a pretty big price for his farm, that took in all of the Slatyfork area and down the river a ways and he sold out and went down to Elkins, over there at the west side of Elkins at _____ "Steve"(?) Bottom , big level farm land .... and that when he had the girls, Mary and Cora, -- they went to California. I visited with them in San Diago in the 1930s. Cora was a nurse then and about 50 or 55 and Mary a little older. Mary married a Rhorabaugh and they had aboy called Harmon, and a girl. Both of them are now dead and both younger than me.

This is Feb 28, 1982.

(The tape continues with some piano playing by Si.

The other side of the cassette has Dave's, Paul's, Ketha's and Genevieveas visit with Violet in Richmond. --Violet's conversation with us.

Misceleanous "Loose Ends", Stories etc.

Si Sharp: Quince Harris made whiskey up the hollow (swimming hole) above Henry Shaver's and the RR track, for grandfather Wm Sharp--sold whiskey. Joe and Sam Gibson's dad, John, camped at the pine knob behind the middle mountain meadow during the Civil war, with Silas Sharp. Wm Sharp, after the war, sewed a Confederate for unlawfully taking Silas a civilian, a prisoner, and believed collected $500. Colonel Gatewood was probably one of them sued.

Got in the fur business: Jake Gibson went to Edray Post Office and tot a fur price list and gave it to Dad. Dad bought fur and sent to the address on the price list. About 12 years old.

Blain Sharp would stay some nights at grandmother Sharp's. One evening, thinking Blain had stayed with her the night before, told him: Blain, you can sleep where you slept last night"--meaning the same bed upstairs. He had actually slept at his house with Henry Sharp (near the Davis Hannah house--Dorothy Fitzwater) the night before. It made Blaine mad and he said: "I have a good bed at home and I'll go there and sleep" ! ha.

Fur Business: Dad had made a $30 profit on three calves he borrowed ($30) money to buy, and gave half of it to Jake Gibson to help buy fur, and he doubled his money.

John and Melina Rose lived at Whittiker Falls, down Elk river, (Dad stayed all night there buying fur when age 12). Their son, Bob lived near Point Mountain. Was a surveyor. And he lived at Webster Springs. Rumor that he got drunk and a car killed him.

Ivan had Dad's gold (filled) pocket Watch, a Waltham 18 size, 1892 model.

There was a house at the Gibson Knob, so Buck Galford could have lived there. They moved a lot.

George Hoover was probably the first to live up near the RR track.

Hanson Lindsey was a brother of Mrs. Showalter.

Burn Hamrick, Jim Shaver and Greens"held possession" (squatters) on Gauley.

Sam Gibson and Dad watched at the old school house for the "Hatfield" gang that sent a note for Dad to put $300 in a box in the corner of the school house. No one showed up. Another night he came and threw the empty box and decoy money on the ground. Dad first thought it was Burton Hoover, but a Dodrill from Webster county, perhaps a shhool teacher at Slatyfork one term, was convicted of a similiar trick down there, so it must have been Dodrill

Ivan Sharp's recollections taped November 1974 transcribed — 1980 by his daughter
Ramona Shipley

257

This November the 15th 1974 and I have a message here to those who may be concerned in regard to a little bit of history to the Sharp generation and ancestries . Since Mother and Dad hav past on to their final resting place with the Lord, we regret we did not make a record of their vast knowledge of our kin and their activities, while here on earth, therefore, I will start with myself:

I was the oldest of son of Luther David and Laura Jane Morgan Sharp. My name is Ivan L. Sharp. I was born July 27, 1900 and so the legend and knowledge that I have that has been handed down to me and some that I have known to be a fact on my own rights, so I'll begin with stating that there was seven children in my father and mother's family: Ada, Violet and Creola, Silas, Paul and Luther David, (junior) -- so I will state that I'm married to Genevieve Orndorff of Arbovale, a daughter of J. B. and Cora Ervin Orndorff and have lived happily together for fifty years. and we have three children- Ramona, now living in Parkersburg, married to Thomas Shipley and they have three boys, John, Thomas Alan and David and also a grandson Jeremy and my daughter , she teaches music in public school since the boys are grown up and away at school and one of them married off, so Ralph , he is taking care, of you might say, two families, he is living in Fountain Valley California and has a young son, Richard, and part of his family is in Albany, Georgia- Vickie, Brian, Kathy and Diana. Evan, youngest son, married Phyllis McCutcheon, a sister of Reverend Calvin Mc Cutcheon, a Methodist minister like what used to be called a circuit rider on his own preference, he prefers to deal with country people rather than preach and take care of a city congregation and he has been awarded several medals or plaques for his efficiency in his line of duty. And of course this takes care of the children and except , I might say that Ralph is asst production manager of a bearing factory where he lives, and Evan living out in Madison , Va. has two sons, Rod and Todd an d they are both in school and his wife teaches school so they are kept pretty busy, there on their farm trying to remodel the old farm house. And of course, now getting back to my dad's family..

Ada was married twice. The first marriage to Mr. John Johnson. She had a son, Donald which is now living in Portland , Oregon and a daughter, Helen, married to Eugene Hannah living in Slatyfork, West Virginia. After she taught a term of public school at Slatyfork, she remarried-to Will Curtain. To that union was two sons and a daughter. Billy Curtain, Stanley, and Clara Keene. Then Violet, lives in Richmond Virginia and she married Rufus Mark and who is now deceased and they had one son Rufus Melvin, Jr and he lives in Indiana. And Creola was a victim of the flu after the first World's War and she had-anyway it wasn't diptheria, but anyway her throat swelled shut and they had to 'lance' her throat and it turned to blood poison and in that time they didn't have penecillan or streptomicin to cure or check diseases like that. (1923)

She was very talented in music and was doing a little teaching of piano lessons even while she was in the last year of high school.

Then Si, my brother, Si after having a few operations and a slipped disc in the back and gall stones and a few other troubles, he decided that he'd remain single and free and therefore he is still living back at the old homeplace , the Hugh Sharp place where our great-uncle Hugh Sharp lived and of course my dad built the house there.

Then came along Paul. When he went to school at Buckhannon, he met Vonda Lowe and they were married and to this union was born a son and a daughter, Thayer and Barbara. Of course, Paul, after he finished school,he taught school and was principal ofthe Seneca Trail Public School at Slatyfork.for a few years. When the second World's War come along, he went down to Institute near Dunbar and Nitro and went to work as personnel man,U.S. Rubber company in making latex rubber for war purposes. When this factory closed, he followed with the company on to Texas and is living in Texas. Vonda died a few years ago and was buried near Barboursville or Huntington where her parents were buried. Paul remarried again. To this union there are no children and he was fortunate in getting two good wives and of course a good wife comes in pretty good to take care of you when you have ailments and we all have our share and Paul had some kind of paralysis in both arms for a while and the Lord is almost miraculously healing him and he has almost normal use of one arm.

Now Dave, married Sylvia Friel, one of Dee Friel's daughter's and they have a girl of which they adopted and is very bright and intelligent and a great help to them, when Sylvia hasn't been too well and like the rest of us- it's nice to have company around.

Now this takes care of, I believe, my brother's and sisters.

My dad was the only son of my grandfather, Silas Sharp and my grandmother Sarah Hannah Sharp. He had two sisters, Ella, who married Robert Gibson and Malinda,who married Ellis Hannah.

My grandfather Silas Sharp, spent twenty-three months and twenty-four days in a Confederate prison during the Civil War. He had several brothers, three were killed duringthe Civil War. OTHER ~~Bernard~~, I believe, was killed back of the present house where Uncle Hugh used to live. I do not know , but I think he was buried on the back in the calf lot' now belonging to Paul,(along 219) where Mary, Uncle Hugh's only sister was buried- she died with something like pneumonia during the civil war.

There was Uncle Hugh Sharp, Uncle Harmon Sharp and Uncle Henry Sharp are the only ones I can remember of my great-uncles. There was, of course, Luther and Bernard. Uncle Harmon had a big familyand they are scattered all the way to California. Tolbert after he helped Joe Gibson's buy up the timber land around Slatyfork, Gauley Mt, Middle Mt. etc, for these big companies , he went west.

* This Henry Sharp was no relative, but lived at or middle mt & then later near Davis Hannah's heirs with his brother Blaine

Uncle Harmon died in McKellum (?) Hospital in Richmond, Virginia. Dad and I visited him while he was in the hospital. It's been many years ago, Grandfather Sharp, his father was William Sharp, Jr. .III

William Sharp, Jr, III my great-grandfather is buried at the Sharp graveyard-named for him- up near the high rocks. Grandfather and grandmother and a sister. As I said I'm not sure where Bernard and Luther are buried, the boys that died during the Civil War. According to my reccollection, Jake simmons and Quince Harris were the guilty parties that killed Bernard one on them was guilty of BERNARD/LUTHER that,,,, I'm not sure but Luther may have been killed at the Battle of Droom Mountain. Of course they had a skirmish over on Mingo Flats he could have been killed there, He was serving in the army. So there seems to have been four sons on Wm. Sharp II, sr...One settled at Slatyfork, my great-grandfather. WM III One up about the Jake Gibson place and he was, I understand, was maybe killed by an Indian or by a sniper. One settled at Edray and the otherone over about Frost.

Of course William Sharp Sr, I came of from England and we were related to the Dilley's. My _____ grandfather SIKES married Sarah Hannah, daughter of David Hannah who was very religious and allowed no work to be done on Sunday., no cooking or anything like that-Sunday was kept as a sacred day . And my grandmother had a brother, Henry, HANNAH who ran a store up at Arbovale for a few years and moved from there to Renick and I'm not sure as to whether they were buried there, but he had a son Earnest who went to Arizona, (Phoenix, I believe) and was postmaster ther until his retirement. Now my grandmother had another son whose name I do not recall for certain but it might have been ~~Albert or~~ ~~Jee~~ and he had a severe ailment (might have been typhoid or not), but anyway a miracle seemed to have been performed, he died away and they were making arrangements for a funeral, seems as if his father and grandfather had been to a sale and was coming back and this boy awoke from this trance or vision and tried to show grandmother and the other members of the family the beautiful sights of heaven as he saw it. He mentioned some of the relatives who died before he was born. He said " They are up in heaven, don't you see them, but they were unable to see but the bright lights like the sunset in the evening, but he also told them everything that his grandfather and dad had bought at the sale. .. his mother a colt for one thing. He said, " I can take this baby and stick it the fire and there won't be a hair of his head scorched." But they were afraid to let him because of the knowledge they had of fire... Then he said I'll throw this hankerchief up to the ceiling, it will stay up there and he did and it did stay. He said, "I'm sleepy and he went to thebed and and laid down and he didn't want them to touch him because he had seen Jesus and the angels who took care of him while he was sick in this vision so that left a testamony to my forefathers and of the necessity of having th faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. And while Dad related this story to me on more than one occasion, I'm sure I haven't repeated it exactly as it was and of course my grandmother had mentioned what had happened. There were miracles back in those days as there were when Christ was on earth and of course there are still miracles being performed today.

260

MY great-grandmother, Hessie Hannah was a wife of David Hannah and I remember seeing my three grandmothers: Grandmother Sarah Sharp, Grandmother Hessie Hannah and my grandmother, Edith Ramsey Morgan, the wife of Reverand Samuel C. Morgan the Methodist c circuit rider on the Edray charge during the 1888-89-90 or 91. — see Morgan HISTORY page 9 (1884-1994) At that time the methodist church was in the Virginia conference and later on in the Baltimore conference and now it is the W, Va, Conference, Lewisburg District. Of course both my grandfathers died before I was born. The prison term of my grandfather Silas Sharp....he was the only one or one of the six who survived malaria fever which struck practically all the prisoners that the Confederates had captured. My grandfather somehow or another managed to get some material, gold wire and things like that to make some rings and ornaments etc. — breast pins (D9)

(END SIDE ONE: RECORDED NOV. 1974- IVAN SHARP)

This is my second attempt to give some history of the Sharp generation as handed down to me by word of mouth by Uncle Hugh Sharp, and my father Luther Sharp and my grandmother Sara Sharp and some knowledge in my own rights. I have some legal papers but I really have done little or no research as to the history, but this information that I'm giving may help somebody who desires to do some research work on our ancestry.

I have some legal papers to show that my great-great grandfather, William Sharp, Sr. one of four brothers that came to this country, leaving many relatives in England, Scotland, Ireland and Germany. They received a land grant from the King of England for vast amount of acreage in what was then the state of Virginia. He had, as I understand it a brother that lived at Frost or Huntersville and one at Edray and one at Jake Gibson place at head of Elk. He was stationed at Slatyfork. In this deed that my great-great grandfather gave to my great grandfather was for some over a thousand or more acres including Slatyfork, Sharps Knob, part of Gauley Mt. and part of Buzzard Mt. Of course, my great grandfather, William Sharp, Jr married Rachel Dilley. This is what the deed calls for and they lived at Slatyfork and were buried on a shale soapstone type of ground, a ridge, east of the high rocks near the old county road. You might say that when they died they were both buried on this ridge, therefore the cemetary was named for them. Of course my grandmother and grandfather Sharp as well as my father and mother Sharp are buried there too along with my sister Creola. I've seen no markers that my great-great grandfather Sharp was buried at this cemetary, nor great- uncle Bernard Sharp or my great- uncle Luther Sharp who were killed during the Civil War. There was an aunt Mary Sharp, a teenager who died with pneumonia or something similar to that during the Civil War, and was buried down on the north side of 219 on the bank of what used to be called 'the Calf-lot Meadow'. Part of the stone markers are still there. I might say that my grandmother Rachel's sister, Mandy Dilley Ervin I believe it was stayed with them about the time that they died and stayed on to keep house for great-uncle Hugh Sharp for a certain length of time, I don't know just how long. She may have been buried over at Dilley's Mill,

(?)

← (which gate ?)

← (middle MT.)

III →

* 216) →

← WM. II (at Fairview)

side 2 (continued) 261

in that section over there , as well as my great-great grandfather, I'm not sure. Some of our relatives were buried up at the Hannah cemetary up where Billy Hannah and George Hannah used to live but they may have been relatives on my grandmother Hannah's grandfather David Hannah's side of the house.

I might say that I have here in my possesion, given to me by my great uncle Hugh Sharp, a small family Bible of his mother and (Wm Hester) dad's showing all the birthdays of all the family including my Grandfather Silas Sharp who married Sarah Hannah, daughter of David and Hester or Hessie as they called her and lived at the old Page Hannah house. I also have a small type spinning wheel given to my sister, Violet, and she in turn gave it to me to keep in the Sharp family. I also have a split- hickory bottom rocking chair given me by great-uncle Hugh Sharp and said his grandfather Dilley had died in this chair while sitting in the chair. The chair is old and straight, one of those homemade chairs put together with wooden pegs. My brother, Si, said 'I't's not much wonder he died in it -it was so straight and uncomfortable.' That is because the rockers are worn flat and there isn't much 'rock' to it.

As I said before I'm not sure where my great-great grandfather and grandmother were buried. Some of our relatives are buried in the Hannah graveyard but they may have been the ones on my grandmother Hannah's side of the house as I stated. A great great Uncle of my myGreat-great grandfather Sharp was located near Frost, Huntersville section which Judge Sharp and George Sharp, former Secretary-of-state and Austin and Asby were descendents and there may have been some others, maybe Ed, anyway I wasn't too well aquainted with the Sharp's in that section. And another was located about Edray in which Will Sharp and Giles Sharp and Jake Sharp were probably descendents probably Hanson Sharp, Ellis Sharp and Jim Sharp were descendants of this brother. And there were Elmer and Mitchell Sharp, sons of Jim Sharp. Maybe some of these lived Anoto section.

I'm not sure, but my great uncle Henry Sharp used to live at Middle mountain until a fire burned their home down and they lost everything they had and they moved form there to about the Davis Hannah house now is and from there over to the Onoto .. so they may be ancestors of Dave Sharp and Ellot Sharp of over inthat section. Of course there is Charlie Sharp and his brother so there are some distant relatives there somewhere ...how this all came about I don't know. Now the one of my great great uncles that settled up at the Jake Gibson place, according to Uncle HUGH Sharp, he died before the Civil War in a rather mysterious way-killed by an Indian or a sniper or a disgruntled neighbor or a hunter- anyway he found dead of a bullet wound, now so far as I know had no children.

262

Now getting back to great grandfather William Sharp's family. Besides my grandfather Silas Sharp, was Henry Sharp as I mentioned and Uncle Hugh Sharp who lived at the old home place and lived with us 'til he died. Uncle Harmon Sharp lived down at Slatyfork and he died in McKellum Hospital in Richmond, Virginia. My father and I visited him while he was in the hospital there. He had cancer of the throat. He had a large family and I knew most of them. So far as I know he had only one boy, Tolbert, and he and little Jim Gibson were selling real estate around Slatyfork and Elk and through there and after they did that of course a lot of the people that lived around here moved away, including cousin Tolbert Sharp. Tolbert Sharp married a Doyle and he had a son Richard about my age and a daughter, Mabel and a younger daughter I don't just recall her name whether it was Margy.. anyway there were two daughters and one son and they moved to California.

Harmon

Uncle Harmon had a number of daughters, his wife was named Many and she lived with her daughter, Mary Liesty over at Elkins. Mary Liesty and a son named Lawrence, I remember and of course there was Nettie who married Edgar Dilley. Another daughter married Edgar Doyle and they went west along with Tolbert Sharp to California of near the deserts or somewhere out there- anyway they liked it well enough that they stayed. They was one sister that married George (?L) Hannah and she was buried at the Sharp graveyard and there is a marker there, her name was Nora. Another daughter, Cora, who went west, I don't know whether she ever married or not, but she was one of the younger ones of the Harmon Sharp family.

He died [illegible] may 10th 1951

Geo L

Now I'm not too positive about all these statements that I made but it will give you some idea. I might say that Uncle Sam Gibson married one of the Harmon Sharp's daughters too. They had a daughter, Stella, ..Her mother died, perhaps in childbirth when she was very young. My grandmother Sarah Sharp raised Stella. Stella married a Fisher over at Elkins and was the mother of Rocky Fisher (father of Maxine and Julia Fisher.) Most of these relatives that I've mentioned of uncle Harmon's family I remember faintly.

Errors

Lee & Hannah married Harmon Sharp's daughter

Some married Mary, sister of Sarah Sharp

See allie Gibson's account of Stella

Only three of my great uncles I remember. Even my grandfathers died before I was born on both sides of the house. Silas Sharp died a few years before I was born and so did Samuel C. Morgan, Methodist circuit rider...so I didn't see any of my grandfathers. But I got to see two grandmothers and one great-grandmother, Hester or Hessie as they called her. While mother and dad Sharp were living they kept history in their minds and of course occasionally they would tell us, but I never thought to write them down. So I make these statements so that if anyone in the future wanted to do some research they would know more about it.

I might say here that my uncles that were killed during the Civil War. Uncle Bernard was only fourteen years of age and he was trying to get away from the raiders or Confederates and he was trying to get away up the back of the house where my brother Si now lives and old man Quince Harris or Jake Simmons are the ones that shot and killed him. Near the same time that Luther was killed probably in the Droop Mt. battle, or the skirmish over near Mingo Flats. He served in the army, as I understand it. But my grandfather Sharp at the time that Bernard was killed, hid in a goose nest when the Confederates made a raid through that section and this fellow that shot at uncle Bernard and missed there, so my grandfather jumped out of that nest while the other fellow was trying to reload his gun and knocked him down and ran around the house to get away from him ran intoa whole posse of Confederate soldiers so he had to surrender, along with Jake Gibson, not related to Jim Gibson -I don't think, but may have been grandfather to Jake and John Gibson. Anyway my grandfather had to give up and he went with them and they put handcuffs on him and also on Jake Gibson. It took two fellows to guard them while the rest of them went on to make raids on the farmers, through the section to get food and see who was hiding, and who the enemies were and so forth. Jake Gibson could get his handcuffs off and grandfather tried to persuade him to slip them off, knock the guard down and get his gun and shoot the other one but he was afraid to do that and anyway this fellow shot at Jake as he was running and missed him so he found that Jake was going to get away from him so he threw his gun down and ran after him and caught up with him up near the top of the hill near the Sharp graveyard. Jake Gibson happened to have somthing like a toy pistol they call it a pepper box pistol and he jerked that out of his pocket and whirled and started shooting at him and the guard ran back. Jake got away but my grandfather was taken on to Salisbury North or South Carolina and served twenty-three months and twenty-four days in prison there. There were only six prisoners, the Yankees, that survived the malaria fever and malnutrition or starvation there. My grandfather managed to get a hold of some gold wire etc. and made some jewelry etc. and gave to the colored maids and those that gave them their medicine and told them to give him double portion of the allowance, so he survived until the Confederates decided that they were all going to die anyway several hundred had died so they agreed to exchange the six prisoners that were left., my grandfather happened to be one of them. It took him about a monthe to get home. This may have been a factor in his death. He died with something simiaar to appendacitus some internal it may have been cancer but from what my dad, grandmother and uncle Hugh said it must have been the appendix that burst cause he didn't live too long after that happened. This is all that I have to say for now as regards to my ancestors, I may have more to say later.

264

I might say here that I left out Amos and Porter Sharp. over there about Warick t at may have been descents of uncle Henry Sharp and may have been brothers or cousins of Dave Sharp and Bill Ellot Sharp - I don't know what the connections are right there. But speaking about my my great- uncle Harmon Sharp. He was the most jolly person you would ever want to meet. You could, he had a unique laugh and I enjoyed hearing him talk. All of my uncles were great hunters and they had some tales to tell experiences back in the wilds of W. Va.

My great uncle Hugh Sharp never did get married. He somehow or another didn't seem to have much affection for the opposite sex. He didn't like to be bossed around or told what to do or what not to do. He had hired different ones to do the housekeeping for him and had had different families to move in with him. He always could get along with the men folks but the womenfolk didn't like his attitude or his mode of taking care of his tools and clothes etc. The fact that uncle Hugh would go out and stay all day and come in for dinner at four o'clock in the evening for something to eat. Of course that didn't suit most of the people that stayed there. I can remember that Dang Jackson was one family that lived there and James Jackson was anotherfamily that lived there the father of Will Jackson and Charlie, Bernie and Lucy Jackson and they lived for a while and there were no heirs that lived there. At one time my ~~aunt~~ uncle Will Morgan and my aunt Fannie lived there a while and took care of uncle Hugh. My dad took it upon himself after Tolbert left to see that uncle Hugh had sombody to look after him, wash his clothes etc. Uncle Will moved back to Lobelia where he came from and then came along Noah Ayres and his son, adopted son I belive about my age, called Cecil. And then after so long a time (Mix(?) Micks) the one that married Merle Gibson and then her sister Eva who married Luther Mace moved in for a while to take care of uncle Hugh. But at one time Virgie.....(end ofTape 2)

(START OF TAPE THREE)

Virgie Gibson stayed and kept house for a while but not very long. And Uncle Taylor Ramsey and his son Junior and I stayed there with uncle Hugh a summer, Junior was about my age. Later dad hired Rachel Showalter and son Barney, a year older than I was, to help take care of uncle Hugh and so the farmwork. Mr. and Mrs. Showalter were easy to get a long with and uncle Hugh liked her. Mother and Junior and maybe Paul and Si stayed stayed with Uncle Hugh one winter and did the cooking for uncle Hugh and taking care of him while dad and I batched overaat the old home place to take care of the feed and the livestock, the store and the post office. Of course, I think perhaps Henry Shaver was taking care of the livestock feeding over at uncle Hugh's. My experience in cooking was to put on a pot of kidney beans, about a pint to cook and they kept swelling and kept swelling gnd I had every pot on the place full of beans.

(side three- continued) 265

We had beans coming out our ears for about a week or more. Mother would keep us in bread as well as a lot of other things that we were up to cooking. Uncle Hugh was liked by everybody. One time he had some pet white tailed deer. One special deer, named Nannie, got to be quite mean and one time my dad and aunt Ellie Gibson, not yet grown, up a cherry stump and they had to holler for help so they could get home. Uncle Hugh was quite a wild bee hunter. Seldom ever would cut a tree. As he had fifty to a hundred stands of bees of his own. He would hid his money and valuables in a beehive as most people were afraid of bees - and sometime elsewhere. One money box we never did find after he died But after he missed some money before this he had dad take care of most of his valuables and sent the money to the bank. He lived to be seventy-six years old before he died and he died in about 1923, so I knew him for 23 years. Of course for the first few years of my life I didn't know one person from another but he was and I liked to hear him talk and he had a lot of bear stories and hunting stories to tell. I was at his bedside when he died and he told me the good Lord had saved him a few weeks before and he was ready to go. I was over in the cornfield across the creek and he called for me and I came, and I was at his bedside when he died. He was buried in the Sharp cemetary. Alarge granite marker was erected at his grave site.

Another thing about uncle Hugh- Captain Mundy was a great friend of his and made a lot of patent bee hives for him. some that he could take the lid off and watch the bees work. Some of these are in my possession now and I've made them over to take care of sections and the new type of selling the honey. Captain Mundy and uncle Hugh had gotten a lagge land grant from the king of England of 50,000 acres more or less in Pocahontas, Webster and Randolph counties of the state of Virginia. It may have been the Pennell survey or part of the land that Lawyer Reger of Elkins wanted my dad to bring suit for the title of the land and give him part of the land if they won the lawsuit. The survey appears to have been made according to papers of uncle Hugh's. The grant was stolen before the survey was put on record at least by the Virginia Court. They were applying for a copy to reinstate or get on record, but so far as I know it never was carried out unless this Mr. Reger dug it up in his land search for he was a real estate lawyer. My dad told Mr. Reger the lawyer that all the people in the country would be mad at him for taking in their property. But Reger said they could hold the improved property that they owned but not the wild country that hadn't been developed back on the mountain probably on Gauley, Buzzard , Middle and probably some of Point mountain. Dad could hold what some people call squatters rights to obtain legal title to the property,,if fact some big companies had Bernard Hamrick to build a camp back there on Gauley mountain and also a cousin of ours, Bob Rose was also paid so much a month for ten or more years to claim the property. So some of these big lumber companies got the timberland and timber for practically nothing.

(side three - continued)

264

Getting back to uncle Harman Sharp. He was the most jolly man I think I ever met. He was always laughing and had a very nice family. He liked to hunt, and camp out and tell of his experiences of his. That about takes care of my uncles, I'll get down to my grandfather later.

I might say I have been having trouble with this tape recorder erasing part of the material that I would like to record. So I repeat some and have left out some that should be mentioned. Speaking about the ancestors over around Onoto We were related to Joe Sharp down at Mill Point through what source I'm not sure perhaps uncle Henry Sharp. Joe Sharp had a son named for my father Luther David Sharp but since they have since died or moved away, but anyway my dad and I were at their auction sale when they broke up housekeeping. There was another Sharp over in that section over about Clover Lick. I don't know of any real connection between them or the other Sharp's that I've mentioned . Just recently a few months ago I saw an ad in the Pocahontas Times saying that there was an Ivan Sharp at Cass that had some pigs for sale - now what source they came from I'm not sure. There was some other Sharps: John and Ern and some of those that may have been from Bill Ellott Sharps people. There seem to have been two sets of Sharps in Pocahontas County. Two sets of Gibsons that weren't relation on the Elk section and two different sections of the Hannah's that do not seem to be related. In some cases had married into the same name. We are related quite a bit to most of the people around Dilley's Mill through grandmother Rachel Dilley Sharp She was a Dilley and I've heard my uncle Hugh speak of 'grandpappy Dilley.' I mentioned also some property that I have that he once owned. We are related to the Sharps around Frost and that section, the Dilley's perhaps several others perhaps the Gibson's over in that section and so then on my grandmother Hannah's side of the house my great grandmother Hessie and Henry Hannah. They had a son Henry Hannah who was a brother of my grandmother Sharp. I'm pretty sure they had another brother or son and two or more daughters. One was Aunt Malindy (Rose) Married to John Rose. They were the father and mother of Bob Rose. We were related to the Zickafoose's in some manner Whether my great-great grandmother Sharp was a Zicafoose or whether the later descendants married a Zickafoose I'm not sure but anyway there was one of them that lived over about Buckhannon during the twenties.that was distantly related to us. I've heard my dad speak of so many different ones in the community around there like LU ? Curry and Poague, Cook and places down around Elk river still go by that name and speaking about the Land Grant of Captain Mundy and Uncle Hugh's of that vast acreage. The West Virginia History in three volumes mentions aboutsome trouble the clerk of Pocahontas county was having in trying to keep the records secret from the Confederate invaders. They hid the records

← NB

(tape three- continued)

267

a while in a buckwheat stack, a while in a Methodist church, a while in two or three different homes. When the war was over and things settled down one of those record books was missing. It could be that this record book contained the information about uncle Hugh and Captain Mundy, his grant and also my great-great grandfather Sharp's grant from the King of England for property. Of course there is no way of tellin' what happened to that but I the papers that Uncle Hugh and Captain Mundy filed with the I suppose the Supreme Court at Richmond Virginia to try to establish the grant or get it on record again, but I have no information as to whether it was accomplished or not. Anyway we never paid any taxes or it and my dad owned some coal land back on Gauley and he deeded it over to Otis Gibson and he may still own those coal or mineral rights. In some cases those old people back there were smart enough to reserve the mineral rights. We were sure there were minerals in there but in later years I can remember myself that the old Staunton-Parkersburg road was being repaired, they had to use dynamite and pick and shovels and plows and manpower and horse power to repair the road. They put off a blast at the forks of the road there at the Slatyfork post office and within a few hundred feet of a geologic marker in a limestone ledge that produced quite a stream or quite a bit of oil ran out of this sand rock and so the folks working on the road got excited and ran over to where the old store was and told usabout it. Dad and I closed up the store and took a crowbar, pick and we gouged down around in that old sandstone and the thing tore loose again and the oil in the sandstone ran out into the water. Foolish like I struck a match to it and itflashed right across the water. I didn't know anything about gas and I reckon' I could have blowed the whole place up around there. But he talked to the geologist after that and he said that may have been forced up from several thousand feet and sandrock had so many cavaties and hollow places within that it was very susseptable to absorbing gas and the chances is if you go back to that flat there and sink a well and go deep enough that we would strike gas in that country. The thing that I don't understand that it is limestone country and there Is about as much water that runs underground that runs on the top of the ground and only when there is a flood or heavy rains that they have water on Big Spring of Elk. The way it got its name is that the water would run for maybe a mile or two and then it would go underground, so it would be dry for a mile or two and then come out again and there would be water for a few hundred feet or a mile. Of course we Don't know what all is back in those caverns. I know that one place on my farm about an eight of an acre dropped out of sight just the treetops. Then of course the sink holes through there in different places. You take up around next to Snowshoe, the Rhea place the Vandevender place for about a half a mile there is one sinkhole rightafter another some two hundred yards apart- almost in a straight line. They've filled up and there no openings except there is one place on the Vandevender place where you could drop a rock and time it and it takes almost a minute of falling before it hits bottom -sounds like it hits glass or fossils or something thats down in that cave then it bounces off that into mud and it goes 'kerchug'. Those are mysterious things there., Then too, at the water fountain near Slatyfork the Hugh Sharp cave, as far as I know there has never been anybody to the end of that cave. They've been in for two or three days searching but there are some big rooms in there and then a place to crawel through and othere places where there is a river about waist deep. The serchers use carbide lamps and twine to find their way.

268

When the built the railroad in that section, the blasting caused a lot of the limestone to fall in and now it is too difficult to get into this cave. You could clear it away and probable have enough room to drive a car into it. That country is noted for caverns and high waters and stream beds with no water at all. You cross over the mountain to Dry Branch and for several miles there is no water for miles except when it rains. Those are some of the conditions that exist up in that country. Big oil companies at one time leased the land for oil. They had a lease of what was called the Rhea Place for ten years but then they cancelled it with in seven years. They decided if the government was not going to back them up on this deep well drilling they would just drop out on it. Of course that's got us in part of the trouble we're in now in the lack of fuel.

Now speaking about the relatives on the Hannah side, my great grandfather Henry er David Hannah was very religious and he wouldn't allow any work to be done on Sunday. He had some brothers I'm pretty sure because just above Frank Hannah's -Sam Hannah's it used to be on the Billy Mace place the corner there was a building a log house that bunnt down and this is where this boy lived that died away and came to again and the connections there I'm not too sure about. Aunt Leah Hannah she married another Hannah or just how it was but Aunt Leah was mother to Josie Lewis and Edna Foster and Paul and Silas Hannah of Hinton. Of course Josie Lewis is in Huntington W. Va. And of course we are related to that bunch of Hannah's and we are related to Bowd (?) Hannah and Silas Hannah.

Otha Hannah

(END OF TAPE THREE)

(BEGINNING OF TAPE FOUR)

I ran out of tape on that side. I don't know whether I stated that my aunt Ella married Bob Gibson a brother of little Jim Gibson and they had several children, Otis, Allie, Florence and Willie and Ona Gibson. Aunt Malinda married Ellis Hannah. They had a few children; Eva married Charlie Beale, Russell married andther Hannah and a sister of Ira of over around Marlinton no relation; Lena married Floyd Baxter over around Warick and Veo married a Dumire. Lena Baxter had one son; Veo and his wife had some daughters an some sons..two sons died with cancer at a rather earlyage.

(TAPE FOUR- CONTINUED)

269 (1889-1899)

Getting back to my father. He married a preacher's daughter (Rev. Samuel C. Morgan on the Edray charge- 1880-88-89-91" in the Va. conference later transferred to the Ohio Conference and now a part of the W. Va. conference. It's hard to trace those things because of the different conferences they change to. If I remember right I have in my possession the minutes of the Virginia conference with my grandfather's name in it. Uncle Wallace Sutton on my wife's side of the house was a minister of the Gospel, he married my wife's mother's sister. He gave us some information I didn't write down any points to try to keep things together.

(see morgan History (page 8) D9

Anyway we are related to a lot of people indirectly and I have noway or have not taken t e time to do any research about them. Anyway getting to my father's family. My sister Ada was married twice which I think I mentioned a while a go. Her first husband was a Johnson and they had a son Donald who stayed with us several years maybe through high school. He went west to Oregon and is real active in church work out there from what I can understand. He belongs to the Army Reserve was a chef in the army. Then there is Helen Johnson who married Eugene Hannah, son of Lee Hannah. As far as I know we were not related to the George L. Hannah other than George married uncle Harmon's daughter. Of course there was Sheldon Hannah and Bryson Hannah I've heard my dad mention quite a few times. He liked to sing and I think maybe he and my dad held a singing school and old man Ware liked to sing. So Bryson Hannah and there weren't too many of that set of hannah's who were very regular in church attendance. Hugh Hannah's family were very active in church work. There were several of those Hannah's who were school teachers. Bessie, Mary and the one that married the Woodell. Of course Marvin remained on the farm and his son, I think helped my brother Dave out in Cincinnatti in the jewelry business, repairing watches and things of that sort. That takes care of most of the history there. Of course there were a lot of people who used to live in that country there that like Vanderbritts and Slankers a d Varners- Sam Varner and his brother and Dave Varner who used to live about the Sam Galford property and moved to Cass. Alot of people sold out and moved elsewhere. The property the Kyle Hannah lives in (Russell Hannah) My dad bought two farms there from the Vanderbritts (?) and uncle Ellis Hannah wanted dad to buy those farms for him and seems as if he wanted to buy them and Vanderbritt wouldn't sell them to Ellis for some reason or another and when it came to a showdown when dad told him he wanted the deed made out to uncle Ellis Hannah , he was about to back out on it but finally went ahead and signed the deed, but in that agreement with uncle Ellis Hannah we Sharp's were supposed to have fishing privaleg es up and down the farm

(SIDE FOUR CONTINUED) 270

OF THE BIG Spring of Elk that didn't go dry. It was good fishing territory but they didn't seem to like too much for us to take that privilege after dad had Russell and Ellis and some of them to witness a deed Uncle Hugh Sharp had made to my dad for some property. They seemed to have felt that they should have a part in it. Maybe they should have but they didn't do anything to take care of uncle Hugh and you might say that part of therecord there that I was giving and the tape didn't pick up was....My mother stayed over at the new home and cooked for uncle Hugh while Dave was small. Si and Paul went to school from over there and that's when Dad and I batched over at the old home place. We had the Post office and the store. One of us stayed in the store while the other chores. One time dad sent me up to put on some beans and I didn't know about how many to put on. I thought a pint of red kidney beans wouldn't be too much . I put them in a pot and they kept swelling and kept swelling and for long I had every pot in the place full of beans. We had to send some over to mother and that is one lesson I learned about cooking. It's a good thing we cooked them before eating or we wouldn't be around... My mother took care of uncle Hugh that one winter. Dad hired Rachel Showalter and Barney to come and do the cooking and help on the farm . Barney was one yeqr older than I was. He was on the farm for a number of year. This Mix boy that I could not remember his name was Cameron Mix. I think he was a twi n to another Mix. Of course aunt Eva was there for a while but as I stated uncle Hugh couldn't get along well with the women folks bossing him around , but he could with the men folks. Uncle Hugh was likedby all over the county. People called him uncle Hugh whether they were any relation or not. He had a lot of bear stories he liked to tell. One story that Captain or somebody told on him. When he was a boy he saw a bear and it started towards him and he took to running down over the hill about a half a mile and he crawled in a hollow log so the bear wouldn't see him. After uncle Hugh got a little older he knew that a bear did a little more trailing by smell than by sight. he always said the way to get away from a bear if he attacked you it was best to climb a small tree for it was hard for a bear to reach apound to climb up seems as if that had happened a feww times in those days. Somebody would pick up a cub bear and th e old she bear would happen to be around there was a fight on their hands right then and there. Most of teSharps always enjoyed hunting and wild life.

(meeks or nicks) ← Meeks or NICKS

Let's see I think we came down to part of my dad's family. Ada being the oldest graduated from West Virginia Wesleyan College and went on to Argulia (spelling) up in Mass. She took a course in elocution and was very talented along that line and was very entertaining. After a few years she taught school at Slatyfork. Then married Will Curtain of Baltimore. To that union was born, Billy Curtain who was in World War II and was in all ,

(TAPE FOUR CONTINUED) 271

OF THE MAIN DRIVES* IN Africa Sicily a d Italy and the front at Argonne and he came out alive but was a very nervous type of man after that. Another boy, Stanley became a school teacher and he and his wife were both school teachers. There was a daughter Clara, married Bill Keene and probably still is there in Baltimore. They come out occasionally to Slatyfork to do a little hunting and so forth.

My dad at one time owned seven of the best houses in Campbelltown. When the Campbell Lumber co. went out of business dad heqrd about it and went over to Yeager who had charge of the sale of property. Dad bought the three houses on the hill used by the officials of the company and I think three or four houses over in town. He gave each one of us chiadren a house. Of course Ada and Violet sold their houses and after so long a time Junior sold his, a few years ago my brother Si sold his house. Dad, during the depression sold one house to Woodell (he owned property around the hollow he wanted to trade for but dad sold him this property..So I'm t e only one that owns any property there in Campbelltown as of now. That' the middle house , lot two on plot three and so dad did quite a lot of investing. He lost in a lot of investments...coal mining, gold mining things of that sort. He invested inVegleyCoal company and Yeager bought a lot of coal land in Kentucky, Ed Williams & Jim Price was connected with it so dad bought some stock in it and I bought some. But Dad's stock was guarenteed by the International Stock Food (?) Co. He got most of his money back. Trouble is the coal company left the property to be sold for taxes and either Yeager or Price or some of the folks who are lawyers found a chance to make some money at it, whether they hung onto it or not or whether they lost their money. One time I invested in Dan Patch Electric Railroad the first electric railroad train in this country that ran from Minneapolis to St. Paul. I invested $130.00 in it for I thought it would eventually take over and be used in place of steam engines. Different ones who rode on it claimed it was wonderful and I guess it was alright but there is always somebody that knows how to buy out the controlling interest. I also invested in Racer Disc Wheel and Rubber company which built an automobile wheel that was puncture proof. It had a solid rubber tire about and inch and a half thick on a rim and the rim fit down inside two discs and the innertube was the hub of the wheel and you rode on air yet there was no way to puncture the innertube. The only thing that could happen would be through friction. I happened to ride in a demonstrator car that had those wheels on. I happened to have two hundred and fifty dollars and I invested in that Disc compnay. Dr. Hutchison and several prominant men of Richmond were officials of it and this racer held fifty-one percent interest in the compnay and he went out to Cleveland or somewhere and he sold out the controlling interest to one of those tire companies and they knew that wouldn't do to have one tire that would last a lifetime of a car and they refused to put it on the market and they did come around with some kind of dope that you could put inside an innertube that would fill up any small tack holes but nevertheless I never did get very far investing for financial benefits. I have enjoyed farming and had a gasoline business-American Gas andhandled automobile supplies in the twenties and of course I sold out and turned my part over to dad and outside of the parts etc. still have some racks etc that I had tires on. At one time Some robbers broke a window out and stole about three or four hundred dollars worth of tires, all that they could put in their car. We traced them, they went to Kentucky. The policeman at that time wasn't too anxious to follow up like the deal that we have today with the detective, so many of them of different kinds that they probably would have caught up with them.

278

16

On the relatives on the Hannah side, we have Forrest Hannah, William Hannah and Carrie Hannah lived at Valley Head. They were some of our realtions, they were cousins. They called my dad 'cousin'. Carries's mother must have married a Hannah, anyway she wasn't married and yet she carried the H Hannah name. I don't know whether they are related to Leah Hannah that bunch of Hannah's or not but there were two David Hannah's. One on ourside was very religious and one on the other side didn't take much interest in church work but was more interested in land deals, and things of that sort. The two sets of Gibson's, on Elk. I think Jim Gibson and Bob Gibson and I think they had a brother Sam who went out west and never did come back so maybe we have some relatives out there. There were a lot of those Gibson boys. There were Sheltons and Jackson's. ....

(END OF TAPE FOUR)

(BEGINNING OF TAPE FIVE)

Continuation of the Sharp History--I keep running out of tape. As I said I didn't have any points set down in order to keep the records together as they should be. Speaking of my dad I would like to say that he started out in the mercantile business when he was twelve years old. He borrowed thirty dollars from uncle "Henry" Hannah to buy three calves at ten dollars a piece off of some Hannah. They had plenty of feed to winter them and dad wintered those calves and sold them the next fall for maybe twenty or twenty-five dollars profit on his services for feeding the calves. He probably got twice as much for them the next fall when he sold them. So he went to buying furs and selling them and made some money that way. About that time the Cheery Lumber compnay built a tram road up Slatyfork and they had trolly cars that were pulled by mules but they had to lay a wooden floor and a track out of two by fours for the truck to run on in order to haul the logs from the head of Slatyfork and in that section there they would 'ball hoop' the logs off the mountain and it was winter time and icey and they had to load them on with cane hooks and things of that sort as they didn't have any hoists of any kind.

(side five -- continued)

(any hoists to get them on the truck). The mills above the old meadow at the old home place at Slatyfork. The parts of the mill were there up into the twenties. We sold part of it as junk to a junk dealer at Clarksburg. He wasn't t ere with them to see what they got- they were not supposed to take the blocks - the carriage blocks but they disappeared too. While they were cutting the cherry timber all over Slatyfork mountain and Buzzard mountain the men that were doing that sort of thing insisted on my dad putting in a littlestore there in the lumber room. He got some rough lumber at the saw mill and put up a warehouse or lumber room,'course later on they built a store. They bought tobacco and things of that sort and got started into the mercantile business that way. It enthused him very much when he was making some money. He raised food on the farm to live off of and the stuff that he bought and sold he considered that his. The funny part of it was in a way, he never once thought of asking uncle Henry Hannah how much interest he charged on the thirty dollars he borrowed and he just thanked him and of course back at that time was probably about four per cent but four per cent was worth as much as eight per cent now. But anyway that gave dad a start in the mercantile business and he built a store and ordered goods from Baltimore and different wholsalers. The tobacco he ordered in drop shipments and he got it less than wholesale prices because of the quantity he bought not only bought furs andsold but bought beef hides and bear hides and even wild animals such as pheasants and squirrels and back at that time you could sell them. They brought a big price, the Jews at that season of the year would pay top prices for them. Dad started buying wool and selling it to different companies that he wrote to and got prices and sometimes he would spend a half day with the wool buyer trying to close out the deal. They brought wool from Randolph county and Webster county and Pocahontas into dad's store and so we had to use this old warehouse to put t e wool in and the barn and shed and he had to haul the wool to Marlinton to load in box cars toship it away. Usually Jim Gibson the Varner's - Harry and Sam Varner, the Sheltons and those people up there had a lot of horses and wagons withthe big racks on them to haul hayetc. so they could haul pretty big loads of wool. They ahul it in and load it at Marlinton to ship it to Baltimore, Philadelphia and those places so dad made some money on buying and selling wool. And he also bought ginseng and and golden seal. Ginseng was a plant the republic of China bought the most of it for medical purposes and some for good luck.. The roots of the ginsang when shaped like a man that brought a premium price for that meant good luck and so he made some money off selling ginseng the wild roots. There is a lot of sport in digging wild genseng, I tried it myself a time.or two with some other folks in a rainy time when we couldn't make hay or anything and one would sayto another' "Let's go Censenging."

(SIDE FIVE CONTINUED) 274

We'd get our gensen hoes and out we'D GO AND DIG GENSENG. Well, dad prospered in the mercantile business and built up a good honest trade and as I said people came from Randolph, Webster and Pocahontas county in to sell their wool and buy their flour - dad even had a grist mill. At one time it belonged to Bryson Griffen and he got so he wasn't able to run the mill so Dad bought the mill and got uncle Sam Gibson to run it until the shaft or something tore up, so Dad had a new mill put in and had the Elbon's(?) from Webster Springs they were carpenters and had the mill designed and they built the shaft out of wood. Dad ordered French burrs from France to grind the corn meal and even corncobs for all to feed the livestock. But the the corn meal was edible. He also put in 'volts' (?) where they could sift the wheat flour. The flour was more or less dark, it didn't have all the vitamins taken out of it and if you wanted to stick your tooth into a good biscuit with cow butter on it why, there's nothin' better than the bread made from the flour of the French burrs. This mill was run by water power, the water went on the inside of the drivewheel instead of the overshot mill like my father-in law had up at Arbovale.

He had a mill up there, an overshot type of mill, that had buckets in and when they filled up the mill wheel moved. This new type of mill and so forth, when it started up would shake the whole building and you'd t ink it was going to tumble down., it had so much power about it. Anyway after so long a time the business got sort of slack along line and we'd only grind maybe once a week and would haveuncle Sam Gibson grind one week and maybe Dad the next. We had to build a mill dam and a shoot for the water to run into.this wheel that furnished the power.

And of course, my father went into the general mercantile of all types, ready made clothing, piece goods and groceries and hardware and anything you might need on the farm. Just mention it and he usually either had it or got it for you. Dad also liked to sing. He always maintained a pretty good choir at the church and developed a singing group that he would take to other churches to sing during revival meetings. Even at the county fair, we won a plaque or a medal for being the best choir in the county. Speaking about investments- I had $250.00 in the Pocahontas County Fair and it was like some of those other businesses. It was sold for taxes so I was out $250.00 there but I enjoyed the fair. I took my first airplane ride with a man by the name of Scott. He was hauling riders at the fair. My brother, Dave and I, my dad said, "Do you all want to go up?" We said, "Yes."

We didn't know it, but the pilot was one of these fellows who nipped the bottle a little bit and he told dad as we started to leave the ground, "I'm gonna give them a real good ride. I'll play some stunts with them." Well, he did. He went up there and made a loop the loop once or twice and it seemed like we were just gonna go through the floorboard as we came back down and as we went up we didn't know whether we were gonna stick on the upper side or not. Course we were strapped in, but we enjoyed that ride and it was a small plane. We landed safely.

Most of the rest of the family and my wife especially have riden a jet plane. She went to Chicago, I believe when Brian was born. She enjoyed the ride on the plane, it was comfortable even though she was sorta scared to start out.

Further, in regard to my dad, he was like my great uncle Hugh Sharp; he had a lotta bees. Dad studied scientific methods of taking care of bees. He advertised the basswood or white lynn honey throughout the state and built up a reputation of being the best flavored honey ever produced in the state of West Virginia. In a few years time the state decided the bee business was growing to such an extent that they needed to have some overseers and inspectors to try to take care that they wouldn't get disease and the people wouldn't have to get out of the bee business. So they came to see my dad to be one of the bee inspectors. Mr. Massey from Wheeling, W. Va. was to be chairman of the bee inspectors, so dad had to spend quite a bit of time during the summer months inspecting bees. If they found foul brood either European or the regular foul brood, the instruction then was to destroy the hive and the bees. The honey was supposed to have been edible and no harm in eating the honey. What they were trying to prevent was the spread of the foul brood and they are still trying to do the same thing today. We found out from experience that if you kept the bees watered, the bees like to have water for the young bees, and you put salt in the water and sometimes salt around the hives it seemed to protect them to a certain extent from taking foul brood. Of course there is a difference in thebreed of bees. The Italian bees were as mean as they ever get, about like yellow jackets. They were good housekeepers and would keep the weevils and worms cleaned out where a black bee would just accept them as part of the family and let them go ahead and destroy the brood and eat up the beehive. That's still true today.

My dad was always active in church work. He was layleader class leader of the church. He and Brice Griffin and uncle Sam Gibson and Sam Hannah, myself and two or three others would be the number that would be at prayer meeting in the winter time. when the snow was deep. When it was pretty a lot of folks would come out to prayer meeting back then that wouldn't have time or think about it today. They would rather stay home and watch television.

(SIDE FIVE CONTINUED) 276

NOW, of course we mentioned about Ada's career. Violet married Rufus Markland who finally became vice-president or assistant vice-president of the C. and O railroad. That's a position that cousin Sam Whanger, Ed Whanger also railroaders finally attained to. My brother-in-law, Rufus died with heart trouble several years ago. My sister lived by herself for a number of years and finally decided to sell out and go to the Methodist Hermitage. She had to pay, I believe, ten thousand dollars invest in the Hermitage plus about on hundred and seventy-five dollars a month for room and board for as long as she lives. Of course, she got all of the needed nursing facilities if she had to go into the hospital, they have hospital services on the third floor. All she had to do is pick up the telephone and call the nurse and she would be there in a minute or two if she were sick or needed help. She was very much satisfied with this sort of a set-up. She could still keep her own car and come and go as she pleased. That's fine, we thought we had something similar to that here in West Virginia and when we voted on it at the Methodist conference, we thought it was for the ministers of the gospels, retired and the laymen, retired and didn't have a home to go to. They could live in this Methodist Hermitage or place and live and be practically free. 'Course that was before social security and that sort of thing came into effect, but today if you own property, you have to dispose of it and turn it over to them and pay them probably two hundred dollars a month for room and board, something on the same order of what my sister has in Richmond, Va.. She inspected three different places, she checked in Cincinnatti and W.Va. and Richmond. Violet married a mighty good man, they seldom come any better. Their son, started out to study to be a doctor, he finally edded up working for an electrical company. He is working for Magnavox now as sort of a sales manager and of course, his wife teaches school at times and they had two children, Ann and John. Ann married a Zurr ,a painter contractor who work s for his dad and he's a nice fellow. They all seem to be doing pretty well. ZEHR

Now my sister, Creola, died in the flu epidemic ~~during~~ after the first world's war when she was eighteen years old. She took something like tonsillitus or diptheria and they lanced her throat and she took blood poisoning. They didn't have streptomicen or penecillan or anything like that to killit like they do today. She would probably be living today if they had this kind of medical treatment. (1923)

As for myself, I have one girl and two boys. Ramona lives at Parkersburg. She went to school at Morris Harvey and also went to school at Marlinton High School and Poca High School. She graduated at Marietta College after she was married and is now teaching music in several elementary schools. She goes from one school to another and she likes it real well in dealing with the children. They seem to be so enthused over songs that they sing and that sort. The oldest boy of Ramona and Tom, Ramona married Tom Shipley a chemical engineer at the Dupont plant and did work at the Dupont plant at Belle, John graduated from school and he is now a clothing store manager in St. Louis. He married Cindy, I forget her father and mother's name but she is a real nice, quiet girl. They have a son, Jeremy that would be my great grandson.

(SIDE FIVE CONTINUED)

227

Tomas Alan is still in school and he is taking what you might the Hollywood type of training of being in plays and movies and singing. He has a wonderful voice and has won two or three scholorships on that. The younger boy, David, he looks more like the Sharp's than the other two boys. He is at West Virginia University now.
(END SIDE FIVE)
(SIDE SIX)

WHERE I LEFT OFF...I think I told the history of my daughter, Ramona. Then there comes Ralph and Evan. Ralph served a term in the army during the Korean War. He married Rogena Davis. They had four children of this union, Vickie, the oldest, Brian and Kathy and Diane. They bought a house, a fancy home in Albany Georgia. They been down, that was the second time..he had a job with Gravley Tractor company as an engineer and he was transferred down there to manage the plant in Albany Georgia. The chance of promotion didn't appear too good and the suggestions that he made in regard to the company and the new motors that they were putting out and he decided that if they weren't going to pay any attention to his suggestions that he would look out for another job. He did, he went back to Chicago and while he was in Chicago he went to school and worked for a draftsman there in Chicago before he got this job with Gravley and the man he worked for there in Chicago hired him back and he got a job for another company and Ralph worked for him for a few years in making this remote over televisionusing cassettes in the television in place of the current program so if you wanted to you just slip in a cassette and listen to your own programs. It was getting along pretty good and Sears Roebuck was supposed to be distributors for it but Ralph told them that if they didn't shake a leg a bit and put out more production and try to perfect some of the 'bugs' in the system it wasn't going to work. Ralph was right much to stand up for what he thought was right; so he quit there and went out to Fountain Valley in Calif. working for one of his old bosses he used to work for there in Chicago. He is vice-president or manager of production of this bearing plant where they make bearings for airplanes and motors of that sort and they have more orders than they can fill. When he went out there he had to hunt for a place to live and when you are so far up in the company you have to buy for prestigious sake and had to live in a fairly decent home so I think he overbought there in Fountain Valley..paid too much for this big house which is much bigger than they of course needed. When the prices of utilities and everything went up it made it quite difficult for Ralph to take care of the one family in Albany Georgia and he married a Nancy Darby, a quiet type person and they have one son, Richard in Fountain Valley California. We don't hear from them very often since they are that far away and I don't get to see them so very often . So far they are making good and the children, Rogena is raising are making good grades, one of them is going to school in Norfolk, Virginia and I think Brian wants to go to Charlottesville.

(SIDE SIX CONTINUED)

278

Brian starts college next year. He got a scholarship. He went to the governor's conference and made grades that justified that sort of thing.
Now, Evan went to school at Poca then to West Virginia State for one year. He couldn't get the subjects there that he wanted to take for he wanted to be a forester. He went on to West Virginia University and practically worked his own way through school. We helped him out as we could. He graduated. During the summer months he worked with Mr. Bailey up in Pocahontas county, trapping turkeys, wild life-tagging them and trying them loose etc. He was at the camp over at Albon on Anthony's creek. Later on he got a job with the Virginia forestry division. They liked his work there and they hired him full time when he graduated from W.V.U. He was over in Rockingham County out from Staunton for a couple of years, bought a home and had to sell it when he got a promotion and was sent over to Madison in the eastern part of the state. He was put in charge of a district of three counties, I don't know if I can name the counties; Madison was one and two other adjoining counties. This year he has set out 500,000 trees, he and some high school boys so he had to work long hours to do that. His wife, daughter of Mr. McCutcheon and the sister of Calvin McCutcheon a Methodist circuit rider you might say - he preferred to preach to the country people and has a charge up around Webster Springs, Craigsville and that section and has won serveral plaques or medals for outstanding work for serving the young people as well as the old people of his charge.

That sort of takes care of my family.
I might say that my dad was quite a worker in the church. Of course, Ramona, Ralph and Evan all sang in church choirs as well as myself. I was in hopes of raising a quartet of my own but they soon married off and moved away and that didn't seem to work out very well.

Some of the other things that I left out regarding the history of the Sharp's. On my mother's side of the house. She was a Morgan and my grandmother was a Ramsey. My references mad e here to the Ramsey reunion history give the history of the Ramsey's on my mothers side. They have a reunion at a place they built at Alvon near the Methodist church there especially for their reunion - a sheltor. My grandfather, the preacher, died before I was born. I did know his brother, uncle Clone (?) his brother, he married a sister of Mrs Hodges, I believe. Their daughter married a Laudermilk. .. Related to the the Sampson's Boone's and the Whangers and Ware's quite a number of folks around Ronceverte.. Sherwood, one of the Sherwood boys became a preacher. Dan Sherwood was a railroader, he and his wife aunt Sally Ware was grandmother Edith Morgan's sister. I think one of her daughter's married a Boone.. Roy Boone, Rankin and Samuel Boone, Weldon and Edith Boone of theBoone Family related to us. I think aunt Sally Ann Ware and my grandmother Morgan acted as midwives during the births of perhaps myself and my brothers and sisters. Of course there were no doctor's close. Dr. Cameron was over at Mace. Dr. Jim Price and steam car.

(SIDE SIX CONTINUED)

279

I might say that Dr. Cameron of Mace owned one of the first steam automobiles in the state of W. Va. He had one that was run by steam , used kerosene to heat up the boiler for steam he could make seventy-five, eighty or ninely miles an hour with that thing. It looked a wh ole lot like a jeep. Our first automobile that we owned was a Studebaker and I had to have cushions put behind me to reach the pedals to be able to drive it. When I bought the thing , Dad went over to town and old man Burr let dad drive the thing around town for about thirty minutes and turned him loose to drive the thing home over the wagon roads, dirt roads. That's the way we learned to drive back in those days. We didn't have to have a license for a few years there 'til they got some better roads and there wouldbe some chance of speeding and having wrecks. If you were going twenty or twenty-five miles and hour you were going at a high speed over those roads.

Back at the time my wife and I were married, I had bought a New Star automobile not long before that and drove it to Marlinton and put it in a garage there, and rode the train up to Cass, and Genevieve's dad met us up there in his model "T" Ford and took us on over to the Orndorff home for the night. We got married the next day about eleven o'clock. We were starting to Washington D. C. on our honeymoon and there were mud roads up there then. Moody, Genevieve's brother, harnessed up the horses and put the spreaders on and chains-log chains and went on down the road about a quarter of a mile and was waiting t ere 'til we came along to fasten to the old model "T" in order to get through the mud hole. So Moody got up on the radiator. My wife and I were sitting in the back seat and we had dad up front - he was chauffering, and we were riding in style, there; one man out on the radiator as conductor, flagman or something driving a team. After we got out of the mud hole, of course we made it all right over to Cass. We got on the train there at Cass and going down the Greenbrier river down near Watoga or thereabouts, a freight train had wrecked and upset about ten or fifteen cars of coal. So we had to get our baggage and tromp through the briers and weeds and walk about a half a mile around this wreckage. The railroad company had sent another passanger train up to meet us to take us on into Ronceverte. We made it into Ronceverte but we were about to be a little too late for the train to Washington D.C. We took a berth of course, it seemed we had to take an upper berth. While she went to the dressing room to dress, I went ahead and went to bed and I kept looking out the curtains for her. She kept delaying and delaying and here, her sister and another girl had taken a machine or a needle and thread and sown her gown all up, and she couldn't get inside of it, so she had been sitting in there in the train rocking backwards and forwards trying to get those stitches out so she could get her gown on..I thought her heart had failed her, but she finally appeared. So we landed in Washington the next morning, spent a few days there looking around at the sights, the museum of history and that sort of thing then came on back home.

(SIDE SIX CONTINUED)

280

While we were gone about two or three feet of snow had fallen. When we came to Marlinton I called home to my mother to see how the roads were and she said there hadn't been anybody over them for two or three days and the mail hadn't even run. She said I'd better go to the hotel and stay that night and wait until next day to see if the roads opened up. But I went over to C. J. Richardson's and bought a shovel, I had this new car so we started out. We made it up Elk mountain alright and coming down Elk the wind had blown the snow and drifted it over top of the fence along each side. I just kinda butted my way through the snow. It was a kind of soft, fluffy-like sno' but it was hard down inside. Finally made a way through, My mother was over at the new home fixing our wedding dinner for us, she wasn't expecting us so I stopped over at the old place, called over asking if everything was all right. She asked, "Where are you?" I told her we were over at the old place and she wanted to know how we ever got there. Of course, we started across the graveyard hill and the snow had drifted clear over and you couldn't tell where the road was going down the other side. But drivin' made a road through and we got there. There were a lot of our friends and loved ones came on anyway and we had a very nice wedding party. That's been fifty years ago and we've lived happily together for fifty years. My health has been bad for the last three or four years and I don't expedt to have too long to stay here. With the type of disease I have the doctor's are doing the best they can to care of it. I've been in the hospital three times now in the last year and am still not able to get out and stir around much. I'M still thankful the Lord has spared our lives this long and give us hope of eternity. We've had lots of friends that have been very kind to us and we hope to meet them someday, whether in this life or the life to come.

280

There are many more things perhaps I should say. On my wife's side of the house there are several preachers. Two of her sister's married preachers. Stella married Hillary Finch and Gaynelle married Ollie Heavener, a United Brethern preacher. Mary, a sister has a boy Billy is a Presbyterian preacher. Stella and Hillary's two boys were preachers, one of them a part time preacher. He was with IBM and war making more money in the sales field and of course liked to take care of his family. As a preacher I understand they got up good sermons and all like that, the Lord bless him and bring him back to the ministry where he belongs. It seems like we all have our troubles. Genevieve's sister, Eloise lost her husband little over a year ago. He died in Waynesboro Va. Marie lost her husband several years ago but she managed to raise her family, a very good family, one of them has an airplane taxi in Lewisburg, If you wanted to go somewhere in a hurry, he would take you. So I married into a good religious family and the Sharp's Ramsey's and the Morgan's were all considered very nice people. Fordy Morgan was uncle Tom Morgan's son and he went to Washington D.C. and had some children. We have relatives scattered all over the United States, I reckon. Si chose to remain single rather than get married. Dave owns the store building at Slatyfork and has somebody to operate it. The jewelry shop in Cincinnatti, he repairs watches etc. He married a Friel girl, Sylvia they have an adopted daughterthat is a wonderful girl and has been a great help to them and a great blessing to them.

Note; Submitted to Pocahontas County History Book 1981

287

Ivan Lilburn Sharp

In early June, 1921, Ivan Sharp returned home to Slatyfork from his studies at West Virgina Wesleyan College. His father, L. D. had plans for him. He was to take Si, Paul and Creola Sharp to Arbovale for J.H. Hall's Singing School. They would drive there in the Studebaker and room with Mrs. Summers Sutton for the week.

A local girl, Genevieve Orndorff, was also attending the school. Sometime during the week, Ivan asked to drive her home. She suggested they walk. The unpaved North Fork road to J.B. Orndorff's home was very muddy.

Ivan Sharp became accustomed to the road to Genevieve's door. In the next three years he would make numerous Sunday trips, arriving in time for church, to spend the day with Genevieve. In 1923, under an apple tree, he proposed marriage. J. B. and Cora Ella (Ervin) Orndorff gave their blessing.

February, 6, 1924, Ivan Lilburn Sharp and Jessie Genevieve Orndorff were married in the front parlor of the Orndorff home at eleven in the morning: Reverand Harris, Methodist minister of Arbovale charge, officiating with Mary Margaret Orndorff and Si Sharp in attendance. Martha, the organist, played the traditional wedding march for the processional down stairway and hall. The bride was dressed in a blue suit with grey squirrel collar, grey shoes and grey silk hose; the groom in a blue serge suit. The guests were served a turkey dinner after the ceremony. (Some members of the family missed the ceremony- Eloise Orndorff, age six, was behind the stove crying.... Lila Orndorff and Aunt Lola Sheets had gone to the well.)....(Lola was probably trying to get the sugar from her hands for she had helped 'ice' nine cakes.)

Ivan and Genevieve planned to honeymoon in Washington, D. C. They did. In that week, Woodrow Wilson passed away. Genevieve remembers the pallor over the city. They visited, the Smithsonian, the Congressional Library and the Zoo. Genevieve had never seen a leapord; the one she saw at the National Zoo presented her with an indeliable souviner, claw marks on a brand-new silk umbrella.

For Ivan's recollections, here are his recorded memories taped in November 1974: "Back at the time my wife and I were married, I had bought a new Star automobile. I drove it to Marlinton and put it in a garage. We rode the log train up to Cass, Genevieve's dad met us there in his model "T" Ford and took os on over to the Orndorff home for the night. We got married the next day about eleven o'clock. We started to Washington D.C. on our honeymoon and there were mud roads up there then. Moody, Genevieve's brother, harnessed up the horses and put the spreaders on and chains, log chains, and went on down the road about a quarter of a mile and was waiting there 'til we came along to fasten the old model "T" in order to get through the mud hole. Moody got up on the radiator. My wife and I were sitting in the back seat and we had my dad up front, chauffering. We were riding in style with a man on the radiator conducting us through the mud with a team of horses! After we got out of the mud hole, we made it all right over to Cass. We got on the train there at Cass and going down the Greenbrier river down near Watoga or thereabouts, a freight train had wrecked and upset about ten or fifteen cars of coal. So we had to get our baggage and tromp through the briers and weeds and walk about a half a mile around this wreckage. The railroad company had sent another passenger train up to meet us to take us on into Ronceverte. We made it into Ronceverte but were about a little too late for the train to Washington, D.C.

264

" We took a berth of course, it seemed we had to take an upper berth. While she went to the dressing room to dress, I went ahead and went to bed and kept looking out the curtains for her. She kept delaying and delaying and here- her sister and another girl had taken a machine or a needle and thread and sown her gown all up and she couldn't get inside of it! She had been sitting un there in the train rocking backwards and forwards trying to get those stitches out so she could get her gown on.....I thought her heqrt had failed her, but she finally appeared."

"We landed in Washington the next morning, spent a few days there looking around at the sights, the Museum of History and that sort of thing and then came on back home."

"While we were gone about two or three feet of snow had fallen. When we came to Marlinton I called home to my mother to see how the roads were . She said there hadn't been anybody over them for two or three days and the mail hadn't even run. She said I'd better go to the hotel and stay that night and wait until next day to see if the roads opened up.. But I went over to C. J. Richardson's and bought a shovel, I had this new car so we started out. We made it up Elk mountain all right and coming down Elk the wind had blown t e snow and drifted it over top of the fence along each side. I just kinda butted my way through the snow. It was a kind of soft, fluffly-like snow but it was hard down inside. We finally made our way through."

"My mother was over at the new home fixing our wedding dinner for us. She wasn't expecting us so I stopped over at the old place, called over asking if everything was all right. She asked, "Where are you?" I told her we were over at the old place and she wanted to know how we ever got there. Of course, we started over the graveyard hill and the snow had drifted clear over and you couldn't tell where the road was going down the other side. But drivin' made a road through and we got there. There were a lot of our friends and loved ones who came on anyway and we had a very nice wedding party. That's been fifty years ago and we've lived happily together for fifty years."

Ivan Lilburn Sharp was born at Slatyfork, July 27, 1900, son of Luther David and Laura Jane (Morgan) Sharp. He died March 22, 1975 and is buried at the Sharp Cemetary at Slatyfork. Jessie Genevieve (Orndorff) Sharp was born in Arbovale, August 5, 1905 and now resides in Waynesboro, Virginia. Ivan and Genevieve had three children: Ramona Irene Sharp Shipley born at Slatyfork August 26, 1928, Ralph Myers Sharp born at Myers Clinic, Philippi April 7, 1933. Evan Lilburn Sharp born at Myers Clinic, Philippi December 28, 1940 died November 17, 1975.

RANDOLPH MORGAN

The Morgans were of Welch decent, having come from Wales and settled in Virginia.

Randolph Morgan was born in Rappahannock County, Virginia on April 2, 1815. He came to Greenbrier County in company with Noah Morgan about 1833. Their relationship is not known, but it was not father and son.

Randolph Morgan lived two miles below Ronceverte. It is said that he had the first flour mill in the town. He was married to Pollie "Mary" Myres, also of Irish decent. She was a sister of Charles Myres. They lived near Ronceverte in the Irish Corner District. Pollie Myres was born in 1810.

The children of Randolph and Pollie Myres Morgan were: (ages according to 1880 census)

(1) Albert born 1841

(2) Charles Lewis born 1844

(3) Samuel Craft born July 8, 1847

(4) Columbus born 1851

(5) Virginia

(6) Unknown child

287

The second marriage of Randolph Morgan was to Mrs. Ellen Wade. She was born in 1824. They were married March 23, 1887 in Greenbrier County. She survived her husband.

Randolph Morgan died at his home below Ronceverte on May 6, 1897. The cause of his death was a general breaking down of his physical powers from old age. Funeral services were conducted at the house by the Rev. L. E. Markwood, followed by burial in the Coffman graveyard.

ALBERT MORGAN

Albert Morgan was born in 1841 in Greenbrier County. On August 24, 1865 he was married to Rebecca Whanger (born 1847), the daughter of David and Nelly Whanger. She was born in Greenbrier County.

The following children's initials were listed in the census of 1880.

M. E.	Female	13 years
S. E.	Male	12 years
E. A.	Female	8 years
V. S.	Female	6 years
A. L.	Male	3 years
S. F.	Female	1 year

Added to this are two known children: Ernest and Grace.

Grace Morgan was born October 19, 1886 and died in a Thomasville N. C. nursing home in November, 1974 after a long illness. She was married to Benjamin B. Brown. She was buried in the Ketron Cemetery near Ronceverte. Survivors include four sons: Guy of Indian Valley Covington, Va.; Ben B. and Archie, both of Highpoint, N. C.; Earl ~~Guy~~ of Covington, Va. three daughters: Mrs. Pauline Ford of Earlehurst, Va.; Mrs. Gladys Brisendine of Westwood, Covington, Va.; and Mrs. Margare Young of Clifton Forge, Va.

CHARLES LEWIS MORGAN

Charles Lewis Morgan was born in 1844 and was married to Louisa Eades on September 21, 1865. She was born in 1842, the daughter of Sam and Harriet Eades in Monroe, Va. Charles Lewis Morgan died December 17, 1899 at his home in Irish Corner District near Ronceverte. He died of cancer. He was a farmer. No children were listed for the couple in the census of 1880.

COLUMBUS MORGAN

Columbus Morgan was born in 1851. He was married to Malinda Howard who was born in 1856. Columbus died in 1927 or 28.

They were the parents of two daughters according to the census of 1880 and are listed as:

N. A.	Female	2 years
M. F.	Female	1 year

A son was born later. His name was Ford E. Morgan. He was living at 330 Maryland Ave., N. E., Washington, D. C. in 1944.

Columbus Morgan was living in the Fort Spring District when the census was taken in 1880.

291

VIRGINIA MORGAN

Virginia Morgan was 21 years old when she married Charles T. Holliday, also aged 21 years. The marriage date is not known by me. He was a son of Israel E. and Mary Holliday. Charles was a farmer. They were both born in Greenbrier County. Charles and Virginia were the parents of a daughter, Mary Susan, who married John Ramsey.

Virginia Morgan's second marriage was to Andrew Hutchinson. Their children that can be remembered are:

(1) Sam married Anna(?) Green

(2) Charles

(3) Barbara Ann married Ed Morgan

(4) Nancy Jane married _____ Fink

292

SAMUEL CRAFT MORGAN

Samuel Craft Morgan was born near Ronceverte on July 8, 1847. He died January 7, 1898. He was married on February 21, 1872 (note: Greenbrier County Court House records show January 21, 1872) to Edith H. Ramsey by M. L. Lacy. She was born near Ronceverte on December 20, 1855, the daughter of William and Sallie Meade Ramsey.

The following children were born to this union:

(1) Laura J. Morgan born March 31, 1874

(2) William Columbus Morgan born March 15, 1876

(3) Sarah Virginia (Ninnie) Morgan born February 15, 1878

(4) Edgar Randolph Morgan born April 18, 1882

(5) Lena Florence Morgan born December 17, 1896

The following is from an obituary notice:

Rev. Samuel C. Morgan, of the Greenbrier Circuit, M. E. Church, whose injuries by his horse falling on him, were noted in these columns some weeks ago, died last Friday morning, January 7, 1898, at 11 o'clock, at the home of George W. Whiting, near Falling Spring, of pneumonia. Aged 51 years.

Mr. Morgan, while seriously hurt by his accident, would have recovered had he not suffered exposure by lying for several hours in the weather before he could make anyone hear his cries for assistance. This exposure developed pneumonia, but we understand that he was improving slowly until one week before his death, when he was moved from Mr. Abraham Snedegar's to Mr. Whiting's, a distance of some six or seven miles. The change from a warm room to the outside air exerted perhaps an injurious effect upon his wexakened frame, and he could not rally from the shock.

293

We give below from the pen of J. W. Sampson, a brief sketch of Mr. Morgan's life.

"Rev. Samuel Craft Morgan, the subject of this article, was born on the 8th day of July, 1847, in Greenbrier County, near the location on which the town of Ronceverte now stands. He was the third son of Randolph and Pollie Morgan, and on his mother's side sprang from among the oldest citizens of Greenbrier -- the old Myres family. Deceased was converted at a protracted meeting conducted by Rev. Addison Weller of M. E. Church, South, at old Pleasant Grove school house, in the Coffman neighborhood, in the year 1866. From the time of his conversion to the day of his death, he was an active and zealous worker in the church. He was licensed as a local preacher in the M. E. Church in the year 1887, and in 1888 was received on probation in the Virginia Annual Conference of the same church. His first pastoral charge was the Edray circuit (in 1889 in Pocahontas County), where he remained the full time limit of five years after which he was appointed to the Greenbrier circuit, where he served until called from labor to reward.

Bro. Morgan was a kind friend and neighbor, ~~a kind friend and neighbor~~, a faithful and loving husband and father, and above all else, was a faithful, self-denying, crossbearing servant of his Divine Master. He labored faithfully for the salvation of precious souls, and for the advancement of the church of his choice, as a minister for nearly eleven years, and died at his post of duty. Doubtless the Master said, "It is enough, come up higher." "Mark the upright man and behold the just, for the end of that man is peace." We mourn, but not as those who have no hope, for this great loss to the church, believing as we do that our loss is his great gain. We extend to the bereaved wife and children our warmest sympathies, and exhort them to follow the example of their beloved one, and trust in Him who promised to be a father to the orphan and a husband to the widow."

294

The following appeared in a Greenbrier newspaper:

A Dream

Our Loveridge correspondent writes of a curious dream which seemed to have a quick fulfillment in the death of a Methodist minister sometime ago. He says:

"In the death of Rev. S. C. Morgan, whose obituary appeared in the West Virginia News, we realize a great loss. While some do not pay any attention to dreams, many reflect over Bro. Morgan's dream the night before he preached his last sermon at this place and which he related at that time.

"He dreamed he was on the bank of the Greenbrier River, opposite the old homestead, not far from the present site of Ronceverte. He saw the old birch tree to which he used to hitch his canoe, but his canoe was gone. He wanted to get across but did not know how. He saw a boat up the river, but it was not the boat he used to have. In some way he crossed, he said, but did not know how, but on the other side he met his father, who had been dead sometime.

295

"He said he did not know, but it might be that his earthly stay was short."

The Rev. S. C. Morgan was buried at the Oak Grove Cemetery. Following his death, the church was renamed Morgan Memorial Church.

His wife was buried at his side. She died September 25, 1932 at the home of her son, W. C. Morgan of Lobelia. Her second marriage was to John Wesley Irvin 10-16-1901 of Edray who preceded her in death. A week before her death, she suffered a stroke of paralysis.

The children of the Rev. S. C. and Edith Ramsey Morgan will now be presented.

Randolph Morgan - 11
Samuel Morgan - 5
Laura Morgan Sharp - 1

296

LAURA JANE MORGAN

Laura Jane Morgan was born March 31, 1874 near Ronceverte. She died at her home at Slaty Fork, Pocahontas County, October 17, 1932. She had been ill for many months with heart disease and complications. She was buried in the Sharp family cemetery, the funeral being conducted from the Slaty Fork Church by Rev. T. H.Taylor.

On February 16, 1893 she united in marriage with Luther David Sharp, born June 8, 1872 at Slaty Fork, the son of Silas and Sarah Hannah Sharp of the "Old Field" on Elk. "L.D." died March 13, 1963 and was buried in the Sharp cemetery. The following was taken from his obituary notice.

"Mr. Sharp was the only son of his parents. At the early age of 12, he started his mercantile business, buying and selling fur, livestock, and merchandise. For many years his merchandise was hauled from Millboro, Virginia, and Beverly by covered wagons. Mr. Sharp was the first Postmaster of Slatyfork and gave it its name when the office was opened. He loved to fish and hunt, killing his last deer at the age of 89. He was one of the first group of apiary inspectors in W. Va., and raised bees to produce the famous Pocahontas County white lynn honey.

"L.D." as he was affectionately called by his close friends, helped organize and was a charter member of the Slatyfork Methodist Church. He was a lover of sacred music and organized the Slatyfork Choir, well known in Pocahontas and surrounding counties for its fine music.

297

Luther's second marriage was to Mabel Hansford (May 20 1934)

The children of L.D . and Laura Sharp are listed below. They all attended West Virginia Weslyan College except Creola.

(1) Ada Ellen born Feb 21st 1894 - 1956 (died 8-18-1956), first married John Johnson

Their children:

Pocahontas Times (Aug or Sept) 1912: "Ada Sharp will go to Buckhannon to attend Wesleyan College" (age 18)

(A) Donald married Lexie _____ and lives in Portland, Oregon. Children: Paul, Linda, Donald Jr., and Bruce.

Helen's 2nd marriage 4-21-78 to Sampson Soldiers, at Warm Springs Va. He died near fair ground near Marlinton

(B) Helen married (May 1934?) Eugene Hannah, the son of Lee and Virginia Daft Hannah. Widowed Helen lives at Slatyfork. Their son Eugene H. married Jewell Mullins. Children: David and Douglas. They live at Fairmont.

died of heart attack

(at Warm Springs, VA) → Helen remarried to Samuel Soldiers 1978 (4-21-78)

Following the death of Mr. Johnson, Ada married William Curtin (April 20th (about 1925)) of Baltimore, Md.

He died (Jan 12) 1981 (age 80)

Also Carl (Baby) died about 1 year old ?

Their children:

(A) Stanley married Shirley Bell. He is a school principal near Baltimore.

(B) Clara married William Keene. They live in Baltimore.

(C) William "Billy" has been married 2 or 3 times in Baltimore.

(2) Violet (Morgan) born March 15, 1897, married Rufus Melvin Markland (7-6-1918) and lives in Richmond, Virginia. He is deceased.

Their child, Rufus Melvin,Jr., married Nancy _____ and lives in Indiana. Their children are: John and Ann.

298

(3) Ivan born July 25, 1900. Married Genevieve Orndorff, daughter of Jesse Brown Orndorff of Arbovale. Ivan and Genevieve live at Nitro, W. Va. (2-3-81) She moved to Waynesboro, Va a few years ago. (4?)
Ivan died spring of 1975
Their children:

(A) Ramona married Tom Shipley. Lives at Parkersburg.

Children: John, Thomas Alan, and David

(B) Ralph married Rogena Davis. Lives in California.
Ralph divorced Rogena Remarried & living in Calif. (Nancy Darby) Children: Brian, Kathy, and _____.

(C) Evan married Phyllis McCutcheon. B. 8-4-1949, Reedy, W.Va. Lives at Madison, Virginia. Their two sons are Todd and Roderick.

(4) Creola (Evan killed by a hunter fall of 1975. Phyllis remarried a year later to Brad Melgen P.O. Box 1 Orange, Va 22960 born 1905 - died 2-25-1925) - died as a young girl in 1923.

(5) Silas was born October 27, 1907. ~~Never married~~. Lives at Slatyfork. married Eunice Gibson July 3, 1981

(6) Paul born November 25, 1910. Married Vonda Lowe. Deceased He lives in Port Neches, Texas. Remarried Katherine Milhollin

Their children:

(A) Thayer married Nancy Simpson. Their child is Timothy Thayer divorced Nancy & Married Sara Carter, Divorced Sara & Married Beverly Champion

(B) Barbara married Glenn Smith

After Vonda's death, Paul married "Ketha" Milhollin.

(7) Luther David Jr. born June 8, 1916. Married Silvia Friel. They live in Cincinnati, Ohio. Their child is Linda Dee 1919- 7-11-1940 12-19-61 She married Danny EDUARDO May 1980

Ivan L. Sharp

Ivan Lilbern Sharp, 74, of 110 Woodland Dr., Nitro, died Saturday in Thomas Memorial Hospital after a long illness.

He was a retired foreman of the FMC plant in Nitro and the U. S. Rubber Co. He was a member of St. Paul's United Methodist Church and attended West Virginia Wesleyan College. He was graduated from Massey Business College in Richmond and Rhea Auto and Tractor School in Cincinnati. He was a native of Slatyfork, Pocahontas County.

Surviving: wife, Genevieve at the home; daughter, Mrs. Romona Shipley of Parkersburg; sons, Ralph M. of Fountain Valley, Calif., and Evan L. of Madison, Va.; brothers, Si of Slatyfork, Paul of Port Neches, Texas, Dave of Cincinnati; sister, Mrs. Violet M. Markland of Richmond.

Service will be 11 a.m. Monday in St. Paul's United Methodist Church with the Rev. James B. Arbogast, the Rev. J. Hillary Finch and the Rev. Ollie Hevener officiating.

An additional service will be 4 p.m. Monday in the Slatyfork United Methodist Church. Burial will be in the Sharp Cemetery, Slatyfork.

Friends may call from 2 to 4 p.m. and 7 to 9 p.m. today at the funeral home. The family requests that memorials be made to St. Paul's United Methodist Church.

Cook-Pauley Funeral Home, Nitro, is in charge of arrangements.

Evan Sharp

Randolph morgan 13
Sam morgan Sharp 7
Laura morgan Sharp 3½

Issue: 2 Ch'n

299

Evan Lilbern Sharp

B. 28 Dec. 1940
Philippi, W.Va.

D. 19 Nov. 1975
Augusta Springs, VA
Killed while deer hunting in Nat'l Forest.

bur. Sharp Cemetery
Slaty Fork, W.Va.

Forester in Virginia Forest Service

Resided: Staunton, Va.
Madison, VA

Parents: Ivan Lilbern Sharp
& Jesse Genevieve Orndorff

1. Arthur Todd Sharp
B. 1 Oct. 1965 Norton, Va.
D.
Md.

2. Roderick Evan Sharp
B. 13 Mar. 1967 Staunton, Va.
D.
Md.

3. a girl;

Md. 6 Mar. 1965
Weston, W.Va.

Jacksons Mill

Phyllis Jeanette McCutheon

B. 21 Aug. 1944
Reedy, W.Va.

She remarried
To Brad Mehges
Orange, Va.

D.

bur.

Parents: Thomas Edgar McCutcheon
& Edna West

Randolph Morgan - 14
Samuel Morgan - 8
W. C. Morgan - 1

300

William Columbus Morgan

William Columbus Morgan, the second child of the Rev. S. C. and Edith Ramsey Morgan, was born March 15, 1876 just below Ronceverte. He went to school at the Old Pleasant School House for a while which was in the Coffman neighborhood. He then went to the Oak Hill School in Ronceverte. The Morgan family moved to Edray in Pocahontas County in March 1889 to the Methodist Parsonage. He then attended the Edray School until he finished the sixth grade. He worked for Isaac Sharp at Edray for two 8 month hitches and also during sugar making time. In 1894 the Morgan family moved to the old log parsonage just below Lobelia and the Rev. Morgan preached at 7 or 8 churches in the Greenbrier Charge.

William C. married Jemima Frances "Fannie" Hill on November 10, 1897. She was the daughter of Aaron and Miriam Jordan Hill of Lobelia. W. C. and Fannie were married by his father at Lobelia. They started housekeeping in a house owned by Christopher Hill. They then moved on to Droop Mountain. Returned to Lobelia and bought a piece of land from Chris Hill where he built a house. He sold the land. In March 1907 the family moved ~~on~~ East Elk Mountain in Statyfork into the home with Hugh Sharp (uncle of L. D. Sharp). In October 1907, they returned to Bruffey's Creek and lived in the old house of his brother-in-law, Winnie Kennison. His wife, Fannie, died there on February 21, 1908 of pneumonia. Charlie Anderson, a school teacher at Bruffey's Creek, closed his school and preached the funeral on February 22, 1908. She was buried in the Emmanuel Cemetery on Bruffey's Creek. Will's sister, Ninnie, kept house for him for awhile until he broke up housekeeping.

301

Dr. T. G. Cook attended Fannie during her illness.

William stayed with Winnie Kennison on weekends and worked in the woods during the week. The children stayed with:

(A) Miriam stayed with her Uncle L. D. and Aunt Laura Sharp.

(B) Georgia made her home with Nathaniel Kennison near Hillsboro

(C) Laura stayed at Winnie Kennisons, also at Nat Kennisons, at Chris Hills, and with Mr. and Mrs. Harry K. Wilson who lived at Winterburn on Williams River and then moved to Thomas. Mr. Wilson was a sawyer and noted as a good one. Laura was 11 years old when she went to live with Will and Sallie Irvin at Fairview. She made her home with them until her marriage.

(D) Samuel was taken by his Grandmother, Mrs. Edith Morgan Irvin at Edray until his father remarried.

(E) Fannie was 6 weeks old when her mother died. Mrs. Mary Brock took her until Mrs. Brock died and then Fannie went to live with her father and step-mother.

William C. was married the second time to Miriam Hill Morgan. She had married and divorced his brother, Edgar Morgan. She was the daughter of Isaac Hill and they lived on her father's farm on Bruffey's Creek near Lobelia. W. C. and Miriam were married in April 1916 in Cumberland, Maryland. W. C. continued to work in the woods some after his second marriage. He also did some farming at their place. He raised bees and many different kinds of birds -- bantams, turkeys, guineas, and chickens. His son-in-law, Charles Hollandsworth, recalled how Will would put grain under a piece of glass and watch an old hen scratch away trying to get the grain. He had an old mule that was used to ride newly weds on when they were serenaded. The mule died the same day that W. C. 's grandson, Melvin Dale Hollandsworth, was born on Nov. 16, 1925. W. C. nicknamed him "Jack", a name that he became known by.

Randolph Morgan - 16
Samuel Morgan - 10
W. C. Morgan - 3

William C. and Miriam Morgan carried on many pioneer habits. They raised broom corn and made brooms. Both were expert weavers on the loom. She did carding and spinning of wool. He enjoyed hunting and was 78 when he killed his last deer with a shotgun as his eyesight was not keen enough to use a rifle. They both played the accordion and he also played the fiddle.

After Miriam's death on March 26, 1952, he continued to live at the farm until he became too feeble to be alone. He would then stay a few months with each of his children. In early 1957 he was admitted to the Denmar Hospital where he died December 22, 1957. He was buried December 24 in the cemetery at Emmanuel Church on Bruffey's Creek.

The families of his children will now be presented.

303

MIRIAM EDITH MORGAN

Miriam Edith Morgan, the oldest child of W. C. and Fannie Hill Morgan, was born August 13, 1898. Following the death of her mother, Miriam stayed for a while with her uncle and aunt, L.D. and Laura Sharp at Slatyfork. While there she learned to play the organ.

She married Jonah Roy Sparks (born October 5, 1889, died June 19, 1972), son of Adam and Emma Griffith Sparks of Tazewell County, Virginia later of Lobelia, W. Va. on Hill's Creek. Roy Sparks was a veteran of World War I.

Miriam died July 4, 1916 following the birth of her only child, Miriam Edith, on July 3, 1916. Miriam was buried at the Emmanuel Cemetery on Bruffey's Creek.

The following is a part of a news item in the Pocahontas Times.

"On the 18th of April (1917) the angels came and carried away from the home of Mr. and Mrs. Sam Sparks near Lobelia, the soul of Miriam Edith Sparks, their little granddaughter, aged nine months. The child's mother, Mrs. Roy Sparks, having been called to her reward last July. The grandparents gladly took the care of the little babe. For a time they thought they would not be able to raise the child, but for some time it seemed to be doing well and was the pride of the home. But almost suddenly, its sickness being only two days, the Heavenly Father who doeth all things well, saw best to take the little child to a better country where death and suffering will be no more. We know the father, Roy Sparks, cannot help but feel a sense of loneliness, his companion and only child having been taken from him

Randolph Morgan - 18
Samuel Morgan - 12
W. C. Morgan - 5

304 in the last year, but we are sure the attractions on the other shore will be helpful to lead to that blissful place where partings come no more. Funeral services were conducted at Emmanuel Church by Nap S. Morrison (also preached the mother's funeral) and J. B. Grimes, after which the body was laid to rest in the cemetery nearby to await the coming of him who said, "Suffer little children to come unto me."

305

GEORGIA VIRGINIA MORGAN

Georgia Virginia Morgan, the second child of W. C. and Fannie Hill Morgan, was born September 2, 1900.

Georgia recalled when the Morgan family lived on Elk Mountain Holly Fork that her brother, Sam, punched the bees while they were playing. He was stung all over. The other children were stung too. A very old Indian and wife lived nearby the Sharp farm. The Indian took Georgia to stay all night at his house. She was afraid and faked illness the next morning so she could go home.

After her father broke up housekeeping, Georgia lived in the home of Nathaniel "Uncle Nat" Kennison near Hillsboro. He was a Confederate veteran. At his death he gave Georgia a cow, parlor organ, and other things.

Georgia was married to (*) James Winters Jordan born 8-16-1947 of Hillsboro on 4-20-1918 at Marlinton. He was the son of James J. and Fannie Jordan.

Georgia died in the Pocahontas Memorial Hospital March 12, 1974 of a heart disorder. She was buried in the Oak Grove Cemetery near Hillsboro.

The six children of James Winters and Georgia are:

(1) Frances H. born June 2, 1920. She was trained and practiced as a nurse. On July 30, 1945 she was married to George William Trader, born June 25, 1916. They live in Oak Harbor, Ohio.

Children:

(A) George Winters "Butch" born June 5, 1947. Married

(*) James Winters "Butch" born 8-16-1889 d. dec. 3-8-75 World I Vet. - Oak Grove Cemetery at Hillsboro

306

Donnis W. _____ born March 5, 1947. Their twin children born October 23, 1966 are David William and Beverly.

(B) John William born October 5, 1953.

(2) James William born April 10, 1922. He first married and divorced Mattie Beverage of Marlinton. Their daughter is _____.

His second marriage was to Edna Beatrice _____. She was born June 4, 1922. They live in Gulfport, Florida. They were married March 22, 1954. Their child is James Stuart born February 14, 1956.

(3) Lucy Ellen born April 15, 1924. She was trained and practiced as a nurse. On June 5, 1947 she married William Levi Vandergrift who was born October 17, 1922. They live at Fairmont, W. Va.

(4) Mildred born March 24, 1926. She married Imon* Walton on May 15, 1946. He was born September 4, 1921. They live at Hillsboro.

Their children:

(A) Nancy born April 25, 1947

(B) Charles Winters "Pee Wee" born December 14, 1949

(C) Clarice born March 3, 1952

(5) Nancy Virginia born October 16, 1928. On November 11, 1947 she married George Warren Fowler who was born July 28, 1919. They live at Hillsboro.

Their children are:

(A) Linda Lou born May 12, 1950

(B) Georgia Diane born October 28, 1952. On Dec. 24, 1968 she married Gordon Wayne Madison of Marlinton.

(C) Nancy Carolyn born November 23, 1960

(D) David Wayne born May 7, 1963

(6) Harry Winters born March 20, 1931. Died at his home in Street, Maryland on August 5, 1961 of cancer. He married Agnes M. Brock, the daughter of Gilbert and Nancy Brock. Agnes was born August 18, 1928 and died January 31, 1968. Both are buried in the Oak Grove Cemetery near Hillsboro. Their child is Kathleen Ann who was born January 23, 1956. She lived with her Grandmother Brock at Street, Md. after the death of her parents.

308

Laura Rachel Morgan

Laura Rachel Morgan, the third child of W. C. and Fannie Hill Morgan, was born February 14, 1903. The Pocahontas County Court House record is incorrect.

On May 27, 1925 she was united in marriage with Andrew Warwick Taylor, the son of Henry L. and Early Tacy Taylor of Dunmore. He was born February 11, 1899. He was a woodsman and farmer near Dunmore. Their children:

(1) Marvin Lee born March 31, 1926. He was married to Zula Grey Taylor (born August 9, 1931) on December 21, 1949. He is a farmer and lives near Dunmore. Their children are:

(A) Rachel Elizabeth born June 3, 1958

(B) Naomi Virginia born January 4, 1961

(C) Marvin "Marty" Wetzel born November 24, 1966

(2) Eula Mae born December 23, 1929 was first married to Ralph Dempsey Ritz of Charleston on September 24, 1949. They were divorced and she married James Richard Curzon (born February 4, 1922) on October 3, 1970. She attended Capital City Commercial College in Charleston and has held several secretarial positions. They presently live in Atlanta, Georgia.

(3) Hubert Henry born December 27, 1931. On June 18, 1961 he was married to Ann Holmes Hargitt of Durham, N. C. They were later divorced. He was graduated from Glenville

309

State College and George Peabody College for Teachers in Nashville, Tennessee. He was a teacher for 15 years.

(4) William Orville born September 5, 1935. On June 12, 1954 he was married to Margaret Lillian Barnhouse (born 1934) of Painesville, Ohio. He died June 1, 1973. She died July 21, 1973. Both are buried in the Wesley Chapel Cemetery near Dunmore. Their children are:

(A) William Orville II born January 10, 1955. Married Charlene Hogan on July ~~24~~ 27, 1973. Their child is William Orville III born October 20, 1974. They live at Arbovale, W.Va.

(B) Mark Antony born January 23, 1956

(C) Barbara Jo born January 31, 1958. On December 30, 1974 she married Robert Wendell Wilfong (born August 5, 1956). They live at Marlinton.

(D) Christine Marie born December 18, 1959

(E) Carl David born March 9, 1963

(F) Roberta Lee born June 3, 1964

(5) Samuel Ludy born November 11, 1937. At Monterey, Va. on December 5, 1959 he was married to Carol Janetta Galford (born October 1, 1938). He was graduated from Glenville State College and taught in the Pocahontas County Schools. Their children:

(A) Teresa Sue born September 14, 1960

(B) June Allison born June 10, 1962

(C) Cheryl Lynn born August 1, ~~1970~~ 1969

(6) Andrew Warwick, Jr. born June 16, 1943. Lives with his parents near Dunmore. He has been a victim of cerebral palsy since birth.

(7) Juanita Jean born June 6, 1947. On April 21, 1967 was married to Walter Reed Smith (born November 22, 1943). They were later divorced. She lives in Seaford, Delaware. Their child is Tammy Michele who was born December 31, 1967.

311

Samuel Aaron Morgan

Samuel Aaron Morgan, the fourth child of W. C. and Fannie Morgan, was born at Lobelia on April 23, 1905. He was married to Luna Margaret Hill (born April 10, 1914), the daughter of George Forrest and Mary Hallie Morrison Hill of Hillsboro. Mary Hallie Morrison was born January 25, 1894.

Samuel died in the Pocahontas Memorial Hospital on April 14, 1964, a victim of cancer. He was buried in the Emmanuel Cemetery on Bruffey's Creek. He was an employee of the State Road Commission and a member of the Odd Fellows Lodge at Lobelia.

Their seven children are:

(1) Samuel Albert born May 30. 1934. On January 17, 1966 at Streeter, W. Va. he was married to Judith Ann Harvey (born November ___, 1945, the daughter of Champ and Edna Harvey of Streeter. Their child is Andrew Albert born November 26, 1968. They live at Hillsboro.

(2) Alvadore Nevada born November 14, 1936. In Berlin, New Hampshire on June 13, 1959 he was married to Mary Violet Caovette (born November 3, 1937). They live at Hillsboro. Their children are:

(A) David Aaron born June 27, 1965

(B) Susan Dawn born December 4, 1968

(3) William Austin born December 13, 1938. On July 25, 1962 at Alexandria, Virginia he was married to Barbara Lee Workman, the daughter of George and Dale Workman of Hillsboro. They live at Woodbridge, Virginia where he is manager of a service station. Their children are:

3/2

(A) William Aaron born January 30, 1968

(B) Kenneth Edward born August 30, 1969

(4) Arlie Hill born April 8, 1941. At Marlinton on June 9, 1972 he was married to Mary Magaline ~~Gauetson~~ Garnelson. They live at Arbovale, W. Va. Their child is Carol Ann born March 22, 1973. Son Sheron Kay born 5-13-1977

(5) Roger Page born at Green Bank on March 20, 1943. At Hillsboro on November 7, 1970 he married Wanda Lou Roberts, daughter of Durwood and Estie Roberts of Hillsboro. They live at Arbovale, W. Va. Their child Jody Lynn was born February 27, 1973. Son Scott, born 10-30-1977.

(6) Janet Virginia born April 22, 1945. She lives in Washington, D. C.

(7) Randall GRAY Gary born June 6, 1947. He married Dorothy Kay Arbogast, She was born 10-28-1949 daughter of Ralph and Eleanor Arbogast of Marlinton. They live at Marlinton. Their child is Crystal Gail born January 5, 1970. Son Randall Gary Jr. born 9-7-1975

Before his death, Samuel and Luna adopted their granddaughter, Maria Margaret born February 25, 1963.

313

Jemima Frances Morgan

Jemima Frances "Fannie" Morgan, the youngest child of W. C. and Fannie Hill Morgan, was born January 12, 1908 at Bruffey's Creek on the farm of Winnie Kennison. She was six weeks old when her mother died.

On June 10, 1945 she was married to Charles Marvin Hollandsworth (born September 22, 1899), the son of Nathaniel and Ellen C. Hollandsworth of Lobelia.

Jemima Frances Hollandsworth died April 12, 1950, a victim of cancer. She was buried in the Emmanuel Cemetery on Bruffey's Creek.

The seven children of Charles and Fannie Hollandsworth are:

(1) Melvin Dale "Jack" born November 16, 1925. He retired from the Air Force and lives at Marlinton. On January 16, 1947 he married Rebecca Sue Hannah (born January 16, 1930), the daughter of Ira and Hazel Weatherholt Hannah of Marlinton. The children of Jack and Sue Hollandsworth are:

(A) Melvin Dale, Jr. born August 26, 1948. On June 24, 1967 he married Rita Goody. Their child is Deserrie who was born February 3, 1968.

(B) Charles Micheal born June 12, 1954. In September 1974 he married Evelyn Pritt.

(C) Marzella Ann born September 11, 1956

(D) Kellea Sue born February 24, 1968

(2) Mary Ann born August 19, 1927. On January 8, 1945 she married Anthony Joseph Pantuliano who was born May 20, 1923.

They live in Wilmington, Delaware. Their children are:

(A) Angelo Charles born October 10, 1945. He was married to Sara Ann Larry (born November 6, 1944) on April 20, 1968. They live in Wilmington, Delaware. Their children:

Nancy Margarette born December 31, 1970

Anthony Larry born February 5, 1972

Angelo Charles, Jr. born July 17, 1974

(B) Frances born November 24, 1952. Was married April 13, 1972 to Ronald Lee Gray (born July 6, 1947). They live in Wilmington. Their children are:

Michele Lynn born August 3, 1972

Ronald Lee, Jr. born January 16, 1975

(C) Deborah Marie born October 28, 1955

(D) Sarah Ann born November 12, 1959

(C) David Anthony born October 8, 1965

(3) Madeline Lucille "Peg" born April 10, 1930. On September 28, 1946 she married Hubert Neal Rose (born July 27, 1919). They live at Hillsboro. Their children are:

(A) Sandra Faye born October 27, 1947. She married Andrew Curtis Pritt, son of Andrew Pritt, on January 5, 1968. They live at Airville, Maryland. Their child, Heather Denise, was born December 2, 1969.

(B) Donald Eugene born July 17, 1949. On February 1, 1969 he married Vicki Lynn Moore (born November 29, 1948), the daughter of John Moore, Jr. of Buckeye. Their child, Stefanie Dawn, was born December 6, 1967.

315

(4) William Nathaniel born March 7, 1932. On September 17, 1959 he married Mrs. Doris Ann Jones Lemon (born October 29, 1930), the daughter of Theodore Easter and Mary Glick Jones of Wilmington, Delaware. Their children are:

(A) Kathleen Ann born September 21, 1952. On May 25, 1972 she married Christopher Cowan (born February 2, 1949).

(B) William Charles born October 20, 1966.

(5) Samuel Barton born April 14, _____. On November 2, 1962 he married Betty Marie Dulaney, daughter of Luther and Lucille Dulaney of Marlinton. He is a career navy serviceman. They were married at Warm Springs, Virginia and make their home at Buena Vista, Virginia. Their children are;

(A) Betina born 1965

(B) Carmella born 1969

(C) Dawnita

(6) Joseph Kenneth born June 5, 1940. On September 26, 1964 he married Carol Letcher (born June 27, 1943), daughter of James and Margaret Hill Letcher of Wilmington, Delaware. Their children are;

(A) Joseph Kenneth II born March 20, 1965

(B) Bonnie Lynn born October 17, 1966

(C) Lori born December 29, 1970

(7) Laura Virginia born July 21, 1943. Married and divorced Daniel Fowler of Hillsboro. Child, Veronica Dale born July 22, 1961
Married and divorced Ted Ryser of St. Louis, Mo. Child, Donna born May 1964 and died March 1969
Married Leo Click. Child, Leo William Click, Jr. born October 22, 1971.

Randolph Morgan - 30
Samuel Morgan - 24
Sarah Morgan - 1

314.

Sarah Virginia Morgan

Sarah Virginia Morgan, the third child of the Rev. Samuel and Edith Ramsey Morgan, was born near Ronceverte on February 15, 1878. She was nicknamed "Ninnie."

She kept house for her brother, William, after his wife died in 1908 for awhile.

She was a school teacher for several years.

During the 1930's, she was committed to the Weston State Hospital where she died in ~~the mid 1940's~~. Dec 18, 1942

She is buried in the Emmanuel Cemetery on Bruffeys Creek.

317

Edgar Randolph Morgan

Edgar Randolph Morgan, the fourth child of the Rev. Samuel and Edith Ramsey Morgan, was born near Ronceverte on April 18, 1882.

He first married on June 27, 1906 and divorced Miriam Hill of Bruffey's Creek. She later married his brother, William.

His second marriage was to Lula Mae Cox - of Hookersville, who was born in 1891. They were married July 1, 1918?

Lula Mae was the widow of J. Wheeler Bobbitt. Issue of this marriage was Ivan Bobbitt of Richwood and Mrs. Irene Shaver of Camden-on-Gauley.

Lula Mae died July 1966 in a hospital in Pasadena, Texas. She was buried in the McQueen Cemetery at Hookersville, W. Va. She was a member of the Beulah Baptist Church at Hookersville.

Edgar R. Morgan died at his home at Hookersville on December 11, 1932. of pneumonia He was buried in the McQueen Cemetery at Hookersville.

Six children were born to the union of Edgar and Lula Mae Morgan. One child died as an infant.

The others are:

(1) B. 31 Mar. 1918 @ Lobelia Colvin Morgan Morgan, ~~Canvas~~, W. Va. single

(2) B. 29 June 1923 Madeline at Lobelia Mrs. Anna Zimmerer, 2208 Fenwood St., Pasadena, Texas Married Robert Z. Imm children: Sandra Kay, Jerry, Douglas

(3) B. 15 Aug. 1925 Marie at Lobelia She is a lawyer. Mrs. Violet Holman, 539 Douglas Way, Tipp City, Ohio Married Robert Holm children Sharon & Jo

(4) B. 3 June 1921 Nesbit at Lobelia Ross Morgan, Zanesville, Ohio

(5) B. 21 Feb Edward 1930 Eugene Morgan, 1308 Cooper Mill Road, Zanesville, Ohio Married Marlene Tumblin No children

Ross named for Jennie Nesbit mother of Lobelia

Married Elnora Lee Sholes B 1946 of Camden-on-Gauley (his student) married in 1956

Children
① Phyllis Jean b 18 Jan. 1955 at Sutton
② Steven Dwayne b. 3 May 1958 at Richwood

Road 614-4

Randolph Morgan 31½
Samuel Morgan 25½
Edgar Morgan 2 — 31⅛

Edgar R. Morgan died at his home at Hookersville, in Nicholas County, Dec. 11, 1932. He was born near Ronceverte April 18, 1882, aged 50 years, 7 months and 24 days. He was the son of Rev. and Mrs. Samuel C. Morgan. He was married to Mrs. J. Wheeler Bobbitt, July 4, 1916. To this union six children were born, one of which preceded him in death in infancy. A sister, Lena, preceded him in death several years ago; his mother, Mrs. Edith Morgan Irvine, and a sister, Mrs. L. D. Sharp, died about two months since.

He leaves to mourn their loss, his wife, five children and one brother, Will Morgan, and one sister, Ninnie Morgan, and a host of friends and relatives.

About thirteen years ago he united with Emanuel M. E. church at Bruffeys Creek and lived a devoted christian life. Funeral services was conducted from the Beulah church at Hookersville, by the pastor, Rev. J. C. Brown, and interment was made in McQueen cemetery.

1960

Lula Morgan, 75, Taken By Death

HOOKERSVILLE (RNS) — Mrs. Lula Mae Morgan, 75, of Pasadena, Texas, died Saturday in a hospital there after a short illness.

A former resident of Hookersville, she was a member of the Beulah Baptist Church.

Survivors include four sons, Ivan Boblett of Richwood, Morgan Morgan of Canvas and Ross and Eugene Morgan, both of Zanesville, Ohio; three daughters, Mrs. Irene Shaver of Camden on Gauley, Mrs. Anna Zimmerer of Pasadena, Texas, and Mrs. Violet Holman of Tipp City, Ohio; 18 grandchildren and 5 great-grandchildren.

The funeral will be held at 10 a.m. Wednesday in the Beulah Baptist Church with Rev. Joe Brown and Rev. C. R. Brooks in charge. Burial will be in the McQueen Cemetery at Hookersville.

The body will be taken from Waters Funeral Home in Summersville to the church one hour prior to the funeral.

(Edgar's wife)

mountain woman

lula mae morgan died the other day in texas. she was seventy-five and she died far from home. they brought her back to nicholas county and held services for her in the beulah baptist church and buried her among her people. my other paper, which records the comings and goings of nicholas and webster counties, emphasizes what people have known for some time, that weekly journalism is slipping, that it isn't the warm personal thing it used to be because of economics, and eight-hour-days, and time-and-a-half, and bowling, and so forth. but when i saw the merger space that was given to lula mae morgan i sighed that personal journalism could be so dead.

there was a story there in lula mae morgan's life, a story that tells something of mountain women and their strength we carried it in the other paper when it happened, because it did happen in our time. not much to it, maybe; then perhaps there is a lot. but one day lula mae morgan set out across the field to visit a neighbor on the hamlet of hookersville when she was attacked by, of all things, a large buck deer. he just charged out of a nearby wood and was upon the woman before she could do anything. he knocked her down on the ground and leaped upon her, cutting her with his pointed hooves. then backed up and came at her with his head down, bellowing and cutting her with every charge and thrust.

there was nothing the woman could do except protect her face with her hands, and try to crawl on her back away from the crazy beast. as she inched a bit from her attacker, she felt something under her hand. it felt strong and heavy and reassuring. she turned and grabbed hold of it - whatever it was - and rose up as the deer charged its last time, and she came down with it right on the head, between its awful horns, and dammed if she didn't scare the animal with that one blow. the deer backed about and then scooted off to the sanctity of the woods.

i have often wondered if the family might have kept that bone of a dead horse that god slipped under lula mae morgan when she was fighting that deer. that's what it was, the leg bone of a dead horse, and how it came there nobody knows. but there it was, and lula mae didn't have to be told why of what to do with it. it would be a fitting thing for the museum of the hills we have had many stalwart women like lula mae in our hills. and i just couldn't see them put her away without telling her story again.

. . . . . " west virginia hillbilly

319

Lena Florence Morgan

Lena Florence Morgan the fifth and youngest child of the Rev. Samuel and Edith Ramsey Morgan, was born December 17, 1896. She died April 27, 1927. She is buried at the Fairview Cemetery near Edray, W. Va. in an unmarked grave.

She first married Charles Wade Mitchell on 3-24-1917 who died January 1918 and is buried beside her.

Tombstone says 13

The two children of this marriage are:

(1) Ruby Pearl born March 10, 1915 and died March 15, 1930 of TB.

(2) Edith born March 10, 1917. On December 12, 1935 at Covington, Va. she was married to James M. Workman (born June 6, 1912) of Hillsboro, W. Va.

Their children:

(A) James Madison born November 22, 1938. Was married on September 1, 1959 to Judy Loury (born November 4, 1940). Their children are James Madison II (born July 9, 1960) and Elizabeth Ann (born February 14, 1965).

(B) Naomi Elizabeth born February 28, 1946. Graduated from Glenville State College and taught school in Berkley County, W. Va. On June 26, 1968 she was married to Denver Joseph Hollandsworth (born February 26, 1944) They live at Martinsburg, W. Va. Their two children are Hilda Lynn (born May 17, 1972) and Jill Marie (born September 17, 1974).

320

(C) Laurence Thomas born June 10, 1947. He was graduated from Glenville State College. He taught school in Maryland a few years and is now a teacher in the Pocahontas County High School. On February 13, 1965 he was married to Nora Lou McNeil (born May 8, 1949). They live at Hillsboro. Children: © Teresa Kay born August 4, 1965, ® Matthew Thomas born Nov 2, 197

Lena Morgan Mitchell's second marriage was to Forrest Ellis McKenney, son of J. V. and Lena Moore McKenney of Marlinton. Ellis was born May 25, 1900 and died in Wheeling on March 5, 1968. He was buried in the Indian Draft Cemetery near Marlinton. To this union were born two children.

(1) Clyde William born April 19, 1920. He was a career officer with the Government Forces. He is now stationed in Japan. He married and divorced Dorothy Door. Their children were Thomas and Lena Mae.

(2) Naomi Gladys born September 17, 1922. She married Patrick Anderson and they live in Warren, Ohio. Their three children are William, Patty, and Edward.

Following the death of his wife, Lena, Forrest Ellis McKenny arried Vicie Orr Wingler and they lived in Wheeling. She died January 1975 and is buried in the Indian Draft Cemetery near Marlinton.

Pocahontas County

West Virginia Writers' Project

RESEARCH IDENTIFICATION REPORT

Subject Chapter 8 - Section 8 Date Mar. 14, 1941

Research Worker Nelle Y. McLaughlin Date Research Taken Mar. 7, 1941

Typist Nelle Y. McLaughlin Date Typed Mar. 13, 1941

Source Old records on file in County Clerk's office. Date Filed

Report of one of the commissioners appointed by the Court at the July Term of court 1861, to re-district the County. J. M. Lightner, Commr.

DAVID BRIGHT.

Owing to numerous family affiliations in our county, some particulars in regard to the Bright connexion in Greenbrier are interesting to our readers.

David Bright came from Pennsylvania and was one of the pioneers of upper Greenbrier, and located on place now occupied by Andrew Brinkley and sons near Frankford. David's wife was a Miss Grant, also of Pennsylvania. Their sons were Michael, Jesse, David and George. There were two daughters, one of whom was named Mary.

Jesse Bright married Margaret Hamptenstall, and settled on the homestead and reared the family that has so many relations in Pocahontas County. His daughter Margaret was married to Joseph Callison, and went to Illinois. Mary Bright was married to Israel Callison, lived awhile in Pocahontas, then went to Illinois; and was still living at last accounts (in 1897.)

Rachel Bright became the wife of the late Joseph Levisay, near Frankford. Her son, G. W. Levisay, married Maggie Beard, youngest daughter of the late Josiah Beard of Locust, and located at Frankford, where he farms and merchandises. Josephine Levisay became Mrs Preston Clark of the Levels. Mary Levisay became Mrs F. I. Bell, and lives near Savannah Mills. Samuel Brown Levisay was one of the victims of the fearful boiler explosion that occurred in 1896 near Frankford. Jesse A., Letitia, Louella, and Elizabeth are the names of Mrs Levisay's other children.

Digitized by Google

Jesse Bright, Junior, married Margaret Pinnell and resides in Lewisburg.

Margaret Bright, daughter of Jesse Bright, Senior, became the wife of the late John Levisay, who settled near Frankford, where he lately died. Her eldest daughter, Mary Margaret, is the wife of Rev D. S. Sydenstricker, D. D., the pastor of the Oak Grove Presbyterian Church. Sabina Levisay was married to John Rodgers, and moved to Gallipolis, Ohio. Jesse Levisay married Miss Addie Johnson and migrated to Illinois. Cornelia Levisay was married to W. Henry Wallace, and lives on Sinking Creek. John Brown Levisay married Minnie Johnson and resides on a portton of the old homestead. Lillian Levisay was married to Dr James A. Larue and now resides at Pulaski, Tenn. James W., Virginia, and Louisa Levisay live on the homestead.

Francis Bright was married to James Ludington and went to Illinois.

Samuel Bright married Miss Mary Pollock.

Julia Bright was married to Allan S. Levisay, and lived near Frankford. Mr and Mrs Levisay have for a few years lived near Marlinton with their daughter, Mrs Levi Gay. Their son John Granville Levisay married Emma Robinson and lives near Frankford.

David Bright married Elizabeth Price.

Sarah Bright married William Cassidy and settled in Fayette County.

George Bright married Harriet Bowen and moved to Missouri. His second wife was a Miss Steenberger of Missouri.

Digitized by Google

Abram Bright married Margaret Bowen. Abram's second wife was a lady from Richmond, Va. His third wife was Miss Nickel, of Monroe, and fourth was Miss Swisher, now of Gallipolis, Ohio.

The ladies that were the first wives of George and Abram Bright just mentioned were sisters, and daughters of James Bowen, who lived at the mouth of Spring Creek. Mr Bowen was a person of great business ability and promoted a number of useful industrial enterprises. He built a grist mill, carding machine, saw mill, and oil mill on the property now held by Newton Mann.

This about exhausts all the information in the compiler's possession that illustrates the relationship these good people sustain to the citizenship of our county.

The writer feelingly cherishes the memory of Jesse Bright, Senior, about whose large and interesting family these biographic notes have been prepared. The last time he ever saw this venerable man was on a Sabbath morning in the spring of 1857, on the way to church. As I was passing from Mr John Levisay's to Frankford, near where the cemetery now is, I heard a singular noise, and on turning around saw that someone's horse had stumbled and thrown the rider. On going back it was found to be Mr Jesse Bright. In the meantime his daughter, Mrs Margaret Levisay, with her husband and two daughters, Mary and Jennie, had come up with him. Mr Bright was led to a fence corner where he remained a little while, apparently not much hurt, but thought it best to return home. It is said he never felt the same after the contusion he suffered from the falling of his faithful old grey horse that had carried him so safely and pleasantly for many years. From the noise made the animal fell heavily, and the wonder is the rider escaped instant death.

Digitized by Google

The compiler of this sketch is mainly indebted to Mr Washington Levisay for the information given here, taken from memory or gathered by him from the reminiscences of elderly friends.

SAMUEL PRICE.

What is relied upon as authentic tradition is to the effect that the progenitor of the Price relationship in Greenbrier. Botetourt, Craig, Monroe, and Pocahontas counties was one Samuel Price, who was among the earlier settlers of Augusta County in the vicinity of New Hope. He was it is believed a native of Wales but had lived in Maryland before coming to Virginia. So far as known his family consisted of three sons, Thomas, Jacob, and Samuel. All three were Revolutionary soldiers and Indian fighters.

Samuel Price, Junior, settled in Greenbrier County, near Savanna Mills, on preempted lands, a part of which is now in the possession of Washington Price, a descendant of the fourth remove. Samuel Price's first wife was Margaret Black, of Albemarle County, and her childred were Samuel (third), William, Jacob, James, Sally, who became Mrs Michael Bright; Mrs Thomas Beard and Mrs Jacob Walkup. The names of Mrs Beard and Mrs Walkup are not known to the compiler. The second marriage of Samuel Price, Jr.,

Digitized by Google

around. Seeing no sign they went to the house, placed their guns just outside the door, and finding a bed within, lay down and fell asleep. Arthur dreamed of being bitten by a rattlesnake, sprang out of bed and awakened Moore. The dog was growling at Indians stealing toward the house. The men seized their guns and escaped, leaving the dog shut up in the house. The dog soon came to them, however. The Indians fired the building, cut a pair of moccasins from a dressed deer skin belonging to old "Ben," and amused themselves by striping the feathers from two live roosters to see their antics.

When they reported to Jacob Warwick about the affair, he told them that whenever he dreamed of wild turkeys he was sure of having trouble with Indians very soon.

DAVID GIBSON.

David Gibson, a pioneer of Pocahontas county, and progenitor of the Gibson connexion in our county, came from Augusta county, near Waynesboro, Virginia, about 1770. He located near Gibson's Knob, two miles south of Hillsboro, now in possession of Isaac McNeel. He reared a large family, but few of their names are known to the writer. One of his sons, John, moved to Indiana, where his descendants now live; a daughter, Mary, died in youth; Sally married Sampson Ochiltree and lived near Buckeye, where Henry Lightner now lives; Elizabeth married Joseph Buckley and lived on the neighboring farm, now owned by Levi Gay; Jennie married a Mr Blake.

Digitized by Google

David Gibson, another son, located on the Old Field Fork of Elk about 1823, and began life in the woods. The Hannah brothers had preceded him a year or two. David Gibson's wife, Mary, after whom Mary's Chapel is named (a neat house of worship on Elk,) was a daughter of the late William Sharp, near Edray. Her mother was Elizabeth Waddell, daughter of Alexander Waddell, a pioneer settler near Millpoint, the place now occupied by Joseph Smith and others.

The Gibson family on Elk consisted of five sons and three daughters. William, the oldest, lived on Elk. His wife was Polly Gay, daughter of the late Samuel M. Gay, near Marlinton; John married Margaret Townsend, near Driftwood; David, a well-known physician, married Elizabeth Stalnaker, daughter of Warwick Stalnaker, of Randolph; James Gibson married Jennie Friel, daughter of John Friel, who was killed in battle on Alleghany Mountain, December, 1861; Jacob Gibson married a Miss Wamsley of Randolph, and was killed during the war near Huttonsville in a skirmish with Jenkin's Cavalry; David Gibson's daughter, Elizabeth became the wife of James McClure, near Edray; Mary married Rankin Poage, at Edray; Nancy became the wife of Samuel M. Gay, on the Indian Draft.

Mr Gibson built up a comfortable home, in which he was assisted by his industrious sons and daughters. The habits of thrift learned from their parents have been successfully kept up, and prosperity attends them in their affairs, and all have comfortable homes and are prospering. His home was open to the stranger that might come along. His confidences were sometimes abused and imposition practiced upon him, but that made no difference with his treatment of others. For years his home was at the service of the preachers, and thus most of the preaching on Upper Elk was at his house. It was a great undertaking to locate in the unbroken forest and build up a home and rear the family these worthy people succeeded so well in accomplishing. All such should be remembered and their services gratefully appreciated, and the story of their lives told for the instruction and encouragement of the generations following. The righteous, the honest and industrious should be held in lasting remembrance.

Digitized by Google

VALENTINE CACKLEY.

During the last century but few names have been more familiarly known in our county, before and since the organization, than the Cackleys. The ancestors of this relationship were Valentine Cackley, Senior, and Mary Frye, his wife, from the lower Valley not far from Winchester, at Capon Springs. They located at Millpoint about 1778. These worthy people were of German descent. The original name was Keckly, and came to be spelled Cackley by the way it was pronounced. Their sons were Levi, William, Joseph, Valentine, Benjamin, and their daughters were Alice, Mary, Anne, and Rebecca—six sons and four daughters.

Alice, the eldest daughter, became the wife of the daughter of the late J. Harvey Curry, of Dunmore, and lives on Douthard's Creek, near Driscol. Their family numbers seven daughters and two sons: Clara, now Mrs Henry Overholt; Docia, now Mrs Warren; Effie, Mrs J. E. Campbell, of Covington; Lizzie, Mrs Mack Ervine; Bertha, Lucy, and Pearl- Gilbert Sharp is at home, a well known machinist. Albert Sharp resides at Marlinton, where he is a well known citizen, and has performed an active part in the construction of improvements.

Digitized by Google

Thus far we have been able to illustrate to some extent the history of John Sharp, the settler. As was intimated, the great motive that prompted his coming to the head of Knapps Creek was to get land. In this he was successful. His landed possessions reached from the Gibson farm, near Frost, up the West Branch to Armnius Bussard's, near Glade Hill. He had property in the Hills, on Thorny Creek, and on Buffalo Mountain beyond Greenbank, and the most of these lands yet in the possession of his descendants.

He was small in person, blue eyes, light hair, and of florid complexion. He was constantly employed. Mrs Sharp was quiet in all her ways, very diligent in her duties, and patiently met and endured the toils and inconveniences of living in the woods. These persons were pious, and some of the first religious meetings ever held in the vicinity of Frost were at their house.

DAVID HANNAH.

This paper is prepared to pay a tribute to the memory of a pioneer citizen of our county, the late David Hannah, of the Old Field Branch of Elk. He was a son of David Hannah, Senior, who was the progenitor of the Hannah Family, one of the oldest in Pocahontas. David Hannah, Senior, was a native of Ireland. He married a Miss Gibson, who was reared in Augusta County, and settled at the mouth of Locust Creek soon after the Revolutionary war. He possessed some practical knowledge of medicine of the botanical school, and did a good deal of practice in frontier times. He was probably the first person that ever practiced physic in lower Pocahontas. Dr and Mrs Elizabeth Hannah were the parents of six daughters and four sons.

Digitized by Google

Ann became Mrs Joseph Oldham and Lucinda married William Oldham. Their homes were near the source of Locust Creek. Mary Hannah was married to John Mollohan, and lived in what is now Webster County. Elizabeth Hannah became Mrs William Bennett, and lived in Harrison County. Jennie Hannah was married to the late Samuel Whiting, on Droop Mountain, where the Whiting family now lives. Her son Ebenezer married Sallie McMillion and lived on the Whiting homestead. Nancy Hannah became the wife of James Cochran, and lived near the Greenbrier border.

William Hannah and John Hannah died in youth.

Joseph Hannah married Elizabeth Burnsides, on Greenbrier River, and settled on Elk, where his son, John Hannah, lately lived, over eighty years of age.

David Hannah, Junior, the subject of this article, married Margaret Burnsides, on the Greenbrier, east of

Digitized by Google

Hillsboro, a daughter of John Burnsides and his wife, Mary Walker, of Augusta Couty. Her family and the family of General J. A. Walker, of Wytheville, Va., are closely related. He was one of the last commanders of the Stonewall Brigade. He settled on Elk, and reared a large family of worthy sons and daughters.

Isabella Hannah was married to the late John Varner, and settled at Split Rock, a few miles down Elk, and built up a good home with their industry and economy. Their children were Margaret, now Mrs Clinton Slanker; David Varner, a Confederate soldier killed in war; Mary Varner, afterwards Mrs Robert Wilson, and lived near Lexington, Va. John Varner and Samuel Varner, at Linwood; Susan Varner, now Mrs William Snyder, in Iowa; William Varner, at Old Field branch; Alice Varner became Mrs John Stewart, near Valley Head; Jennie Varner was married to Hamilton Snyder, and located in Taylor County, Iowa; Benjamin Varner married Ella Moore, of Knapps Creek, lived awhile at the Split Rock homestead, and finally moved to Ohio where he now resides.

Elizabeth Hannah was married to Marinus J. VanReenan, and settled in Iowa. Mr VanReenan was a native of Holland, His father's family was attached to a band of Holland emigrants, who were induced to colonize on Laurel Run in 1842, by the Rev John Schemerhorn, of New York. The highlands of Pocahontas were not congenial to persons from a populous Holland city in the Netherlands, and after grievous privations the colony disbanded. Some went west; others remained in Pocahontas, and are excellent people. The Stultings came in this band also. The names of Elizabeth VanReenan's children are David, Robert, and Mary.

Digitized by Google

John Burnsides Hannah married Margaret McClure, and located on part of the "Old Field" homestead, and has lately died. The following particulars are given in reference to their children: Mary is now Mrs John Beverage, near Clover Lick; Samuel David married Amanda Moore, and settled on the Hogsett place; Wallace died while young; William Boude, whose wife was Miss Birdie Dilley; John Ellis married Malinda Catherine Sharp, and settled on the homestead; Nancy was married to Fletcher Dilley, and lives near West Union; Ivie Viola; Edgar Russell, and Lena Mary died while young.

David Hannah, the third of the ancestral name, was first married to Rebecca Moore, daughter of the late Isaac Moore, of Edray. Second marriage to Margaret Jane McClure, daughter of Arthur McClure of Lower Pocahontas, and settled in Iowa; thence moved to Missouri. The names of his children were James, Joseph, Mary, Margaret, and Julia.

Robert Hannah married Jennie Burk and settled in Iowa. John is the name of the only one of his children known to the writer.

William Hannah, one of the twins born to Mr and Mrs David Hannah of Pioneer memory, married Catherine Rhinehart of Randolph County, and settled on Pine Flat, head of Swago. William's family were three sons and a daughter. James married Maggie Auldridge, a daughter of Thomas Auldridge, and lives near the head of Dry Creek. Eugenius married Jennie

Digitized by Google

Kellison, and lives near Poage's Lane. Margaret is Mrs Kenny Kinnison, on Swago. Burleigh married Miss Lula Perry, on the Greenbrier.

Joseph Hannah, the other twin son of the pioneer, married Elizabeth Cool, daughter of John Cool, of Webster Countyt and lives in that county.

The writer remembers the personality of the venerable pioneer very vividly. In early youth I saw him frequently, and he was very interesting to me from the fact Mr Hanna had been off to the war of 1812. To me an old soldier seemed more than human. He had an interesting way of relating his adventures, and was fond of talking about the war. He was at his best when telling how he felt when aroused one morning before day to get ready for an attack, as the British were reported as coming. He arose and put on his accoutrements quickly as possible, and took his place in the ranks and moved off to fight. His hat kept falling off as he marched until it became so troublesome that he was determined to find out the reason why it would not stay on his head. It had never been so hard to keep on before because it was a good fit. When the troops halted he examined his head and found the hairs were all on end, stiff as bristles, and were pushing the hat off as fast as he could put it on. The hair kept stiff until the order was given to return to camp, when it all became limber enough, and the hat was no more trouble. He found out afterwards that the whole scheme was to try the new soldiers to find out how they would conduct themselves when ordered into battle. This was near Norfolk.

Digitized by Google

The story, however, he seemed the most fond of telling was about his experience in the hospital tent. Before his term of service had expired he was prostrated by fever and given up as a critical case, and very strict orders were given not to let him have a drop of anything cool to drink. He noticed that there was whiskey and water on the table for the nurse's use, and he determined to have some at all hazards. The attendant came to him and found the young soldier so weak and stupid that he seemed to know nothing, and was unable to lift even his hand. So the hospital man thought there would be no risk to run were he to leave the bottle and pitcher on the table while he would step out and get some fresh air. Soon as his back was turned the sick soldier crawled to the table, mixed the liquor and water, and drank till he could drink no more and crawled back to his bunk, and when the nurse returned he was surprised to find his patient apparently asleep and the skin showing a tendency to moisture. Finally the sweat broke, and when the doctor came to look at him, and seemed much pleased with the change in the patients condition.

"You were mighty near gone, old fellow, and if we had not kept cold water away from you, where would you be now?"

The soldier kept his secret, and as he was beginning to get stronger the liquor was kept our of sight. He thought he would have mended much more rapidly if things had been left on the table as before.

The old soldier worked hard in building up his home and the privations he and his family had to endure would seem unbearable now. He was kind and hospitable to a fault, ready to share the last he had with the visitor that might desire shelter and food. He was much esteemed by all of his acquaintances.

Digitized by Google

Finally the end came. One of the prettiest places near his home was selected and they placed him to sleep under the green sod that his own hands had helped to clear away.

JOSEPH HANNAH.

Among the earliest settlers of the Elk region was Joseph Hannah, a son of David Hannah, who lived at the mouth of Locust Creek. He married Elizabeth Burnsides and early in the century settled on the "Old Field Fork of Elk."

His home was on Mill Run near where William Hannah, a grandson, now lives. This immediate vicinity seems to have been a place of more than ordinary importance in prehistoric times. One of the most frequented Indian trails seems to have been from Clove, Lick up the Creek to the Thomas Spring; thence over the mountain, crossing at the notch near Clark Rider's farm; thence down by James Gibson's to Elk. Here is the "Magic Circle," mentioned elsewhere in this book. Nearly ⅛ mile further down was the encampment where about two acres of land had been denuded of trees for camp fires, and this was the "old field" that gave this branch of Elk its name; and was the first piece of ground planted by Joseph Hannah.

Digitized by Google

only one that killed a deer. On his return he would chaff his younger associates by telling all he met on the way that the young men had taken him along to kill their meat for them.

He retained remarkable bodily vigor to the age of four score and over; and his mental faculties were unimpaired to the last. Not many days before his final illness that closed his life, he felt it his duty to see the county surveyor on important business—as he believed it to be—and should be attended to without delay. He went from his home on Locust Creek to Mr Baxter's near Edray, about twenty miles distant, and returned —a cold, raw day it was, too. He overtaxed his endurance by the ride. He soon became sick, and peacefully passed from his long and useful life.

In his life was exemplified the highest type of the citizen—a pious, intelligent cultivator of the soil—the occupation for which the Creator saw fit in his wisdom to create the first man. It is the occupation now that feeds the world, and whatever hinders, depresses, or retards the farmers prosperity, threatens the worst evils that can befall our humanity.

DAVID JAMES.

David James, Senior, was one of the first settlers of the Droop neighborhood, in Lower Pocahontas. He was from Norfolk, Virginia. It is believed he came here soon after the Revolution, and located for awhile near the head of Trump Run, on property now owned by Richard Callison. He then lived some years at the

Digitized by Google

Rocky Turn, now known as the Irvine Place, where he built a mill. One of the stones is yet to be seen just below the road near where the mill stood.

From the Irvine place he moved on lands now occupied by George Cochran. The house is still standing and furnishes a correct idea of the kind of houses the pioneers lived in. It was here he passed the latter years of his life, and passed away at the age of 104 years. The name and parentage of his wife are not remembered. His family consisted of three daughters and two sons: Nellie, Martha, Sally, David and John.

Nellie James was married to Thomas Cochran, second wife, and lived near Marvin.

Martha was married to John Salisbury, and lived on Trump Run, and finally went west. This John Salisbury was a son of William Salisbury, a native of England, who opened the Salisbury settlement on Trump Run. William Salisbury's wife Mary was a native of Scotland. He lived to the age of 104 years, and is to be remembered as one of the pioneers of lower Pocahontas.

Sally became Mrs John Cutlip, who opened up an improvement on Droop Mountain, now in possession of the Renicks. Her children were David, Abram, John, George, Martha, and Elizabeth. The latter married David Kinnison and went to the west.

David James, Junior, married Catherine Parks and settled on Droop Mountain. They were the parents of these children: Mordecai, Jennie, Samuel, Elizabeth, John, Rebecca, Martha, and Mary.

Mordecai married Martha Tharp and went west.

Digitized by Google

The Tharps lived on the Joshua Kee place, near Marlinton.

Jennie became Mrs Jesse Cochran. Her marriage was attended by very romantic incidents, illustrating the fact that all may be well that ends well.

Samuel married Elizabeth Ewing, daughter of William Ewing, who lived on the Greenbrier, where Joseph Perkins now resides, and went west. William Ewing excelled as a maker of wooden mouldboards for plows, and had all he could do to meet the demand.

John married Nellie Cochran.

Rebecca became Mrs Emanual Barrett.

John James married Nellie, daughter of Thomas Cochran the pioneer, and settled on Droop, where Lincoln Cochran now lives, but finally went west. Their family consisted of three daughters and three sons: Jane, Eliza, Kate, David, William, and John.

Thus with the assistance of the venerable John Cochran, probably the oldest man living on the Pocahontas and Greenbrier border in 1897, and George Cochran, his relative and neighbor, the writer has been able to give something in illustrating the James family history. This paper will be concluded by recalling the fact that David James, Junior, lived to the age of 106 years, about the greatest age attained by any one of our Pocahontas citizens, concerning whom we have any authentic information. The cottage home still stands whence he departed for the unseen world, and his grave will be an object of interest in our local annals and should be carefully marked so as not to be forgotten.

Digitized by Google

David Cochran, a son of Thomas Cochran, by his second marriage with Nellie James, deserves mention from the fact that he was a veteran of the war of 1812. He had for his mess mates in the army William Salisbury, Jr., John McNeil, (known as Little John), and John R. Flemmens. He was in the affair at Craney Island, near Norfolk. While it is not certain, yet it is believed he served a tour under General Harrison in the west, as he frequently spoke of him. It is probable that he was in the battle of Tippecanoe. John Cochran; in 1898, was the only surviving member of the old soldier's family. He was 92 years of age November 2d of that year.

David Cochran, the veteran, suffered grievously the last three or four years of his life. He was treated by Mrs Diddle of Monroe County, for three years. She undertook to cure the case for forty dollars. Several visits were made. She was at his bedside when he died of hemorhage, caused by the cancer, in October 1831.

John Cochran has a vivid recollection of the Regimental Muster at Huntersville, in May, 1834. On returning from muster rather late in the evening, persons were racing their horses in a furious charge against imaginary British on the Cummings Creek road, two miles from Huntersville. While not in the charge, Isaac Jordan's horse seemed to smell something of the make-believe battle, reared and plunged, throwing his rider and severely fracturing his thigh.

William Gibson, merchant and hotel keeper at Huntersville was sent for. After some delay, means were contrived to carry the injured and suffering man back to Huntersville, where they arrived after dark. Squire Gibson—though not a physician—took charge of the case, reduced the fracture and kept the patient at his house for three months. John Cochran was employed to nurse him, and staid by him all the while until he could be brought home.

Digitized by Google

John Cochran in his prime was a person of uncommon agility and muscular power. He was jovial in disposition and had a good word for everybody, and yet it was his misfortune to be in one of the fiercest personal combats that ever occurred in his neighborhood. With remarkable magnamity his opponent confessed himself in the fault, and ever after there was no more fighting for John Cochran. Trouble quit looking for him after that.

George Cochran lives in the old James house. He was a faithful Confederate soldier, and stands up for the Lost Cause with a fluent vim that is refreshing.

JOHN BURGESS.

Concurrently with the past century the name Burgess has been a familiar one in lower and middle Pocahontas. The progenitor of this family was John Burgess, Senior, a native of Ireland. He was a weaver by occupation, and settled near Albany, New York, where he diligently plied his vocation, some years previous to the Revolution. The name of his wife or her family is not remembered. There were two sons and four daughters.

Digitized by Google

deeply impressed upon many characters. Though the name has well nigh ceased to be heard among us, yet the writer is pleased to believe that the spirit of James Tallman, the early settler, is yet moving about among scores of our families.

DAVID L. RUCKMAN.

Fifty years ago one of the most active men in lower Pocahontas was David Little Ruckman, Constable of the Levels District. He was tall and wiry in person, quick and nervous in his movements, and usually rode in a rapid trot. He always meant business, and when he went to collect a debt the money or property had to be in evidence. Were an arrest to be made he nearly always found the person that was wanted. His home was in the cove near Marvin, and is now occupied by his grandson, Mathews Ruckman.

Full particulars of his ancestry are given in another chapter. David L. Ruckman was born on Back creek. He had three brothers who lived to be grown. Samuel Ruckman, whose son Colonel David V. Ruckman is widely known in our county. John Ruckman went to Ohio. James Ruckman settled in Illinois. He had also these sisters: Fannie, who married John Gum. She was the mother of Mrs Samuel Harper, on Knapps Creek, and Mrs Martha Ginger, whose son George W. Ginger now resides in Huntersville, the village blacksmith. Mr Ginger, her husband, was killed during the war. Mary Ann Ruckman went with her brother John to Ohio.

Digitized by Google

David L. Ruckman came to Pocahontas in 1832 and located at the place already pointed out. He married Priscilla Wade, daughter of Otho Wade of Highland. She was a very superior person in all the relations of life. She died in 1860. Her husband died in 1841, thirteen years after their removal to Pocahontas from their home in lower Highland.

Charles Ruckman, their eldest son, was born in Highland County. He was devoted to books and became one of the best scholars of his time. He taught school and transacted business for his father. He married Maggie Griffin, daughter of Jonathan Griffin, on Stony Creek. In the latter years of his life he became a rheumatic invalid, but in spite of pain and suffering tried to be useful to the last. He moved to Ohio, and was survived by a son and daughter, Julia Ann and Leonidas.

The second son Samuel, died at the age of 15 years.

The third son was John Wade, lately living on the old homestead near Marvin. He was born in Highland, 1824, and was eight years old when the family moved to this county. He married Margaret Ann Moore. Their son Mathews married Margaret Hogsett, daughter of Josiah T. Hogsett, and lives at the homestead. Many years since Colonel Ruckman lost his hearing. Some time before his death one of his eyes was seriously affected. Before he was overtaken by these afflictions none seemed to have better prospects for wealth and advancement and social prominence.

James Watts Ruckman was another member of David L. Ruckman's family. He first married Caroline

Digitized by Google

Bruffey, daughter of Patrick Bruffey, near Greenbank. By this marriage there was one son, William Wallace Ruckman, who now resides near Millpoint, whose wife was Miss Lizzie Patton. James W. Ruckman's second wife was Caroline Arbogast, near Greenbank. Her sons were Renick and Otho Ruckman. Otho lives near Buffalo Mountain, beyond Greenbank. Renick Ruckman is a prosperous citizen on the homestead. Her daughter, Nancy Priscilla Ruckman, is now Mrs Winfield Slaven, near Millpoint.

In the war between the States James W. Ruckman was a Confederate soldier, and belonged to Captain W. L. McNeel's company. While on a scout near Edray in 1864, he was captured and sent to Fort Deleware. Thence he was sent to Richmond for exchange, and died before leaving the city.

Otho Wade Ruckman first married a Miss McClung, of Nicholas County. Her daughter became the second wife of Levi Waugh, near Edray. His second wife was Mary Frances Twyman, near Edray.

Clarissa Ruckman, eldest daughter of David L. Ruckman, married Peter Overholt, and is now dead.

Mary Ruckman married Jacob Cackley, whom she survives, and she resides on Stamping Creek with her nephew Wallace.

Catherine Ruckman married Peter McNeel. She is dead, but is survived by her daughter, Mrs John S. Moore.

David Ruckman, Junior, the youngest of David L. Ruckman's sons, was a Confederate soldier. He first belonged to Captain Smith's command in Greenbrier

Digitized by Google

County. For a good while his company was assigned to General Loring's body guard. Finally it was attached to a cavalry battallion and ordered to Tennessee. He was mortally wounded near Morristown, Tennesse, and died in a few days thereafter.

Thus closes the narrative for the present. Characters have passed under our notice that illustrate what may be achieved by persons who diligently make use of their opportunities. These persons were patriotic, industrious, and endowed with good minds, and have left their impress upon their community that makes for good morals, conservative citizenship, and intellectual improvement.

ISAIAH CURRY.

Not long after the war of 1812 Isaiah Curry, a native of Rockbridge County, located on Back Alleghany, at the place now owned by Zechariah Swink. Mrs Curry was Abigail Hall of Virginia. These worthy persons are the ancestors of the Curry relationship on Back Mountain. Late in life they moved to Lewis County. Their family consisted of four sons and four daughters: William, James, John, Robert, Sally, Elizabeth, Anna, and Margaret.

William Curry was a stone mason, and a very swift workman. His wife was Nancy Lytton, of Rockbridge, and after his marriage they settled in Lewis County,

James, when about grown, was killed by a falling tree while browsing cattle near home. Robert Curry

Digitized by Google

DIANA SAUNDERS.

Soon after the war of 1812 there came to our county one of the most interesting and eccentric personalities that our older people remember anything about, Mrs Diana Saunders, late of Rocky Point on Dry Branch of Swago. She was the widowed mother of four children, Anna, Eleanor, Cyrus, and Isaac. Her cabin home was built near the head springs of Dry Branch, almost in speaking distance of the Rocky Point schoolhouse, and just below.

Cyrus Saunders lived in Madison County, Va., and was a merchant and a citizen of prominence.

Isaac Saunders, upon attaining his majority, went to Fayette County, married, and settled on the banks of New River not far from the Hawk's nest. His sister Anna made her home with him for a time, and then became Mrs Ewing of Fayette County.

Eleanor Saunders was married to Barnett Adkisson, from Madison County, and lived on Spruce Flat on the head of Swago, on the place now occupied by James Adkisson. In reference to her children we have in hand the following particulars, communicated by John Adkisson.

Catherine first became wife of William Tyler, from Madison County, and then Mrs Jacob Weiford, near Millpoint.

William Adkisson, whose wife was Martha Jones, from Madison County, lived on Spruce Flat.

Abel Adkisson, whose first wife was Susannah,

Digitized by Google

daughter of the late Daniel Adkisson, and whose second wife was Frances Hughes, lived on the head of Swago, where his son Oliver Blake now lives.

Daniel Adkisson married Mary Holmes of Madison County, and settled on Spruce Flats.

Isaac Adkisson married Martha Young, and lived at the "Young Place" on Rich Mountain.

Frances Adkisson first became Mrs James W. Silvey and lived at the head of Swago. She was afterwards married to the late Joseph Rodgers, and lives near Millpoint.

Nancy married Benjamin Taylor of Nicholas County and settled on New River. He was a hatter by occupation.

Martha Jane Adkisson married James Arthur, of Webster County, and went to the western part of the State.

Lucinda Adkisson, the youngest of Eleanor's daughters, was married to Rev Joshua Buckley, and lived at Buckeye. Some reference to her family is made in other sketches.

But few persons have left their impress upon the writer's memory more vividly than Mrs Diana Saunders. As to her personality, she had been formed in "Nature's choicest mould" and in her youth must have been the peer of Edgar Allen Poe's "rare and radiant maiden." The writer recalls one or more of her granddaughters as among the most perfect models of feminine form and feature that he has observed anywhere.

From the way Granny Saunders used to spean of

Digitized by Google

Jim Madison, Jim Monroe, and Tom Jefferson, and wonder how such finicky, limber-jointed, red headed, fiddling and dancing customers had ever been made Presidents of our United Statos, it is inferred that her blooming youth must have been passed in Orange and Albermarle atmosphere.

The writer was frequently told by his lamented mother that when he was an infant about six weeks old he had the whooping cough so severely that he was given up to die. As a last resort Granny Saunders was sent for in all haste, and when she arrived the baby was to all appearances cold and dead. The doctress ordered a tub of hot water, plouted the baby in, soaked him awhile and gave him a good rubbing. She then called for a razor and a goose quill, scarified the little body between the shoulders, inserted the quill and gave him a blowing up until the infant began to blow for himself. He came to and recovered, and has been blowing seventy years on his own hook, figuratively speaking. There have been times in his life when the writer has felt rather regretfully that Granny Saunders managed her case so well as to keep him from dying at that safe time. Now, however, he feels thankful to God for what she was able to do. He deems it a most wonderful privilege to have lived the life the Supreme Being has allotted to him. Though this life has been humble and obscure, full of mistakes and blunders, still, blessed be His Holy name, for life and its wonderful hopes for the hereafter, when the Lord comes.

It would be hard to exaggerate the useful services performed by Mrs Saunders for a half century or more, when there was no resident physician nearer than the Warm Springs or Lewisburg. For years and years her time was virtually spent in the homes of the suffering. Stormy nights, swollen, raging mountain streams and torrents were braved by this heroic woman to be with the sick in their distress.

Digitized by Google

While it is true the most of her services were rendered in scenes over which the thickest veil of privacy should be ever drawn, yet it may not be out of good form to say that she never lost her self possession. The patient might be to all appearances in extremis, with less than a step between her and death in the throes of of maternity, all present convulsed with grief and apprehension except Granny Saunders. She would dip her pipe in the ashes, ejaculate prayers along with the puffs of smoke, and sit down by the patient: "Hold on old girl, we can't spare you yet; pick your flint and try it again. I have been praying for you, and the good Lord Almighty never goes back on his word to old Granny Saunders."

In the course of an hour or so, Granny Saunders looks up the "old man." When she finds him she opens her arms as if to embrace him. He draws back exclaiming, "Oh Granny, don't do that!" "Well, you ugly beast, if you won't let me kiss you, come in and see what a pretty thing the good Lord has sent your old woman. How it could be so pretty no one could tell without seeing the mother!"

One of the most praiseworthy traits in the character of this grand woman was her abhorrence of "doggity ways," as she would tersely put it. She was greatly worried by the way a young man seemed to be treating a girl in whom she felt a motherly interest. Appearances seemed to indicate that the "young rascal of a puppy" had plucked the the rose, but left the thorn with her heartbroken young friend; or in other words had fooled her upon a promise of marriage.

Digitized by Google

One day, it seems, the young man met her in the road, and he said: "Granny Saunders, if you do not quit talking about me as I hear of you doing, I shall have to sue you for slander."

The old lady cleared her decks for action, rolled up her sleeves and shook her fist under his nose. "I am ready for you here, at the court house, or anywhere else, outside the bottomless pit. There is where pups like you are bound to go, so I will not promise to have anything to do with you there. I cannot blame a Beaver Dam evening wolf for coming over here and stealing a lamb, for it is built that way, and can't know any better, but when I see a customer like you, with good looks, good natural sense and belonging to a decent family, guilty of things the Old Boy would be above doing, I must tell you, I do say I must tell you the dirtiest, yellow, egg-sucking dog in all Pocahontas is an angel to what you are. If the devil knows you as I do, and thinks of you as I do, he will put you on one of his hottest gridirons all by yourself, as not fit company for any other lost soul."

Granny's words seem to have been "winged ones." The suit was never brought for slander, he mended his ways, looked through his Bible and found a verse in Paul's writings that convinced him that the easiest way out of the tangle would be to marry as he had promised.

Digitized by Google

If there could have been kept a faithful record of all her doings and sayings it would have made a book by itself, nothing like it in extant literature. She had an entertaining story of the time the troops were on the march to Yorktown, and about Washington stopping at the yard fence and calling for water. Her mother sent her out with bucket and gourd, fresh from the well, and watered tho thirsty general and staff attendants. "They took their water, and I tell you they all drank a few, and then the grandees rode away with high heads and stiff upper lips, looking at me as if they thought it was about all that I was fit for, to handle the water gourd for their pleasure."

She had many stories that thrilled the little folks. One was about a child being born in 1775 that only lived a few minutes. Before it died it said just as plainly as could be spoken by a grown person:

"A warm winter and a cold spring,
A bloody summer and a new king!"

One of her most popular lullabys had this refrain:

"Sleep all day and cry all night,
Whippoorwill, whippoorwill."

Persons yet living remember the reply she once made to the salutation, "Well, Granny, how are you to day?"

"Poorly enough, to tell you truth. O dear, I am just here and that is all. I have pains in my face, pains in my ears, pains in the top of my head, at the back of my neck, between my shoulders, in my arms, in my breast, in my body, in my knees, in my ankles, in both my big toes." Then pausing a moment as if trying to think of more places for pains, she would raise her eyes toward heaven and devoutly exclaim, "But praise the Lord, bless His Holy Name, I have a good appetite!"

Digitized by Google

Late in the fifties or early in the sixties, she went to make her home with Isaac and Anna, on New River, where she died fifteen or twenty years ago, aged about a hundred and three years as most of her acquaintances believe. Dear old friend, the Creator has not sent many like her to our part of the world as yet.

LANTY LOCKRIDGE.

One of the most widely known of Pocahontas families in former years was that of the ancestor of the Lockridge relationship, at Driscol, four miles east of Huntersville. It was a place of resort for visiting lawyers to and from Huntersville on public occasions. Pleasant mention is made of the kind treatment received and of the nice and bountiful table comforts enjoyed in the memoir of the late Howe Peyton, and in some published reminiscences of George Mayse, of the Warm Springs.

Lancelot (Lanty) Lockridge, the progenitor of the name in our county, came from the Lower Bull Pasture, in Highland county, about four miles up the river from Williamsville, Bath county. Mrs Lockridge was Elizabeth Benson, of the same vi-

Digitized by Google

of the deep were heave

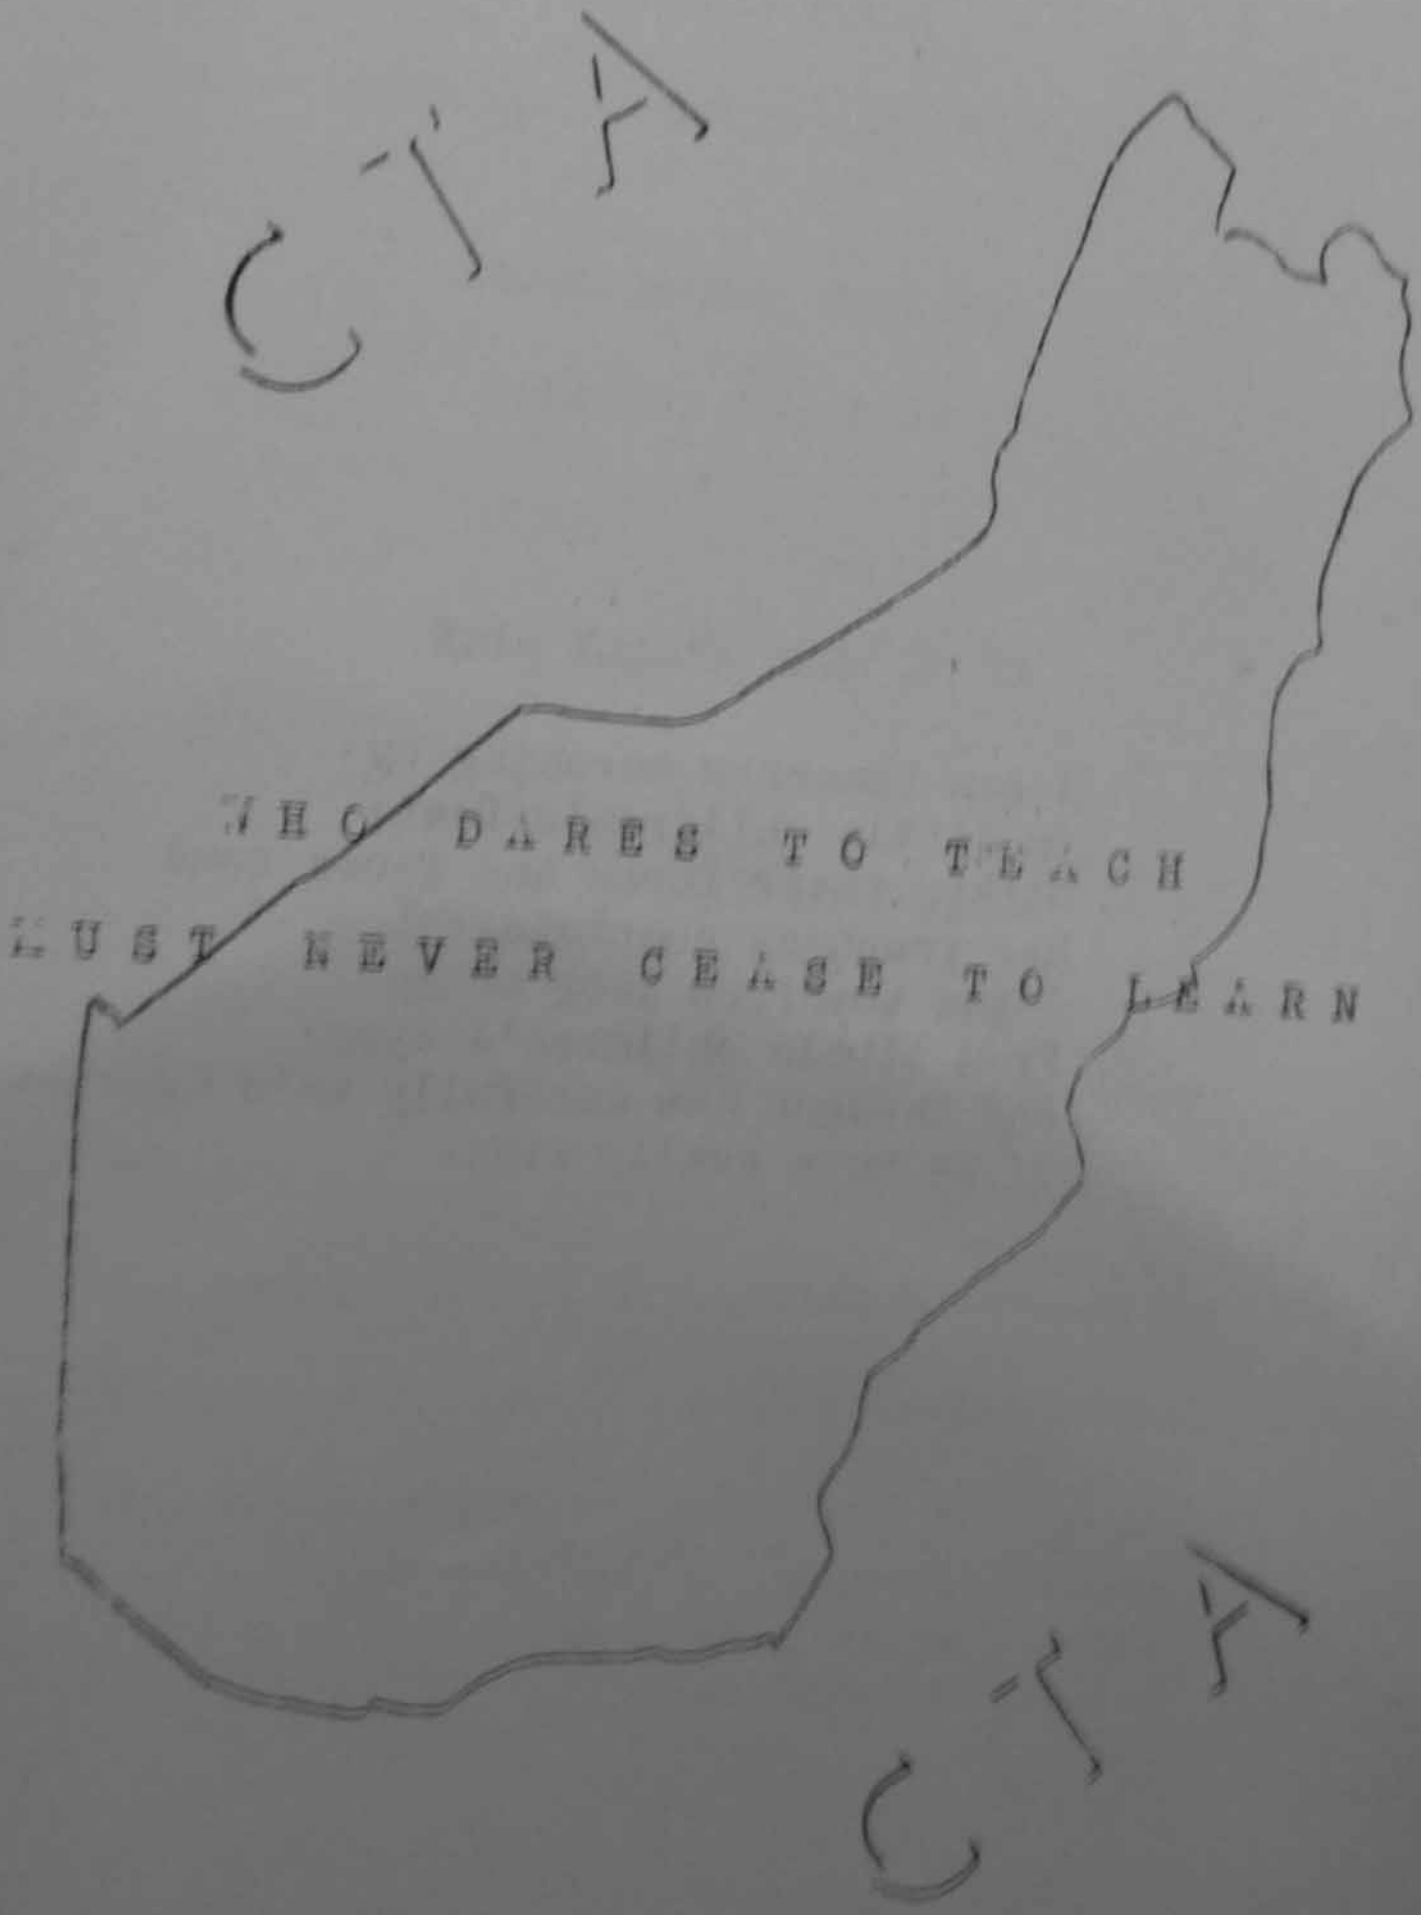
Teacher - Edna Ellison

Students: Maude Bowers
Mary Barnes
Lonnie Armstead
Mildred Music
Pearl Cochran
Grace Barnes
(Owens) -> Ike Adkison
Hester McElwee (McCl
John Gay
Madge Bowers
John Hause



C I A
WHO DARES TO TEACH
MUST NEVER CEASE TO LEARN
C I A

PROGRAM

Invocation - Mr. J. K. Arbogast

Group Singing - Leader, Miss Edith May Pianist, Mrs. Bonnie Hill

Introduction of Guests -

Report on CTA Leadership Conference -
Mrs. Margaret Cole
Miss Patsy Ruth Fields

The Poor Scholar's Soliloquy -
Miss Madaline McNeill

Presentation of New Teachers -
Mrs. Bonnie Brooks

Presentation of Certificates and Pin to Retired Teachers - Mr. M. H. Brooks
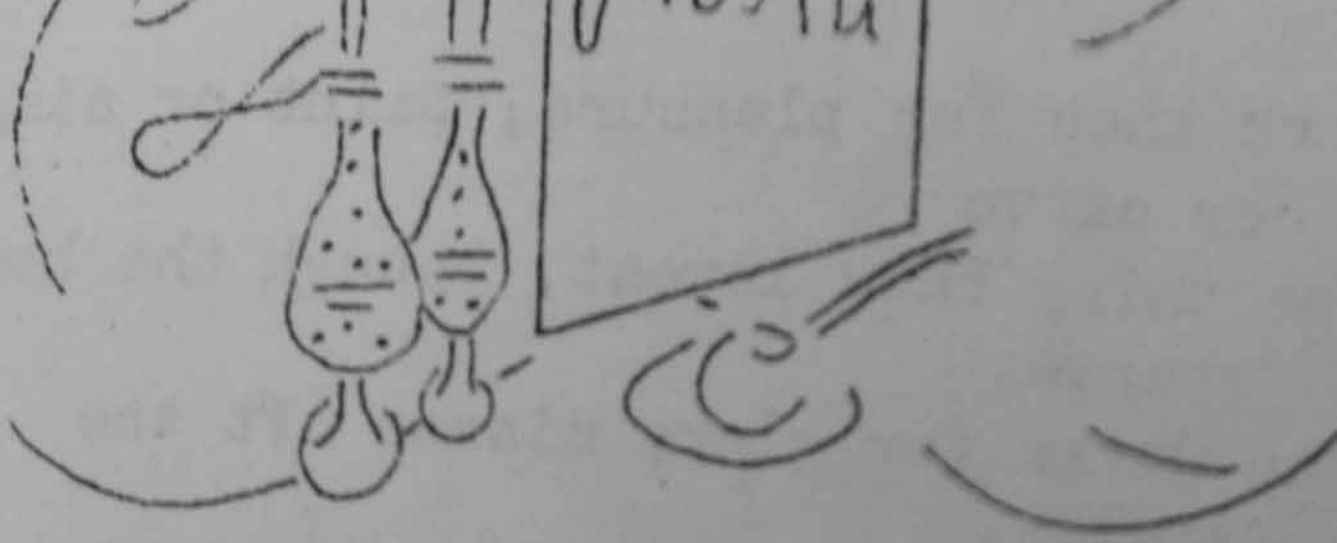
Mrs. Macel Harris

GUEST SPEAKER - Dr. Corma A. McCrary
Director of Professional Services NEA

Announcements -



"Eat, drink, and be merry,
For tomorrow ye diet."

BAKED HAM

MASHED POTATOES - GRAVY

GREEN BEANS - HARVARD BEETS

WALDORF SALAD

HOT ROLLS - BUTTER - JELLY

CAKE WITH SAUCE

COFFEE - TEA

* * * * * * * * * * *

IF WE WERE REALLY WISE

I saw tomorrow marching by
On little children's feet;
Within their forms and faces read
Her prophecy complete.
I saw tomorrow look at me
From little children's eyes;
And thought how carefully we'd teach--
If we were really wise.

POCAHONTAS COUNTY

CLASSROOM TEACHERS ASSOCIATION

Annual Dinner Meeting

November 29, 1956

* * * * * * * * * * *

OFFICERS

1956-1957

President ..... Mrs. Maud Bumgardner

Vice-President ..... Mr. Glenn Tracy

Secretary ..... Miss Minnie Parg

Treasurer ..... Miss Louise Brown

Executive Committee:

Mrs. Zell Lewis
Mrs. Willa Whanger
Miss Margaret Wilson

Work thou for pleasure; paint or sing or carve
The thing thou lovest, though the body starve.
Who works for glory misses oft the goal;
Who works for money coins his very soul.
Work for work's sake then, and it well may be
That these things shall be added unto thee.

- Kenyon Cox

* * * * * * * * * * * *

To be good is noble, but to tell others how to be good is nobler and no trouble. - Mark Twain

Behold the turtle. He makes progress only when he sticks his neck out. - James Bryant Conant

It takes less time to do a thing right than it does to explain why you did it wrong.
- H. W. Longfellow

The greatest glory of a freeborn people is to transmit that freedom to their children.
- William Harvard

There is in every man something greater than he had begun to dream of. Men are nobler than they think themselves. - Phillips Brooks

* * * * * * * * * * *

Pocahontas County CTA wishes to express their congratulations and commendations to the following retired teachers of Pocahontas County for their long and faithful service.

Miss Elsie J. Adkison	1909-1954
Mr. W. A. Bolen	1895-1943
Mr. W. M. Buckley	1915-1944
Mr. N. R. Fertig	1909-1946
Miss Enid Harper	1913-1954
Mr. A. W. Hill	1896-1941
Mr. W. A. Hively	1908-1949
Dr. George D. McNeill	1894-1940
Mr. Charles Spencer	---
Mrs. Clara P. Wade	1914-1956
Mr. K. B. Wilmoth	1908-1947
*Mrs. Rachel Wooddell	1909-1955

*Teaching 1956-1957

A TEACHER'S PRAYER

God grant me the serenity to accept the things I cannot change, courage to change the things I can, and wisdom to know the difference.

OFFICIAL PROGRAM - 10¢

POCAHONTAS COUNTY, WEST VIRGINIA

WELCOMES YOU TO....

Pioneer Days

July 8, 9, 10 and 11, 1971

The Pocahontas County Historical Society was first organized in 1961, and incorporated in 1962 when it acquired its home and museum from the late Mrs. Frank Hunter. The house was built by the Hunters when he was the first cashier of the Bank of Marlinton.

The grounds around the museum consist of approximately two acres lying between US Route 219 (Seneca Trail) and the Greenbrier River. On the right of the entrance are the gravestones of 40 Confederate soldiers. To the left are the graves of several of the early members of the Price family.

The museum was dedicated in 1963 by the then governor of West Virginia, W.W. Barron, and Pearl Buck, world renowned author who was born in Hillsboro, Pocahontas County. The library room in the museum was named in Pearl Buck's honor.

The Pocahontas County Historical Society, Inc., is owned by public spirited citizens throughout the county, state, and nation. Membership in the Society may be obtained by paying the $1 membership dues.

FOR YOUR INFORMATION

Pioneer Days Souvenir Badge for $1.00 required for persons 6 years of age and older. Entitles holder to all events except Horse Show, Horse Pulling Contest and Miss Pocahontas Pageant. There is a charge for the surrey and antique car rides, but the wagon rides to and from the Museum are free. The wagons will stop at the Museum, in front of the Presbyterian Church on Main St. and at the High School. On Saturday the wagons will stop at the Rifle Contest.

OFFICE: 325-7158
RESIDENCE: 645-2025

George R. Hanna

715 SENECA TRAIL
General Merchandise and County Produce
Westinghouse Appliances : Groceries : Paint

Table of Contents

THURSDAY'S ACTIVITIES 4
MISS FREEDOM'S PAGEANT 5-6-7
FRIDAY'S ACTIVITIES 8
FRIDAY NIGHT PROGRAM 9
SATURDAY'S ACTIVITIES 10
BICENTENNIAL EVENT - BADGE 12
PIONEER CRAFT DEMONSTRATION 14
PARADE PROGRAM 15
HOSTS AND HOSTESSES 16
SUNDAY'S ACTIVITIES 17
HORSE SHOW PROGRAM 18-19
PEARL S. BUCK SCHOLARS 20
WEEKEND MENUS 22
SPECIAL INFORMATION 24
ADVERTISEMENTS 25

We hope you enjoy the 1974 Pioneer Days Weekend, and will plan to come back in '75.

BRILL'S FOOD SERVICENTER

Jetta Lou Bowyer

Susan Chappell

Deborah Crawford

Renae Crist

Connie Sue Dilley

Donna Dunbrack

Nina Marie Fowler

Linda Lou Landis

Cornell Moore

Jo Ann Sharp

Lois Jean Sharp

Diane Shiflett

Jane Small

Susie Smith

Donna Stemple

Bank; Senior of Pocahontas County High School. Sponsored by Mary Rebekah Lodge No. 109.

2586 2. MISS SUSAN CHAPPELL, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Chappell, Hillsboro; Senior at Pocahontas County High School. Sponsored by Marlinton Lions Club.

3. MISS DEBORAH CRAWFORD, daughter of Rev. and Mrs. Maynard Crawford, Marlinton; Graduate of Pocahontas County High School 1971. Sponsored by Marlinton Woman's Club.

4339 4. MISS RENAE CRIST, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harold Crist, Arbovale; Senior at Pocahontas County High School. Sponsored by Durbin Lions Club.

5. MISS CONNIE SUE DILLEY, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Everett Dilley, Dunmore; Graduate of Pocahontas County High School 1971. Sponsored by Marlinton Fire Department Ladies' Auxiliary.

6. MISS DONNA RAE DUNBRACK, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Dunbrack, Marlinton; Senior at Pocahontas County High School. Sponsored by Pocahontas County Historical Society, Inc.

7. MISS NINA FOWLER, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Virgil Fowler, Hillsboro; Sponsored by Hillsboro Fire Department and Firemenettes.

8. MISS LINDA LANDIS, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Damon Landis, Marlinton; Graduate of Pocahontas County High School 1971. Sponsored by Swago Home Demonstration Club.

9. MISS CORNELL MOORE, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Moore, Marlinton; Senior at Pocahontas County High School. Sponsored by Marlinton Business and Professional Women's Club.

10. MISS LOIS SHARP, daughter of Mrs. Glenda Snead and Mr. Lowell Sharp, Marlinton; Graduate of Pocahontas County High School 1971. Sponsored by Marlinton Chamber of Commerce.

11. MISS JO ANN SHARP, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Guy Sharp, Huntersville; Senior at Pocahontas County High School. Sponsored by Marlinton VFW Auxiliary.

12. MISS DIANE SHIFLETT, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harold Shiflett, Marlinton; Junior at Pocahontas County High School. Sponsored by Ruth Rebekah Lodge No. 68.

13. MISS JANE SMALL, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Small, Marlinton; Graduate of Pocahontas County High School 1971. Sponsored by Marlinton Fire Department.

14. MISS SUSIE SMITH, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jack Smith, Marlinton; Graduate of Pocahontas County High School 1971. Sponsored by Marlinton Jaycees.

15. MISS DONNA STEMPLE, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ed Stemple, Marlinton; Senior at Pocahontas County High School. Sponsored by Marlinton Rotary Club.

4156 16. MISS DIANA WASLO, daughter of Mr. Mike Waslo, Arbovale; Junior at Pocahontas County High School. Sponsored by Durbin VFW Post No. 3453.

4574 17. MISS SHIRLEY WILFONG, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Albert Wilfong; Senior at Pocahontas County High School. Sponsored by Dunmore Home Demonstration Club.

18. MISS TERESA WOODDELL, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Arch Wooddell, Marlinton; Graduate of Pocahontas County High School 1971. Sponsored by Marlinton Junior Home Demonstration Club.

19. MISS SHARON WOODS, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd Woods, Marlinton; Graduate of Pocahontas County High School 1971. Sponsored by VFW Post No. 4595.

Candidates for Miss Pocahontas

tta Lou Bowyer

Susan Chappell

Deborah Crawford

Renae Crist

nie Sue Dilley

Donna Dunbrack

Nina Marie Fowler

Linda Lou Lan

Connie Sue Dilley

Donna Dunbrack

Nina Marie Fowler

Linda Lou Landis

Cornell Moore

Jo Ann Sharp

Lois Jean Sharp

Diane Shiflett

Jane Small

Susie Smith

Donna Stemple

Diana Leigh Waslo

Shirley Wilfong

Teresa Wooddell

Sharon Woods

LOU BOWYER, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Omar Bowyer, Gre
Bank; Senior of Pocahontas County High School. Sponsored by Mary Rebek
Lodge No. 109.

2586 2. MISS SUSAN CHAPPELL, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Chappell, Hill boro; Senior at Pocahontas County High School. Sponsored by Marlinto Lions Club.

3. MISS DEBORAH CRAWFORD, daughter of Rev. and Mrs. Maynard Crawfor
Marlinton; Graduate of Pocahontas County High School 1971. Sponsored b
Marlinton Woman's Club.

4339 4. MISS RENAE CRIST, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harold Crist, Arbovale
Senior at Pocahontas County High School. Sponsored by Durbin Lions Club

5. MISS CONNIE SUE DILLEY, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Everett Dilley, Dun-more; Graduate of Pocahontas County High School 1971. Sponsored by Mar-linton Fire Department Ladies' Auxiliary.

6. MISS DONNA RAE DUNBRACK, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Dunbrack, Marlinton; Senior at Pocahontas County High School. Sponsored by Pocahontas County Historical Society, Inc.

7. MISS NINA FOWLER, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Virgil Fowler, Hillsboro;
Sponsored by Hillsboro Fire Department and Firemenettes.

8. MISS LINDA LANDIS, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Damon Landis, Marlinton;
Graduate of Pocahontas County High School 1971. Sponsored by Swago Home Demonstration Club.

9. MISS CORNELL MOORE, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Moore, Mar-linton; Senior at Pocahontas County High School. Sponsored by Marlinton Business and Professional Women's Club.

10. MISS LOIS SHARP, daughter of Mrs. Glenda Snead and Mr. Lowell Sharp, Marlinton; Graduate of Pocahontas County High School 1971. Sponsored by Marlinton Chamber of Commerce.

11. MISS JO ANN SHARP, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Guy Sharp, Huntersville;
Senior at Pocahontas County High School. Sponsored by Marlinton VFW Auxiliary.

12. MISS DIANE SHIFLETT, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harold Shiflett, Marlin-ton; Junior at Pocahontas County High School. Sponsored by Ruth Rebekah Lodge No. 68.

13. MISS JANE SMALL, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Small, Marlinton;
Graduate of Pocahontas County High School 1971. Sponsored by Marlinton
Fire Department.

14. MISS SUSIE SMITH, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jack Smith, Marlinton; Graduate of Pocahontas County High School 1971. Sponsored by Marlinton Jaycees.

15. MISS DONNA STEMPLE, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ed Stemple, Marlinton;
Senior at Pocahontas County High School. Sponsored by Marlinton Rotary Club.

4156 16. MISS DIANA WASLO, daughter of Mr. Mike Waslo, Arbovale; Junior at Pocahontas County High School. Sponsored by Durbin VFW Post No. 3453.

4374 17. MISS SHIRLEY WILFONG, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Albert Wilfong; Senior 456 at Pocahontas County High School. Sponsored by Dunmore Home Demonstration Club.

18. MISS TERESA WOODDELL, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Arch Wooddell, Mar-linton; Graduate of Pocahontas County High School 1971. Sponsored by Mar-linton Junior Home Demonstration Club.

19. MISS SHARON WOODS, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd Woods, Marlinton;
Graduate of Pocahontas County High School 1971. Sponsored by VFW Post
No. 4595.

EVERYONE WELCOME
PHONE 799-4204 RFD 1 MARLINTON, W. VA.

FRIDAY'S ACTIVITIES

10:00 A.M. -- Bake Sale at Richardson's Store.

10:30 A.M.-8:00 P.M. -- Craft Corner, 4-H Exhibits, Bake Sale, Flower Show, Quilt Show, Old Kitchen Display, the Jack Jeffers Photo Exhibit at Marlinton Gym.

11:00 A.M.-7:00 P.M. -- Food at Museum (see p. 17).

11:00 A.M.-2:00 P.M. -- Food at Fire House (see p. 23).

11:00 A.M.-5:00 P.M. -- Surrey rides to and from the Museum. The surrey will travel through the Greenbrier River from the Presbyterian Church to the Museum with a charge of 50¢. Antique Car rides originating from Presbyterian Church, 50¢.

11:00 A.M.-10:00 P.M. -- Wagon rides to and from the Museum, available to those wearing the Pioneer Day Badge.

Noon-7 P.M. -- Percussion Rifle Shooting Contest across Knapps Creek from the Board of Education Office. Regulation rules will be strictly enforced. Rifles furnished or bring your own. Practice shooting at 25¢ a shot. There is an entry fee of $1.00 for the contest, with prizes being awarded on Saturday at 6:30 P.M. at place of contest.

1:30 P.M. -- Old Time Spelling Bee at the Museum. All ages. Cash awards.

2:00 P.M. -- Pocahontas County History Contest at Museum. Cash award.

2:00 P.M.-5:00 P.M. -- Tours of Huntersville, first County Seat. Inquire at Information Tent.

4:00 P.M.-7:00 P.M. -- Spaghetti Dinner, Marlinton Methodist Church.

6:00-7:30 P.M. -- Horseshoe Pitching Contest at Museum. (Singles and Doubles)

7:30 P.M. -- Frog Hop and Turtle Races at the Marlinton Athletic Field for children ages 6-14. 1st, 2nd and 3rd prizes will be awarded-one entry per child. All entries must be in by 7:00 p.m.

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 9)

YOUR REXALL FAMILY DRUG STORE
Royal Drug Store, Inc.
Prescriptions filled accurately

(Dottie Clutter O'Donnell is the daughter of Mrs. Eva Beard Ferhl and the late Eric Clutter and was raised in Hillsboro.)
Bring a folding chair if possible.

Friday Night Program

Program beginning at 8:30 P.M.-Pocahontas County Museum
(Bring a folding chair, if available)

COMMEMORATING
Pocahontas' Sesquicentennial

An evening to relax and to enjoy

The "Pioneer Choir" under the direction of Frances B. Eskridge as it sets the mood.

"Little Switzerland of America" folk dancing by two classes of music pupils, ages 6-11 years, of Mildred Y. Seagraves.

Bits of Historical Scenes

Narrator to carry you along in time and fact

Briefly portraying early events leading to establishment of first county seat of Pocahontas County in Huntersville, 1821.

Folk Art at its best in the main feature of the evening.

Dotty Clutter O'Donnell

as she returns to her native county to sing in the style of yesteryear-those songs handed down through generations-conveying joy, heartache, events transmitted mainly through folk singing. She will be joined by her husband, Dennis O'Donnell, in some of the response numbers.

Finale - a tribute to the county and to the state, with Audience Participation in the singing of "West Virginia Hills"

Program Coordinated by Ruth M. Morgan

1859 The Great 1971
Atlantic & Pacific
Tea Co., Inc.
Ann Page Fine Foods - Super
Right Meats - Jane Parker

Compliments of Bob Miller

MARLINTON, W. VA.
Telephone: 799-6523

212 9th Street
MARLINTON, W. VA.
PHONE 799-4082

SATURDAY'S ACTIVITIES

9:00 A.M.-9:00 P.M. -- Wagon rides to and from Pioneer Days Events.
9:00 A.M.-5:00 P.M. -- Surrey rides to and from Museum at a charge of 50¢; also Antique Car rides at a charge of 50¢.
9:00 A.M.-5:00 P.M. -- Exhibits and Craft Corner at Marlinton Gym (see Friday's Activities for details).
9:00 A.M.-6:00 P.M. -- Percussion Rifle Shooting Contest (see Friday's Activities for details).
10:00 A.M. -- Bake Sale at Museum.
11:00 A.M.-4:00 P.M. -- Food at Museum.
10:00 A.M.-Noon -- Craft Demonstrations at Museum.
10:00 A.M.-5:00 P.M. -- Hamburgers and hot dogs at First National Bank parking lot.
11:00 A.M. -- Bar-B-Que Chicken Dinner, Presbyterian Church.
1:30 P.M. -- Parade.
3:00 P.M. -- Horse Pulling Contest at Athletic Field (See p. 21).
4:30 P.M. -- Ox Roast at School Cafeteria.
6:00 P.M.-7:30 P.M. -- Horseshoe Pitching Contest at Museum.
7:00 P.M.-9:00 P.M. -- Mountain Folk Music Contest (See p.21).
9:00 P.M.-11:30 P.M. -- Square Dance in front of Southern States Store, sponsored by Marlinton Lions Club. Music by The Quad-reelers.
9:00 P.M.-1:00 A.M. -- Social Dance at Marlinton Gym-$5.00 per couple, sponsored by Marlinton Jaycees. Music by The Nu-Notes. Popcorn, Sno Cones and Kiddie Rides will be on First National Bank lot throughout weekend.

Home Products Market

G. M. Faulknier

Fresh Meats Country Hams

Frozen Foods -- Groceries

ICC MC111788
BURNS
MOTOR FREIGHT
MARLINTON
W. VA.

SHIP BY TRUCK

PHONE 304-799-6106

P. O. BOX 149

Compliments of

First National Bank

Member Federal Reserve System

Because 1971 is the Sesquicentennial Year for Pocahontas County, the Pioneer Days badge pays tribute to the first county courthouse which was located in Huntersville.

On June 5, 1822, a deed for land for the purpose of locating a county seat of justice was given to the justices of Pocahontas County and their successors in office, by John Bradshaw and wife. Upon this land a brick courthouse, a brick office for the county clerk and a brick jail were constructed. Huntersville was the center of the county government between 1821 and 1892.

The first county clerk was Josiah Beard who served ably in this position even prior to the building of the brick courthouse when the first courts convened in the house of John Bradshaw.

The safe keeping of the county records was not exactly a routine task. At the time of the breaking out of the War the Hon. William Curry was serving as both circuit and county clerk. When it became evident that the Federals would invade the county the court ordered Mr. Curry to remove the records to a place of safety. In compliance with this order he caused them to be taken to the private residence of Joel Hill, Esq., in the Little Levels. Here they remained until Jan. 11, 1862, when Mr. Curry became alarmed as to the safety of so valuable a charge thus placed in his custody. He therefore caused them to be removed to Covington, Virginia, where, for a short time, they lay in the clerk's office of Alleghany County. From here they were taken to the storehouse of Captain William Scott. In Sept. 1863 Gen. Averill's Federal command reached Covington, and Mr. Curry again removed the records--first to the residence of William Clark, then to a stack of buckwheat straw, in which they lay concealed for three weeks, and were then conveyed into the mountains and stored open 5 A.M. until 9 P.M.

(CONTINUED ON PAGE 13)

FRENCH'S DINER

Serving Good Food

Mitchell Chevrolet, Inc.

Route 39 - Fifth Avenue Marlinton, W. Va.

(continued from page 12)

away at the house of a Baptist minister. Here they remained until after the surrender at Appomattox.

The storm of war had now passed away, and Mr. Curry, in June 1865, returned with the records and once more deposited them at the house of Joel Hill. Here they remained one month and were then taken to a vacant house belonging to the Rev. Mitchell Dunlap where they remained until Sept. 1865 when the first court convened after the close of the War (Nov. 1865) in the Methodist Church at Hillsboro. From that time they were kept in the "old academy building" until June 1870 when they were taken back to the county seat and deposited at the house of John Curry.

More than five years had passed since their first removal, and strange to say, not withstanding all the vicissitudes of war through which they passed, only one thing was lost and that was an old process book of no value.

Huntersville, the first county seat, gained its name from the fact that it became a center where hunters and trappers could trade pelts, venison and ginseng for salt, coffee, powder, lead, a few pieces of calico, etc.

The courthouse is situated on the left bank of Knapps Creek, six miles from its mouth. It is surrounded on all sides by lofty mountains and has the appearance of an Alpine village. Its elevation is 2000 feet above the Atlantic.

Curry's Super Market

FANCY GROCERIES & FRESH MEATS
Flour and Country Produce

Marlinton, W. Va. Phone 799-4475

Knitting -- Mrs. Grace Turner
Weaving Baskets -- Mrs. Ruth Cotterman
Crewel Embroidery -- Mrs. Norman Beale
Crochet Beads -- Mrs. Nellie Dean
Churning -- Mrs. Lloyd Woods
Home-made Ice Cream -- Mrs. Elton Wade
Maple Syrup -- Mrs. Delbert G. Moore

Saturday Morning, July 10 - 10:00 to 12:00 A.M.

Ceramics -- Johnnie Hill
Splitting Shingles -- Mr. Barnhouse

VISIT WITH US DURING PIONEER DAYS

The Grill

SATURDAY'S SPECIAL

Ham Sandwich -- 50¢

Egg Salad, Ham Salad

or Chicken Salad -- 35¢

ICE CREAM MILK SHAKES

SANDWICHES SOFT DRINKS

and Full Course Dinners

One Mile South on Rt. 219

Mr. & Mrs. Earl Moore

PARADE PROGRAM

Registration: 10:00 a.m.-12:30 p.m. on the Depot Platform.

Parade forms at 12:30 p.m. Saturday at the Marlinton Stockyards and starts at 1:30 p.m.

1:15 p.m. Little Swiss Folk Dancers will perform on Main Street.

Parade Committee: Marlinton Jaycees
Co-Chairmen: Lyle Campbell, Kenneth Cohenour, Doug Dunbrack and Ernest Shaw
Master of Ceremonies: Walter Jett

Introduction of distinguished guests, followed by the parade.

Presentation of winning entries and awarding of prizes.
Presentation of winning entries in the Pioneer Days Art Contest, oldest couples contest, person traveling the longest distance (must register at information booth to qualify), and most authentically dressed store clerk.
Trophies and prizes will be awarded in five classes and will be based on the most original Pioneer Days outfit.

1. Horse and rider.
2. Horse or oxen and buggy, surrey, buckboard, wagon or any type of horse or oxen-drawn conveyance.
3. People walking.
4. Western class.
5. Floats.
6. Antique Car -- trophy only.

There will be a $40 cash award for First Place and $30 cash award for Second Place in each class. Trophy only for Third Place in each class. The exception to this is the Antique Car Class where only the First Place winner will be awarded a trophy.

Marlinton Flower Shoppe

818 Second Avenue - Marlinton - 799-6302

Cut Flowers

LICENSES
U. S. 219 – 2 Miles No. Marlinton
Phone 799-4977

SHOPPE
Exclusive Women's Wear

HOSTS AND HOSTESSES

The following hostesses and hosts will be available throughout the Pioneer Days Weekend to give you any information, direction or assistance you may need:

Lois Sharp, Bobbie Jo Sharp, Dianne Shiflett, Vonnie Myers, Terry Payne, Becky Cutlip, Marsella Hollandsworth, Vicki Richardson, Debbie Crawford, Debbie Faulkner, Terry Wooddell, Cornell Moore, Susan Viers, Jenny Mitchell, Susie Smith, Ann Mallow, Annette Eye, Joan Eye, Shirley Tibbs, Janice Kay Nelson, Linda Calhoun, Nancy Bowen, Dondi Stemple, Lynette Hiner, Kathy Gibson, Libby Graham, Matt Withers, Jim Smith, David Cain, Terry Richardson, Scott McNeill, Tommy McLaughlin, Mike Anderson, Brent Withers, Willie Sparks, John Mallow, Jim Dilley, Donnie McElwee, Tommy Mitchell.

PIONEER DAYS MENU

Sis's Drive – In

Hamburger Special

Bar-B-Q Special

Fish Special

Hardware - Furniture
General Electric Appliances
Maytag, Simmons, Kroehler
Zenith T. V.'s

SUNDAY'S ACTIVITIES

10:00 A.M.-Noon -- Church of your choice.

11:00 A.M.-2:00 P.M. -- Chicken 'n Dumplings at Marlinton Fire House, sponsored by Brushy Flats Home Demonstration Club.

1:00 P.M.-5:00 P.M. -- Surrey and Wagon Rides; Displays at Museum. Wagons will run until after Hymn Sing.

1:00 P.M.-6:00 P.M. -- Horseshow at Marlinton Athletic Field, with many classes, trophies, ribbons and prize money.

2:00 P.M. -- Log Rolling Demonstration.

2:00 P.M.-5:00 P.M. -- Tours of Huntersville (First County Seat.)

4:00 P.M.-7:00 P.M. -- Sandwiches and drinks at Museum.

7:30 P.M. -- County Hymn Sing at Museum under the direction of Mrs. Willard Eskridge. (Will be held at Marlinton United Methodist Church in case of rain.) Bring a folding chair if possible.

WE FILL ANY PRESCRIPTION!
DRUGS - COSMETICS - FOUNTAIN
Pocahontas Pharmacy
(Formerly Marlinton Drugs)
3rd AVENUE and 8th STREET

"Variety Store"
G. RAYMOND SHRADER PROP.
MARLINTON, W. VA.

Restaurant
"You All Come"
PHONE 799-4711

Pioneer Days Horse Show

Show Co-Chairman and Secretary.....Judy Cutlip, Hillsboro

Show Co-Chairman and Secretary.....Ruth Taylor, Hillsboro

Show Advisor.....Charlene J. McNeel, Sinking Springs Farm

Announcers.....Jim Fleshman and Eugene Simmons

Ring Crew.....Hillsboro Volunteer Fire Department

Concession Stand.....Hillsboro Firemenettes

The Hillsboro Volunteer Fire Department and Firemenettes thank you, and hope to see you again next year.

Sullivan's Taxi
Marlinton

Compliments of
J&P Furniture

Ford & Mercury – Sales & Service

815 Second Avenue – Marlinton, W. Va.

Phone 779-4066

Pioneer Days Horse Show

Marlinton Football Field, Marlinton, West Virginia

1:30 P.M. Sunday, July 11, 1971

Sponsored by the Hillsboro Volunteer Fire Department

No:	ENTRY FEE:	CLASS:	PRIZES:
1.	$2.00	Western Halter	Trophy & 4 Ribbons
2.	2.00	Cloverleaf Barrel Race	T. & 4 R. $4,$3,$2,$1
3.	2.00	Western Pleasure	4 Ribbons $8,$6,$4,$2
4.	2.00	4-H Pleasure	Trophy & 4 Ribbons
5.	2.00	Ladies Western Pleasure	4 Ribbons $8,$6,$4,$2
6.	2.00	Trail Class	4 Ribbons $8,$6,$4,$2
7.	2.00	Children's Pleasure	Trophy & 4 Ribbons
8.	2.00	Western Horsemanship	T. & 4 R. $4,$3,$2,$1
9.	2.00	Trailer Race	Trophy & 4 Ribbons
10.	2.00	English Halter	Trophy & 4 Ribbons
11.	2.00	Plantation Pleasure	4 Ribbons $8,$6,$4,$2
12.	2.00	Open English Pleasure	4 Ribbons $8,$6,$4,$2
13.	2.00	Ladies English Pleasure	T. & 4 R. $4,$3,$2,$1
14.	2.00	English Horsemanship	T. & 4 R. $4,$3,$2,$1

WESTERN HIGH POINT HORSE OF SHOW . . . Trophy & Ribbon
ENGLISH HIGH POINT HORSE OF SHOW . . . Trophy & Ribbon

EXPLANATION OF CLASS NO. 9 TRAILER RACE:
The Class is limited to Ten (10) entries. Each entry consists of One truck or car as the case may be, One horse trailer, One horse, One driver and rider. Entries must park all vehicles on starting line. Judge will blow whistle, all entries must get out of their vehicles, unload their horse, saddle and bridle him, walk around ring one (1) time, unsaddle and unbridle horse, load horse in horse trailer, load tack in tack compartment, get in vehicle and turn on lights.

Huntersville
Amoco Station

Fisher's Garage
Huntersville

General Merchandise

Marlinton - Ph. 799-4912

Funeral Home

MARLINTON, W. VA.

